Inspiration, intuition, have often provided Dr. Munch with triumphs such as the Dies Irae of the Berlioz Requiem and scattered movements from symphonic masters. Like many rational men he is at bottom highly emotional. Intuition has granted incredible, incandescent triumphs —especially when the music stirs his fancy—that no other maestro of the period can match; but has also been his deepest limitation, resulting in the racetrack tempos of so many finales, the coarsened frenzy of dionyiac excess.

Nevertheless, despite his boundaries — and every artist has them—Charles Munch represents the sum of an illustrious conductor. His sympathies are not as broad, in a certain sense, as were Koussevitzky's catholic responses; yet, in another sense, they go deeper within determined range.

And that range appears less narrow than general statement indicates. While such composers as Berlioz, Debussy or Ravel have always occupied a prominent place in his programs, Dr. Munch's training and experience naturally fit him to conduct this repertoire. He has been unforgivably blind to the merits of occasional composers like Bruckner or Sibelius, but he has undertaken a surprising quantity of new music, Americans and masters outside the French tradition.

Special Affection

While his last year was chiefly a matter of repetition, one must not forget there wasn't a single repetition in the second season from the first. He revived a number of works undeservedly neglected, and we shall not hear the like of his Fantastic Symphony, for example, again.

He has shown a special affection for choral scores such as Bach's Passions, and Christmas Oratorio, Schubert's Mass in G major and Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. His Beethoven has been uneven; but his Brahms Three and Four are spendid, and while in Boston he developed into a superb interpreter of Schumann.

Thus he passes to retirement this week from the Boston scene: Charles Munch, musician and man. He has been exemplary in both spheres. The power and beauty he brought into our lives is not easily forgotten.

End of a 3-Part Series

CHARLES MUNCH

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

APR 15 1962

DR. ALBERT SCHWEITZER (left) chats with Dr. Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after a concert in Germany.

Munch, All Musician, Shuns Party Life

By ROBERT TAYLOR

(Second of three articles)

"All signs indicate that Munch will enjoy a great success at Beacon Hill and Back Bay tea parties," said Time Magazine, upon the selection of Charles Munch to succeed Serge Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra 13 years ago. Never was prophecy more erroneous.

Koussevitzky loved to play the social lion. Dr. Munch is a man of simpler and shy tastes. Even today genteel Bostonians recall the Koussevitzkys sweeping from a Beacon Hill evening with all the pomp of the Romanoffs: and the ladies of the party curtseying as the royal couple proceeded down the line to the door.

Such pageantry is alien to Charles Munch's republican temperament. He prefers to express himself through his art; and, save to intimates, he seems relatively remote and solitary. Since 1956 he has been a widower. He lives in a Milton country estate which he chose for its prospect of Blue Hills woodland, and where, years ago, one often might have seen him strolling with his airdale, "Pompey."

He has seldom been glimpsed in a public place in Boston, though. Yet to a small circle of close friends Charles Munch is a companion of gregarious good humor, vast cultivation and cosmopolitan interests. The language barrier, probably the greatest cross of his social life here, had added a burden to the existence of a naturally reserved man.

He speaks English well. Unfortunately, it is not one of his major accomplishments, and as a sensitive scholar, he is all too keenly aware of his limitations. For this reason, the private Munch is virtually self-exiled from the Boston tea party of 1962. Those who comprise part of his French-speaking world will undoubtedly concur with Paul Henry Lang's graceful estimate in last week's New York Times:

"Mr. Munch carries us back to an older generation with its good taste and manners and courteous formality—the breed is rapidly vanishing."

There are other minute yet endearing human touches about our retiring maestro. Gossipy, perhaps, but revealing.

He likes a nip of Scotch, though his favorite drink is still the wine of Alsace. On mornings when there is a rehearsal he might rise at 8 and eat an unusually heavy breakfast of bacon, scrambled eggs and tea. His cherished dishes are "pot-au feu" and kidneys cooked in Chablis; he also likes French bread and New England clam chowder.

As a child he was called "Charry," by his family of four brothers and two sisters, each muiscal. His father, Ernest, was organist, string player, leader of the St. Guillaume choir of Strasbourg Cathedral, professor in Strassbourg Conservatory—and the 6-year-old Charle's first violin teacher.

Albert Schweitzer is intimately connected with the Munch family, through the marriage of his brother to Charles's sister, Emma. And their son, Charles's nephew, is married to the pianist, Nicole Henriot, who now plays as Nicole Henriote-Schweitzer.

Dr. Munch once insisted that his ambition was to be a locomotive engineer. Certainly, at 21, he took up medical studies in Paris, until he discovered that his vocation lay in music.

His late wife, born Genevieve Maury, was the grand-daughter of one of the founders of the Nestle Chocolate Company, the author of "Novelles du Limousin," and the translator of Mann's "Tonio Kroeger," in French.

These are unrelated personal aspects. Leonard Burkat's introduction to Dr. Munch's book "I Am A Conductor" lists the pertinent Munch traits, the important things to remember:

"He is a man of adventure and action rendered almost immobile, tied down to the demands of one of the most exacting of professions.

"He is a libertarian who has arrived at a point of achievement in the freedom-loving world of the arts where he must wield authoritarian powers that would be the envy of many a tyrant.

"In a world of complexity, sophistication, vanity, severity, he remains simple, modest, gentle, and warm."

(Next week, Dr. Munch as Musician.)

184

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
73 050
APR 14 1962

Photo: Karsh

CHARLES MUNCH will bid farewell to New York audiences in his final concerts with the Boston Symphony on April 4 and 7

CITY OPERA director Julius Rudel (seated) discusses a musical point with composer Abraham Ellstein, whose new opera, "The Golem," will open the company's spring season

Music: A Spring Forecast

A BRIEF SURVEY OF MUSICAL EVENTS LEADING TO THE CLOSE OF THE 1961-62 SEASON DISCLOSES A FEW DEBUTS AND ONE MAJOR DEPARTURE

WHEN THE Boston Symphony visits this city next, for its final pair of concerts on April 4 and 7, Charles Munch will be appearing here for the last time as its conductor. His program, which his devoted followers will recognize as the same one he first conducted in this country, will include Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's Second "Daphnis and Chloé" Suite.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,530
MAR 26 1962

He'll Be Missed

A packed house applauded with unusual warmth for a Boston audience as an elegant, white-haired man bustled gracefully past scores of poised musicians and stepped up on the conductor's stand at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch bowed eloquently, and the music began . . . Schubert's 5th Symphony, Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 with handsome blonde Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as brilliant soloist, and after intermission, "Death and Transfiguration," a tone poem by Richard Strauss.

It was a distinguished occasion, notably for the beauty of the music but sad because it was the last Sunday series concert with Charles Munch as music director, for he retires this year.

Something that has enriched life for thousands will leave Boston with him . . . but his masterful musicianship, his inspiring leadership, his joyful sharing of talents, will live long in the memories of many North Shore people who have been privileged to watch and listen to Munch in the last 10 years.

Herald 4/29/62 ?

BIOGRAPHY LACKING

Munch Deserves A Proper Boswell

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Now that he has departed from the Boston scene, is it too late to suggest that Charles Munch deserves a well-documented biography in English? For among the giants of modern music he is conspicuous by his lack of a Boswell.

To be sure, there is Dr. Munch's own "I Am A Conductor," but the essay does not pretend to follow his career in depth. A book devoted to him should not be the kind of journalese on which we have been forced to rely for a picture of Charles Munch during the last dozen years or so. The man merits a biographer, a careful musical scholar and a stylist on the order of Neville Cardus.

Cardus And Reid

Mr. Cardus's new book on the late Sir Thomas Beecham may or may not be published in America by now; I found the English edition published by Collins vastly readable and amusing.

It is as much about Cardus as Beecham, in the words of the London Times, but this affords a wonderful spectacle, I think. When two egos of their order collide, the result is a gorgeous Catherine wheel of wit and cultivation. Mr. Cardus's biography is perhaps less than that, a memoir, but catching in the lightning stroke and the white areas the spontaneous dazzle of the living man.

Charles Reid's recent study of Sir Thomas has been published over here by Dutton, and is by way of contrast, a critical biography. I've just finished, and while agreeing generally again with The Times that "formidable research, largely original but not all of it fully digested" is plain to see, how many biographies actually contain "original" and "formidable" research? I commend Mr. Reid to your perusal.

He has a subject as protean and demanding, certainly, as any biographer could choose.

ADELE ADDISON, distinguished American soprano who has been chosen by Pablo Casals as a featured artist in the Casals Festival in Puerto Rico in June, will also be heard at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, this summer and will be heard in Boston next season in the B. U. Celebrity Series.

The distance between the young Beecham who was so revolutionary that he did not use a baton 'after the manner of Safanoff, the famous Russian,' to the bitter but far from broken old lion out of contact with the new frontiers of his art, is that of light years.

Mr. Reid does not succeed in snaring the elusive and far-ranging Beecham, though his comparative success at doing so indicates that he too might be just the man for a try at a stationary and plainer Dr. Munch.

By EVANS OBRIAN

184

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
73,050
MAR 10 1962

CHARLES MUNCH will bid farewell to New York audiences in his final concerts with the Bos-

CITY OPERA director Julius Rudel (seated) discusses a musical point with composer Abraham Ellstein, whose new opera, "The Golem," will open the company's spring season

Music: A Spring Forecast

A BRIEF SURVEY OF MUSICAL EVENTS LEADING TO THE CLOSE OF THE 1961-62 SEASON DISCLOSES A FEW DEBUTS AND ONE MAJOR DEPARTURE

WHEN THE Boston Symphony visits this city next, for its final pair of concerts on April 4 and 7, Charles Munch will be appearing here for the last time as its conductor. His program, which his devoted followers will recognize as the same one he first conducted in this country, will include Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's Second "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,530
MAR 26 1962

He'll Be Missed

A packed house applauded with unusual warmth for a Boston audience as an elegant, white-haired man bustled gracefully past scores of poised musicians and stepped up on the conductor's stand at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch bowed eloquently, and the music began . . . Schubert's 5th Symphony, Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 with handsome blonde Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as brilliant soloist, and after intermission, "Death and Transfiguration," a tone poem by Richard Strauss.

It was a distinguished occasion, notably for the beauty of the music but sad because it was the last Sunday series concert with Charles Munch as music director, for he retires this year.

Something that has enriched life for thousands will leave Boston with him . . . but his masterful musicianship, his inspiring leadership, his joyful sharing of talents, will live long in the memories of many North Shore people who have been privileged to watch and listen to Munch in the last 10 years.

Herald 4/29/62 ?

BIOGRAPHY LACKING

Munch Deserves A Proper Boswell

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Now that he has departed from the Boston scene, is it too late to suggest that Charles Munch deserves a well-documented biography in English? For among the giants of modern music he is conspicuous by his lack of a Boswell.

To be sure, there is Dr. Munch's own "I Am A Conductor," but the essay does not pretend to follow his career in depth. A book devoted to him should not be the kind of journalese on which we have been forced to rely for a picture of Charles Munch during the last dozen years or so. The man merits a biographer, a careful musical scholar and a stylist on the order of Neville Cardus.

Cardus And Reid

Mr. Cardus's new book on the late Sir Thomas Beecham may or may not be published in America by now; I found the English edition published by Collins vastly readable and amusing.

It is as much about Cardus as Beecham, in the words of the London Times, but this affords a wonderful spectacle, I think. When two egos of their order collide, the result is a gorgeous Catherine wheel of wit and cultivation. Mr. Cardus's biography is perhaps less than that, a memoir, but catching in the lightning stroke and the white areas the spontaneous dazzle of the living man.

Charles Reid's recent study of Sir Thomas has been published over here by Dutton, and is by way of contrast, a critical biography. I've just finished, and while agreeing generally again with The Times that "formidable research, largely original but not all of it fully digested" is plain to see, how many biographies actually contain "original" and "formidable" research? I commend Mr. Reid to your perusal.

He has a subject as protean and demanding, certainly, as any biographer could choose.

ADELE ADDISON, distinguished American soprano who has been chosen by Pablo Casals as a featured artist in the Casals Festival in Puerto Rico in June, will also be heard at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, this summer and will be heard in Boston next season in the B. U. Celebrity Series.

The distance between the young Beecham who was so revolutionary that he did not use a baton 'after the manner of Safanoff, the famous Russian,' to the bitter but far from broken old lion out of contact with the new frontiers of his art, is that of light years.

Mr. Reid does not succeed in sharing the elusive and far-ranging Beecham, though his comparative success at doing so indicates that he too might be just the man for a try at a stationary and plainer Dr. Munch.

By EVANS O'BRIAN

185

Munch Retirement Ends Era in Symphony's History

Dynamic Personality Of French Musician Won Boston's Heart

By CYRUS DURGIN

When the final D major chord of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony sounds in Symphony Hall, next Saturday night, Dr. Charles Munch will have conducted his final concert in Boston as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is more than personal significance in Dr. Munch's departure after a regime of 13 years. This will mean profoundly, the end of an era in the history of the Orchestra.

★ ★ ★

The artistic orientation of the Boston Symphony has been largely French since the days of Rabaud and Monteux, 1919-24. Though Serge Koussevitsky was a Slav, there was, beyond the purely personal elements of his conducting style, a certain Gallic bias.

Intensely French

With the advent of Munch in 1949, the Orchestra entered a period of intense French influence. Munch effectively altered the orchestral sound to a lighter, clear French sonority, within two years. The repertory included more French music than ever before.

We may expect all this to be changed, if gradually perhaps, when Erich Leinsdorf takes over as music director next September. Leinsdorf was born and schooled in Vienna, and though most of his conducting maturity has been based in the United States, his original artistic orientation was Central European.

Charles Munch was in a trying position when he assumed leadership. For 25 years, Koussevitzky had reigned in fame and brilliance. He settled in as an adopted Bostonian, became a citizen, had a flair for public relations and making news, was a grand seigneur in a social sense, and a despot as orchestral disciplinarian. Who was the man who could follow him?

At that time, I thought that Charles Munch was the only possible successor, whether as interim conductor, or as events happily have proved, for longer. I believe that today. It was terribly, terribly difficult for the man who followed Koussevitzky.

Dynamic Musician

Munch had little of the instinct for getting into newsprint, though with his arrival there was an attempt to make brouhaha out of the fact that some French journals had dubbed him "Le Beau Charles," and implied that he was something of a boulevardier. That fell flat. The mature Munch was not, is not, anything of the sort, and he won the Boston—and American—public by his dynamic musical personality.

That was the winning quality Munch possessed, and it captured the local heart upon his very first appearance, as guest conductor in 1946. Munch is also a handsome man, and though actually shy in the presence of strangers, he has all the charm and poise in the world when before an orchestra.

Munch was no social lion, either. He always has hated parties and receptions, and has found relaxation in the company of a few intimates. Nonetheless, he won the heart of the local public, who soon accorded him that manifestation peculiar to allegedly cold Boston, personal affection as well as professional esteem.

Spiritual Quality

The public also found, in addition to dynamism, a spiritual quality in his conducting. As a musician whose family roots go back generations in Alsace, Munch was not a Parisian sort of French artist. He has a character much deeper than that. When he performed Bach, especially the Passions, there has been what seemed to me a touch of German high seriousness in his approach.

At his first rehearsal, Munch told the musicians that he valued personal relationships as highly as professional efficiency, and that he hoped they would "find joy in making music together." He meant that, and thereafter showed it in his relationships toward them. As time passed, and players became accustomed to his ways, there was a certain slackening of discipline, by accumulated evidence. He was not a man to rehearse endlessly. While the Symphony's high standards were maintained, there were occasions of less than the finest polish. That was, however, exception to the rule.

Of Munch's personal qualities as conductor, and his record with new music, his finest achievements and his lesser, I shall have more to say next Sunday.

CHARLES MUNCH, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is caught in a characteristic moment of action as he rehearses the orchestra. He will conduct his two final Symphony Hall concerts this coming week-end.

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,972
APR 1 1962

Boston Symphony Loses Munch

BY DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—To the countless fans of the Boston Symphony this waning music season has been a long exercise in the sentiment of sweet parting.

Concert by concert, the orchestra is parting from its music director and conductor, Charles Munch. And, of course, Munch is parting from the orchestra. For 13 years they have been like bow to fiddle.

Munch made it an installment parting by announcing his impending retirement before the season began. It becomes final in the fall, before he becomes 71 years old in September.

Other bows will play upon this magnificent instrument no less beautifully than the Munch bow does. Yet few bows will evoke quite the same spirituality which suggests man's essence is in music.

Music fans delight in such an evocation. It makes it seem they have the answer to all philosophical problems. They are awed by any kind of dedication to music, and Munch's dedication surmounts the routine and the ordinary.

He is an animated music score, in a manner of speaking, and it is instantly apparent. An Alsatian by birth, he was in the German Army during World War I, (having been conscripted), and played in a German orchestra for six years afterward.

But he considered himself a Frenchman and the French accepted him as such without question. During World War II he remained in Paris throughout the occupation which made many a Frenchman of his prominence at least suspect to the liberators.

Not Munch. He had stuck to his last, which then was conducting the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Anyone could see, and still can see, that the world apart from music hardly exists for this tall, rather lumbering man. His is more than a dedication. It is an utter absorption.

In his own book-length rundown of what it means to be a conductorial musician (published in 1955) it is odd that he did not speak of the joy or pleasure of it, but of the suffering in it. "You perch on a pedestal in the middle of a battlefield," he said. "You are Saint Sebastian exposed to the Roman arrows. You are Joan of Arc ready to burn at the stake for what you love."

Conducting, he asserted, "is not a profession at all, but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often even a disease—a disease from which the only escape is death."

However, any of this may really be, Munch has made a profound impression on American music-making in the 13 years he led the Bostonians. He is no caterer to popular tastes; he serves up that music which he believes it is his mission to perform. Once he told his Boston patrons that perhaps they didn't care for the modern composers but it was their duty to listen to them, and there hardly is ever a Boston program without a modern on it.

Next week Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in New York's Carnegie Hall for the last time as its music director, and he'll play the French composers—Debussy, Berlioz and Ravel—with whom people have come to identify him, because they think of him as a French musician.

But in the 10 years ending in 1959, Munch put the orchestra through Beethoven 65 times, which made Beethoven his top composer. Mozart was second, with 53 performances. Then followed Bach with 45 and Brahms with 44. Ravel placed fifth, Debussy seventh and Berlioz ninth.

TRAVEL WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,558
MAR 13 1962

Schedule Two Music Festivals in France

AIX - EN - PROVENCE, France.—Four operas and 13 concerts will comprise the world famous International Music Festival of Aix-en-Provence, July 9-31.

The Bordeaux Music Festival will be held May 11-27, with two operas, three ballets and two concerts scheduled. The Boston Symphony's Charles Munch will conduct the French Lamoureux Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
APR 8 1962

Bordeaux, Aix Music Festivals Set for '62

(AIX-EN-PROVENCE — The world famous International Music Festival of Aix-en-Provence will be held from July 9 to 31, according to the French Government Tourist Office. Preliminary plans for this year's event call for four operas and 13 concerts. Renowned violinist Nathan Milstein will be among the featured performers.

Meanwhile, Bordeaux is also getting set for its spectacular Festival, scheduled to take place from May 11 to 27. In addition to two operas, the Bordeaux event calls for Charles Munch, of the Boston Symphony, to conduct the great French Lamoureux Orchestra. There will also be three ballets at the Bordeaux Festival along with two concerts by the Festival of Strings of Lucerne, under the direction of Rudolf Baumgartner.

The incomparable French actors Madeleine Renaud and Jean-Louis Barrault will star in the three plays to be given by the Theatre de France during the Festival.

Munch Retirement Ends Era in Symphony's History

Dynamic Personality Of French Musician Won Boston's Heart

By CYRUS DURGIN

DURGIN

When the final D major chord of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony sounds in Symphony Hall, next Saturday night, Dr. Charles Munch will have conducted his final concert in Boston as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There is more than personal significance in Dr. Munch's departure after a regime of 13 years. This will mean profoundly, the end of an era in the history of the Orchestra.

★ ★ ★

The artistic orientation of the Boston Symphony has been largely French since the days of Rabaud and Monteux, 1919-24. Though Serge Koussevitsky was a Slav, there was, beyond the purely personal elements of his conducting style, a certain Gallic bias.

Intensely French

With the advent of Munch in 1949, the Orchestra entered a period of intense French influence. Munch effectively altered the orchestral sound to a lighter, clear French sonority, within two years. The repertory included more French music than ever before.

We may expect all this to be changed, if gradually perhaps, when Erich Leinsdorf takes over as music director next September. Leinsdorf was born and schooled in Vienna, and though most of his conducting maturity has been based in the United States, his original artistic orientation was Central European.

Charles Munch was in a trying position when he assumed leadership. For 25 years, Koussevitzky had reigned in fame and brilliance. He settled in as an adopted Bostonian, became a citizen, had a flair for public relations and making news, was a grand seigneur in a social sense, and a despot as orchestral disciplinarian. Who was the man who could follow him?

At that time, I thought that Charles Munch was the only possible successor, whether as interim conductor, or as events happily have proved, for longer. I believe that today. It was terribly, terribly difficult for the man who followed Koussevitzky.

Dynamic Musician

Munch had little of the instinct for getting into newsprint, though with his arrival there was an attempt to make brouhaha out of the fact that some French journals had dubbed him "Le Beau Charles," and implied that he was something of a boulevardier. That fell flat. The mature Munch was not, is not, anything of the sort, and he won the Boston—and American—public by his dynamic musical personality.

That was the winning quality Munch possessed, and it captured the local heart upon his very first appearance, as guest conductor in 1946. Munch is also a handsome man, and though actually shy in the presence of strangers, he has all the charm and poise in the world when before an orchestra.

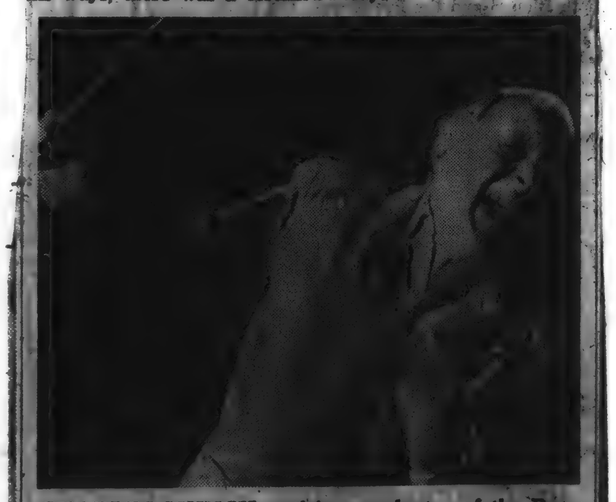
Munch was no social lion, either. He always has hated parties and receptions, and has found relaxation in the company of a few intimates. Nonetheless, he won the heart of the local public, who soon accorded him that manifestation peculiar to allegedly cold Boston, personal affection as well as professional esteem.

Spiritual Quality

The public also found, in addition to dynamism, a spiritual quality in his conducting. As a musician whose family roots go back generations in Alsace, Munch was not a Parisian sort of French artist. He has a character much deeper than that. When he performed Bach, especially the Passions, there has been what seemed to me a touch of German high seriousness in his approach.

At his first rehearsal, Munch told the musicians that he valued personal relationships as highly as professional efficiency, and that he hoped they would "find joy in making music together." He meant that, and thereafter showed it in his relationships toward them. As time passed, and players became accustomed to his ways, there was a certain slackening of discipline, by accumulated evidence. He was not a man to rehearse endlessly. While the Symphony's high standards were maintained, there were occasions of less than the finest polish. That was, however, exception to the rule.

Of Munch's personal qualities as conductor, and his record with new music, his finest achievements and his lesser, I shall have more to say next Sunday.



CHARLES MUNCH, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is caught in a characteristic moment of action as he rehearses the orchestra. He will conduct his two final Symphony Hall concerts this coming week-end.

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,972
APR 1 1962

Boston Symphony Loses Munch

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—To the countless fans of the Boston Symphony this waning music season has been a long exercise in the sentiment of sweet parting.

Concert by concert, the orchestra is parting from its music director and conductor, Charles Munch. And, of course, Munch is parting from the orchestra. For 13 years they have been like bow to fiddle.

Munch made it an installment parting by announcing his impending retirement before the season began. It becomes final in the fall, before he becomes 71 years old in September.

Other bows will play upon this magnificent instrument no less beautifully than the Munch bow does. Yet few bows will evoke quite the same spirituality which suggests man's essence is in music.

Music fans delight in such an evocation. It makes it seem they have the answer to all philosophical problems. They are awed by any kind of dedication to music, and Munch's dedication surmounts the routine and the ordinary.

He is an animated music score, in a manner of speaking, and it is instantly apparent. An Alsatian by birth, he was in the German Army during World War I, (having been conscripted), and played in a German orchestra for six years afterward.

But he considered himself a Frenchman and the French accepted him as such without question. During World War II he remained in Paris throughout the occupation which made many a Frenchman of his prominence at least suspect to the liberators.

Not Munch. He had stuck to his last, which then was conducting the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Anyone could see, and still can see, that the world apart from music hardly exists for this tall, rather lumbering man. His is more than a dedication. It is an utter absorption.

In his own book-length rundown of what it means to be a conductorial musician (published in 1955) it is odd that he did not speak of the joy or pleasure of it, but of the suffering in it. "You perch on a pedestal in the middle of a battlefield," he said. "You are Saint Sebastian exposed to the Roman arrows. You are Joan of Arc ready to burn at the stake for what you love."

Conducting, he asserted, "is not a profession at all, but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often even a disease—a disease from which the only escape is death."

However, any of this may really be, Munch has made a profound impression on American music-making in the 13 years he led the Bostonians. He is no caterer to popular tastes; he serves up that music which he believes it is his mission to perform. Once he told his Boston patrons that perhaps they didn't care for the modern composers but it was their duty to listen to them, and there hardly is ever a Boston program without a modern on it.

Next week Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in New York's Carnegie Hall for the last time as its music director, and he'll play the French composers—Debussy, Berlioz and Ravel—with whom people have come to identify him, because they think of him as a French musician.

But in the 10 years ending in 1959, Munch put the orchestra through Beethoven 65 times, which made Beethoven his top composer. Mozart was second, with 53 performances. Then followed Bach with 45 and Brahms with 44. Ravel placed fifth, Debussy seventh and Berlioz ninth.

TRAVEL WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,558

MAR 13 1962

Schedule Two Music Festivals in France

AIX - EN - PROVENCE, France.—Four operas and 13 concerts will comprise the world famous International Music Festival of Aix-en-Provence, July 9-31.

The Bordeaux Music Festival will be held May 11-27, with two operas, three ballets and two concerts scheduled. The Boston Symphony's Charles Munch will conduct the French Lamoureux Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

APR 8 1962

Bordeaux, Aix Music Festivals Set for '62

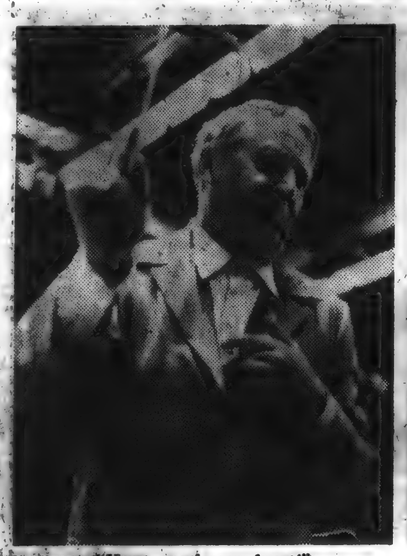
AIX-EN-PROVENCE — The world famous International Music Festival of Aix-en-Provence will be held from July 9 to 31, according to the French Government Tourist Office. Preliminary plans for this year's event call for four operas and 13 concerts. Renowned violinist Nathan Milstein will be among the featured performers.

Meanwhile, Bordeaux is also getting set for its spectacular Festival, scheduled to take place from May 11 to 27. In addition to two operas, the Bordeaux event calls for Charles Munch, of the Boston Symphony, to conduct the great French Lamoureux Orchestra. There will also be three ballets at the Bordeaux Festival along with two concerts by the Festival of Strings of Lucerne, under the direction of Rudolf Baumgartner.

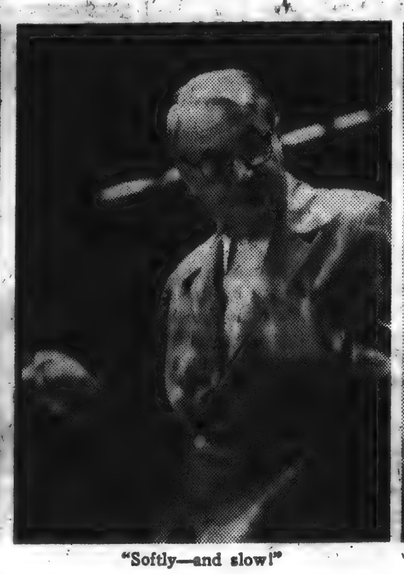
The incomparable French actors Madeleine Renaud and Jean-Louis Barrault will star in the three plays to be given by the Theatre de France during the Festival.

A Modest Man of True Humility—Shy, Friendly, Kind

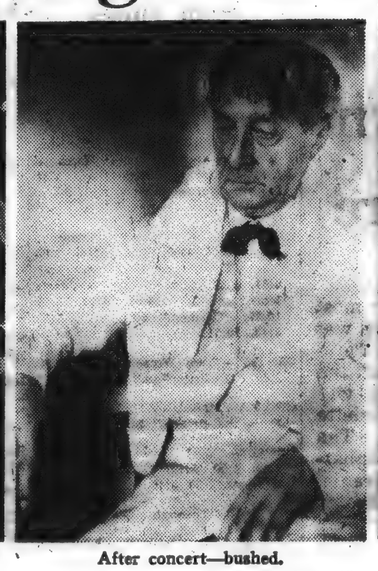
Munch Gave Wings to Spirit of French Music



"Heart, gentlemen, heart!"



"Softly—and slow!"



After concert—bushed.

Conducting Christmas carols.

Berkshire Festival begins.

Benign rehearsal study.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

APR 28 1962

End of a Partnership

In the thirteen years Dr. Charles Munch has been conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Boston hasn't gotten to know him very well. The retiring maestro has been so passionately devoted to his work that he has had little time for socializing.

Yet this shy and dedicated man, whose back is almost more familiar to us than his face, has completely won our affections.

A rapport has developed between the man and the city growing out of the trust they share in the orchestra. The Symphony is Boston's pride, a precious inheritance to be cherished and passed on in undiminished greatness to future generations. Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra at its proper value. He has changed it to fit his style, but he has preserved its high quality, its vitality, its respect for its own standards. And he has given part of his life and soul to the task.

In Dr. Munch's book the conductor's role is all-demanding. The conductor, he once wrote, "has only the right to be talented, the right to love music and conducting, and the duty to consider every performance a combat of uncertain outcome."

To Boston the outcome of Dr. Munch's stewardship has not been uncertain. As he puts down his baton for the last time this week, he leaves the orchestra at the peak of its reputation, a superb instrument whose tone is unmistakably that of its departing director.

Dr. Munch has expressed his affection for Boston through his dedication to the orchestra. Boston reciprocates with the warmest possible feeling. We do not like to see the partnership end. But the mutual regard continues.

Boston and Dr. Munch have never been closer.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

MAY 1 1962

A Boston Farewell to Dr. Munch

* * *

From The Boston Herald

* * *

In the 13 years Dr. Charles Munch has been conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston hasn't gotten to know him very well. The retiring maestro has been so passionately devoted to his work that he has had little time for socializing.

Yet this shy and dedicated man, whose back is almost more familiar to us than his face, has completely won our affections.

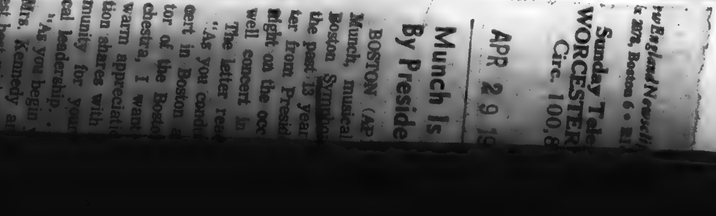
A rapport has developed between the man and the city growing out of the trust they share in the orchestra. The Symphony is Boston's pride, a precious inheritance to be cherished and passed on in undiminished greatness to future generations. Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra at its proper value. He has changed it to fit his style, but he has preserved its high quality, its vitality, its respects for its own standards. And he has given part of his life and soul to the task.

In Dr. Munch's book, the conductor's role is all-demanding.

To Boston, the outcome of Dr. Munch's stewardship has not been uncertain. As he puts down his baton for the last time, he leaves the orchestra at the peak of its reputation, a superb instrument whose tone is unmistakably that of its departing director.

Dr. Munch has expressed his affection for Boston through his dedication to the orchestra. Bost[illegible] with the warmest poss[illegible] do not like to see the pa[illegible] But the mutual regard con[illegible]

Boston and Dr. Munch ha[illegible] been closer.



New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,6[illegible]

APR 29 19[illegible]

Munch Is
By Preside

BOSTON (AP
Munch, musical
Boston Symph
the past 13 year ler from Presid night on the oc well concert in
The letter rea
"As you conduc
cert in Boston
tor of the Bost chestra, I want warm appreciati tion shares with munity for your cal leadership.
"As you begin
Mrs. Kennedy a est best wishes
Munch plans t in France and conductor and later as symphony or Munch, w plans to Festival in Lenox this big abroad

Fare
Fete
Mu

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
APR 22 1962

Globe 4/29/62

197

Farewell Fete to Munch

Bostonians who had attended the reception welcoming Dr. Charles Munch to the Boston Symphony Orchestra 13 years ago were among the guests bidding him "farewell" at the party given by French Consul General Jean Savelli and Madame Savelli, Thursday evening at the Consulate. Champagne toasts were proposed to the noted conductor who will give his final concerts in Boston this week.

Nadia Boulanger (the first woman to have conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra back in 1925) came to the party after conducting a portion of the afternoon concert at Symphony Hall. Others in the distinguished gathering were Arthur Fiedler, recently returned from a 62-day concert tour during which he gave 60 concerts; Mrs. Fiedler, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Judge and Mrs. John V. Spalding, Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Brigham.

Also present were Duchess de Leuchtenberg with her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Pasquale, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Powers, Dr. Alfredo Trinchieri, Italian Counsul-General and his daughter, Franca; Joseph Colletti, Mr. and Mrs. Veevold Strekalovsky, Mrs. William Endicott, Mr. and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Miss Mildred Bixby and Serge Conus.

By CYRUS DURGIN

A gentleman, a scholar and a great conductor bade farewell to this city, last night, as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Reluctantly we all must acknowledge the fact that Dr. Charles Munch's regime of 13 years now comes to an end. His actual retirement will occur at the conclusion of the approaching Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, but already he has said goodby to his Boston public.

DURGIN

With the departure of Dr. Munch, not only an artistic administration but an era in the history of Boston's great orchestra will be finished.

Since Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Dr. Munch in September, was Viennese-born and bred, we may expect that the French dominance under which the orchestra has functioned since 1919, naturally will be superseded by a different influence.

Further, Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster (though happily he continues as associate conductor), and his chair will be occupied, when the orchestra reassembles for the season of 1962-63, by Joseph Silverstein.

The latter, a member of the Boston Symphony since 1955, will assume this demanding position at the age of 30, a post which he won in open competition with various of his colleagues, before Mr. Leinsdorf, last Fall.

It is the prerogative of a conductor to choose his concertmaster. Leinsdorf was pleased to ask present members of the violin sections to compete for the honor.

Considered in the perspective of time, the regime of Dr. Munch has been distinctive. He was able not only to follow another great conductor who had reigned at Symphony Hall for 25 years, but to establish his own individuality.

In temperament, method and musical background, Dr. Munch was quite unlike Serge Koussevitzky.

One aspect of experience, however, they shared: each had been an orchestral player before turning to the field of conducting.

Koussevitzky was a double-bass virtuoso, and early in his Boston years he gave us a few samples of his prowess. Dr. Munch had been a violinist, for some years concertmaster of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipzig.

Unfortunately he never elected to play the violin in public here.

★ ★ ★

Where Koussevitzky had been a disciplinary tyrant, and rehearsed even familiar standard works over and over again, Charles Munch had his own way of working with the complex of minds, technics and temperaments which make a large orchestra.

At his first rehearsal, Munch said to the gentlemen of the Boston Symphony he hoped they would find joy in making music.

That continued to be his view. He could be stern but he put great importance upon the personal relationship between conductor and players.

Munch was a modest man, fierce in his own convictions about musical art, but possessed of a genuine humility. Apart from his musical attributes, I shall remember him most for his unfailing friendliness and kindness.

★ ★ ★

For obvious professional reasons, a newspaper reviewer ought to know few if any musicians intimately, though he is bound to enjoy a large acquaintance among them.

Over 13 years of writing about Munch and his work, pro and con, not once did he ever complain to me of what I had written. Nor did any report of irritation ever reach my ears indirectly.

Whenever we met, which was fairly often, he always had time to beam a smile at me and shake hands, no matter what his haste or pressure of the moment.

He was like that; his feelings for other people were spontaneous and warm.

Munch was shy, especially with strangers. That, I think, explained his aversion to formal receptions. They made him uneasy. He enjoyed to relax in the copany of a few intimates.

Munch disliked holding court in the Symphony Hall Green Room after concerts.

The rapidity with which he changed clothes, and disappeared downstairs into his automobile became a standing jest.

★ ★ ★

But he had time always to be nice to people. No boy or girl who asked him for an autograph was refused. Some years ago he was persuaded to go downtown to the plaza in front of City Hall to conduct a Christmas Carols Sing. It was immediately after a Friday concert, cold and getting dark. He must have been exhausted.

But he went, stood up in overcoat, hatless, announced the carols in his Gallic English and gave several hundred persons the thrill of their lives.

★ ★ ★

You may number in the millions the persons whom Munch and the Boston Symphony have thrilled in many parts of the world. He was fated to take the orchestra upon its first tour in Europe in 1952.

A year later, they made a transcontinental tour of the United States. Europe, and for the first time, Russia, heard them in 1956. Two seasons ago they went to the Far East.

★ ★ ★

Another first for Munch was his engaging of Doriot Anthony (now Mrs. Dwyer) as first flute of the Boston Symphony just 10 years ago next Fall. There had been a few women in the orchestra before, but never a first desk player in skirts.

Every human being does something notably better than he does something else. With Charles Munch, it is making music in the French image of style and sound — especially music written by Frenchmen.

That has been the unique and undisputed glory of his 13 years in Boston.

From Rameau to Ravel, much French music has appeared on Munch programs, sometimes in the face of complaints, we were hearing too much of it.

Munch's first big success here, when he made his local debut as guest conductor, Dec. 27, 1946, was with what had been considered a faded old chromo—the C minor, or "Organ," symphony of Saint-Saens.

Under Munch's dynamic treatment, the piece suddenly came to life.

On that all-French program was a work which became a Munch specialty—the Second Suite from Roussel's Ballet, "Bacchus et Ariane."

I would include as Munch-illuminated high spots, "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," that work of Debussy which hitherto seemed dry and even dull to me; Ravel's "La Valse," unequalled in every way, and the Second Suite from "Daphnis et Chloe."

★ ★ ★

The modern French, Honegger (very especially), Milhaud, Roussel, Poulenc among them, Munch served as well as he did the famous 19th Century French composers.

But his peak of peaks was the music of Hector Berlioz. In that he had no competition even to approach his polish and passion.

The "Fantastic" Symphony, "The Damnation of Faust," "Harold in Italy," the Requiem (hitherto unheard here), the whole of "Romeo and Juliet" and "L'Enfance du Christ," even that rarity, the song-cycle, "Summer Nights," provided memorable enjoyment.

Berlioz' Te Deum he performed only at Tanglewood.

With the three proverbial B's of music—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—Munch was successful, though often too fast in his tempi. He could be carried away by power and speed, which then resulted in coarseness.

In this, however, he had mellowed down in recent seasons. His Wagner, indifferent at first, also improved.

★ ★ ★

Choral music aroused a spiritual side of Munch. He instituted the practice of Easter performance in alternate years of the "St. Matthew" and "St. John" Passions of Bach. He presented the Christmas Oratorio.

Just once, in his first season, he conducted, and nobly, the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven. Brahms' Requiem he conducted twice in the Berkshires, not in Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
APR 22 1962

Munch Is Praised By President

BOSTON (AP) — Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 13 years, received a letter from President Kennedy last night on the occasion of his farewell concert in Symphony Hall.

The letter read:

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express the warm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership. . .

"As you begin your next career, Mrs. Kennedy and I send warmest best wishes."

Munch plans to go to his home in France and will be a guest conductor abroad. He will return later as a guest conductor of the symphony orchestra.

Munch, who is 70 this year, plans to conduct the Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox this summer before going abroad.

MUNCH as the public never saw him—in hunting jacket in his Milton home.

CIGARETTE unlit, Munch beams as he writes autograph for youngster.

PRACTICING his golf swing outside the music shed at Tanglewood, in Berkshires.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

APR 29 1962

Trustees' Tribute to Munch

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have released the text of a resolution in tribute to Charles Munch. The resolution was written by Henry A. Laughlin in behalf of the trustees and read to Dr. Munch by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra, at a dinner on the Isabel Stewart Gardner Museum Apr. 15. The commendation reads:

"We are here tonight to express our admiration and affection for you, Charles Munch, and to tell you in a way as simple and earnest as we can how deeply grateful we are for the 13 years you have dedicated to the making of music with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"There are those who have loved your direction because you have opened new vistas which many of us did not know existed in the great music of France; there are those who have been stirred by your zeal in presenting the works of our contemporaries; those who have been exhilarated by the magnificence of your inspiration, the pace and excitement which leaves your audience profoundly stirred; and those who remember with serene pleasure the countless slow passages, illuminated by your gentleness and sweetness, yet never lagging, never marred by sentimentality.

"For all this and so much more we shall be forever in your debt, and if what we owe you and the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot be summed up in a few lines, we still can try to leave an impression and can perhaps do that by recalling what you said to your Orchestra 13 years ago at your first rehearsal. I am told you said you hoped there would be joy.

"There has been joy — joy among all your associates in our Orchestra; joy among all of us who have taken such pride in our "Symphony," pride in this Orchestra, which we think of as ours, but which in truth has no such narrow bound, for it has won and held the admiration of the lovers of music throughout the world.

"To us not the least of your qualities of greatness is that you have fixed in the memories of your players, your audiences, your trustees the image of that tall, masterful devoted leader, who was more than a leader. You are one whom we have come to love."

Charles Munch responded: "My most precious memory is having worked with such an institution but now I must turn a page in my life — not an end, a beginning. I thank you from the bottom of my heart; perhaps between the words you can hear my heart."

He'll Be Missed

A packed house applauded with unusual warmth for a Boston audience as an elegant, white-haired man bustled gracefully past scores of poised musicians and stepped up on the conductor's stand at Symphony Hall. Charles Munch bowed eloquently, and the music began . . . : Schubert's 5th Symphony, Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 with handsome blonde Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as brilliant soloist, and after intermission, "Death and Transfiguration," a tone poem by Richard Strauss.

It was a distinguished occasion, notably for the beauty of the music but sad because it was the last Sunday series concert with Charles Munch as music director, for he retires this year.

Something that has enriched life for thousands will leave Boston with him . . . but his masterful musicianship, his inspiring leadership, his joyful sharing of talents, will live long in the memories of many North Shore people who have been privileged to watch and listen to Munch in the last 10 years.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

APR 28 1962

Bowing Out

RETIRING conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, bows as he receives Paul Revere bowl from Mayor Collins in unprecedented civic gesture yesterday. Orchestra members in background applaud at ceremony which marks finale of Dr. Munch's 13-year reign.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

APR 29 1962

President Salutes Dr. Munch's Finale

By CYRUS DURGIN

President John F. Kennedy has honored retiring music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, with a personal message from the White House. The letter, received yesterday at Symphony Hall, was read from the stage by Symphony Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., before Dr. Munch's farewell concert last night.

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express the warm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership," Mr. Kennedy wrote.

"It is most reassuring to know that you will continue your conducting both in this country and abroad. I am sure that you relinquish your Boston association with a genuine sense of achievement.

"This government owes you a special debt of gratitude for the outstanding tours abroad of the Boston Symphony during the past years and the hospitality you have shown at all times to the new compositions of American composers.

"As you begin your next career, Mrs. Kennedy and I send warmest best wishes. Sincerely, John F. Kennedy."

Sends Reply

Dr. Munch sent the following reply:

"Dear Mr. President: Your letter touches me profoundly. I can hardly express my thanks to you and to Mrs. Kennedy for your interest in my retirement from the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"In our tours abroad, which have carried the name of Boston so far, my contribution has surely been a small one and it is the people of Boston who deserve whatever gratitude may be due. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a great institution, it is because this alert, intelligent and generous community wishes it so.

"The high level of achievement attained by American composers and performers, the great richness of American musical life can only grow in the future. I shall be proud to reflect their glories as long as I can. Most sincerely yours, Charles Munch."

The emotional temperature ran high in Symphony Hall as Dr. Munch bade goodbye—metamorphically—for he uttered no words in public—to his Boston public.

Orchestra and audience rose in greeting as he entered the stage. The listeners would have kept him bowing longer had he not turned and addressed himself to the musicians for the first work of the evening: Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon."

When the conductor, with a big sharp gesture, cut off the final chord of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, his 13 years' regime was over. Without an instant's pause, clapping and cheers filled the auditorium as they had on Friday afte

Back, again and again Munch, his white hair shirt front slightly run from his exertions, bu all smiles.

As he did Friday, the conductor took retiring Concert-master Richard Burgin and retiring cellist Jacobus Lan endoen by the arm, and shared a bow with them. Twice thereafter, he pulled Burgin to center stage fo special tribute. At this, the din of applause increased.

Dr. Munch clasped his hands in the traditional prize fighter's gesture of triumph, crossed his arms over his chest, waved and smiled some more. The great green laurel wreath, presented by the Symphony's trustees, was brought out again on its stand. More smiles, more bows and Charles Munch vanished.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

APR 30 1962

189

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

APR 29 1962

Splendid Leadership'

Kennedy Letter Lauds Munch at Final Concert

President Kennedy has written a letter lauding Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who stood on the podium for the final time last night.

Dr. Munch, who has been musical director for 13 years, plans to return to his native France. After conducting a number of concerts in Europe, he will lead the Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Dr. Munch received a 10-minute standing ovation from the capacity audience. With perspiration dripping from his brow, he walked into the wings. He returned to center stage seven times before the audience began filtering from the hall.

He greeted a number of old friends in a second-floor room filled with roses from admirers. Outside the stage entrance on St. Stephen street were more than 500 persons waiting for his final exit from Symphony Hall.

Dr. Munch will leave for Paris at 3 p.m. today, and will return to the United States in late June.

'A SPECIAL DEBT'

The President s letter read:

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express the warm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership.

"It is most reassuring to know that you will continue your conducting both in this country and abroad. I am sure that you relinquish your Boston association with a genuine sense of achievement.

"This government owes you a special debt of gratitude for the outstanding tours abroad of the Boston Symphony during the past years and the hospitality you have shown at all times to the new compositions of American composers.

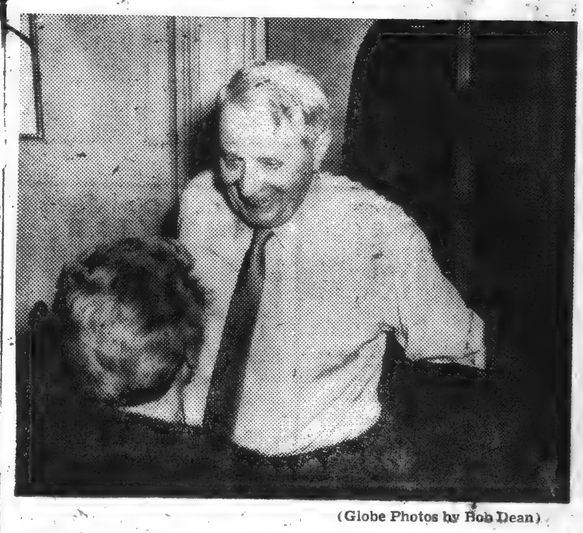
"As you begin your new career, Mrs. Kennedy and I send you warmest best wishes."

Dr. Munch, who is 70, will conduct a series of concerts in France and Switzerland. The series will begin with a Debussy program in Paris at the centennial celebration of the composer's birth.

He had had the second longest uninterrupted term as conductor. Serge Koussevitzky was with the orchestra for 25 years.

He conducted the orchestra on tours to Moscow, Tokyo, Paris, London and other world capitals.

FINAL BOW—Dr. Charles Munch conducted his final concert at Symphony Hall last night, then appeared on stage with Jacobus Langenoen, a 'cellist for 42 years who is also retiring from the orchestra.



(Globe Photos by Bob Dean)

FOND ADIEU—Standing ovation was given Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch. Elated at demonstration, he flashed broad grin as he shed his coat in dressing room.

...ston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

APR 28 1962

Munch In Last Boston Program As Symphony Head

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude the Orchestra's 81st season of Boston concerts this evening with a program of Arthur Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon" and the Symphony No. 9 by Beethoven.

This concert is Doctor Munch's last appearance in Boston as head of the Orchestra before his retirement at the conclusion of the Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on August 26.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees and Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeds Doctor Munch as the Orchestra's Music Director next season, have invited Doctor Munch to return next season as guest conductor of the Orchestra at several concerts in Boston, Cambridge and Providence. In addition to his engagements with this Orchestra, Doctor Munch has also agreed to conduct concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Pittsburgh Symphony, the Chicago Symphony and the National Symphony in Washington during his three month visit to the United States in 1963.

190

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
APR 28 1962

Charles Munch Turns a Page

Noted Conductor Bidding Farewell to Boston

By Harold Rogers
Boston

Last year at this time Charles Munch announced his plans to retire, and his days as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now drawing to a close. For 13 seasons he has been the reigning sovereign at Symphony Hall—benevolent, benign, beloved. At the concert Friday afternoon—the first of the final pair—his listeners gave him a rising vote of thanks in a touching farewell.

And yet it was not a final good-by, for Dr. Munch will return to Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home) on July 4 to complete his last stint of eight weeks as director of the Berkshire Music Festival. Prior to July 4 he will conduct a steady schedule of concerts in France and Switzerland, beginning with a Debussy program in Paris honoring the centennial of the composer's birth. He will have but two weeks of vacation at his home outside of Paris before coming to the Berkshires. And next season he will return to Symphony Hall as a guest.

Break With Tradition

In 1949 when Dr. Munch succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as director of the Boston Symphony, some observers felt that he might prove to be an "interim" conductor. Many subscribers held disturbing reservations about his musicianship, since it was obvious that he was not following in the Koussevitzkian tradition. Some felt that his Beethoven was more French than German, that his tempos flew like the wind—faster, in fact, than his musicians could play.

Yet Dr. Munch has had the second longest uninterrupted term. Koussevitzky had the longest—25 years. Wilhelm Gericke, like Dr. Munch, served 13 years, but in two terms.

If there were those who at the outset felt that Dr. Munch may have been superficial, he soon proved that he was no such thing. His quiet waters ran deep. He at once established a tradition of his own—the alternation each spring of the St. John Passion with the St. Matthew Passion. His Bach is always beatific, often seraphic. He also penetrated the tender mysteries of Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," displaying his rare understanding of religious music. Quite appropriately he has chosen to conduct Beethoven's Ninth Symphony as his Boston finale.

As for French music, he may be equaled but hardly surpassed. Perhaps no one has done more for Berlioz in this century than has Dr. Munch; it has been largely through his championship that Berlioz is now recognized as the greatest French composer of the 19th century. When it comes to Debussy, Ravel, Roussel, Dukas, and Saint-Saëns, Dr. Munch is an interpreter par excellence.

Nor has he ever neglected his duties to the music of our time. During his Boston tenure he has conducted 39 world premières, 17 first performances in the United States, and 13 Boston premières. His programs have included 168 contemporary works and the music of 36 American composers.

Dr. Munch has never been one to waste words, simply because his English has seldom been equal to the moment. But on rare occasions the force of his thought and emotion have pushed through the words in a touching and in a revealing expression. He himself gave us the key to his masterful music making in his remarks at Mrs. Gardner's palace on April 15, after he had been the recipient of tributes from the trustees of both the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Gardner Museum.

'Between the Words'

"Now I must turn a page in my life," he said. "It is not an end. It is a beginning. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. It is not the words that say it. It is what is felt between the words. Perhaps between the words you can hear my heart. It is not the notes that make the music. It is the music you hear between the notes."

Here then, simply stated, Dr. Munch has told us what many of us have known all along—that his artistry is derived from his ability to look through the notes and to seize upon the poetic substance merely symbolized by the notes.

So far as we can tell—and this is especially true when he is conducting a work that he loves—he is able to enter into the heart of the music 100 per cent, thus taking his listeners along with him. A mere technician is able to see that all the elements of the orchestra are in place and are functioning in good mechanical order. But this results only in the production of sound, not in music.

With Dr. Munch the music—and the meaning of the music—has always come first, and this is why he has seldom been less than exciting.

Beethoven Finale

For the ultimate in excitement Dr. Munch apparently released untapped reserves of energy during his performance of the Beethoven Ninth on Friday afternoon. He had opened his program with a short and early work of Honegger's—"Le Chant de Nigamon"—which served to settle the listeners until Mayor Collins of Boston could offer Dr. Munch a tribute and a silver bowl from the city.

But with the first mysterious bars of the Ninth the wonder began to take place. It was obvious that Dr. Munch was caught up in the inspiration generated by the occasion, that he would certainly leave us with an unforgettable memory of his genius.

The scherzo bounced along its peppery way with brilliance; the melodies and counter-melodies in the Adagio glowed with an unwonted warmth; and in the introduction of the final choral movement the declamations of the orchestral recitative were dramatized beyond the usual.

Then came the entrance of the "Ode to Joy," its magnificent development by the orchestra, and the first vocal statement of Schiller's words by the baritone—in this case Donald Gramm.

There were no dark horses in this quartet; the potentialities of each artist have long since been a known factor, for each has had many appearances with the Boston Symphony. The ring of Mr. Gramm's baritone was matched in radiance by the tenor of John McCollum, the contralto of Florence Kopleff, and the soprano of Adele Addison.

The choral forces, too—those of the Chorus pro Musica, one of Boston's two leading choral groups—were commendable for their power, balance, and blend. Alfred Nash Patterson, the Chorus pro Musica's founder and director, was duly honored at the close for his part in the preparation of the Ninth.

After the double bar—and a truly magnificent finale — the listeners stood at their seats while applauding and cheering, calling Dr. Munch forward for half a dozen bows. He directed some of the ovation to Richard Burgin, who, though retiring as concert-master after 42 seasons, will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

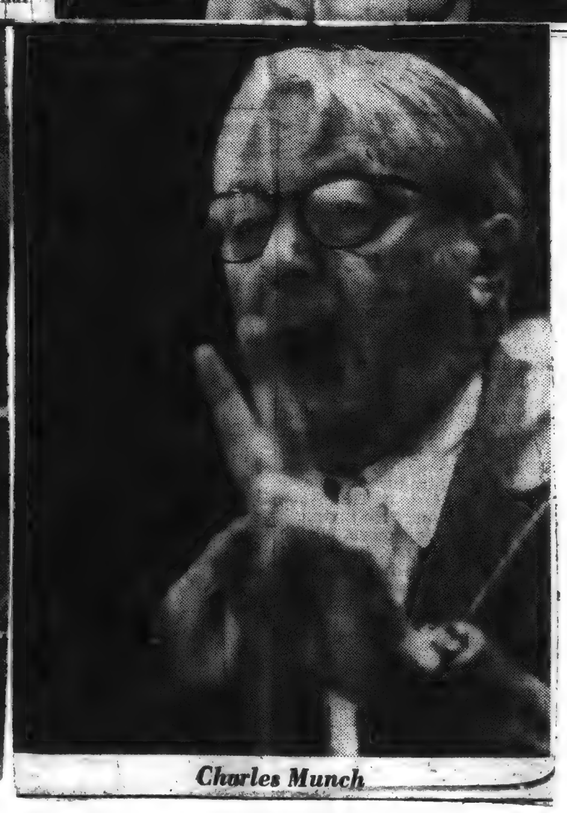
Yes, there was joy, and there has been joy, as Henry B. Cabot said at the testimonial dinner given Dr. Munch by the trustees:

"There has been joy — among all your associates our orchestra, joy among all us who have taken such pri in our 'Symphony,' a pride this orchestra which we thi of as ours, but which in tru has no such narrow bound, f it has won and held the adm ration of the lovers of musi throughout the world."

Reiner to Retire

By the Associated Press

Fritz Reiner, for nine years the musical director of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, has announced his intention to resign his post though he will conduct a few programs and continue as musical advisor.



Charles Munch

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 28 1962

2000 Roar Adieu

Hub Acclaims Munch in Farewell

By CYRUS DURGIN

A tumultuous and emotional leave-taking was that between Charles Munch and the subscribers to the Friday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

As the audience had risen to greet him when he appeared on stage at Symphony Hall, so they leaped to their feet the instant Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was over. But with a difference: this time the applause was nearly drowned by a spontaneous cheer that burst from 2000 throats.

For the next 11 minutes it was all a show of admiration and affection for the man who is ending 13 years as music director of the orchestra.

Back Munch came, and again and again, all smiles except once when the strain of fatigue showed upon his face. He waved to the public, touched his right hand, still holding its baton, toward his heart, smiled again, bowed again.

Next time out, Munch took by the arm Richard Burgin, who is retiring as concertmaster, and retiring cellist Jacobus Langendoen, urged them to center stage that they might take a bow with him.

Still the clapping and the cheers went on. A huge— not large, really huge—beribboned green laurel wreath was brought out, the gift to Munch of the Boston Symphony trustees.

Munch grinned broadly this time, folded both arms across his chest as if to embrace the Boston listeners who were so reluctant to let him go. Then one more bow and he departed, signalling as he went, with a nod of the head, to the musicians to leave the stage.

Some of us out front realized our throats were tight and tears trembled in the eyes. What emotions Munch felt, having for the last time as head of his own orchestra conducted a Friday concert, were kept to himself.

With him it was all grace and charm, French without tears. To the last, unwilling to risk public speech in English, he refrained from saying a word.

These 11 minutes were the peak of an afternoon which began with a certain expectant tension in the air, and which grew vastly exciting during the course of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The City of Boston was officially represented by Mayor Collins, on stage in his wheel chair at the beginning of intermission. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony's trustees, introduced the mayor, who then read a heartfelt speech of parting. Said Mayor Collins:

"Mr. Munch, it is with mixed emotions that I participate in this ceremony today. It is always difficult to say farewell to a friend. It is particularly difficult for me, as mayor of the City of Boston, and as a private citizen, to adequately express the sincere regret I feel at your retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THANKS—Charles Munch thanks Mayor Collins, who has just presented him with a silver Paul Revere bowl and the greetings of the city.

"We owe you a great debt of gratitude for the joy you have brought to so many through your unmatched talent; the contributions you have made to Boston's culture will be long remembered.

"During the 13 years you served as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra you gained our esteem and affection. It is my sincere hope, as mayor, speaking in an official capacity and as a private citizen with great personal admiration for you, that you will visit with us again soon.

"I have just returned from a visit to Strasbourg — your home and Boston's sister city. I found there that the citizens of Strasbourgh—indeed citizens throughout Europe—look to you and revere you as we do here in Boston.

"In presenting you with this memento of the occasion of your official leave-taking I wish you good health, good cheer and many additional years of happiness."

The memento was that admirable official gift of this city to honored and distinguished men: a large silver Paul Revere bowl.

What Mr. Munch said in reply, as he bent and shook hands with Mayor Collins, did not carry over the microphone.

As a French musician whose performance of French music is his especial glory, Munch appropriately included one last Gallic piece upon his farewell program: the brief "Le Chant de Nigamon" by the late Arthur Honegger.

It is obscure music, describing, of all things, a French novelist's notion of the scalping of the Iroquois Indian Nigamon by Tareah, a Huron Indian. It had not been heard in Boston since its composer conducted it upon visit in January, 1929.

But the great choral Ninth Symphony of Beethoven—the same work with which Serge Koussevitzky said goodby to Boston in 1949—was what the audience had been awaiting.

Munch has done it here before, several times; and we knew what to expect—a clear, vigorous, dynamic performance. It was all of that, indeed in many respects one of the most exciting accounts of this masterwork I ever have heard.

The proportions of this performance were as vast as the music itself; the classic grandeur and the emotional eloquence derived both from the score and from Munch's own profound personal comprehension of the Symphony.

The four soloists, singly and taken as a group, were unquestionably the finest, best-matched I have heard: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. They deservedly shared a bow with Munch at the end.

Effect: Enormous

So, too, Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared (as always!) by Alfred Nash Patterson, dealt with the high range and the difficulties of their parts, not only with ability but to enormous effect.

Munch led them at a febrile tempo through the fast sections, but they kept the pace and the volume and the rhythm, and they sounded exceedingly well. Twice Munch brought Patterson out to share applause.

So, amid the heartfelt esteem and effection of Bostonians who have sat before him 13 years, and of some younger, was made the last farewell but one to Munch. That final au revoir (for he will return as guest conductor next season) will be uttered tonight.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
APR 28 1962

191

THUNDERING OVATION

Boston in Stirring Adieu to Munch

By ROBERT TAYLOR

With the thunder of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony swirling around him and the cheers of a turbulent Friday afternoon audience pelting from every side, Charles Munch, the 10th conductor in the long history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday made his musical farewell here.

Civic Gesture

It was a momentous occasion. Not only did Dr. Munch close an era—the second longest at the fore of the renowned orchestra—but Richard Burgin, who has been concertmaster 42 years, and Jacobus Langendoen, with the BSO as 'cellist the same length of time, were retiring simultaneously with their conductor.

In an unprecedented civic gesture, Dr. Munch received a Paul Revere bowl from Mayor John F. Collins during an intermission ceremony. Even the retirement of Serge Koussevitsky, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra you gained our esteem and affection. It is my sincere hope, as Mayor, speaking in an official capacity and as a private citizen with great personal admiration for you, that you will visit with us again soon.

(Continued on Page Twenty-Four)

"I have just returned from a visit to Strasbourg — your home and Boston's sister city. I found there that the citizens of that delightful city — indeed citizens throughout Europe — look to you and revere you as we do here in Boston.

"In presenting you with this memento of the occasion of your official leave-taking I wish you good health, good cheer and many more years of happiness."

CLAMOROUS PITCH

The emotions of the audience, however, reached a clamorous pitch at the close of a dynamic presentation of the Ninth featuring the Chorus Pro Musica and soloists Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum and Donald Gramm. From the 2631 seats of Symphony Hall, people rose shouting and applauding, a tidal wave of homage.

Time after time Dr. Munch came back, characteristically sharing the deafening moment with Mr. Burgin. A gigantic green wreath was trundled onstage. Flashbulbs popped. Dr. Munch stood beside the wreath with his hand over his heart, wrung Richard Burgin's hand, came out with Alfred Nash Patterson, who, as director of the Pro Musica, had prepared his singers superbly.

Thus did a memorable chapter in Boston's musical life come to a moving climax. It will be repeated tonight by the Saturday audience, and Charles Munch will conduct the Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood this summer. But yesterday afternoon marked the transition of the silvery-haired French conductor, who turns 70 this year, from the podium of Symphony Hall.

OUTSIDE HALL

Yesterday he stepped into legend. The audience knew this, too, and a stir of expectancy hovered before the concert began. A rush hour line snaked from the boxoffice as early as nine in the morning. Outside the hall young men displayed placards hopefully requesting tickets. And as soon as Dr. Munch appeared, the audience stood for the first time.

The concert itself sustained the electric, vibrant mood that prevailed extra-musically. The program with Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamonde," a minor piece of impressionism woven around American Indian tunes, and suitable as a curtain-raiser. But the real item of musical interest was the Beethoven. Never has Charles Munch conducted a finer Ninth.

It is not one of his "specialties," he has not always projected it with such controlled fervor. On this occasion he seemed to kindle with the soaring intuitive power that propels his greatest works, and to transmute the score into a living symbol of his art.

The informing spirit, incandescent and vivid, joined in a disciplined and plastic musical execution. The orchestra played magnificently. The Chorus Pro Musica sang with a finesse and fierce that no student chorale, however gifted, can quite equal.

FIERCE RANGE

The fierce range in which the soloists meet a jagged challenge, daunted the quartet slightly, yet Mr. Gramm was particularly opulent and sure, Miss Addison sand with dependable musicianship, Miss Kopleff attained a commendable volume and Mr. McCollum deserves a special nod for his dedication and diction.

With Dr. Munch and Messrs. Burgin and Langendoen retiring all at once, the Symphony lost three outstanding figures. But a program note yesterday indicated the passage of yet another member of the family:

Gordon B. Simpson, who has been in charge of the Symphony Hall boxoffice, who joined the staff in 1916, and who also retires. To the concertogoer, the Symphony Hall boxoffice without Mr. Simpson seems, in a way, inconceivable.

So the 81st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra recedes. One cannot hope to encompass the sum of Dr. Charles Munch's contribution to the Boston Symphony, to music, in a line. We will not see his like again. He succeeded a genius whom it seemed impossible to succeed. And we lift him yesterday, a giant of art in his own right, towering in the affections of Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 28 1962

191

2000 Roar Adieu

Hub Acclaims Munch in Farewell

By CYRUS DURGIN

A tumultuous and emotional leave-taking was that between Charles Munch and the subscribers to the Friday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

As the audience had risen to greet him when he appeared on stage at Symphony Hall, so they leaped to their feet the instant Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was over. But with a difference: this time the applause was nearly drowned by a spontaneous cheer that burst from 2000 throats.

For the next 11 minutes it was all a show of admiration and affection for the man who is ending 13 years as music director of the orchestra.

Back Munch came, and again and again, all smiles except once when the strain of fatigue showed upon his face. He waved to the public, touched his right hand, still holding its baton, toward his heart, smiled again, bowed again.

Next time out, Munch took by the arm Richard Burgin, who is retiring as concertmaster, and retiring cellist Jacobus Langendoen, urged them to center stage that they might take a bow with him.

Still the clapping and the cheers went on. A huge— not large, really huge—beribboned green laurel wreath was brought out, the gift to Munch of the Boston Symphony trustees.

Munch grinned broadly this time, folded both arms across his chest as if to embrace the Boston listeners who were so reluctant to let him go. Then one more bow and he departed, signalling as he went, with a nod of the head, to the musicians to leave the stage.

Some of us out front realized our throats were tight and tears trembled in the eyes. What emotions Munch felt, having for the last time as head of his own orchestra conducted a Friday concert, were kept to himself.

With him it was all grace and charm, French without tears. To the last, unwilling to risk public speech in English, he refrained from saying a word.

These 11 minutes were the peak of an afternoon which began with a certain expectant tension in the air, and which grew vastly exciting during the course of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The City of Boston was officially represented by Mayor Collins, on stage in his wheel chair at the beginning of intermission. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony's trustees, introduced the mayor, who then read a heartfelt speech of parting. Said Mayor Collins:

"Mr. Munch, it is with mixed emotions that I participate in this ceremony today. It is always difficult to say farewell to a friend. It is particularly difficult for me, as mayor of the City of Boston, and as a private citizen, to adequately express the sincere regret I feel at your retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"We owe you a great debt of gratitude for the joy you have brought to so many through your unmatched talent; the contributions you have made to Boston's culture will be long remembered.

"During the 13 years you served as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra you gained our esteem and affection. It is my sincere hope, as mayor, speaking in an official capacity and as a private citizen with great personal admiration for you, that you will visit with us again soon.

"I have just returned from a visit to Strasbourg — your home and Boston's sister city. I found there that the citizens of Strasbourgh—indeed citizens throughout Europe—look to you and revere you as we do here in Boston.

"In presenting you with this memento of the occasion of your official leave-taking I wish you good health, good cheer and many additional years of happiness."

The memento was that admirable official gift of this city to honored and distinguished men: a large silver Paul Revere bowl.

What Mr. Munch said in reply, as he bent and shook hands with Mayor Collins, did not carry over the microphone.

As a French musician whose performance of French music is his especial glory, Munch appropriately included one last Gallic piece upon his farewell program: the brief "Le Chant de Nigamon" by the late Arthur Honegger.

It is obscure music, describing, of all things, a French novelist's notion of the scalping of the Iroquois Indian Nigamon by Tareah, a Huron Indian. It had not been heard in Boston since its composer conducted it upon visit in January, 1929.

But the great choral Ninth Symphony of Beethoven—the same work with which Serge Koussevitzky said goodby to Boston in 1949—was what the audience had been awaiting.

Munch has done it here before, several times, and we knew what to expect—a clear, vigorous, dynamic performance. It was all of that, indeed in many respects one of the most exciting accounts of this masterwork I ever have heard.

THANKS—Charles Munch thanks Mayor Collins, who has just presented him with a silver Paul Revere bowl and the greetings of the city.

The proportions of this performance were as vast as the music itself; the classic grandeur and the emoflonal eloquence derived both from the score and from Munch's own profound personal comprehension of the Symphony.

The four soloists, singly and taken as a group, were unquestionably the finest, best-matched I have heard: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. They deservedly shared a bow with Munch at the end.

Effect: Enormous

So, too, Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared (as always!) by Alfred Nash Patterson, dealt with the high range and the difficulties of their parts, not only with ability but to enormous effect.

Munch led them at a febrile tempo through the fast sections, but they kept the pace and the volume and the rhythm, and they sounded exceedingly well. Twice Munch brought Patterson out to share applause.

So, amid the heartfelt esteem and effection of Bostonians who have sat before him 13 years, and of some younger, was made the last farewell but one to Munch. That final au revoir (for he will return as guest conductor next season) will be uttered tonight.

-hearted melodies ul music
esterday.

G OVATION

in Stirring Adieu to Munch

(Continued from First Page)

in 1949, failed to invoke such a response; and this was very probably the first time that a Mayor of Boston has played an active role in a Symphony Hall Concert.

Introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra's trustees, Mayor Collins said:

"Mr. Munch, it is with mixed emotions that I participate in this ceremony today. It is always difficult to say farewell to a friend. It is particularly difficult for me, as Mayor of the City of Boston and as a private citizen, to adequately express the sincere regret I feel at your retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"We owe you a great debt of gratitude for the joy you have brought to so many through your unmatched talent; the contributions you have made to Boston's culture will be long remembered.

"During the 13 years you served as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra you gained our esteem and affection. It is my sincere hope, as Mayor, speaking in an official capacity and as a private citizen with great personal admiration for you, that you will visit with us again soon.

"I have just returned from a visit to Strasbourg — your home and Boston's sister city. I found there that the citizens of that delightful city — indeed citizens throughout Europe — look to you and revere you as we do here in Boston.

"In presenting you with this memento of the occasion of your official leave-taking I wish you good health, good cheer and many more years of happiness."

CLAMOROUS PITCH

The emotions of the audience, however, reached a clamorous pitch at the close of a dynamic presentation of the Ninth featuring the Chorus Pro Musica and soloists Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum and Donald Gramm. From the 2631 seats of Symphony Hall, people rose shouting and applauding, a tidal wave of homage.

Time after time Dr. Munch came back, characteristically sharing the deafening moment with Mr. Burgin. A gigantic green wreath was trundled onstage. Flashbulbs popped. Dr. Munch stood beside the wreath with his hand over his heart, wrung Richard Burgin's hand, came out with Alfred Nash Patterson, who, as director of the Pro Musica, had prepared his singers superbly.

Thus did a memorable chapter in Boston's musical life come to a moving climax. It will be repeated tonight by the Saturday audience, and Charles Munch will conduct the Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood this summer. But yesterday afternoon marked the transition of the silvery-haired French conductor, who turns 70 this year, from the podium of Symphony Hall.

OUTSIDE HALL

Yesterday he stepped into legend. The audience knew this, too, and a stir of expectancy hovered before the concert began. A rush hour line snaked from the box-office as early as nine in the morning. Outside the hall young men displayed placards hopefully requesting tickets. And as soon as Dr. Munch appeared, the audience stood for the first time.

The concert itself sustained the electric, vibrant mood that prevailed extra-musically. The program with Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamonde," a minor piece of impressionism woven around American Indian tunes, and suitable as a curtain-raiser. But the real item of musical interest was the Beethoven. Never has Charles Munch conducted a finer Ninth.

It is not one of his "specialties," he has not always projected it with such controlled fervor. On this occasion he seemed to kindle with the soaring intuitive power that propels his greatest works, and to transmute the score into a living symbol of his art.

The informing spirit, incandescent and vivid, joined in a disciplined and plastic musical execution. The orchestra played magnificently. The Chorus Pro Musica sang with a finesse and force that no student chorale, however gifted, can quite equal.

FIERCE RANGE

The fierce range in which the soloists meet a jagged challenge, daunted the quartet slightly, yet Mr. Gramm was particularly opulent and sure, Miss Addison sand with dependable musicianship, Miss Kopleff attained a commendable volume and Mr. McCollum deserves a special nod for his dedication and diction.

With Dr. Munch and Messrs. Burgin and Langendoen retiring all at once, the Symphony lost three outstanding figures. But a program note yesterday indicated the passage of yet another member of the family:

Gordon B. Simpson, who has been in charge of the Symphony Hall boxoffice, who joined the staff in 1916, and who also retires. To the concertogoer, the Symphony Hall boxoffice without Mr. Simpson seems, in a way, inconceivable.

So the 81st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra recedes. One cannot hope to encompass the sum of Dr. Charles Munch's contribution to the Boston Symphony, to music, in a line. We will not see his like again. He succeeded a genius whom it seemed impossible to succeed. And we lift him yesterday, a giant of art in his own right, towering in the affections of Boston.

OBSCURED TEXT

192

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 25 1961

Boston Symphony Gives Special UNESCO Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA gave at Symphony Hall last night, a special concert in honor of the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: "Quiet City," Copland; "Iberia," Debussy; "Eroica" Symphony, Beethoven.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert in Symphony Hall, last night, for the delegates to, and in honor of, the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO.

Music director and Orchestra, in turn, were honored by award to them of the 17th annual United Nations Day Citation. The citation was conferred on stage just after intermission, before the final number of the evening, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

The citation was awarded by Henry F. Stimpson, Massachusetts United Nations Day Commission chairman, who saluted the Boston Symphony as "effective diplomats." The phrase was entirely appropriate in view of the admirable work which the Orchestra accomplished in its two European tours—the second of which, in 1956, included a visit to Soviet Russia, and in its visit to the Far East in 1960.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony's board of trustees, accepted the citation for Dr. Munch and the Orchestra, and in his characteristically modest fashion, expressed pride "in this great orchestra." Dr. Munch was not present at the ceremony, quite understandably since he had yet to conduct the most demanding work of the evening, the "Eroica" Symphony.

Though Dr. Munch and the Orchestra had just returned from the mid-Western tour, the vigor and finesse of their music-making denied the toll which this tour exacts.

"Iberia" was richly-colored, a marvel of style and detail. Beethoven's own favorite symphony received, indeed, a better performance than those in the Friday-Saturday series a few weeks ago.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 18 1961

Symphony Concert To Mark UN Day

A special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Oct. 24, United Nations Day, at Symphony Hall.

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the special program for the 2000 delegates and visitors to the Eighth National Conference of the U. S. Commission for UNESCO, which will be held at the Statler Hilton.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 23 1961

UN Day Program

On United Nations Day, Oct. 24, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert at Symphony Hall for the 2,000 delegates and visitors to the eighth national conference of the U.S. Commission for UNESCO, which meets in this city Oct. 22-26.

Boston University News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly
047

UNESCO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, will present a special concert in cooperation with the University on United Nations Day next Tuesday, at 8:15 pm at Symphony hall. The concert will be the highlight of the Eighth National Conference of the U.S. Commission for UNESCO meeting in Boston Oct. 22-26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

OBSCURED TEXT

192

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

OCT 25 1961

Boston Symphony Gives Special UNESCO Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA gave at Symphony Hall last night, a special concert in honor of the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the following program: "Quiet City," Copland; "Iberia," Debussy; "Eroica" Symphony, Beethoven.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert in Symphony Hall, last night, for the delegates to, and in honor of, the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO.

Music director and Orchestra, in turn, were honored by award to them of the 17th annual United Nations Day Citation. The citation was conferred on stage just after intermission, before the final number of the evening, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

The citation was awarded by Henry F. Stimpson, Massachusetts United Nations Day Commission chairman, who saluted the Boston Symphony as "effective diplomats." The phrase was entirely appropriate in view of the admirable work which the Orchestra accomplished in its two European tours—the second of which, in 1956, included a visit to Soviet Russia, and in its visit to the Far East in 1960.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony's board of trustees, accepted the citation for Dr. Munch and the Orchestra, and in his characteristically modest fashion, expressed pride "in this great orchestra." Dr. Munch was not present at the ceremony, quite understandably since he had yet to conduct the most demanding work of the evening, the "Eroica" Symphony.

Though Dr. Munch and the Orchestra had just returned from the mid-Western tour, the vigor and finesse of their music-making denied the toll which this tour exacts.

"Iberia" was richly-colored, a marvel of style and detail. Beethoven's own favorite symphony received, indeed, a better performance than those in the Friday-Saturday series a few weeks ago.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ——

OCT 18 1961

Symphony Concert To Mark UN Day

A special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Oct. 24, United Nations Day, at Symphony Hall.

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the special program for the 2000 delegates and visitors to the Eighth National Conference of the U. S. Commission for UNESCO, which will be held at the Statler Hilton.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 23 1961

UN Day Program

On United Nations Day, Oct. 24, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert at Symphony Hall for the 2,000 delegates and visitors to the eighth national conference of the U.S. Commission for UNESCO, which meets in this city Oct. 22-26.

047

UNESCO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch will present a special concert in observation of United Nations Day next Tuesday at 8:15 pm at Symphony hall. The concert will be the highlight of the Eighth National Conference of the U.S. Commission for UNESCO meeting in Boston Oct. 22-26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

OCT 29 1961

UNESCO Concert- Oct. 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

OCT 23 1961

DANGEROUS BIRTHDAY

An award to Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a great gathering for a United Nations independent agency under Boston University sponsorship, will point up observation here tomorrow of the U.N.'s 16th birthday.

The anniversary comes at a dangerous time when, with Berlin still explosive, Nikita Khrushchev plans to detonate a 50-million-ton bomb and the United States has emphatically reminded him of this country's superior nuclear power. Meanwhile, the U.N. General Assembly struggles with accumulating crises, sharpened by the death of the late Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

Russia will not agree on the powers of an acting successor, and no qualified candidate will now accept the job without Soviet approval. The Congo ceasefire has become unstuck again; funds for the U.N. operation there will run out in eight days, and there is no provision for more.

That may cause a revulsion of feeling in the United States, which is bailing out the U.N. So may the seating by the Assembly of Communist China, which will be likely if Nationalist China infuriates certain African countries by vetoing the admission of Outer Mongolia, thus causing Russia to veto African Mauretania.

* * *

But no member has yet seceded from the U.N. because this world organization, unlike the League of Nations, is universal and could be used against any country which left. Communist China probably cannot be kept out many more years. U.N. financial crises largely constitute steps in a long-term United States effort to educate other countries in the need of paying. The Congo, though still unstable, now has a legitimate government, a vast improvement over last year.

The U.N. Secretariat is proving it can still function. Pressure of world opinion has persuaded Russia to recede from her demand for a veto on an acting secretary-general's work. Western firmness has caused Nikita Khrushchev to draw back from his year-end deadline on Berlin.

In the long run, these crises remain dangerous nevertheless. Like American Congresses before the Constitution, the U.N. finds it impossible to enforce contributions without the power to tax. Our Civil War demonstrated that even a Federal government cannot prevent an explosion when power is bipolarized and conflict proves irreconcilable.

* * *

The award for international service to the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at a week-long conference on Africa for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Such meetings, like the orchestra's world tours, build up international feeling among countries old and new—and somewhere in between, like the United States.

In every crisis since World War II, that feeling, and the common knowledge that there is no security except in peace, have proved stronger than most people had been led to expect. But it will need all the additional encouragement it can get.

Today, world power is bipolarized, and no means of reconciling conflict has been discovered. Possibly, in view of the nuclear threat to all, growing international feeling, what Jefferson called "the opinions of mankind," may at last prove fully effective. Thus, a reliable substitute for war may some day be found.

UNCLE DUDLEY

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

OCT 28 1961

UNESCO Conference

DURING THE LAST WEEK, Boston has been host to the eighth biennial Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO. The topic for this years meeting was Africa, with the emphasis on the sub-Sahara areas of that vast Continent. Delegates to the Conference numbered more than fifteen hundred with nearly two hundred guests from the African nations.

In keeping with the UNESCO formula, the discussions ranged over a very wide area although the highest interest surely centered around education and the arts. In the emerging nations, so lately attached to the colonial powers, there are immense new responsibilities in the field of education and ones which they cannot under any circumstances manage singlehanded. On the other hand, Western education does not fit the local picture without serious modifications and mutual understanding of problems. Similarly in the various art forms, there is a wide gap of communication which must be bridged by scholarly research before Western and African art values can be sympathetically compared.

The Conference, which gathered here so many African experts, laid bare in a wide spectrum the immediate challenges which face the West in its relations with the dark-skinned peoples of Africa. Sometimes we think that the only commodity necessary in these situations is money and technology; important as both of these are, the more basic necessity is a mutual understanding of each others' cultural heritage so that the values therein can be harmoniously interchanged. The UNESCO Conference in Boston studied in some depth these critical problems and brought together a range of varied responses which cannot fail to be helpful in making future decisions for this important part of the world.

We are happy to pay tribute to the many persons and groups in Boston who assisted in preparing and conducting the local arrangements for the meeting. Boston University, the Boston Symphony, the Museums of Fine Arts and of Science and so many others made this a memorable visit for Commission members, Conference delegates and foreign guests. We have every reason to believe that they will recall our city with the same warm feelings with which we welcomed them.

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

OCT 15 1961

UNESCO Group To Hold Boston Talks on Africa

Special to The Telegram

BOSTON — The U.S. National Commission for UNESCO will hold a conference on Africa here Oct. 22-26.

The five-day program will open at 9:30 a.m. Oct. 23 with an address on "The Image of the U.S. in Africa" by Jaja Wachuku, foreign minister of Nigeria, in John Hancock Hall.

Registration will be held Sunday in the Statler - Hilton Hotel, headquarters of the conference.

Three high education officials will be among 43 African educators and leaders who will participate in the program. Speakers will include Ziada Arbab, minister of education for the Sudan; Hugh A. Marshall Clarke, permanent secretary of education in Sierra Leone, and Stephen O. Awokoya, chief federal advisor on education in Nigeria.

More than 2,000 people are expected to attend. The Africans will join American experts in discussions of various phases of education, science, culture and communication.

Largest on Africa

The conference, the largest ever held in this country on Africa, will have as its theme "Africa and the United States — Images and Realities." It will be the eighth national conference held by the commission.

The main objective of the conference is to broaden American understanding of the achievements and aspirations of the peoples of Africa.

Discussion topics will include "Education in English - Speaking Countries," "Education in French-Speaking Countries," "Teaching about Africa in American Schools," "University Institutions in Africa," "An American University in Africa?" "African Studies in American Universities," "Teaching of African Languages," "Women and the Future of Africa," "African Students in the United States," "A Peace Corps for Africa," "American Behavior Abroad," "Science, Technology and Economic Development," "Science in Africa," "American Industry in Africa," "Main Currents in African Labor," "The Social Significance of African Music," "Preservation and Encouragement of the Arts in Africa," "African Art in the United States," "African Religion and Philosophy," "Newspapers, Periodicals and News Agencies in Africa," "The United States in African Press and Radio," "Radio and Television in Africa."

Special Exhibits

During the conference, museums and libraries in the Boston area will have special exhibits on African art and culture. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a special concert Oct. 23.

The commission, which sponsors a national conference every two years, was created by Congress in 1946 to advise the U.S. on programs for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Its membership consists of 60 representatives of major national organizations in education, science and the arts and individuals appointed by the secretary of state.

Dr. Vernon McKay, professor of African studies at Johns Hopkins University, organized the conference. Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, is chairman of the Bostor Sponsoring Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

OCT 25 1961

DR. MUNCH GETS CITATION FOR ORCHESTRA'S 'DIPLOMACY'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Dr. Charles Munch, were honored during the intermission of the UNESCO concert at Symphony Hall last night by the World Affairs Council of Boston.

Harry F. Stimpson, honorary UN Day chairman for Massachusetts, introduced by Elliot L. Richardson, president of the World Affairs Council, presented a citation which read in part:

"If political tensions end where true civilization begins . . . then Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have done more to promote international understanding than the aggregate of the world's diplomats.

"You, Dr. Munch, through your art and vocation, have transcended the political antagonisms which have made the province of your birth the powder keg of Europe for centuries. Through your life's work you have proved that beauty which mellows the hearts of men and defeats their hate is universal . . . "

194

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUN 23 1961

Opera Adds New Dimension To Boston Youth Concerts

By GAIL KREDENSER

The Boston Symphony will add a new dimension to its youth concerts next season: opera.

The orchestra, aided by the New England Opera Theater, will present Gian-Carlo Menotti's one-act opera "The Telephone" at the January concerts.

The opera is among several innovations for the coming season. They reflect conductor Harry Ellis Dickson's determination to open a wide range of musical experience to junior high and high school students.

Dickson, Symphony violinist and associate Pops conductor, has also conducted the Brookline Youth Concerts for 12 years.

There will be two competitions for high school students this year. One will be for composition, the other to choose the soloists who will perform with the Symphony at the last pair of concerts.

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON

The orchestra will perform the winning high school composition at the last concerts. Competition for soloists will be held in the late fall and will be open to all instruments.

ON CLASSICAL, MODERN MUSIC

"What is Classical Music?" "What is Modern Music?" Those are the questions — to be answered in the first pair of concerts, Nov. 4 and 11.

Guest at the Nov. 4 concert will be composer - conductor Lukas Foss.

"What Is Opera?" will be the theme of the second pair of concerts, Jan. 6 and 13.

The last concerts Mar 3 and 10 will be titled "Picture Music" and will illustrate how composers "paint pictures" with music.

The All-State High School Orchestra will join the Symphony men in performance of a major work. The winners of the high school auditions will also perform.

Conductor Dickson explains the popularity of the three-year-old youth concert series this way:

"If they are successful, it's because they are different from the old-fashioned youth concerts which were more like a music education course.

"A concert may be educational, "but it is also a spiritual and emotional event."

Sale of subscriptions to the 1961-62 series has reached the halfway mark.

Ticket chairman is Mrs. Manuel Kurlind, 129 Payson Rd., Chestnut Hill, telephone HO 9-0171.

TODAY'S

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 614
OCT 12 1961

Youth Concerts

LINCOLN -- Mrs. Leonard Moss, Woodcock Lane, Lincoln, has application blanks for subscriptions to the Youth Concerts at Sumphony Hall. Program No. 1, to be presented Nov. 4 and Nov. 11 is as follows: What is Classical Music? Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F-Major for Trumpet, Flute, Oboe, Solo Violin and Strings (first and third movements); Bach; Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) (Scherzo); Beethoven; and Symphony No. 1 (finale), Brahms. What is Modern Music? "Porgy and Bess" excerpts, Gershwin; "The Creation of the World", ballet, Milhaud; Russian Dance from "Petrouchka", Stravinsky; "Dance of the Adolescents" from "The Rites of Spring", Stravinsky; Concerto No. 1 in D-Major, Prokofieff; Concerto for Orchestra (fourth movement - intermezzo interrotto), Bartok; Galop from "Fancy Free", Bernstein. The soloist will be announced.

Other concerts will be presented on Jan. 6 and Jan. 13 and on March 3 and March 10. Tickets are for the series only at $4 for three concerts, with all seats reserved.

In Sudbury, Mrs. John H. Walker is ticket chairman, assisted by Mr. Robert Wentworth of the Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School and Mr. Dean Aldrich of the Junior High School.

Young people who wish to subscribe to the Youth Concerts may ask their school music supervisor for an application blank, or obtain one from Mrs. Walker by calling HIlltop 3-6027.

The concerts, now in their third season, attract attendance from public, parochial and independent school pupils throughout the state from grade four through high school. Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston Pops, has planned an interesting series of programs for this season when, under his direction, 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will illustrate the difference between classical and modern music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 16 1961

Society: Harry Dickson to Conduct Youth Concert Series

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Going to Symphony used to be a privilege associated with growing up to being a responsible Boston citizen. Today's children don't have to wait that long. The mysteries of Boston's leading cultural institution are open to them from the age of five. Three concerts given in a two-pair series are planned especially for children and conducted with comment by Harry Ellis Dickson.

They come by bus, by station wagon, subway and school jitney to hear the impressive sound which only a major symphony orchestra can produce. These new doors open to this year's Youth Concert subscribers on Nov. 4, Jan. 6 and Mar. 3 at hour-long concerts starting at 11 a.m. Concert programs are repeated a week later.

Like their mother's and grandmother's tickets, the children's are reserved and offered by subscription. They have their own programs with notes by John N. Burk who writes for the regular symphony-goers.

A committee of mothers helps to keep costs down and interest high. With their cooperation in serving as ushers, ticket handlers, corresponding secretaries and transportation arrangers, and with the generosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trustees, the concert patron of the future finds an understanding of music at the age when it means the most.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Public Spirit
AYER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,067
NOV 9 1961

HARVARD

Items of Interest

Ronald Saudelli, sixth grade teacher, has announced that the Harvard Faculty Club has almost 100% membership for this year in the Massachusetts Teacher's Association.

Teachers in the junior and senior high school have been asked to read "A Study of the Small High School," a study based on the work of Dr. Glendon Nimnicht and Dr. Arthur Partridge who are Ford Foundation educational consultants for the new junior senior high school in Harvard.

Students from the Harvard schools will travel to Boston Saturday for the first concert in the Youth Symphony Concert series. The concert at 11 a. m. at Symphony Hall will feature members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct. The program will include the Violin Concerto No. 1 by Prokofieff. A 15 year old violinist will be soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,207
MAR 1 1962

Youth Concert Scheduled for This Saturday

The third and final concert in a series of Youth Concerts being presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Huntington ave., Boston, will be presented Saturday morning, announced Mrs. Herbert Tuck, local chairman.

The bus, which has been chartered for the group, will leave West Medford sq. from in front of the High st., Pharmacy, at 9:45 a.m., and Medford sq., near O'Brien's Men's Store, at 10 a.m., reported Mrs. Tuck.

Two young high school musicians, Peter Cokkunias of Springfield, a clarinetist, and Robert Hansen of Holbrook, a French horn player, will appear as soloist with the orchestra.

Members of the Massachusetts All-State High School Orchestra will join with the symphony players.

Youth Concerts

195

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

OCT 16 1961

Society: Harry Dickson to Conduct Youth Concert Series

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Going to Symphony used to be a privilege associated with growing up to being a responsible Boston citizen. Today's children don't have to wait that long. The mysteries of Boston's leading cultural institution are open to them from the age of five. Three concerts given in a two-pair series are planned especially for children and conducted with comment by Harry Ellis Dickson.

They come by bus, by station wagon, subway and school jitney to hear the impressive sound which only a major symphony orchestra can produce. These new doors open to this year's Youth Concert subscribers on Nov. 4, Jan. 6 and Mar. 3 at hour-long concerts starting at 11 a.m. Concert programs are repeated a week later.

Like their mother's and grandmother's tickets, the children's are reserved and offered by subscription. They have their own programs with notes by John N. Burk who writes for the regular symphony-goers.

A committee of mothers helps to keep costs down and interest high. With their cooperation in serving as ushers, ticket handlers, corresponding secretaries and transportation arrangers, and with the generosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trustees, the concert patron of the future finds an understanding of music at the age when it means the most.

daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pollins of Greensburg, to Paul Gerard O'Leary, son of Mrs. Gerard O'Leary of Boston and the late Mr. O'Leary. The ceremony took place at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral. The bride wore ivory peau de soie and Alencon lace, and an ivory silk illusion veil. Her flowers were white shell pink roses and stephanotis. She was attended by Miss Gloria McNutt, Miss Eunice Elwood, Miss June Barron, and Miss Janet Farquar. Thomas Cowley was best man, with Robert Sudley of Boston, James Keans, Bruce Kerr, John W. Follins Jr. as ushers. The bridegroom attended Boston Latin School and Harvard and the Wharton School of Commerce and Finance at the University of Pennsylvania. His bride went to Westminster College and the Parsons School of Design in New York.

THEIR THIRD CHILD, second son, David Kimball, was born to Mr and Mrs. Thomas S. Woods 3d of Akron, Ohio. Grandparents are Mrs.

and changing history of Boston. Besides such familiar landmarks as Richardson's Trinity Church and the Boston Public Library, many less-frequented places will be visited in tours marked by Mrs. J. Clifford Ross.

TO LIVE IN VIRGINIA where the bridegroom is attending Army school at Fort Belvoir, are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gillis (Beverly Gosse) who were married at Grace Episcopal Church in Medford. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Gosse of Medford and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Gillis of Lexington. Miss Janet Gosse was maid of honor and Warren Gosse, best man. Ushers were William Gosse and Gerald Griffin. Mr. Gillis is a graduate of St. Dunstan's University, Canada.

SCONES AND SCONSES is the word among Dedham Women's Exchange volunteers busy in kitchen and workshop to prepare for their annual Christmas Bazaar. Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 25, 26, are the days of the benefit at the Dedham Masonic Temple, from nine to nine on the first day and nine to six on the second.

Services offered include recaning chairs, framing pictures and providing casseroles for the freezer for unexpected guests.

Decorations for Christmas,

COUNTING SEATS for young symphony-goers at Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall are Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset, Mrs. H. Alexander Ladd of Dover, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Lime st., and Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline, ticket chairman.

pan, to William K. McLaughlin, 19, of 98 Taunton av., Mattapan, son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. McLaughlin. Rev. William Perrill will officiate. The couple will live in Hyde Park after a honeymoon to Cape Cod and New York.

BACHELORS AND HUSBANDS are being invited to Boston's Junior Smith Club cocktail party on Friday, Oct. 20 at the Harvard Club's Aesculapian Room. Gathering from 5:30 to eight, alumnae will renew acquaintanees.

Mrs. Maurice Longsworth Jr. and Mrs. Peter DeRoetth are co-chairmen of the committee planning the party. Assisting them have been: Mrs. George Stetson, Mrs. Robert Cotson, Miss Joan Jackson, Miss Joan Case, Miss Alice Stone, Miss Janet Bowler, and Miss Martha Manchester.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211

APR 15 1962

PLUNKING AWAY — The bass fiddle's strings feel the fingers of new "players" as the Boston Symphony Orchestra holds a special concert for children at Symphony Hall. Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson gives some individual instruction to (l. to r.) Joseph Beham, Coleen Kennett and Mark Dunn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 765

OCT 12 1961

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

Tickets are now available for the third season Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. Sold out for the past two season, the concerts have met with enthusiastic response from young people throughout the State.

Harry Ellis Dickson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston "Pops" and a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ,will again serve as drector. To accommodate the large numbers of young people who are expected to attend, the concerts have been divided into series with identical programs.

Tickets are now on sale for the second series only, November 11, January 13, and March 10, for three concerts. All seats are reserved. The first series has been completely sold out.

Mrs. John H. Walker is Ticket Chairman in Sudbury. Assisting her Mr. Robert Wentworth of the Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School and Mr. Dean Aldrich of the Junior High School.

Young people who wish to subscribe to the Youth Concerts may ask their school music supervisors for an application blank, or obtain one from Mrs. Walker by calling HI 3-6072.

The program for the entire season is as follows: Program 1 - November 4 & 11 - What is Classical Music? Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F-Major, for Trumpet, Flute, Oboe, Solo Violin and Strings, (First and third movements), Bach; Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) (Scherzo), Beethoven; Symphony No. 1 (Finale), Brahms - What is Modern Music? "Porgy and Bess" (Excerpts), Gershwin; "The Creation of the World", Ballet, Milhaud; Russian Dance, from "Petrouchka", Stravinsky; Dance of the Adolescents, from "The Rite of Spring", Stravinsky; Concerto No. 1 in D Major, Prokofieff; Concerto for Orchestra (Fourth movement - Intermezzo Interrotto), Bartok; Galop, from "Fancy Free," Bernstein. (Soloist to be announced).

Program 2 - January 6 & 13- AT IS Opera? - ExcerptsV-berHeai" "WHAT IS Opera? - Excerpts from "Carmen", Bizet; "The Telephone", Gian-Carlo Mennotti - (Soloists to be announced).

Program 3 - March 3 & 10- "Picture Music" - La Mer (The Sea), Debussy; Pictures at an Exhibition, Moussorgsky - Ravel; High School Soloists, Composers, and All State Players. (Winners and Selections to be announced).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

APR 15 1962

Boston Symphony Stages Special Youth Concert

A special Youth Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall for those unable to attend the regular concert series that ended last week.

Sponsored by the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation, the program was conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The program, with a theme, "What is Opera?", included the Overture to Mozart's "Don Giovanni" with solos by Edith Gordon, soprano, and Justino Diaz, baritone.

Miss Gordon and Diaz also sang the one-act opera, "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti.

196

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———

OCT 16 1961

SMART SET . . By Rose Walsh

Symphony Series Staged for Youth

Our Friday afternoon Boston Symphony concert goers needn't think they are "the only pebbles on the beach." We now have a well established enthusiastic group of Saturday morning junior symphony goers who feel pretty big and important attending the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. They come from nearly 100 communities of Massachusetts (some from New Hampshire.) Public, private and parochial schools are represented in the happy young audience.

Originated by conductor Harry Ellis Dickson as an experiment, the concerts have been so well received that he will launch the third season next month. He knows how youngsters like to be considered older than they really are and he treats them that way.

Three programs will be played by a large ensemble of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians conducted by Mr. Dickson on Saturday mornings Nov. 4, January 6, and March 3. Each one will be repeated a week later.

The tickets are all reserved and offered on a subscription basis for either the first or second series of three concerts ($4 a series). Since Mr. Dickson believes his audience will become the symphony-goers of the future, they receive a program book (just like adults) with notes by the orchestra's famous annotator, John N. Burk. In addition the conductor makes brief, helpful comments aboutt the works.

He selects his music from the great masters and modern "classic" and "popular" composers, using nothing too long. Parents or relatives who sometimes accompany the children report that they too find great pleasure in the programs. Subscriptions are available through Youth Concert Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

★ ★ ★

12th annual Christmas Bazaar sponsored by the Dedham Women's Exchange at the Dedham Masonic Temple, 410 Washington st.

Separate shops are being set ups each with its individual selection of gifts. Leather goods, household items, hand-decorated wastebaskets, lamps for every room, imported pottery and other fascinating articles will be conveniently arranged.

One specialty featured by the Exchange is custom-made sweaters for the sportsman and sportswoman. Also duffle bags complete with club insignia. Decorations in the Yuletide spirit created by Mrs. George Swwetnam, assisted by Mrs. W. Dennison Brooks, Jr. and Mrs. Edmund Shattuck, Jr. set the mood for the fair.

Luncheon will be served by Mrs. William P. Rogers, Jr. and Mrs. Charles Brooks.

Parley to Ponder

GOING OVER SEATING PLAN for third season of Symphony Hall Youth Concerts are members of executive committee, l. to r., Mrs. Wm. Morton, Mrs. H. A. Ladd, Mrs. Justin Driscoll, Mrs. A. C. Titcomb, Mrs. Manuel Kurland, ticket chairman; Mrs. Ralph Katz. (Lenscraft)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 1 0 1961

of Milan.

Youth Concert Program Repeated

The first program of the Youth Concerts 1961-2 season will be repeated tomorrow morning at 11 in Symphony Hall. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program in two parts: "What is Classical Music?"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms: and "What is Modern Music?"—Stravinsky, Bartok, Prokofieff and Gershwin.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

NOV 5 1961

Youth Concert

PROGRAM CONTRASTS OLD WITH THE NEW

The third season of Youth Concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, opened yesterday morning at Symphony Hall with a program that contrasted old with new.

The so-called "classic" era in music, which enjoyed greatest prominence in the later 18th century, was represented by the "Three B's: Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms. While none of these can be termed precisely classic, all three did much to build, perfect, and expand the principles of classical music.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 is an example of music on a relatively small scale, using four soloists and a reduced string orchestra.

This "concerto grosso" gave the young people a rare chance to see and hear a trumpet that is half as large as the ordinary trumpet. Sometimes referred to as the "piccolo" trumpet because of its size, it was played skillfully by Armando Ghitalla in performing Bach's extremely high trumpet parts.

GREATER RELIANCE

The scherzo of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and the finale of Brahms' Symphony No. 1 both illustrate the increased size of the 19th century orchestra and the greater reliance on improved brass instruments.

On the modern side, the reception given yesterday's performance of Stravinsky's Rite of much differed from that at the premiere in 1913, when catcalls were heard and scuffles broke out between partisans and enemies of Stravinsky's style. The reaction of today's young generation indicated acceptance, and many may have shared the opinion of several contemporary composers: Bartok and Stravinsky are even conventional.

The finale of the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 1 featured a visiting Connecticut girl, Penny Ambrose, as soloist. The 15-year-old violinist displayed a remarkable ear for intonation and a full tone over a wide range of pitch and dynamics, in a concerto that proves that Prokofiev was never easy on his soloists.

The attentiveness of yesterday's youthful audience indicates an enthusiasm for the art of music and the assured success of this season's Youth Concerts. The program for the first concert will be repeated next Saturday morning at Symphony Hall.

McL. H.

The Program

The first of the 1961-62 season's Youth Concerts was performed yesterday morning at Symphony Hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The program:

First movement, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 ..... Bach
Scherzo, Symphony No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Finale, Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms
"Russian Dance," from Petrouchka ..... Stravinsky
Dance of the Adolescents, from The Rite of Spring ..... Stravinsky
Fourth movement, Concerto for Orchestra ..... Bartok
Finale, Violin Concerto No. 1 ..... Prokofiev
Penny Ambrose, soloist
Excerpt from Porgy and Bess ..... Gershwin

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reporter
FOXBORO, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,923

OCT 19 1961

Symphony Hall Youth Concerts

Tickets are now available for the third season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston. These concerts, which have been sold out for the past two seasons, have met with enthusiastic response from young people throughout the State, attracting attendance from public, parochial and independent school pupils from grade four through high school.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Assistant Conductor of the Boston "Pops" has planned an interesting series of programs for this season. He will present the first of these on November 4 at 11 A.M. when, under his direction, 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will illustrate the difference between classical and modern music. The same program will be repeated on Saturady, November 11 at 11 A.M., and will be followed by concerts on January 6 and 13, and March 3 and 10.

Tickets are now on sale, for the series only, at $4 for three concerts. All seats are reserved. Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline is Manager of Ticket Sales.

In Foxboro, Mrs. William K. Owen is Ticket Chairman.

Young people who wish to subscribe to the Youth Concerts may ask their school music supervisor for an application blank, or obtain one from ticket chairman by calling KI 3-2501.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,207

NOV 3 1961

Boston Symphony Youth Concert Opens Saturday

Five Medford residents are on a committee making arrangements for the Youth concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year. First of the three concerts of the season will be held this Saturday from 11 a.m. to 12 noon.

Those on the committee include Mrs. Herbert Tuck, chairman; Mrs. Samnel Casson, Mrs. Marshall Adler, Mrs. Shmner Sinrich, Mrs. Emanuel Taitz, and Mrs. Daniel Freedman.

Mrs. Tuck said that the committee members will be glad to furnish any interested residents further information on the concerts, and transportation. Buses will leave from West Medford sq. at 9:45 and Medford sq. at 10 a.m. for the youth concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Cape Cod
Standard Times (e)
HYANNIS, Mass.
Circ. 18,931

NOV 10 1961

Group to Attend

ONSET, Nov. 10—A group of instrumental musicians from the Wareham elementary schools will attend the morning concert tomorrow at Symphony hall in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

NOV 6 1961

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Nice Work by Audience As Youth Concerts Open

Since they were attending a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Saturday morning's listeners at Symphony Hall were generally attentive and appreciative. There were, however, some exceptions, a few whose behavior was not properly Bostonian.

A male concertgoer, for instance, bit off one corner of his program while the musicians were playing for all its harsh exotic brilliance Stravinsky's "Dance of the Adolescents" from "The Rite of Spring." Having swallowed it, the hungry listener proudly exhibited the moist remnants to a companion, who appeared to admire this admittedly remarkable gustory achievement.

Elliot Norton

Earlier, a beautiful blonde with huge blue eyes had turned her back on the orchestra and had knelt in her chair, to stare gravely at the young man in the seat behind hers. Not long after, she was observed sitting on the lap of her male escort. This is the kind of thing you rarely see at a Friday Symphony concert.

Most of the rest of the audience of 2900 were restrained, respectful and responsive. This despite the fact that many of them had never been to a concert before and most of them were between five and 15 years of age.

SQUIRMING ALL RIGHT

They were restless now and then, which is a good sign. No concertgoer should ever be required to sit without ever squirming. Nobody under 15 is able to remain in one position for very long without some signs of life. Audiences at all age levels are composed of human beings, not posts, nor sticks, nor rigidly self-controlled Yogis.

For Saturday's occasion, which was the first of this year's Youth Concerts, the boys and girls of the audience were recruited from al parts of Greater Boston. There is nothing snobbish about the Youth Concerts, which are dedicated to the democratic proposition that all potential music lovers are created equal and that the Boston audience of the future will be an intellectual elite, not a set of snobs.

The concerts are nicely run and beautifully played by the orchestra, whose members do not condescend to their young patrons. Harry Ellis Dickson, as conductor, explains some of the elements of the music they undertake in an informal way. He is never patronizing; he doesn't talk down to the young ones; nor does he bore them.

LIMIT OF ATTENTION

On Saturday, he made only one mistake; he should have given them an intermission sooner than he did. At the age of eight, or 10 or even 14, it is not easy to pay undivided attention for longer than 15 or 20 minutes at a time.

The orchestra played a variety of great music. In the first section of the program, they offered sections of major works by Bach (the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2), Beethoven (The "Eroica") and Brahms (the Finale of his first Symphony).

In each case, Mr. Dickson told a little about the music and the composer. Where it seemed appropriate, he introduced the principal musicians and let them play the theme music in advance. In each case, he was informal, friendly and dignified.

By way of making his message more acceptable, he told his hearers something personal about the music, or the composers. For instance, during the second half after the program, he reported what Pierre Monteux had told him about how the Paris audience raised cain when Monteux conducted the first performance of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring."

MODERN WORKS HEARD

The second half was devoted to modern music and included selections from Bela Bartok and, finally, Gershwin, as well as Stravinsky, the great pioneer among the moderns.

A 15-year-old violinist, Penny Ambrose, of Coventry, Ct., played with the orchestra Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 1. In a flared white gown, Penny looked handsome and played with precision and feeling. The Saturday morning enthusiasts responded properly to her and her playing, too; no programs were munched during Prokofiev.

This first Youth Program of the season will be repeated next Saturday at Symphony Hall. Subsequent concerts are to be given in the same way on Jan. 6 and 13 and on March 3 and 10. They are all promising.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hellenic Chronicle
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 18,347

NOV 2 1961

Youth Concerts Set At Symphony Hall

Saturday morning youth concerts at Symphony Hall will be offered again this season. For the past two years, these concerts have been sellouts.

Conducting the 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Harry Ellis Dickson. The concerts will be given in series of three, a pair of identical programs to be given a week apart. The first series is slated to start Saturday. Tickets and information are available at Symphony Hall. Tickets are $4 for three concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

NOV 6 1961

Symphony Tames Audience

By Kenneth Hufford
Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

"The bass drum sure sounds good, doesn't it?"

"Yes, and it feels good in the feet, too."

Rumbling vibrations of the deep-toned percussion instrument brought these reactions from two attentive listeners during the first youth concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday.

The scene was Symphony Hall.

Teachers, proud parents, and older companions herded chattering, fidgity children of all ages into the large auditorium, and somewhat militarily assigned them to their seats.

Bach . . . to Stravinsky

They sat, gawked, twisted, talked, and questioned everything in sight, but relaxed into an inquisitive silence as soon as the orchestra was assembled.

But it was not a children's concert, conductor Harry Ellis Dickson told his young audience. The program was designed to acquaint them with the intriguing world of adult music such as they might hear at a regular symphony concert.

Divided into "classical" and "modern," the program included portions of works from Bach to Strawinsky.

Several surprises brought the young listeners off their elbows onto their tiptoes to peer at what was making "that funny noise."

A Piccolo Trumpet

Armando Ghitalla held up a tiny piccolo trumpet, half the size of ones they had seen, on which Mr. Ghitalla played the high trumpet part of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2.

At the other end of the musical spectrum, a "laughing" bass trombone introduced a whimsical slide into Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Conductor Assisted

And Mr. Dickson warned his listeners not to be surprised if they heard a banjo plunking out the melody on excerpts from Gershwin's Porgy and Bess.

During the finale of Brahms' Symphony No. 1, one young lady appeared quite perplexed at the contortions of the furiously sawing string players.

Moved to active participation in the program, a young man nearly hidden in a theater seat helped conduct Stravinsky's Dance of the Adolescents from the Rite of Spring, with the aid of his concert program.

"Does that sound terribly strange to you?" Mr. Dickson asked after the selection, "or was it fun?"

"Fun!" the answer echoed.

He then informed them that at the premier performance of the Rite of Spring in Paris in 1913 the adult audience reacted quite differently with catcalls, booing, and even fist fights.

A feature of the concert was the finale of Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 1 in D-Major, played by 15-year-old Penny Ambrose, whose worthy performance brought especially exuberant applause from her contemporary audience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

NOV 6 1961

Harry Dickson Begins Youth Concert Series

Harry Ellis Dickson and an orchestra of players from the Boston Symphony, launched the third season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall Saturday morning.

The house was just about filled by youngsters from late moppet years through the teens bracket, and enough adults to see they got there, behaved themselves and returned safely home. Actually, they were extremely well behaved and seemed to have a fine time.

Mr. Dickson is fond of youngsters and has a way with feeding them music. But there is no nonsense in his approach, and he went right to work with a program of symphonic movements divided into two sections—"What Is Classical Music?" and "What Is Modern Music?"

The Three Hallowed Bs—Bach, Beethoven ("Eroica" Symphony, scherzo) and Brahms (C minor Symphony finale) furnished the classical elements.

These youngsters were not at all thrown by the savage, driving rhythms and jagged harmonies of the Dance of the Adolescents from Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON conducted an orchestra of Boston Symphony players, in Symphony Hall Saturday morning, in the season's first Youth Concert. The program consisted of symphonic movements by Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Stravinsky, Bartok, Prokofieff and Gershwin. Penny Ambrose, 15-year-old violinist, was soloist in the finale of Prokofieff's Concerto No. 1, in D major.

When Dickson explained it had pained the ears of their grandparents, and asked if they thought it sounded bad, there was a yell of "No!".

Penny Ambrose, a most remarkably talented violinist from Connecticut, and only a month beyond her 15th birthday got a real ovation for her solo playing in the finale of Prokofieff's D major Concerto. She performed it with real flair, and also very cleanly. This girl has a bright future ahead of her.

The same program will be repeated next Saturday at 11 a.m.—CYRUS DURGIN.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

MAR 2 1962

...SS., FRIDAY, M...

23 ARE CHOSEN BY ALL-STATE MUSIC GROUPS

Two Others From Local High Schools Picked For Youth Concerts

Twenty-three students in the Springfield public high schools have been selected as members of the 1962 All-State Band, Orchestra and Chorus and two of the group have been named to perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two youth concerts.

Miss Fern L. Zipse, director of music in the local system, said Thursday the following students were selected after auditions as members of the All-State groups that will perform at the Massachusetts Music Educators Association conference in Pittsfield April 11-14:

Chorus—James Bigney, Theodore Ek, Rebecca Garber, Carolyn Grodin, Judith Hayden, Geoffrey Neigher, Kathleen Ostroski and Kathleen Weinland of Classical High; and Dina Spadoni and Margaret Wingard of Technical High.

Orchestra—Peter Cokkinias, clarinet, and Ronald Weisse, violin, of Classical High; William Bowen, drums, Sue Crabtree, violin, and John Farrell, flute, of Technical High.

Band—George David, saxophone, Lawrence Goldstein, trombone, Peter Fantle, clarinet, and Russell Scott, clarinet, of Classical; Edward Mari, clarinet, of Commerce High; and James Bembenek, baritone saxophone, Ned Czohara, trumpet, and Carol Staniski, French horn, of Technical High.

Miss Zipse said that Cokkinias will perform with the Boston Symphony Saturday in the first of two youth concerts to be given in Boston Symphony Hall. He was one of two students in the state selected through auditions to perform with the Symphony.

Farrell will play with the symphony in "Berceuse and Finale" from Stravinsky's Firebird Suite at the Symphony's second youth concert later this month.

Soloist Here

PRISCILLA (PENNY) AMBROSE, 15-year-old violinist, will be soloist with the Boston symphony Orchestra tomorrow at

198

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
OCT 7 1961

Music

Rosalind Elias to Open Andover Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Rosalind Elias will open the 32nd annual Andover Celebrity series Friday evening, Oct. 27, in George Washington hall, Andover.

Hers is expected to be the highlight program of the current series, among which will be Roberto Inglesias Ballet Espanol and in a different vein, but most promising, Jerome Kilty and Cavada Humphrey in Mr. Kilty's acclaimed "Dear Liar."

Miss Elias' appearance in the distinguished series will mark the first recital she has given in this area for several seasons. Her program which will follow the traditional line of German Lieder, French Art Song, the classic Italian period and English is expected to be pleasantly contrasted by a generous list of operatic arias. The young contralto uses selections from the operas in which she has scored successes at the Metropolitan. No doubt, her aria list will include the "entire" group from "Carmen."

Following an absence of several years, the eminent violinist Erica Morini will return for a guest appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra. Miss Morini who has been acclaimed in the world's leading concert halls has not been heard in Boston since 1946.

Erica Morini

Next Thursday evening the first open rehearsal of the season will be held in Symphony hall. Dr. Charles Munch, musical director, has invited the celebrated pianist, Nikita Magaloff to play at Friday and Saturday's concerts of next week and this program will include Elegy In Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44, by Howard Hanson; the Piano Concerto No. 2 in F minor, Op. 21, by Chopin, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major, Op. 55, (the "Erocia").

IT HAS BEEN announced by the Greater-Lowell committee for the Youth Concerts which are to be held in Symphony hall this season, that tickets are now available. These concerts, which have been sold out for the past two seasons, have met with enthusiastic response from young people throughout the state, attracting attendance from public, parochial and independent school pupils from grade eight through high school.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops" has planned an interesting series of programs for this season. He will present the first of these on Nov. 4 at 11 a. m., when, under his direction, 60 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will illustrate the difference between classical and modern music. The same program will be repeated on Saturday, Nov. 11, at 11:30 a.m., and will be followed by concerts on January 6 and 13, and March 3 and 10.

A fine season is anticipated by the Lowell high school band. This fine organization which is directed by William Notini is highly rated throughout secondary school music departments. Mr. Notini, despite continued graduation problems, has made tremendous strides through his interest and efforts throughout the entire school system. His junior high group is always well received and over the years has, through its "grads", given the senior band many talented youngsters.

Throughout the entire Merrimack Valley the high schools have bands which not only contribute tremendously each year to their school but also to the community at large. Achieving more than ordinary success during the past several seasons have been the bands of Nashua, N. H., and Lawrence high school.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 9,515
MAR 1 1962

DAVID JODREY

DONNA LAWSON

Musical Compositions Of Local Students Selected By Boston Youth Concert

Original musical compositions by two Newton young people, Donna Lawson and David Jodrey, will be featured at the final Boston Symphony Youth Concerts to be held on Saturday, March 3, and 10, at 11 A.M. in Symphony Hall, Boston.

"Zwei Tanzer" by Donna Lawson, Newton High School graduate in 1961 and presently a freshman at New England Conservatory of Music, and "Chorale and Theme with Variations" by David Jodrey, Class of 1963 at Newton High School, were the compositions selected for the concerts.

Conductor Harry Dickson, and Walter Piston, dean of American composers and a professor of music at Harvard University for more than thirty years, announced the selections.

Both of these pieces were performed last June at the annual Music Club concert of more than a dozen original compositions, created, orchestated, and arranged for symphony orchestra, chamber groups, and jazz by students of the Theory of Music Classes instructed by Henry Lasker. At that time, Miss Lawson was a member of the Theory of Music II Class, while Mr. Jodrey was a member of the Theory of Music I Class. This year he is continuing his creative writing with his colleagues in Theory II. Mr. Lasker believes that everyone is endowed with imagination, and can learn to compose music with proper guidance and encouragement.

At a recent assembly featuring original pieces, James Remley, director of music of the Newton Public Schools, in speaking about the opportunities offered in the Music Appreciation, Theory, and Humanities classes, as well as the Choral and Instrumental groups, quoted the opinions of music critics who had acclaimed highly the creative efforts of Newton High Music students in previous concerts.

He then remarked, "What a tribute to high school student composers! I believe that Newton enjoys a unique reputation in this area of creativity." This is obviously true as evidenced by the fact that Mr. Dickson, who had announced several months ago that manuscripts composed by high school students in Massachusetts would be appraised for the purpose of presentation at the forthcoming Boston Symphony Youth Concerts, received compositions only from Newton High School.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
NOV 2 1961

Youth Concerts

Child Must Accompany Each Adult

Adults will be admitted only if accompanied by a child.

That will be the rule Saturday morning when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presents the first in its series of six youth concerts at Symphony Hall.

Nearly 3,000 youngsters from school systems throughout the state are expected to attend the hour-long concert.

Theme of Saturday's program will be "What Is Classical Music?".

The program will incudle excerpts from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2; Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess"; "Petrouchka" and "The Rite of Spring" by Stravinsky; Prokofieff's Concerto No. 1 for violin; Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra and Bernstein's "Fancy Free."

Soloist in the Prokofieff work will be 15-year-old Penny Ambrose of Coventry, Conn.

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct.

The program will be repeated Nov. 11.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

SATURDAY morning's "Youth Concert" at Symphony Hall, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, is in memory of Mrs. Therese Filene, "who felt so very keenly that good music should be available to all young people." Sponsored by the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation, this special supplementary concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians is exclusively for young people variously handicapped from attending the regular series, which recently ended.

Mrs. Filene, who had a deep concern for the fullness of life and well-being of the individual, was a gifted musician. She played the violin, piano and organ, and possessed such "perfect pitch" she could repeat any composition in the exact key in which she heard it.

An enthusiastic committee, headed by Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, has assembled the invitation audience from settlement houses and hospital schools for children. Working with her are Mrs. Harry Brenner, ticket chairman; Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. James Hauck, Mrs. Justin Driscoll, Mrs. Manuel Kurland and Miss Vionale Junod.

★ ★

The Symphony -- As Seen Through The Eyes Of Children

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

NOV 6 1961

What do you do when somebody in front of you at Symphony Hall is waving his program over his head in time to the beat of the music.

Harry Ellis Dickson, conducting Boston Symphony musicians for the third year in these Saturday morning programs, gets a greeting no evening conductor ever did. Cries of "Yea" and shrill whistles greeted his appearance.

Mr. Dickson's popularity with children seems to be based in his not treating them as if they were imbecile. He talks to them as if they were equals, lesser only in experience.

I was the same with the program, which will be repeated Saturday at 11 a.m. Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Stravinsky, Bartok, Prokofiev and Gershwin.

He told them bits of information—the fist fights that broke out when Stravinsky was first played in concert. And he got information from them with, "Does that sound strange and terrible?"

The children considered the Dance of the Adolescents from The Rite of Spring and yelled, "No." He told them that Brahms was considered "far out" for his day, as Lukas Foss was this past week-end.

He had Armando Ghitalla show them the little trumpet used for the flute-like nokes of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F Major. They giggled because it looked like a toy. The French horns played their theme from the "Eroica" and the children looked at their mothers when they recognized it in the Scherzo.

SPECIAL TROMBONE FOR BELLY LAUGH

And he showed them the special trombone designed for the belly-laugh low note in Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, which no regular trombone can play.

Then he introduced 16-year-old Penny Ambrose as soloist for the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 1 in D major, the finale, as a "remarkable violinist." And so she was, winning genuine applause from the orchestra's violin section for this "most difficult of all modern works."

It seemed a great experience for the children, and perhaps even more of one for an observer, watching this initiation of the young into a new and wonderful world.

A.V.M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562

NOV 9 1961

Concert

Cohasset -- Children who have subscribed to the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will be transported by school bus directly to the Hall on Saturday morning, November 11.

Those making the trip will assemble in the parking lot at the Joseph Osgood school at 9:15; the bus will leave promptly at 9:30. There will be adult chaperons. The concert will last from 11 to 12, and the bus should return by 1:15 p.m.

The Youth Concerts, 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the leadership of Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston 'Pops,' are now in their third season, and have attracted young people from communities all over the state, and as far away as Maine and New Hampshire.

In Cohasset, the School Committee and the Superintendent of Schools cooperated in the distribution in the schools of ticket application blanks last Spring.

Saturday's program will illustrate the difference between classical and modern music by the playing of various selections from both groups. This concert will be followed by the January concerts, 'What is Opera?' and the concerts in March, when members of the All-State orchestra and chorus will appear with the regular Symphony players.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

OCT 12 1961

NIGHT WATCH -:- By Percy Shain

'World of Fiedler' Is Television Treat

World of Arthur Fiedler, Ch. 4 ★★★

A television treat marred only by a slight fuzziness in the recording, marked the first of a monthly series of concerts by the Boston Pops Orchestra, under Boston Globe auspices last night.

Conductor Arthur Fiedler chose his numbers well in this impeccably played, handsomely produced show, videotaped in a party atmosphere in the main ballroom of Boston's Sheraton Plaza. Emphasis was on the lighter, popular classics that have made the Pops so universally beloved through the years.

There was little waste motion as the white-maned conductor launched into his varied half-hour program which included such favorites as Dvorak's "Slavonic Dance," the younger Johan Strauss' Overture to "Die Fledermaus," "Irish Tune from County Derry," arranged by Percy Granger; Gade's "Jalousie," and "Gypsy Dance" from Bizet's "Carmen."

FIEDLER

Throughout the playing, four cameras were on the move, highlighting the various instruments, occasionally lingering on the all-business maestro, bringing the entire scene into focus.

It was almost like having a ringside seat at the real thing, except for an apparent deficiency in the acoustics. The louder passages came over a bit of a backwash, and the reverberations at times interfered with the clarity of the musicianship. The softer sections were noticeably more distinct.

Possibly the remedy lies in a more startegic placing of drapes around the ballroom.

John Scott, as host, gave the numbers brief, tasteful introductions. Douglas Leonard produced. Thomas J.. Knott directed.

Overall, it was an auspicious start for the sort of a program Boston has long needed. The flood of phone calls to the Globe while it was going on, showed that the tpublic was widely appreciative of this diversion from comedy and crime to prime time.

The second concert is set for Nov. 7.

GLOBE'S RATING KEY:
★★★★ Very Good
★★★ Good ★★ Fair
★ Poor

der: the Untold Story of Lizzie Borden" based on a book by Edward Radin, threw new insight into the famous case. But the interest was more cerebral than dramatic, for this was a slow, talky presentation, with little life or movement, and drained of feeling.

Ron Cochran, the former WCOP newsman, made his debut as host in passable fashion, though lacking the fire of Doug Edwards' narration.

TIP FOR TONIGHT—"CBS Reports," with an Eisenhower interview, and "The Untouchables," with a plot to frame Eliot Ness, make their season debuts in a conflicting time slot. Chs. 5 and 7, respectively, at 10.

200

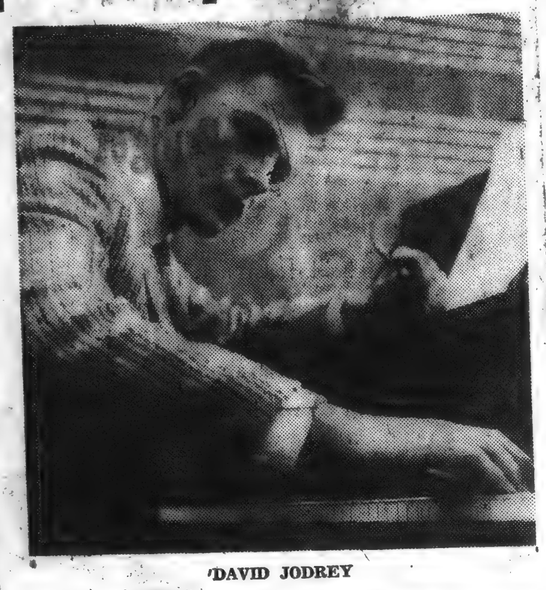
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 2 1962

At Symphony Tomorrow—

A Big Day For Teen Composers



DAVID JODREY

DONNA LAWSON

By GAIL KREDENSER

Works by two Newton teen age composers will be given their first professional performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Youth Concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow.

The two, Donna Lawson, 19, David Jodrey, 17, both of Newton, were winners of the Orchestra's competition for the best composition by a young person.

SELECTED AS SOLOIST

Saturday will be a big day for two other teen agers, who were selected to be soloists at the concert. They are Robert Hansen of Holbrook High and Peter Cokkinias of Springfield Classical Hansen, who plays the French horn, will play the Finale of Mozart's Horn Concerto in E Flat, Cokkinias will play the Andante of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A.

This year was the first in which wind players competed in the auditions, and the first time compositions by teen agers will be included.

Who are the winners?

As a sixth grader, Holbrook's Robert Hansen was playing cor-

MUSIC

(Continued on Page Two)

Big Day For Teen Agers

Young Soloists, Composers Win Symphony Tests

(Continued from First Page)

net in the high school band. The son of Mr. and Mrs. William Hansen, he is as talented in art as he is in music, but he's just about decided on a musical career. He has studied French horn, probably the most difficult of the brass instruments, for five years.

FESTIVAL MEMBER

"I was home all alone when the letter came, telling me I had won," he recalled. "I had to read it four times before I believed it."

The blue-eyed youth has been a member of the All-State Music Festival for three years and is a member of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony, which is scheduled to play a White House concert in April.

Clarinetist Peter Cokkinias, 16, a junior at Springfield Classical, also plays saxophone, flute, violin and drums. As clarinetist, he has held the solo chair for two years in the All-State High School Orchestra. He is a member of the Springfield Young People's Symphony and the Greater Hartford (Conn.) Youth Orchestra.

He commutes to Hartford each week to study at the Hart School of Music.

2 CONCERTS IN ONE DAY

"Tomorrow I have two concerts in the same day—the Boston Youth Concert in the morning and a concert in Hartford in the evening," he said.

Active in school affairs the dark-hairded, hazel-eyed youth also plays with a 16-piece dance band and has his own Dixieland band. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Cokkinias.

PETER COKKINIAS

son is an attractive, hazel-eyed freshman at the New England Conservatory of Music.

She wrote her "Zwei Tanzer" ("Two Dances") while a student at Newton High School. David Jodrey is a junior at Newton and both composed the pieces as students of Henry Lasker, head of the high school's music department. Both works have been performed by the Newton Youth Symphony.

DID OWN ORCHESTRATIONS

David, a tall, lanky blond, is determined to be a composer of serious music. His work is titled "Chorale and Theme with Variations."

Both did their own orchestrations, and both works are about four minutes long.

As in the past, 50 members of the All State High School Orchestra will play with the Symphony members in the last work on the hour-long program, the Berceuse and Finale of Stravinsky's Suite from "The Fire Bird."

Theme of the concert, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, is "Picture Music." The concert will be repeated Mar. 10.

201

Eric Leinsdorf

TIME January 19, 1962

MUSIC

Cr...anding at the Met

...who has ever been buffeted ...rian orchestra knows that a ...e of Die Walküre (four hours) ...constitution of a wild ox. At ...rformance last week at Man...opolitan Opera, some of the ...e in sub-ox condition; and be...l curtain fell, substitutes had ...nd off the stage in an evening ...ital confusion.

...Birgit Nilsson, scheduled to ...ng the ...ie of Brünnhilde, had to bow ...th ...ening before the performance. ...er... Manager Rudolf Bing gave the ... to Soprano Margaret Harshaw, who ... ...e sung Sieglinde; into the Sieg... ...ent Soprano Gladys Kuchta. ... ...e Valkyries, Mezzo Gladys ... ...s ill with tracheitis; her part ... Mezzo Ethel Greene, regularly a ... of the chorus.

Somehow, the opera got started on time. But in Act II, just when Baritone Otto Edelmann seemed to be booming along comfortably in the role of Wotan, his voice began to fail. Edelmann withdrew at the end of Act II. He was replaced by Baritone Randolph Symonette, who lasted on stage for only four minutes. "It seemed to me like four hours," said shaken Conductor Erich Leinsdorf later. It was apparent to Leinsdorf that Symonette "could not get any music out of his throat." When Symonette finally croaked out the line "Aus meinem Angesicht bist du verbannt" ("From my presence you are banished"), Leinsdorf ordered the curtain rung down.

Conductor Leinsdorf started again after a jump of ten pages in the score to cut out some of the more tortuous vocal passages, and Baritone Edelmann came on again as Wotan, in brighter voice after his rest. Happily, they all made it to the final curtain. "I felt like the pilot who decides on a crash landing," said Leinsdorf. "We made it without the plane going up in flames."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON JAN 29 1962

Leinsdorf Winds Up Met Schedule Next Monday

Erich Leinsdorf will make his last Metropolitan Opera appearance before leaving to become music director of the Boston Symphony next Monday night, Feb. 5, when he conducts Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro." The cast includes Lisa Della Casa, Anneliese Rothenberger, Mildred Miller, Giorgio Tozzi and Kim Borg.

The sixteenth week of the Metropolitan Opera season continues with Puccini's "Tosca" Tuesday night, Feb. 6, with Zinka Milanov in the title role, Franco Corelli as Cavaradossi and Morley Meredith in his first Scarpia here. Richard Strauss' "Salome" will be repeated Wednesday night, Feb. 7, with Jane Rhodes again in the title role. Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera" is scheduled for Thursday night, Feb. 8, with an unchanged cast.

Lucine Amara, Brenda Lewis, Ferruccio Tagliavini and Lorenzo Testi will head the cast in Puccini's "La Bohème" Friday night, Feb. 9, and Laurel Hurley will reappear in the title role of Offenbach's "La Périchole" Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10. In Verdi's "La Traviata" that evening Gabriella Tucci will sing Violetta for the first time here with Dino Formichini and Frank Guarrera as the other principals.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126 055 S. 184,493
AUG 27 1961

It Could Be a Rochesterian

Leinsdorf to Pick Own Top Aide

AN UNUSUAL opportunity will come to Erich Leinsdorf when he takes over next year as conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony — he'll be able to select his own concertmaster at the very beginning, and his choice could turn out to be a Rochesterian.

This became evident with the announcement that Richard Burgin, who has held the post since 1920, will retire as an orchestra member at the end of the coming season, although he will continue as associate conductor.

Next to the conductor himself, the concertmaster has the greatest responsibilities for the general quality of an orchestra. For that reason, Leinsdorf will be making a key choice, for much of his success will depend on his rapport with his concertmaster.

* * *

THIS FACT raises the interesting question if Leinsdorf might turn to the concertmaster with whom he has worked longest during his career—Millard Taylor, who since 1944 has held the same title in the Rochester Philharmonic. This, of course, covers the years from 1947 to 1956 when Leinsdorf was the Philharmonic's conductor, a happy period in the music life of Rochester when the results spoke well for the rapport between the two men.

But Taylor is also a dedicated and respected teacher at the Eastman School and might well be unwilling to give up this work, for which the job in Boston would leave no time, even if he were invited to the post. It would be a difficult choice to make—his present way of life in Rochester as against one of the foremost positions an orchestra violinist can get in America.

* * *

BURGIN, 68, has been the Boston Symphony's concertmaster since 1920, serving under Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch during the period the orchestra achieved its present eminent position. Time and again he has been seen on the Eastman Theater stage during the virtually annual visits the orchestra has made here over several decades.

Since a concertmaster's special duties are evident to the public only when he plays solo violin passages, it might be well to use this opportunity to define his functions.

The International Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians gives this definition:

"The leader of the first violin section of the orchestra, who commonly is not only responsible for the accuracy of the bowings and notes of his own (string) choir, but to some extent for the intonation and general musicianship of the whole band. He is usually entrusted with violin solo passages."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

JAN 17 1962

THESE DAYS — By GEORGE SOKOLSKY

Met Gods Lose Way

THE OTHER NIGHT, I went to the Metropolitan opera house to hear the Walkuere, which, if you do not know, Richard Wagner took out of the Volsungs and Niblungs and wrote a series of opera about. It takes enormous energy to sing any of the music in the Ring, first because Wagner and no mercy for singers, expecting them to blow themselves to bits and secondly because it is undoubtedly the most glorious music ever written if you can understand what it is all about.

Richard Wagner's concept of the opera was that it united all the arts into a single idea. However, the night I went, the star lost her voice and they substituted another, poor dear, who had not enough wind to carry Wagner across the mountain which he expects a soprano to do.

SO THE NIGHT I went to hear the Walkuere, they had a real German Wotan, with all the muscles and stomach that is required for such a character but a bug got him and his voice was not what it should have been—an accident that shows what can happen to an actor who plays a god. So they got another Wotan, gods being available in these days as in those and the curtain went up and everyone was happy.

Wotan was doing pretty well until he—the second one—lost his voice or forgot his part; I do not know what happened for I, not being a master of these things, listen only to the orchestra that carries into dreams.

When Wotan sang, in German, of course:

"Thy bed shall be lit by torches more brilliant
Than ever for bridal have burned!
Fiery gleams shall girdle the fell,
With terrible scorchings scaring the timid,
Who, cowed, may cross not Brunnhilda's couch
For one alone freeth the bride;
One freer than I, the God!"

Down came the curtain. The god had lost his way. Nobody knew whether he was to get his money back or what, but on the whole it was a decent audience that took what came good-naturedly, figuring that these German gods were playful folk who got all mixed up with maids and beer

The curtain rose again and the first Wotan courageously finished the show, for come what may, the show must go on and Wagner was justified when the original Wotan sang:

"He who my spear in spirit feareth, ne'er springs through their fiery bar!"

Brunnhilda lies as though dead and Wotan disappears through the fire.

Slow curtain.

All the time I wondered when the big chandelier would fall from the ceiling and put an end to the whole business.

BUT THIS MUST BE SAID: Erich Leinsdorf, the maestro who ran the whole show, leading the orchestra, bringing in the singers, directing what the stage hands should do about the curtain, was as cool as a captain on a sinking ship.

This Leinsdorf, at 25 or some such age, was Toscanini's assistant conductor which means that he was apprentice to the greatest baton that ever was whirled. I shall, God willing, be watching him for years to come at Tanglewood where he is to succeed the lovable Munch and the dramatic Koussevitzky.

Copyr. 1962, King Feat. Synd. Inc.

ANTIGO, WIS.
JOURNAL
D. 4,919
JUN 19 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

202

ESQUIRE February 1962

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston: for some years his nostalgia will be dormant

RECORDINGS

MARTIN MAYER

THE problem with teaching conducting," said Erich Leinsdorf recently over a very simple lunch (he diets, more for the sake of the self-discipline than for the weight), "is that the student cannot practice on it. The piano is so much easier—it doesn't say No; it won't bite you; it won't go on strike."

Also, though Leinsdorf didn't mention the matter, it won't disappear, as the Cleveland Orchestra disappeared on him twenty years ago, through no fault of his own. Leinsdorf at that time was the Wunderkind of American music, Toscanini's most sterling protégé, a transplanted Viennese still in his early thirties with several years of experience at the Metropolitan Opera already behind him. Then he went off to be a soldier, and Cleveland, force majeure, found another conductor; and after the war there was no post open for Leinsdorf. He filled in here and there, spent some seasons with the Rochester, took over the New York City Opera for a disastrously overimaginative season of contemporary works, made records, then proved the mettle of his personality by becoming the only first-rank conductor with whom Rudolf Bing of the Metropolitan Opera has ever been able to work for any length of time.

Now Leinsdorf has reaped his reward: the best job in America, the leadership of the Boston Symphony, where loyalties run deep and in both directions. The BSO really counts, in all senses of the word. At New York and Philadelphia last year, the orchestra struck when the contract ran out; in Boston in 1960-61, the men played half the season without a contract. Leinsdorf, shortly after his appointment had been announced, ran into a member of the BSO Board at a European watering place. The man came over to him and said, "My name is X, and I am one of your trustees. I want," he said, waving his hand through the air of Beaulieu, "I want to welcome you to Boston." Leinsdorf told the story and shook his head happily. "Where else but Boston?"

He is a middle-sized ramrod of a man, aggressively bald between ear flaps of black hair; long face, large ears, huge hands. Notoriously tough and intelligent, he has the sharpest wit since Beecham, and employs it with just a touch of English accent. Like Toscanini, he specializes in tightly controlled power; he has never in my hearing been guilty of a gemütlich (or a sloppy) performance. When it comes off, which is not every time, the results are magniloquent and exciting. Leinsdorf has made literally hundreds of LP's, for Columbia (his Mendelssohn Italian on the low-price Harmony is still my favorite of the work, and I thought his Eroica the best on the market until Walter Toscanini got the Maestro's in shape to release); for Westminster (including a complete set of Mozart Symphonies particularly impressive in the wonderful, hard-to-do, hard-to-find group around K. 200); for Capitol (most recently, a dazzling Till Eulenspiegel's, Merry Pranks) and for RCA Victor (several operas, among them an incomparable Barber of Se Verdi's Macbeth, and the fo coming complete Walküre, a Marriage of Figaro and Giovanni which are pro the most widely admired field, though not by me conductor of the Boston, L dorf will record exclusivel Victor.

Leinsdorf will have to gi opera for the BSO, which conductors would consider r er sad—Reiner and Szell example, deeply regret t restriction to orchestral re tory. Leinsdorf brushed problem vigorously away. several years," he said, "my talgia will be dormant."

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D 393,718 S. 446,764
FEB 11 1962

'Second Class' Music May Put Boston in First Class Quandary

By Paul Hume

"BANNED IN BOSTON" has taken on a new meaning. It now refers to any music of the second class.

Hume

Erich Leinsdorf has already, eight months before taking the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, fired off a prognostication he will inevitably either regret, reverse or try to weasel out of.

In discussing his plans for the Boston Symphony's programs, Leinsdorf said recently, "I believe that a major orchestra should spend all its time playing either masterpieces or contemporary music. It should give no time to second rate music."

Well! Well! Well! Where do we go from here?

Man, are things going to be dull in Boston.

Of course, Leinsdorf refused to get very specific about what he considers second-rate. And well he might. He could hardly mention a composer's name without involving himself in lively disputes with hundreds of his future subscribers.

Or will the solution for Leinsdorf be to elevate, by simple performance, a host of things long considered second rate to the eminence of masterpieces? My view has long been that we cannot live constantly upon the highest mountain peaks. Nor is it sufficient contrast, sufficient change of color, of timbre, of mood and style, to vary these great works only by the introduction of contemporary works, however right and necessary and desirable a plan it is to continue Boston's long and enlightened policy in this area.

HOW I LONG to hear a beautiful performance of some great second-rate music at symphony concerts. What else can match the way Thomas Beecham used to play "The Last Spring" by Grieg, which was the tribute he used for a public performance when he heard of the death of Arturo Toscanini. Indeed, Beecham's repertory was a treasury of second-rate music, as was Toscanini's, for all the mastery each man brought to his realizations of the world's towering works.

Have Bostonians heard the last of Liadoff, Rachmaninoff, of Ravel, of Delius and Saint-Saens? Leinsdorf mentioned Saint-Saens as a man he could do without, though Boston has been the scene of two of the great accounts of Saint-Saens' Third Symphony in recent years.

Glancing casually through some of Serge Koussevitsky's programs, I opened the season of 1927-28 to its 15th program: Beck, Symphony No. 3; Holst, "Ode to Death"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, Overture to "A Night in May"; Borodin, Aria from "Prince Igor"; Schmitt, Psalm XLVII. Hardly a first-rate piece of music on the whole list, but it is an evening I would very much like to have heard, or to hear today.

The same season brought Boston audiences Bax and Liadoff, Cherubini, Shreker, and Liszt's "Mazeppa," Dukas, Borghi, and other composers whose names are either forgotten or justly labeled second-rate today. Yet their contributions to the programs on which they appeared undoubtedly added a texture, a sonority, a color that helped to set off the masterpieces with which they were surrounded.

LEINSDORF HAS, of course, simplified life for Boston's music critics. They can now take their seats at BSO concerts secure in the knowledge that unless the music they are hearing is contemporary, it is a masterpiece.

But alas for the philosophy that would thus limit us to no books but those of the great masters. No more Tennyson or Charlotte Bronte. Good-by to those writers we quite lovingly called the "minor poets." Remember Christina Rossetti? And Matthews Arnold? Shall we never again enjoy a revival of "Michael and His Lost Angel" or "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray?"

Actually, of course, the term "second-rate" ought not to carry the stigma that usually attaches to it, and Leinsdorf has only cemented it on more stickily than ever. Alas, poor Boston, how IS Leinsdorf going to keep things from sounding terribly stuffy?

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
MON FEB 5 1962

300 Join Met Tribute To Erich Leinsdorf

More than 300 guests from the world of music joined in a reception tribute to Erich Leinsdorf Friday at the Opera Club of the Metropolitan. The conductor, who will give his final performance at the Metropolitan tonight with "Le Nozze di Figaro," assumes his new post of music director of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival next season.

Rudolf Bing, general manager of the Metropolitan, presented Leinsdorf with a gold handled baton. The Metropolitan Opera Assn., the Opera Guild and the National Council of the Metropolitan Opera Assn. sponsored the event.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 532,079 S. 907,027
JUL 4 1961

ARRIVES—Erich Leinsdorf arrived Monday to conduct concerts at Bowl.

Leinsdorf Here to Conduct at Bowl Concerts

Erich Leinsdorf, noted American conductor, arrived Monday by American Airlines and will begin rehearsals Wednesday with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra for the opening concert of Hollywood Bowl's 40th Anniversary season of Symphonies under the Stars.

He will initiate the season Thursday night with Inge Borkh, internationally known opera star as soloist.

The conductor flew from Europe where he has been filling important concert dates for the past month. He has conducted the famed Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam in Beethoven's 9th Symphony, has made operatic recordings in Rome and has conducted in London.

Will Go To Boston

Leinsdorf currently is conductor and music consultant for the Metropolitan Opera but in the 1962-63 season will assume his new duties as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Summer Festival, succeeding Charles Munch.

He was met at International Airport by George A. Kuyper, general director of the Hollywood Bowl Assn. The conductor noted that his visit to the Bowl will be his 16th appearance in the amphitheater. A native of Austria, he began his music career in his teens as an assistant to Dr. Bruno Walter at Salzburg.

Coming to the United States in his early 20s, he joined the Metropolitan Opera as conductor of Wagner Opera. Later he served as music director of the Cleveland Orchestra and after service in the U.S. Armed Forces, took over the music direction of the Rochester Philharmonic.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL
FEB 7 1962

Leinsdorf Ends Met Tenure for Hub Symph; In Cap-To-Victor Switch

Eric Leinsdorf completed his tenure at the Metropolitan Opera House Monday (5) with "Marriage of Figaro." Conductor has long been set for the Boston Symphony post, that starting next fall. It is believed his contract is for three years.

The Boston job is a plum. Several conductors were considered, including William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony who had enjoyed a big personal success there on a guest appearance last season.

Leinsdorf is now managed by Walter Surovy. He has switched from Capitol Records to Victor. His operatic series earlier for Victor was freelance, the new pact following the firming of the Boston deal.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
TUE FEB 6 1962

A Debut, A Farewell

The Metropolitan Opera's final production this season of Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" was noteworthy for both a debut and a farewell.

The debut was that of Teresa Stratas in her first Barbarine. Pretty and petite, Miss Stratas sang with a well-rounded, accurate tone that was particularly welcome in the recitatives; she also brought fresh buoyancy to her interpretation, a feature noticeably lacking in the rest of the cast members, most of whom seemed rather weary of their roles, engaging in a great deal of stage business rather than meaningful acting.

The farewell was that of Erich Leinsdorf. Resounding cheers greeted the maestro at this his final appearance at the Metropolitan before he takes up his new, full-time post with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season.

Judith Robison.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SAT FEB 3 1962

MET HONORS LEINSDORF

Conductor, Bound for Boston Symphony, Gets Award

The Metropolitan Opera yesterday honored Erich Leinsdorf, who is leaving the opera to become director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Leinsdorf received a gold-handled baton, designed by Henryk Kaston, a violinist in the orchestra and a jewelry maker. The presentation was made by Rudolf Bing, general manager of the company, at a reception in the Opera Club. The event was sponsored by the Metropolitan Opera Association, the Metropolitan Opera Guild and the National Council of the Metropolitan.

The reception was attended by members of the organizations, representatives of the Boston Symphony and members of the conducting, singing and scenic rosters of the company. Mr. Leinsdorf, who has been music consultant with the company, will conduct his last performance, Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," on Monday.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 854 085 S. 1,157,232
APR 7 1962

Concert Is a Study in Contrast

BY THOMAS WILLIS

[Reprinted from yesterday's late editions]

THURSDAY NIGHT'S Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert was a study in contrast. Tho there was polish, beautiful string tone, and expressive solo work thruout, most of the listening was on the dull side. Musicologists and theorists would have had a field day, but very little of the program was top quality composition. Erich Leinsdorf, returning for his second guest conducting engagement of the season, was energetic, careful of balance and sonority, and firmly in control, but crests came seldom and only after arid lows.

Concert by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, guest conductor. Presented in Orchestra hall Thursday evening, April 5, 1962, and scheduled for repetition Friday afternoon. The program:

Suite from "The Creatures of Prometheus" ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 10 ..... Shostakovich
[First performance at these concerts]

Erich Leinsdorf

The fault was in the program. The first half was lightweight early period Beethoven, a suite drawn by Mr. Leinsdorf from the ballet "The Creatures of Prometheus," an allegory written in 1800 and performed, along with a singspiel, "The Village Barber," in honor of Maria Theresa the following year. The overture, often done, is followed by 16 short movements, of which eight were performed.

• • •

Like so much of Beethoven's early work, it is full of echoes. There is an Apollonian section with harp, flute, and pizzicato strings, melting into a cello solo in the best French manner. Further on, a transformation scene in a minor key turns into a small sonata. Marches in the manner of divertimenti, Mozart winds, and a Karl Philip Emanuel Bach adagio follow. Echoes of much craft, some charm, but only occasionally do they hint at the composer's later strength.

The Shostakovich Tenth which concluded is a somber work of 1953, showing its Tschaikowsky and Mussorgsky antecedents, tho with an occasional shaft of Prokofieff light. Most pulsing basses, piercing winds, with a motto theme of restricted range lacing its way around simple, easily recognizable subjects, just twice it lashes out with the fury of the Fifth.

• • •

Its saving grace is humor—a waltz-like passage in low thirds for the clarinets, horn fifths turning slightly askew with plucked strings, a lilting repeated note figure in the winds which would be banal if it weren't so deftly handled. But the long lines for low strings and constant sequences wear out their welcome long before they conclude despite the conductor's insistence on transparency.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D 532,079 S 907,027
OCT 29 1961

MUSIC NEWS

• Works by three Southern California composers will be performed on the Monday Evening Concerts program in Fiesta Hall, Plummer Park, Monday at 8:30 p.m. Two will be first performances—Leonard Rosenman's Duo for clarinet and piano and Dorrance Stalvey's String Trio. The third is Fredric Myrow's Theme and Variations for piano solo. Performers will be John Neufeld, clarinet; Pearl Kaufman, piano; Diana Steiner, violin; Myra Kestenbaum, viola, and Howard Colf, cello.

• The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will begin rehearsals this week for the opening subscription pair of the 43rd season, Nov. 9-10 in Philharmonic Auditorium.

Erich Leinsdorf, who opened the Hollywood Bowl season last summer, will also be the conductor for the Philharmonic opening. The conductor will assume his new duties as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the season of 1962-63. The Philharmonic Orchestra has a schedule of school concerts starting Tuesday under auspices of the Los Angeles Board of Education. Howard Hanson, noted American composer and director of the Eastman School of Music, will conduct the series. Nine guest conductors will be heard on the regular series during the 1961-62 season of 18 pair concerts.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 384,760 S. 678,280
NOV 3 1961

Erich Leinsdorf Arrives to Open Philharmonic Season

Ready to open the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra's 43rd season on Thursday at Philharmonic Auditorium, Erich Leinsdorf arrived yesterday from New York. He was accompanied by Mrs. Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf is music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera, and in the 1962-63 season will assume new duties as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center.

The American maestro has the distinction of opening three important symphony orchestra seasons this fall. He has already conducted the initial concerts of the Chicago Symphoyn Orchestra and the New Orleans Philharmonic.

After opening Hollywood Bowl's 40th season last July, Leinsdorf continued a busy summer season with concerts in Robin Hood Dell at Philadelphia, and other summer festivals. He then went to London where he spent September recording Wagner's "Die Walkeure" with noted singers and the London Symphony Orchestra.

When he completes his visit here conducting the Philharmonic's opening subscription pair Nov. 9-10 and a concert in Santa Barbara the 14th, Leinsdorf returns to New York to begin rehearsals for the three cycles of Wagner's "Ring" which he will direct in December and January.

204

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
FEB 6 1962

Boston Symphony's New Chief Rules Out Second-Rate Music

(The following feature was written by Raymond Ericson in the Sunday edition of the New York Times.)

Erich Leinsdorf is 50 years old today. That convenient, round, half-century figure finds him at a turning point in his career. He is completing four seasons as musical consultant and conductor for the Metropolitan Opera and is preparing to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall.

Having finished his last full rehearsals for the Metropolitan, Mr. Leinsdorf noted with relief the other day that he could finally turn his whole attention to plans for the Boston season.

"Of course I can't go into detail about them yet," he said in his quick, efficient yet friendly way. "But I have some basic ideas about programs. A major orchestra should perform only masterpieces and contemporary works. It should not spend time on second-rate music.

New Generations

"You have to do the masterpieces, no matter how familiar they are," he continued, "because there are always new generations of listeners coming along who haven't heard them. I do not say that you have to play all four Brahms symphonies every season. In fact, it is better all around if they are given a rest from time to time — for the conductor and orchestra as well as the audiences. I had not conducted the 'Ring' for several years until I did it at the Met this season, and what a revelation it was to restudy it."

Mr. Leinsdorf was asked to name some specific "second-rate" pieces that he would like to omit from his programs. He smiled, throught briefly and answered hesitantly, as if unwilling to be pinned down.

"Well," he finally said. "I think you could do without the lesser works of Saint-Saens — the piano concertos, for instance — or the works of Glazunoff. These can be left to the community orchestras. I would much rather hear them grapple with a Glazunoff score than a Beethoven symphony."

Born and educated in Vienna, Mr. Leinsdorf became an assistant to Bruno Walter and Arthuro Toscanini at the Salzburg Festivan when he was only 22 years old. Three years later he was brought over by the Metropolitan to help Artur Bodanzky conduct the Wagner repertory.

"One thing I wouldn't agree to do," Mr. Leinsdorf said in recalling his first years at the Metropolitan, "was conduct parts of operas. Bodanzky was notorious for leading the first two acts of a performance and then, if he was tired, turning over the rest of the opera to someone else."

U.S. Army

In 1943, Mr. Leinsdorf left the Metropolitan to become conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, but almost immediately he was called to serve in the United States Army. For nine years, beginning in 1947, he led the Rochester (N.Y.) Philharmonic. In 1956, he became director of the New York City Opera, moving downtown to the Metropolitan as a guest conductor early in January, 1957.

The aplomb with which Mr. Leinsdorf survived a recent performance of "Die Walkuere" at the Metropolitan was the envy of his colleagues. The conductor had to order the curtain brought down in the middle of an act because a singer was unable to carry on.

"There seemed to be nothing else to do at the time," he remarked. "I was interested in giving a performance and the only way to do that was to stop and start again. After it was all over, however, I admit that a reaction set in. After all, I can nwver recall this happening before except when someone died onstage.

"Singers don't seem to have the stamina they used to," he continued. "They look powerful enough, but they don't last through performances. I think they overestimate their strength. Airplanes make it possible to accept a lot of engagements, and they fly into a city one day and begin rehearsals the next. Their systems can't take it.

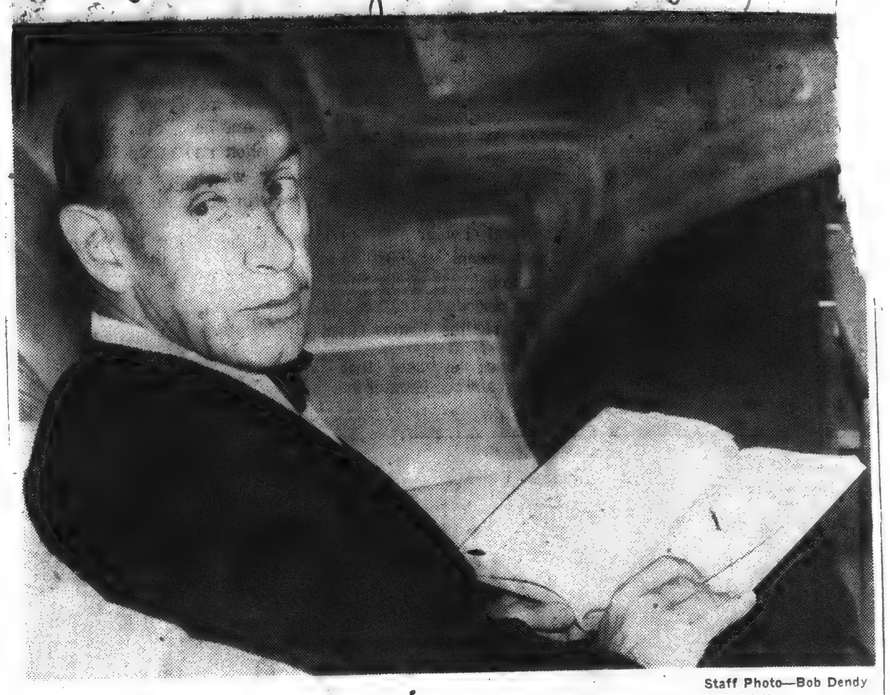
Weak Singers

"In the old days, singers babied themselves," he said. "I remember Leo Slezak, the tenor, bundling himself up and going out to get a bit of fresh air and sunshine as if his life depended on it. We was able to sing big roles when he was well along in years."

Mr. Leinsdorf conducted recordings of "La Boheme" and "Die Walkuere" last summer. ("Not a German in the 'Walkuere' cast, and the orchestra's concertmaster is Irish," the conductor noted with amusement.) These will be released early next fall, according to present plans.

For live opera he will have no time. With the Boston Symphony he will conduct 25 of its 32 weeks performances, and in the summer of 1963 he begins his related duties as director of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. A heavy schedule, maybe, but one that Mr. Leinsdorf looks ready and eager to tackle. After all, 50 is young as conductors go.

Atlanta May 1 — The Constitution Completely Dem



Staff Photo—Bob Dendy

"A CONDUCTOR CAN GROW ONLY BY CONDUCTING"
Erich Leinsdorf Snatches a Few Minutes to Study a Score

Golden Era of Conductors Dying, Says Met's Leinsdorf

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The curtain may be falling on the golden era of conducting giants, in the opinion of the Metropolitan Opera's music consultant, Erich Leinsdorf.

Toscanini, Beecham, Mitropoulos—to name only a few—are gone. Other greats, such as Walter and Monteux, are in semi-retirement.

Where are the new geniuses of the podium? The prospects are not bright in the eyes of Dr. Leinsdorf.

"If I may sum it up," he said in an interview here during Metropolitan Opera week, "a conductor can grow only by conducting. Anybody who is prevented from conducting cannot grow."

But the nature of our times conspires against stability in conductors, he continued.

"The talent is there . . . but today the people who have talent want to have two or three jobs. . . . There is not enough publicity in one job," he said.

"With the communications—airplanes and phonographs—there comes a commercialism that is not conducive to development."

The young men, he continued, "want to go around the world as guest conductors." "It is so tempting to go from place to place with the same program," he said. A conductor can't study scores properly in planes and hotel rooms, he added.

There is a "reciprocal growth" between conductor and orchestra, Leinsdorf explained: the conductor grows with his orchestra, and the orchestra with him.

"The great artists are the people who know where their responsibility lies . . . to be associated with an organization as long as they have something to give to it," he said.

Leinsdorf, who reminds one of Adlai Stevenson not only in his philosophical approach to his work but also in physical appearance, will have an opportunity to put his dictum into practice when he takes over as conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1962 and 63.

He respectfully declines to reveal any plans for the Boston for fear of taking attention from Charles Munch's last year there, but one gathers Leinsdorf plans to be there for a long while.

His association with the Met dates to 1937, when he left Austria and moved permanently to the States. (He has been a citizen since 1942.) He also has served long periods with the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras.

One of America's weaknesses in replacing the supply of top-rank conductors, he said, is its shortage of opera companies. "A conductor does not get training with a symphony orchestra. To learn the skill of conducting, there's nothing like opera," he said.

And yet Italy, with an opera house in every major city "is now producing almost nobody . . . (because of) the very restricted repertory."

Noting that Dallas, Los Angeles and other cities have no full-time conductors now, Leinsdorf said, "it is only to be hoped these places will find somebody who is not too old and tired to stay and grow."

One would assume that in the 49-year-old Leinsdorf, Boston at least has found the man to fill the bill.

NTUCKY • KENTUCKY STRAIGHT BOURBON WHISKEY 86 PROOF

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON FEB 5 1962

Boston Bets on Leinsdorf

Boston may not be the hub of the world of music, but certainly she deserves high marks for a sustained effort toward that goal.

The Boston Symphony, finishing its final season under Charles Munch, has been a durable symbol of the city's cultural status. Major Henry Lee Higginson launched the orchestra on its climb to fame in 1881, and for nearly half a century paid its bills from his own resources. It was propelled toward brilliance by conductors of renown—Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck, the ageless Pierre Monteux—and reached a peak of harmonious glory under the incomparable Serge Koussevitzky.

Boston's claim to "the greatest orchestra in the world," while always debatable, has been more than gusts of patriotic wind. The Koussevitzky orchestra (1924-'49) held valid credentials. If some feel that the Munch decade has been less exciting than its immediate predecessors, let them reflect that there was, after all, only one Koussevitzky, a man of lengthening shadows. At any rate, Boston has a right to be proud of an orchestra that has produced great music for nearly forty years under only two conductors.

Tonight, the distinguished director and music consultant of the New York Metropolitan Opera, Erich Leinsdorf, makes his last appearance on 39th St. In the fall he will ascend the podium of the Boston Symphony fully aware of its challenging traditions, and equally full of confidence that more days of great music lie ahead.

May tonight's dying notes of "Le Nozze di Figaro" be as a prelude to a long and happy marriage between New England music lovers and their new maestro.

SHOW BUSINESS ILLUSTRATED
CHICAGO, ILL.
E O. WEEK 350,000
JAN 2 1962

'61

It was a year filled with works and daze: U.S. citizen Igor Stravinsky, 79, received and entertained favorably an invitation from the Soviet Union to return to his native land for a visit (his music long had been on the Kremlin's "out" list). Vienna heard the world premiere of Arnold Schönberg's posthumously published oratorio, Jacob's Ladder. Leopold Stokowski, who late last year was hospitalized after breaking a hip while romping with his children, recovered in time to conduct the Met's revival of Turandot in February, one of the triumphs of Rudolf Bing's managerial regency. And when doctors advised Fritz Reiner for the second year in a row to postpone his return to the Chicago Symphony's podium, Stokowski, who professes to be 79, stepped in to open the Chicago season in place of his 72-year-old colleague.

With the old elite corps of conductors dwindling each season, orchestras compete for the handful remaining. Pierre Monteux, at 86 the patriarch of the podium, was offered a new career as permanent director of the London Symphony. Charles Munch, whose 70 years make him a mere tad, announced he would retire from the Boston Symphony leadership next August, to be replaced by Erich Leinsdorf. The Los Angeles Philharmonic hired a handsome 24-year-old Bombay lad, Zubin Mehta, to share Georg Solti's podium, whereupon Solti quit and consoled himself by taking over the Dallas conductorship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,072

Boston Symphony

This season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the last in which Charles Munch will be the permanent conductor. In the fall his place will be taken by Erich Leinsdorf who is very well known to American music lovers. He will assume one of the two or three most important musical posts in this country, and one of the most important in the world.

The Boston Symphony under Dr. Munch has been less exciting than it was during the period when Serge Koussevitsky was its conductor. It remains, nevertheless, one of the greatest symphonic aggregations of modern times, and Dr. Munch has maintained the exceptionally high standards established by his predecessor. The appointment of Leinsdorf ensures the Boston Symphony of the services of a noted conductor who is equally experienced in terms of symphonic and operatic scores.

New Englanders have every reason to be proud of the Boston Symphony. It is one of the great cultural assets this region possesses. The appointment of Dr. Munch's successor is therefore of general interest. The announcement that Erich Leinsdorf will be the new conductor of the symphony is especially welcome to the many, many New Englanders who have heard him conduct often in the past.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 868,956 S. 1,186,625
OCT 19 1961

On the Aisle

Bergonzi Joins Sutherland, Zanasi in Lyric's Last 'Lucia'

BY CLAUDIA CASSIDY

NOTHING MUCH HAD changed at the Lyric's third and last "Lucia" in the Civic Opera house Wednesday night, except that Richard Tucker had gone east to help oper the Metropolitan, and Joan Sutherland and Mario Zanasi were joined by Carlo Bergonzi, a dependable young Italian tenor who has kept going in the right direction since his 1955 Lyric debut in "Il Tabarro." He is not tall, but he stands well, withou being anything so incendiary as a great tenor, he is a good one who gets better. Out of these negatives he is polishing a career to be respected.

The production was better lighted this time, and Antonino Votto got a firmer grip on the Sextette, while Mario Zanasi seemed uncommonly fresh for a baritone just out of rehearsals for a pinch-hitting "Andrea Chenier." Miss Sutherland was Miss Sutherland. No actress, no singer to grip the imagination, fire the heart, or excite the ultimate tribute. But again after a sluggish first act a mad scene with some good singing, including that liquid trill.

Franco Zeffirelli

Meanwhile, there is a little perplexity about the Dallas "Lucia" in which Miss Sutherland will sing. Franco Zeffirelli, who designed and staged the production used by the Lyric, has returned to Europe, and apparently will not return soon. This "Lucia" goes back at once to Palermo. Probably our next Zeffirelli venture will be the Old Vic's "Romeo and Juliet," due in 1962.

Diplomacy with a Glint

Erich Leinsdorf, this week's Chicago Symphony Orchestra guest conductor, who takes charge of the Boston orchestra next season, caused some amused perplexity to his son, Gregor, who is a student at the University of Chicago. Some of his friends have been asking him pointedly which is the greatest American orchestra, and he asked Seymour Raven, manager of the Chicago Symphony, for a suitable reply. "Tell them," said Mr. Raven, "that the Boston orchestra is not the greatest orchestra in America, but that it will be."

The Unwatched Pot

Having hovered anxiously over the Philadelphia orchestra's union-management deadlock which postponed the season's opening, Eugene Ormandy was told last week-end that he might as well drive up to his place in Massachusetts and watch the leaves turn. So Friday morning he and Mrs. Ormandy went. Saturday afternoon he got a hurry call that the season was on again. The Ormandys jumped in their car, drove 250 miles in a heavy rainstorm in four hours and a half. He reached the podium at 6:35 p. m., rehearsed until 7, and played the first concert of the regular season at 8:30. How did it go? He says, "They played as well as I ever heard them play before."

Notes

Rosa Raisa-Rimini is in town for some Lyric performances . . . Alexander Ince turns out to be the producer of "The Egg," coming to the Civic next month with Dick Shawn. . . . The New York Philharmonic will play four May concerts in Carnegie hall to replace subscription performances canceled by the strike. . . . I was smiling at Dick Watts' column saying he wrote "ominous" in a review and it came out "omnibus," when I opened the mail and found a clipping of my own about "Toys in the Arctic," with an amused note, "Cool, isn't it?"

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 450,340 S. 571,997
APR 6 1962

CHICAGO SYMPHONY FIRSTS

2 Tailored Works, but Still Rewarding

BY DAN TUCKER

CONDUCTOR ERICH LEINSDORF and the Chicago Symphony orchestra last night presented their Orchestra hall audience with two long and on the whole rewarding firsts—a suite from Beethoven's only ballet, "The Creatures of Prometheus," and Dmitri Shostakovich's Symphony No. 10 in E minor, Op. 93. Only the "Prometheus" overture had been heard here before.

Unlikely as it seems, the two works have something in common. Neither is out of the composer's top drawer, but neither could have been written by anyone else—certainly not by a second rate musical intellect. Moreover, they are both illustrations of what happens when a composer has to tailor his work to silly external requirements.

In Beethoven's case, the requirement was an idiotic libretto, a prime sample of the pseudo classical faddishness of his day; something about two statues being brought to life and taken to Parnassus, where Apollo and a gaggle of muses teach them all about Art.

Shostakovich's handicap was a great deal more serious — an ignorant and all-powerful soviet burocracy which considers itself able to tell composers just what they must write and why. The results are saddening.

BEETHOVEN solved his problem by ignoring the whole silly libretto and the requirements of ballet staging, and simply writing a set of 18 short symphonic numbers, each of which stands quite sturdily on its own feet. The sections all made excellent sense musically, and were pleasant to hear — particularly, as always, when they gave the orchestra's first desk men a chance to show off their superb abilities in solo work.

Mr. Leinsdorf, a superb conductor, produced the organlike unity of sound that results from everyone's having the same ideas about expression and phrasing marks. The music is fairly bland stuff for Beethoven, but is still unmistakably his, and worth hearing.

SHOSTAKOVICH has evidently given up the fight against an official boobocracy which, in its mania for censoring everything, can evidently detect Stalinist chords and Trotskyite cadences. Apart from some brief, splendid flashes, his symphony sounds as tho it were written to please critics, not to express anything.

It suffers from the same faults as contemporary Russian art in all its forms — giantism, repetition, and plain corniness. Much of it is formula writing; how many times have we heard that lonely, skipping fiddle over gloomy bass chords, that trampling snare drum, that blatting solo trumpet! Still, every so often he produces an effective surprise, like concluding that practically endless first movement with a solo piccolo.

The second movement is overpowering, a churning, uproarious piece that doesn't give you time to wonder what's going on.

THE THIRD brought us right back to the Russian steppes, which are overproductive of corn. More solemn, bare, foreboding sounds, and even some mysterious - east stuff with a gong, which I thought had gone out with Ketelbey. The windup was healthy and bumptious, practically yelping with energy; but here, too, there were long stretches of wasteland in which Shostakovich fiddles around combining thematic elements that just don't combine very well.

For all this, the symphony never quite sounds aimless. Which indicates that Shostakovich would be quite a composer if he didn't have to worry about sounding bourgeois.

20L

EDITORIAL PAGE

Journal-American

[illegible]DAY, JANUARY 17, 1962 ★★★

Things Do Happen —Even at the Opera

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

THE OTHER night, I went to the Metropolitan Opera House to hear the Walkuere, which, if you do not know, Richard Wagner took out of the Volsungs and Niblungs and wrote a series of opera about. It takes enormous energy to sing any of the music in the Ring, first because Wagner had no mercy for singers, expecting them to blow themselves to bits and secondly because it is undoubtedly the most glorious music ever written if you can understand what it is all about.

SOKOLSKY

Richard Wagner's concept of the opera was that it united all the arts into a single idea. However, the night I went, the star lost her voice and they substituted another, poor dear, who had not enough wind to carry Wagner across the mountain which he expects a soprano to do. Of course, Flagstad had no problems because nature built her that way and all went well until Walter Winchell called Flagstad a Nazi.

So the night I went to hear the Walkuere, they had a real German Wotan, with all the muscles and stomach that is required for such a character but a bug got him and his voice was not what it should have been—an accident that shows what can happen to an actor who plays a god. So they got another Wotan, gods being available in these days as in those and the curtain went up and everyone was happy.

Wotan was doing pretty well until he—the second one—lost his voice or forgot his part; I do not know what happened for I, not being a master of these things, listen only to the orchestra that carries into dreams.

When Wotan sang, in German, of course:

"Thy bed shall be lit by torches more brilliant
Than ever for bridal have burned!
Fiery gleams shall girdle the fell,
With terrible scorchings scaring the timid,
Who, cowed, may cross not Brunnhilda's couch
For one alone freeth the bride;
One freer than I, the god!"

Down came the curtain. The god had lost his way. Nobody knew whether he was to get his money back or what, but on the whole it was a decent audience that took what came good-naturedly, figuring that these German gods were playful folk who got all mixed up with maids and beer and sometimes even with such a one as Hitler.

* * *

My eyes were cast on a bass fiddle player, a girl, who I was told was part of the augmented orchestra. I recalled what Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said to Justice Brandeis when both were aged and walking to the Supreme Court to prove their eternal youth, "Oh! Would that I were 80 again."

The curtain rose again and the first Wotan courageously finished the show, for come what may, the show must go on and Wagner was justified when the original Wotan sang:

"He who my spear in spirit feareth,
Ne'er springs through their fiery bar!"

Brunnhilda lies as though dead and Wotan disappears through the fire.

Slow curtain.

All the time I wondered when the big chandelier would fall from the ceiling and put an end to the whole business. Next time I shall take Bob Considine and Toots Shor or some other pundit to listen to Wagner's leitmotif. For them only the first row would do.

But this must be said: Erich Leinsdorf, the maestro who ran the whole show, leading the orchestra, bringing in the singers, directing what the stage hands should do about the curtain, was as cool as a captain on a sinking ship.

This Leinsdorf, at 25 or some such age, was Toscanini's assistant conductor which means that he was apprentice to the greatest baton that ever was whirled. I shall, God willing, be watching for him for years to come at Tanglewood where he is to succeed the lovable Munch and the dramatic Koussevitzky.

Tanglewood, up in the Berkshires, is where music can be done at its best. There Munch introduced Berlioz to me in a richness I had never expected to experience and Leinsdorf will do something like that. For a man who could go through such a Wednesday at the Metropolitan can do anything. And these days at the Met it is standing room only.

Copyright, 1962, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New York Journal-American
Monday, December 18, 1961

AT THE MET

5-Yr. Absence Ends for 'Ring' With Acclaim

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ONCE AGAIN THE MAGIC WAGNER'S "RING" has begun to cast its spell. The first performance of "Das Rheingold" in five years took hold of the Saturday matinee audience at the Metrpolitan and renewed its faith in Wagner's music. Since this opera is only the prelude there will be much rejoicing as the other works unfold.

Whatever the arguments about the story, the composer, or the operas themselves, the music levels them all as Wagner builds his unique panorama of sound.

"Rheingold" is something special in itself as a music drama, for its two-and-a-quarter hours of continuous playing is unprecedented. In it Wagner pushed his new ideas to the limit.

As the performance progressed, it was the power of music that surged over the tale of deceit and emptiness somewhat blandly exposed. That the gods had their shortcomings, Wotan's actions all too readily verify. That all this inspired Wagner, however, is what counts. An appreciative audience luxuriated in what it heard.

In Full Command

Somewhat deliberately but most assuredly, Erich Leinsdorf gave the opera its musical profile. His command of the score and his meticulous way with an orchestra made listening a pleasure. He does not reveal a dramatic sense that would bring full utterance to Alberich's curse, for instance, but his overall molding of a performance proves satisfying.

An able cast worked together admirably if not yet quite homogeneously. Karl Leibl gave an excellent account of Loge, whose machinations motivate the plot. George London had the bearing and style befitting Wotan, if not the full vocal weight. Ralph Herbert portrayed Alberich with distinction though his upper voice has lost forceful clarity.

Making a most promising debut as Mime, Paul Kuen proved himself both a good actor and a singer with a big voice. Jerome Hines distinguished himself as the Giant Fasolt, while the other men supported these well.

Strong Contenders

Irene Dalis as Fricka, Jean Madeira as Erda, and Heidi Krall as Freia made the distaff side a strong contender for first honors. Miss Krall fulfilled her assignment pictorially as few have done. The Rhine Maidens — Martina Arroyo, Rosalind Elias, and Mignon Dunn — acquitted themselves handsomely.

The hocus-pocus element of the production faltered here and there, but in general the performance moved smoothly. Nathaniel Merrill handled the Niebelungs unusually well. (Perhaps I observed their actions more closely since my daughter was among them. The ballet girls' swimming was exemplary. Piling up the gold behind Freia, however, spoiled both illusion and sense, making this part of the drama tame Undoubtedly the next performance will jell.)

NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM AND SUN, MONDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1961

Music

'Rheingold' Is Sung At the Metropolitan

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Credit the Metropolitan with a minor miracle Saturday afternoon. In these restless and fretful days it kept a capacity crowd quiet and motionless for 2½ hours. No intermission, no coffee-breaks, no booster shots. Nothing but Wagner!

And it was really the only way to do it, not so much because Wagner wanted and wrote it that way, but because "Das Rheingold" is that kind of opera. Interject applause and pauses, and the whole mood of fabled wonder is shattered.

Those who have never sat or stood through a performance of this awesome prelude to the "Ring" still have a unique treat in store for them. This is story-book fantasy of consummate force—and the music is a powerhouse.

Nothing but Praise.

I have nothing but praise, and very high praise at that, for the Met's production. In such a gigantic project, it would be easy to pick flaws in the singing and acting. Those may safely be ignored in the over-all splendor and distinction.

First, the management is to be congratulated again on a bold enterprise. Saturday's performance opened the broadcast matinee "Ring" cycle. That will be paralleled by an evening cycle. What it amounts to, in terms of great music, is a colossal four-week bi-cycle race!

Again Erich Leinsdorf impressed one as the right conductor for the grueling assignment. From first note to last, his iron control never faltered. Continuity was maintained at a steady pitch, and the music swirled like a force of nature.

Two and a half hours of uninterrupted music by the great firebrand of German opera is no cinch for conductor or orchestra. Both seemed fully primed for the marathon on Saturday, one that paid off in extra dividends of public acclaim at the end.

Staging Is Vivid.

The staging by Nathaniel Merrill was quite vivid and imaginative. The dangling Rhine Maidens swam through the air with the greatest of ease. Disappearing acts were marvels of illusion, and the rainbow arch to far-off Valhalla was alone worth the waiting.

Of the cast, George London was a figure of subdued majesty as Wotan. Donner was sonorously sung by Norman Mittelman. The Alberich of Ralph Herbert and the Mime of Paul Kuen (debut) were plausible creatures of fantasy, and so was the grave Erda of Jean Madeira.

Karl Liebl was astonishingly good, of speech, voice and gesture, as Loge, the wily fire god. Irene Dalis was a forthright Fricka, and Jerome Hines and Ernst Wiemann were formidable to eye and ear as the giants Fasolt and Fafner.

Just a few moments' view of Heidi Krall as the goddess Freia sufficed to win my vote for the Miss Rheingold title. Here indeed were a ravishing figure and face—and voice to match—for gods and giants to battle over.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
1962

LEAVING THE 'MET'

Leinsdorf Speaks of Going to Boston

By RAYMOND ERICSON

ERICH LEINSDORF is 50 years old today. That convenient, round, half-century figure finds him at a turning point in his career. He is completing four seasons as musical consultant and conductor for the Metropolitan Opera and is preparing to become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall.

Having finished his last full rehearsals for the Metropolitan, Mr. Leinsdorf noted with relief the other day that he could finally turn his whole attention to plans for the Boston season.

"Of course I can't go into detail about them yet," he said in his quick, efficient yet friendly way. "But I have some basic ideas about programs. A major orchestra should perform only masterpieces and contemporary works. It should not spend time on second-rate music.

"You have to do the masterpieces, no matter how familiar they are," he continued, "because there are always new generations of listeners coming along who haven't heard them. I do not say that you have to play all four Brahms symphonies every season. In fact, it is better all around if they are given a rest from time to time—for the conductor and orchestra as well as the audiences. I had not conducted the 'Ring' for several years until I did it at the Met this season, and what a revelation it was to restudy it."

Weeding Needed

Mr. Leinsdorf was asked to name some specific "second-rate" pieces that he would like to omit from his programs. He smiled, thought briefly and answered hesitantly, as if unwilling to be pinned down.

"Well," he finally said, "I think you could do without the lesser works of Saint-Saëns—the piano concertos, for instance—or the works of Glazunoff. These can be left to the community orchestras. I would much rather hear them grapple with a Glazunoff score than with a Beethoven symphony."

Born and educated in Vienna, Mr. Leinsdorf became an assistant to Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival when he was only 22 years old. Three years later he was brought over by the Metropolitan to help Artur Bodanzky conduct the Wagner repertory.

"One thing I wouldn't agree to do," Mr. Leinsdorf said in recalling his first years at the Metropolitan, "was conduct parts of operas. Bodanzky was notorious for leading the first two acts of a performance and then, if he was tired, turning over the rest of the opera to someone else."

Moving Around

In 1943, Mr. Leinsdorf left the Metropolitan to become conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, but almost immediately he was called to serve in the United States Army. For nine years, beginning in 1947, he led the Rochester (N. Y.) Philharmonic. In 1956, he became director of the New York City Opera, moving downtown to the Metropolitan as a guest conductor early in January, 1957.

The aplomb with which Mr. Leinsdorf survived a recent performance of "Die Walkuere" at the Metropolitan was the envy of his colleagues. The conductor had to order the curtain brought down in the middle of an act because a singer was unable to carry on.

"There seemed to be nothing else to do at the time," he remarked. "I was interested in giving a performance and the only way to do that was to stop and start again. After it was all over, however, I admit that a reaction set in. After all, I can never recall this happening before except when someone died onstage.

"Singers don't seem to have the stamina they used to," he continued. "They look powerful enough, but they don't last through performances. I think they overestimate their strength. Airplanes make it possible to accept a lot of engagements, and they fly into a city one day and begin rehearsals the next. Their systems can't take it.

Pampered Themselves

"In the old days, singers babied themselves," he said. "I remember Leo Slezak, the tenor, bundling himself up and going out to get a bit of fresh air and sunshine as if his life depended on it. He was able to sing big roles when he was well along in years."

Mr. Leinsdorf conducted recordings of "La Bohème" and "Die Walkuere" last summer. ("Not a German in the 'Walkuere' cast, and the orchestra's concertmaster is Irish," the conductor noted with amusement.) These will be released early next fall, according to present plans.

For five years he will have no time. With the Boston Symphony he will conduct twenty-five of the thirty-two weeks of performances, and in the summer of 1963 he begins his related duties as director of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. A heavy schedule, maybe, but one that Mr. Leinsdorf looks ready and eager to tackle. After all, 50 is young as conductors go.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
JUL 23 1961

Dell enters final week

Leinsdorf returns For last concert

By SAMUEL L. SINGER

How does it feel to be the conductor - designate of one of the world's top orchestras, and with the longest season of any American symphony? Erich Leinsdorf can tell you.

Leinsdorf, who conducted three concerts at Robin Hood Dell last week and will close the season here on Thursday, will take over musical direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning in September, 1962. The Boston Symphony has a year-round schedule, including spring pops concerts, the Berkshire Festival and paid vacations for the musicians. Charles Munch is retiring after 10 years as conductor.

NOT UNEXPECTED

"Naturally I was enormously pleased," the personable 49-year-old conductor said in his Warwick suite the other day. "But it was not entirely surprising to me. However, I did not think it would come this year; I thought it would come later.

"During my guest conducting in Boston, the orchestra and I established a good working relationship, and with management, too.

"This appointment makes me very happy, and I am also aware of the great challenge. The Boston Symphony is one of the great musical organizations. It is something to carry on in such a great organization, for it is not only a community orchestra but part of the musical map of the world."

CONTRACT SETTLED

Illustrating the "civilized relationship between the Boston players and management," Leinsdorf said that the contract for this past season had been concluded during his guest conductorship. "The musicians had played for half the season without a contract, and when it was settled I never heard a word about it."

The conductor observed that in Boston — as in Philadelphia —he had never been asked to "make any compromise with musical standards."

"In some cities they never give the musical director quite enough freedom," Leinsdorf said. "I have the feeling that Boston is one of the classical musical structures, where they engage a man of experience and give him freedom to run it artistically. Wherever things aren't quite right, you can look for unqualified people interfering."

SEEKS NEW TALENT

As to his plans for 1962-63, "I'm of course working a good deal in my mind about it, but cannot make any statement until next April. I am looking for contemporary works by composers whose other works I have admired, also for new artists. I may discover some promising new talent while I am at Tanglewood the first half of August."

Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony season after next, in its annual Philadelphia Forum concert at the Academy of Music. Meanwhile, he will not be exactly idle. He will be conducting orchestras in London again in February and March, and Chicago in April. He'll be at the Metropolitan Opera in November, December and January.

The conductor now lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children, who range in age from 19 to 9. Sometimes his wife accompanies him to other cities. But he doesn't mind traveling.

"I'm a restless soul," he smiled.

SEPTEMBER, 1961

REPORTS ON FCC 5
A. F. OF M. CONGRESS OF STRINGS 6
THE JUKEBOX—BILLION DOLLAR THREAT 14
SHELLY MANNE 20
BY LEONARD FEATHER
ERICH LEINSDORF
PAGE 18

international MUSICIAN

OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF MUSICIANS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271
SEP 1961

Erich Leinsdorf, who is to become Music Director of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Musical Festival, starting with the 1962-63 season, is already famous for his conductorship of the Cleveland Orchestra and of the Rochester Philharmonic, as well as for his guest conductorship of major orchestras throughout this country and in Europe. His premieres have made the headlines again and again. At the San Francisco Opera he conducted the American premieres of Sir William Walton's "Troilus and Cressida" and Francis Poulenc's "Dialogues of the Carmelites," and he was responsible for and conducted the American premieres of Frank Martin's "The Tempest," Carlisle Floyd's "Susannah" and Carl Orff's "The Moon."

Born in Vienna in 1912, he became Bruno Walter's assistant at the Salzburg Festival at twenty-two. At twenty-five, he was engaged as Assistant Conductor by the Metropolitan Opera, and, during 1939-40, he took full conductorial duties of the German wing.

His tenure as Conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra was cut short by his being called to serve in the United States Army. On his discharge, he was appointed Conductor and Music Director of the Rochester Philharmonic, a post he occupied for nine years. In 1957 he was appointed Director of the New York City Opera. Early in 1957, he again became Conductor at the Metropolitan and six months later Music Consultant of the Opera, a post created particularly for him and one he will occupy until the Fall of 1962 when he assumes his permanent duties with the Boston Symphony.

● The impact of Erich Leinsdorf's personality is felt whether one listens to his musical interpretations or sits in on his conversational bouts. Being present at these latter is like standing catcher to an expert ball pitcher: one must intercept ideas on the fly, and be ready besides to cover the whole field of philosophy as well as of music.

Here are a few subjects he covered in a recent brief interview:

Regarding integrity:

Survival is one question; but another, just as important, is the state in which one manages to survive. If you are not true to yourself, nothing gained is worth it.

The public's attitude:

No one in public life can escape unpleasantness. It's as much a part of the profession as a full-dress suit.

Interpretation:

In one's interpretation, one should never, knowingly, willingly, make compromises. I did Bruckner's Eighth at the Royal Festival in London last March 8. It is very long and there has been much criticism of its length. Should one make omissions or not? I felt I would not be justified in bowing to criticism of the length of the work. It is a unified composition and every one of its parts is necessary to the whole effect. This uncompromising attitude of mine, far from making difficulties, led to a great success. If you adhere to your principles, the public will finally come around.

Rehearsal procedure:

I have come to the conclusion it is advisable to speak not alone in technical terms but also in terms of association of ideas. If my own feeling about a certain passage is worded well, it will strike a sympathetic chord in the men. For instance, recently when I rehearsed the Philadelphia Orchestra, I called all the woodwinds together beforehand and spoke about one particular phrase. The last note should be played as if one were imploring, I told them. It seemed to me this would give this passage a sympathetic quality. The men understood perfectly. As a result of this little talk I had special success with this passage.

The successful orchestra:

Three things are necessary for the successful orchestra: touring, broadcasting, recording. If the orchestra is to be in a healthy condition, there must be at least two of these outlets. Touring is not money-making, but it spreads the news. Every good orchestra must have recordings, but, in making records, we must not price ourselves out of competition. The records should be within purchase price all over the world. Broadcasting is another medium that makes an orchestra known. But broadcasting is more a local affair. Every orchestra should be given some time on its local station.

These three outlets interact on and supplement each other. When an orchestra tours, the demand for records is increased. Like snapshots and postal cards, recordings allow the audience members to retain a permanent memento of the performance, something they can keep as a reminder. Local broadcasting makes people curious to hear the orchestra in the concert hall, and both broadcasting and records tend to increase the number of touring dates.

Community growth:

It is not alone the orchestra which must grow. The community must grow with it. It must increasingly realize the importance of the orchestra and be increasingly ready to contribute to it. I remember one orchestra I conducted. I felt the community was not rising to its opportunities. The orchestra as a result could not develop. I felt the strictures. Things pushed in on me. I got up in the morning and the ceiling pressed down on me. I couldn't expand. I had to get out.

As Mr. Leinsdorf says this he stands up and thrashes his hands over his head. The ceiling doesn't actually rise, but one gets the idea he has somehow or other achieved more space to expand in. And one gets the additional idea that he will always expand in every situation in which he finds himself.

210

ROCHESTER DEMOCRAT CHRONICLE
Sunday, August 20, 1961

Leinsdorf Hopes For Date Here

2 Local Musicians Applauded By Noted Concertmaster

By STEPHEN HAMMER

AN OLD FRIEND of musical Rochester, encountered more or less by chance in Philadelphia last month, sends fond regards to any and all who remember him here, whence he went to great and growing fame and fortune.

"I'll be back in Rochester," promised Erich Leinsdorf. "The Civic Music Association is interested in getting the Boston Symphony for a concert during the first tour after I become its conductor, and I hope it can work out."

ERICH LEINSDORF
'. . . Hello!'

This would bring Leinsdorf back to the Eastman Theater podium in fall, 1962, for the first time since he last led the Rochester Philharmonic in 1959. The original announcement of his appointment in Boston last April implied that the change was effective this fall, giving rise to the hope that Leinsdorf would conduct when the orchestra comes here Oct. 16. But that impression was erroneous.

I called Leinsdorf, just to say hello, when he turned out to be in Philadelphia at the same time as I, to conduct the closing concert of the Robin Hood Dell series. The upshot was a date for lunch, to which he brought Jacob Krachmalnick, self-styled "only established permanent floating concertmaster in the world." Major orchestras in need of a temporary replacement for their concertmasters, it seems, generally call on Krachmalnick to fill the spot; in the last year he has been in demand by the Cleveland, Concertgebouw (Amsterdam), New York and Philadelphia orchestras—no mean testimonial to the abilities of this violinist.

* * *

ALTHOUGH Krachmalnick has never played in Rochester, he was vitally interested in getting the latest musical news from here because he is a long-time friend and admirer of both Theodore Bloomfield, the Philharmonic conductor, and Millard Taylor, the concertmaster.

"I knew Teddy when I was playing in Chautauqua many years ago and he was playing the horn in the same orchestra," he recalled. Later he had occasion to observe Bloomfield as a budding conductor working under George Szell in Cleveland.

"He's probably one of the greatest talents among young conductors in this country today," he declared. "Even when he was just starting to conduct, I thought he was tremendously gifted."

Krachmalnick's acquaintance with Taylor goes back even further.

"When I was just a student," he recalled, "I heard Taylor do a broadcast of the Martinu fiddle concerto; I think it was the first American performance, with the National Symphony. I was so taken by the performance that I wrote Taylor a fan letter.

"A few weeks later there was a knock at the door of our apartment, and this fellow walked in and said, 'I'm Millard Taylor, and since I happened to be around here I wanted to stop in and thank you for your letter.' You can see how I came to admire him as a man as well as an artist."

* * *

LEINSDORF'S appearance has not changed at all since he left here—breezy, self-assured, articulate and in need of a haircut. One of his observations about Rochester had to do with the recent demise of Everest Records, whose disappearance leaves the Rochester orchestra without a recording company.

"This is too bad," Leinsdorf said. "Every major orchestra, ideally, should have three things in addition to its regular season: radio or television broadcasts, records and out-of-town tours, to get itself heard by more than the few thousand of its regular audience. To have all of these, in most cases, is impossible, mainly because of the tremendous expense of broadcasting.

"It is unfortunate that the Rochester Philharmonic at the moment does not have even one of these opportunities. In my day at least we had an annual tour, and we made quite a number of records.

"The Everest contract was a good thing to have for the Rochester orchestra; Everest turned out some exceptionally fine records, and it's a shame that they couldn't last."

* * *

Symphony to Feature Moderns

Boston—(UPI) — The new musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said yesterday he would continue the traditional while featuring contemporary works on concert programs.

Erich Leinsdorf outlined plans for the forthcoming season in his first news conference since he was named a year ago as successor to retiring Charles Munch.

The 50-year-old Vienna-born conductor said he would lead the Boston Symphony at home and on tour next season except for seven weeks to be split between Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin.

Mr. Leinsdorf said he, his wife and five children would live in suburban Brookline, a 10-minute ride from Symphony Hall. The Leinsdorfs will be neighbors to Arthur Feidler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops concerts.

Mr. Leinsdorf announced the Boston Symphony would make a two-week post-season transcontinental flying tour next May, including stops on the West Coast and in Canada. One week of this tour, he said, would replace the former mid-season week's tour of midwest cities.

Mr. Leinsdorf said he would not program cycles of music devoted to one composer or school of music and that his first season would include nine contemporary concertos.

He said Boston would be the site of the world premiere of a violin concerto by Benjamin Lees of the Smith College faculty and an as yet unfinished piano concerto by Samuel Barber.

Mr. Leinsdorf said no major personnel changes or seating arrangements of the orchestra were contemplated. In answer to a question as to whether he planned to return to opera conducting after a short time in Boston, he said he wanted "nothing more than to conduct symphony," adding that his nostalgia for opera was "well controlled."

Mr. Leinsdorf formerly was permanent conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic. He has appeared as guest director of several famed European orchestras and formerly was principal German conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

He announced that he will move into his Brookline home about Sept. 1 after fulfilling conducting assignments in Philadelphia and Rome and a visit to the American Federation of Musicians' String Congress at Lansing, Mich.

Mr. Leinsdorf will make his public debut as musical director here Sept. 21.

Mr. Munch will formally retire at the close of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival in August. He concluded his regular season last Saturday night.

REPORTER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
E.O.WEEK 142,583

MAR 1 1962

STRINGS, HORNS, AND DRUMS

To the Editor: It seems to be fashionable to look down one's nose at opera-house orchestras, as Roland Gelatt does in his article "Brünnhilde Rides Again" (The Reporter, February 1). Why not expect an organization of the caliber of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra to sound like the Boston Symphony? They are as carefully chosen and play equally great music. The same technical and musical demands are made but the physical demands are much greater for the opera orchestras.

If the strings sounded anemic in the Wagner operas there might be several reasons. Wagner wrote the Ring for a third more strings than the Met possesses, which would affect both the quality and quantity of sound. Then there is the rather full schedule the musicians are asked to perform. A comparison with Mr. Gelatt's favorite opera orchestra, the Vienna group, finds them ahead on the number of strings and far behind on the amount of work.

I believe the Met Orchestra should be complimented for its consistently high level of performance under strenuous conditions rather than castigated for some that are not as high. Even the Boston Symphony and Vienna Opera Orchestra can turn in less than perfect performances without falling on evil days. There are members in the Met Orchestra from both these groups who do not feel they have sunk as low as Mr. Gelatt thinks, nor are they ashamed to appear with such an "inadequate" orchestra. Even if the musicians' morale is not as high as it could be, the orchestra is too jealous of its reputation and professional standing to give any but the best it is capable of.

DAVID D. GREER
New York City

THAT EVENING Leinsdorf displayed in full measure the talent that has landed him the Boston appointment, about the greatest achievement a conductor can attain in America. In the Dell concert, with the bulk of the Philadelphia Orchestra personnel, he made the Unfinished Symphony of Schubert sound like a musical revelation even to ears grown tired of the piece from over-exposure. He brought to the performance of that weary old warhorse a touch of genius that even inveterate concert goers are lucky to hear once in a year.

Earlier that week, I had a preview of one of the soloists in the coming Philharmonic series—Henryk Szeryng, the fabulous Polish violinist. In his Philadelphia appearance he played the Tschaikowsky concerto. The first movement was a thing of rare beauty—technical brilliance, depth, fire and virtually total accuracy. If the other movements left room for argument on matters of interpretation, their performance still would have been a credit to any violin virtuoso. That concert, incidentally, was admirably conducted by William Steinberg, who led the Buffalo Philharmonic before moving up to Pittsburgh.

In his appearance here Feb. 1, Szeryng is scheduled to play both violin concerti of Prokofiev.

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 644,175

MAY 2 1962

LEINSDORF LAUDS BOSTON SYMPHONY

New Musical Director Plans to Carry on Its Traditions

By JOHN H. FENTON
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 1 — Erich Leinsdorf plans to carry on the traditions of the Boston Symphony Orchestra "in the continuity of the United States Senate."

In his first formal press conference today Mr.Leinsdorf said that the continuity would be expressed in one instance next season through seven weeks of concerts under the direction of two retiring musical officials of the organization.

Charles Munch, music director for thirteen years and Richard Burgin, concert master for forty-two years, made their farewell Boston appearances last week-end. Mr. Munch will return for four weeks next season and Mr. Burgin for three.

Mr.Leinsdorf, who is 50 years old, assumes the duties of music director in September. He came to the Boston orchestra after three seasons as musical consultant to the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York.

In a typical flash of good humor Mr. Leinsdorf said in answer to a question about his long-range plans that "at this time my nostalgia for opera is well controlled." He said that in the foreseeable future his concern would be with symphonies.

Plans No Major Changes

Of his new assignment Mr. Leinsdorf said:

"I am particularly happy that I do not have to come here as a bricklayer.I don't have to build. I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization. I don't have to collect bricks, cement and composition shingles."

The new music director plans only minor changes in the seating of the orchestra. He will use risers or steps to bring some of the woodwind instruments closer together. There are to be no personal changes except those dictated by retirements.

The Vienna-born musician said that he had been given clear understanding that music would continue to have "the upper hand" in decisions involving the Boston Symphony. That situation was rare in symphony orchestras, said Mr. Leinsdorf and he added that he even had "a suspicion that it is unique."

As an example, he said, when the question of seating latecomers "after the first movement of the little Mozart number 29" came up for discussion he ruled against it on the ground that the work was short and that an interruption would be distracting.

That ended the matter and "the musical vecessity had its way," he said.

Selects First Program

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra personally through seventeen weeks in Boston and on six tours. He already has selected Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and Walter Piston's Seventh for the opening concert here. A third work will be selected later.

It will be Mr. Leinsdorf's policy to schedule "eight or nine" contemporary concertos, although not with any idea of creating a cycle of them. There will be no hard and fast rules, he said.

As for soloists, said Mr. Leinsdorf, "we will find works first and then engage soloists to perform them rather than engage artosts and then pick work for them to do."

Mr. Leinsdorf paid tribute to Arthur Fiedler who was to open his thirty-third season as conductor of the Boston Pops concerts tonight. The Boston Pops had often been imitated "but never successfully," said Mr. Leinsdorf. He expressed hope that Mr. Fiedler would "be with us for many years to come."

Mr. Leinsdorf disclosed that Mr. Fiedler, who attended the press conference, had found him a home in suburban Brookline, "not more than ten minutes' drive from Symphony Hall."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
1962

NO RADICAL CHANGES NEEDED, LEINSDORF SAYS

New Conductor Lauds Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf, the next conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday disclosed plans for the new era that begins when he assumes leadership of the world-famous ensemble next fall.

Among the innovations planned by Mr. Leinsdorf are putting the orchestra on stage risers and shifting the wind instruments for the sake of balance. And next season Dr. Munch, the retiring maestro, and Richard Burgin, still the BSO's Associate Conductor, will share seven weeks of guest appearances.

No Compromise

Otherwise Mr. Leinsdorf, who is just 50 this year, contemplates no radical alterations at the moment. He paid high praise to the musical policies of the Boston Symphony, in which "musical necessity" comes first.

It is one of the few organizations, perhaps the only one, he said, in which "there is no compromising one's musical beliefs" and he plans to sustain that tradition.

Although he is against the word "cycle," with its overtones of a thematic purpose, Mr. Leinsdorf has virtually scheduled a cycle of contemporary concerto next season. These include a Violin Concerto by Benjamin Lees, the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Milhaud's

ERICH LEINSDORF

Viola Concerto, Prokofieff's 'Cello Concerto, Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto—now in the process of composition—piano concertos by Bartok, Kirchner and Dello Joio, and a concerto for woodwinds by Alvin Ettler.

At the opening concerto next season one may expect to hear the Beethoven "Eroica," as a statement of continuing tradition, and Piston's Seventh Symphony in view of that composer's long affiliation with the orchestra. Due homage will also be paid the modern master, Igor Stravinsky, who is in his 80th year, by Mr. Burgin and Mr. Liensdorf who will conduct the Symphony of Psalms.

17 Concerts Here

The new conductor plans to continue the affiliations with the choral groups ranging from Harvard-Radcliffe to Chorus Pro Musica that have enhanced past concerts. He is examining new scores presently, and has consulted Dr. Munch, Mr. Burgin, Arthur Fiedler and John Burk, program annotator and musicologist, on issues of programming.

During the next season, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct 17 concerts here, and all the tours, five of the Eastern seaboard and one at the end of the season. The latter, scheduled as a transatlantic tour, will take the audience into Canada and to the West Coast.

The educational aspects of the Tanglewood season seem to Erich Leinsdorf as important as the regular series of concerts; and while he hasn't made his views public, the Berkshire Festival complex is one of the activities he is studying closely.

Not a Bricklayer

"I am coming here not as a bricklayer," said Mr. Leinsdorf. "I don't have to build with new materials." He has three commitments this summer: in Philadelphia, the National String Congress at Lansing, Mich., and the recording of an opera in Rome.

There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that he plans to stay here a short while and return to opera, Mr. Leinsdorf answered a questioner. "My feeling for opera right now is that of a controlled nostalgia."

This fall he and his family move into a house in Brookline, which the Leinsdorfs found with the aid of Arthur Fiedler, a new neighbor.

There are six children in the family: David, 20, a Columbia student; Gregor, 18, Joshua, 16 Deborah, 15, Hester, 13, and Jennifer, 10.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 551,529 S. 643,232
APR 13 1962

Leinsdorf Tackles Odds, Wins

By Robert C. Marsh

In three weeks of guest appearances with the Chicago Symphony this season, Erich Leinsdorf has drawn two soloists—both cellists. The odds against that combination must be fairly steep, and many a wandering maestro would have been hard put to build an interesting program for both occasions.

Nonetheless, Leinsdorf's concert with Janos Starker last October was one of the autumn's best, and his work with Antonio Janigro Thursday night was little short of revelation.

THE SCORE they were playing together was the Schumann cello concerto. It turns up in an Orchestra Hall program about every five years, and generally it's a bore.

Not so Thursday, when Janigro brought to it the Latin gift for finding melody and singing whatever was singable. Leinsdorf was with him in spirit, but more than this, he approached the orchestral portion of the score not as a dreary accompaniment but as a challenge to make music.

From the skillful gleaning of the best in the concerto and the wholly charming statement of the Mozart K. 205 divertimento, one could appreciate the fine distinction in Leinsdorf's mind between minor works and inferior works. Both Schumann and Mozart wrote more important music than these scores, but their masterpieces are familiar to us.

A LESSER effort can possess appealing features, can deserve a hearing, and - most of all - is entitled to a sympathetic performance. The Mozart, which was being played to subscribers for the first time, proved the happiest of discoveries.

The principal work of the evening was the Brahms piano quartet Op. 25 in an orchestral transcription by Arnold Schoenberg. For the present generation of symphony subscribers, this was a first performance too — although Frederick Stock gave the score a hearing in 1938, the year after Schoenberg completed his task.

THE SOUND is not the same as Brahms' own instrumental writing. It was not supposed to be. But it is full and satisfying and well suited to the thematic material.

Leinsdorf's performance was enormously effective, particularly in the interplay of the wind choirs and the strings, with the gypsy finale an obvious sensation. There is much to recommend an early revival for this remarkable composition.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D: 537,792 SAT. 526,176
MAR 31 1962

Symphony Next Week

Erich Leinsdorf returns as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony in three concerts next week. Earlier in the season he inaugurated the new Saturday evening series. Next fall he becomes music director of the Boston Symphony. Programs follow:

THURSDAY, 8:15 p.m.

FRIDAY, 2 p.m.: Suite from the ballet "Creatures of Prometheus," by Beethoven; Symphony No. 10, by Shostakovich.

SATURDAY, 8:30 p.m.: Symphony No. 2 in D Minor, Op. 70, by Dvorak; Symphony No. 10, by Shostakovich.

Leinsdorf Outlines Plans

Symphony Opens New Era

By CYRUS DURGIN

A new era began for the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday as Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Dr. Charles Munch as music director, held his first press conference in Symphony Hall.

Crisp, urbane, direct, charming and humorous over the firm, serious purpose which is the core of this man, Leinsdorf told in some detail his plans for the season which will begin in September.

His first program will include Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and first performance by the Boston Symphony of the Seventh Symphony by Walter Piston.

There will be a series of contemporary concertos—"not a cycle, because I do not believe in cycles."

There will be "due homage" to composer Igor Stravinsky in connection with the 80th anniversary of his birth, and the Stravinsky Violin Concerto will be performed in 1963. Leinsdorf personally will conduct Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms.

Leinsdorf will put the Boston Symphony musicians upon risers, which will to a slight extent bring rearrangement of the orchestra's seating plan.

He hopes to maintain associations with the choral organizations such as the Chorus Pro Musica, Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus, all of whom have appeared with the Boston Symphony over a varying number of years.

He has invited Dr. Charles Munch to be guest conductor for four weeks.

Richard Burgin, who though he will retire as concertmaster, will retain the post of associate conductor, will conduct three weeks. Leinsdorf will take all the other concerts, including five tours to New York and other cities, and a transcontinental tour of two weeks at the end of the season, which will stretch over a total of 32 weeks.

Leinsdorf and his family will occupy a house at 153 Dean rd., Brookline, "which is near Symphony Hall, only 10 minutes' driving time," and will take up residence at the turn of August into September.

The cycle of contemporary concertos which Leinsdorf plans for next season will include the Stravinsky Violin Concerto aforementioned; the first performance of a Violin Concerto by the American Benjamin Lees; a Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud; a Piano Concerto which Samuel Barber is still composing; the Bartok Second Piano Concerto; a Piano Concerto by Leon Kirchner; the big symphonic Cello Concerto by Prokofieff; Fantasy and Variations by Norman Dello Joio, and a Concerto for Woodwinds by Alvin Etler.

Leinsdorf will continue the practice of Open Rehearsals instituted by Dr. Munch.

Leindorf's first concerts in Boston will be Sept. 21 and 22.

22

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
MAY 1 1962

Leinsdorf Outlines Plans

Symphony Opens New Era

By CYRUS DURGIN

A new era began for the Boston Symphony Orchestra today as Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Dr. Charles Munch as music director, held his first press conference in Symphony Hall.

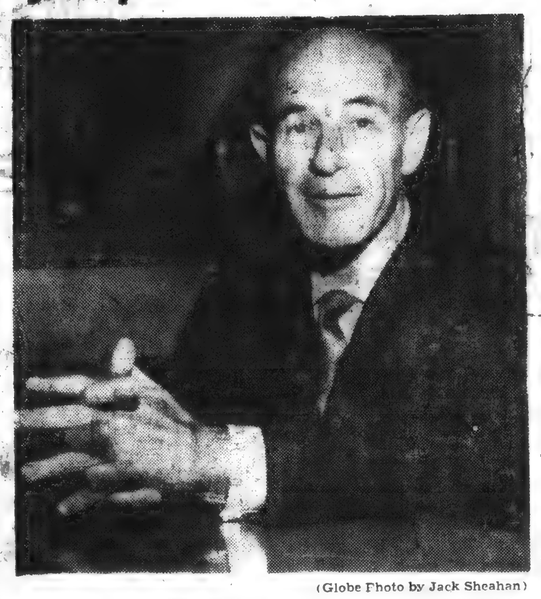
Crisp, urbane, direct, charming and humorous over the rm, serious purpose which is the core of this man, Leinsdorf told in some detail his plans for the season which will begin in September.

iHs first program will include Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and first performance by the Boston Symphony of the Seventh Symphony by Walter Piston.

There will be a series of contemporary concertos—"not a cycle, because I do not believe in cycles."

There will be "due homage" to composer Igor Stravinsky in connection with the 80th anniversary of his birth, and the Stravinsky Violin Concerto will be performed in 1963. Leinsdorf personally will conduct Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms.

Leinsdorf will put the Boston Symphony musicians upon risers, which will to a slight extent bring rearrangement of the orchestra's seating plan.



(Globe Photo by Jack Sheahan)

ERICH LEINSDORF spreads his blunt-fingered, musician's hands on table before him as he tells about his plans as the new music director of the Boston Symphony. Leinsdorf was cellist as a student, now loves to play piano at chamber music sessions with his friends—but only in private.

... the First Page

He hopes to maintain associations with the choral organizations such as the Chorus Pro Musica, Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus, all of whom have appeared with the Boston Symphony over a varying number of years.

He has invited Dr. Charles Munch to be guest conductor for four weeks.

Richard Burgin, who though he will retire as concertmaster, will retain the post of associate conductor, will conduct three weeks. Leinsdorf will take all the other concerts, including five tours to New York and other cities, and a transcontinental tour of two weeks at the end of the season, which will stretch over a total of 32 weeks.

"I have no rule, system or policy in selecting programs," continued Leinsdorf. "I believe that music ought to give a glorious emotional experience to people. For three, four, five years I want to give the public a comprehensive view of a total repertory.

"Soloists will be invited to play specific works. The work comes first, and if we cannot find available the soloist we want to give the best performance of a given work, then we shall postpone the work until that soloist is available."

He thinks constantly, Leinsdorf said, of the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood and the orchestra's Summer school, the Berkshire Music Center, which, he stated categorically, are together "one of the greatest musical enterprises, and which have been spectacularly successful." He did not announce detailed plans for the Berkshires, but it was evident that his head is full of ideas.

Leinsdorf and his family will occupy a house at 153 Dean rd., Brookline, "which is near Symphony Hall, only 10 minutes' driving time," and will take up residence at the turn of August into September.

Leinsdorf paid high and heartfelt tribute to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an institution of continuing standards, traditions and policies, citing as a comparative example, the United States Senate, "which is always in session."

"I am particularly happy to come here not as a 'bricklayer,' he stated humorously. That is, I shall not have to find the figurative bricks and cement to build an orchestra. The orchestra already exists as a magnificent instrument, and that enables one simply to make music.

"When I had ended my visit as guest conductor in 1961, I wrote a note to Mr. Perry" (Thomas D. Perry Jr., the Symphony manager), "telling him how happy I was that I had not had to make any compromises upon the programs I wished to present. That is rare.

"I have since discovered that with this organization music is held uppermost. Musical necessity has its way. There is no pressure to have to make non-musical decisions. I shall do my best to keep it this way. I have had much experience of musical organizations in Europe and this country, and this situation is rare, indeed. I suspect is is unique."

Leinsdorf also paid his compliments to Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops. "We see eye to eye upon the music which concerns us tangentially. Incidentally, it was Mr. Fiedler who told me all about my new house when we met in London last Summer. He knew more about it than I did."

As for opera, that medium of music wherein Leinsdorf made his first success in the United States, and in which he has made numerous recordings, you get the impression that he has had it for the time.

"I want nothing more now than to conduct symphony. I have known the difficulties and the wonderful moments in opera, but at the moment my nostalgia for opera is well controlled." This with a characteristic display of humor.

The cycle of contemporary concertos which Leinsdorf plans for next season will include the Stravinsky Violin Concerto aforementioned; the first performance of a Violin Concerto by the American Benjamin Lees; a Viola Concerto by Darius Milhaud; a Piano Concerto which Samuel Barber is still composing; the Bartok Second Piano Concerto; a Piano Concerto by Leon Kirchner; the big symphonic Cello Concerto by Prokofieff; Fantasy and Variations by Norman Dello Joio, and a Concerto for Woodwinds by Alvin Etler.

Leinsdorf will continue the practice of Open Rehearsals instituted by Dr. Munch.

Not all the Leinsdorf family will reside in Brookline. The two elder sons, David, almost 20, and Gregor, almost 18, are in college—David at Columbia, Gregor at the University of Chicago. Son Joshua, 16-plus, is expected to enter Brookline High School as a senior. The two daughters are Deborah Hester, 13, and Jennifer, 10.

Mr. Leinsdorf has three previous commitments for this Summer before he assumes his Boston post: the opening of the Robin Hood Dell concerts in Philadelphia, which will begin on Stravinsky's birthday, June 17, with honor to the composer; a period at a conference on string instruments playing at Lansing, Mich., and recording of an opera, unspecified, in Rome.

Leinsdorf's first conecrts in Boston will be Sept. 21 and 22. On Sept. 24 he will conduct the orchestra in the course of the ceremonies opening the new Lincoln Center in New York city.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
D 370,989 S: 507,270
MAR 21 1962

Leinsdorf to Conduct Concert Here Apr. 16

Erich Leinsdorf, a world renowned conductor, will direct the final concert of the Chicago symphony orchestra season at the Pabst theater Apr. 16, it was announced Tuesday. Fritz Reiner, permanent conductor of the orchestra who was scheduled for that date has been ill

Erich Leinsdorf

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna Austria, has led many leading orchestras of Europe and America and also has conducted at the Metropolitan opera. Next fa will become permanent co ductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, succeeding Charles Munch, who is retiring.

MAMARONECK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 8,637
MAR 15 1962

CONDUCTOR of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Erich Leinsdorf and Mrs. Leinsdorf of 25 Larchmont Ave., Larchmont, are pictured above at the Half Moon Hotel and Cottage Colony in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where they were recent guests. Dr. Leinsdorf was formerly director of the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RI...
Traveler
BOSTON, Ma...
Circ. 178,03...
MAY 1 19...

A Magnifice...

Leins...

By ALTA MALO...

Erich Leinsdorf... will move to Bost... before Labor Day t... over as music direc... the Boston Sym... Orchestra, plans no... with the past.

"On the contrary," ... his first local pres conf... noon at Symphony Hall, ... making a policy of ove... interlocking and embrac...

WOULD PUT THEM ON RIVERS

The only change the V... conductor anticipated is a... one. "I want to put the ... on rivers, which has ce... plexities and will requ... small change in the sea...

"As far as musical ... goes, I have no hard ... rules or systems, or ev... I think music should ... glorious, emotional ... to people.

"I hope over a per... or five years the pub... have a view of it to... toire."

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D 537,782 SAT.
APR 6 1...

ARID SHOST...

Concer... In Sec...

Two very differ... prolonged scrutiny ... under the glossily ... The evening prove... taken, if at all, in ...

Beethoven's musi... ballet "Creatures o... theus," which con... first half of the pr... certainly worth th... present, only two o... movements besides... known overture ha... heard at these c...

Still, at such le... the score's happies... on the episodic a... fying sound of ... posed for an occ... ably forgotten.

* * *

CANNILY, ... propped up his ... ends with music ... and lasting appe... ture and the fin...

The latter, w... later in both ... symphony and ... tions, gave Orc... patrons that de... of hearing so... rare and fam... ceived thunder...

The perform... out serious ... there were ... for soloists, o... cellist Fran... Edward Dr... Ray Still.

* * *

THE RE... evening was ... Shostakovich ... 10, an arid ... pad out a co... into 50 mi... orchestral ... most of th...

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

A Magnificent Group, Says Symphony's New Conductor

Leinsdorf Plans Smooth Orchestra Transition

By ALTA MALONEY

Erich Leinsdorf, who will move to Boston just before Labor Day to take over as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plans no break with the past.

"On the contrary," he said at his first local pres conference this noon at Symphony Hall, "we are making a policy of overlapping, interlocking and embracing."

WOULD PUT THEM ON RIVERS

The only change the Vienna-born conductor anticipated is a physical one. "I want to put the orchestra on rivers, which has certain complexities and will require some small change in the seating.

"As far as musical program goes, I have no hard and fast rules or systems, or even policy. I think music should convey a glorious, emotional experience to people.

"I hope over a period of four or five years the public would have a view of a total repertoire."

Traveler Scope
---Has A Portrait In Pictures—Page 39

He said he will conduct Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony on the first program of his first season—"I want to open with a sort of statement of my convictions."

Leinsdorf expressed a "thrill" over the fact Richard Burgin, retired concert master, will continue as associate conductor.

This, and seven weeks of guest conducting by Charles Munch, recently retired conductor, and Burgin during the 1962-63 season, demonstrates his desire for "Continuity."

No personnel changes are anticipated by the new conductor. "At this moment there are no changes other than the retirements which were already contemplated."

As for his removing himself from opera and settling down at Symphony Hall and Tanglewood, he said, "I have had a good fill of opera and the lovely sensations of it.

"At this moment I can only say that I want nothing more than to conduct symphony. I would say that my nostalgia for opera is well controlled."

He had high praise for the Boston orchestra: "I'm particularly happy that I am not coming in here as a bricklayer. I don't have to build.

"I find a magnificent orchestra and a magnificent organization — this again enables one to make music.

"As a guest conductor here, my gratitude particularly was for not being asked to compromise my musical beliefs. There is no pressure to make decisions for non-musical reasons.

NOT TOO MUCH AWARENESS

"You can glory in it. Abroad, there is not too much awareness of what goes on musically in the United States. The general hostility to the United States is expressed in little digs.

"The policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been very impressive to a lot of people there."

A man of wit and charm, of mobile hands, and expression Leinsdorf added a homey touch to his interview in discussing his living plans here.

He will be a neighbor of Arthur Fiedler, whose continued direction of the Boston Pops brought an expression of pleasure from him. He, his wife and five children, aged 10 to 20, will live at 153 Dean Rd., Brokline.

He added, amused, that he felt his acceptance of the post of conductor of Boston Symphony actually had hinged on the more liberal teen-age driving laws in Massachusetts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 28,084
APR 24 1962

Will Open Concert Series

Soviet Orchestra to Make Debut Here

The appearance here Oct. 16 of the 120-man Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra will mark its debut in America and the opening of a fall concert series at Connecticut College.

It is scheduled to give 30 performances in 25 cities during a six-week tour of the U. S. and Canada.

Eugene Mravinsky will conduct the orchestra for the debut at the college and the opening of the college's 24th concert series.

Boston Orchestra Coming

Also to be heard in the series will be:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eric Leinsdorf, conductor, Nov. 27, 1962; Claudio Arrau, pianist, Jan. 15, 1963, and Richard Tucker, tenor (Metropolitan Opera Company), March 5, 1963. All concerts will be presented in Palmer Auditorium.

Announcements for the series have been mailed to subscribers of the 1961-62 series. They will have until May 1 to renew their subscriptions.

The Leningrad Philharmonic performs a great deal of Russian music and serves as a vehicle for bringing new Soviet music to the public's attention. It has given first performances to works of Shostokovich, Prokofief, Glasunov and Kachaturian.

Repertoire Spans History

Aside from Russian music, the repertoire of the Pilharmonic spans history to include the symphonic literature of many other nations and periods. The oldest orchestra in Russia, its history stretches back into the latter part of the 19th century when it was founded. It was called the State Symphony Orchestra until 1921 when it became a member of the Leningrad Philharmonic Society.

Allen B. Lambdin, former business manager of Connecticut College who retired in January, will be concert manager for the Leningrad Philharmonic during its American tour.

Beginning its 82nd season next fall, the Boston Symphony will be conducted by Leinsdorf, who will succeed Charles Munch as its music director next season. He has also been appointed music director of the Berkshire Music Festival.

ERIC LEINSDORF
Conductor

The musical genius of Leinsdorf has become legendary throughout the world. He has been hailed as one of the foremost interpreters of the symphonic and operatic works of Mozart and Richard Strauss and has been equally acclaimed for conducting works from classical, romantic or modern repertoire.

Fa

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,792 SAT. 526,176
APR 6 1962

ARID SHOSTAKOVICH

Concert Is Study In Second-Rateness

BY DON HENAHAN

Two very different kinds of second-rateness were put under prolonged scrutiny by the Chicago Symphony Thursday night under the glossily professional direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The evening proved little more than that mediocrity is best taken, if at all, in small doses.

Beethoven's music from the ballet "Creatures of Prometheus," which consumed the first half of the program, was certainly worth the time to present, only two of the nine movements besides the well-known overture having been heard at these concerts.

Still, at such length, even the score's happiest ideas took on the episodic and unsatisfying sound of music composed for an occasion justifiably forgotten.

* * *

CANNILY, Beethoven propped up his work at both ends with music of originality and lasting appeal: the overture and the finale.

The latter, which he used later in both the "Eroica" symphony and piano variations, gave Orchestra Hall patrons that delightful feeling of hearing something at once rare and familiar. It was received thunderously.

The performance was without serious blemishes, and there were bows all around for soloists, chief among them cellist Frank Miller, harpist Edward Druzinski, and oboist Ray Still.

* * *

THE REMAINDER of the evening was taken up by Shostakovich's Symphony No. 10, an arid study in how to pad out a couple of tired ideas into 50 minutes worth of orchestral ticker tape. Like most of the Beethoven, this was a first performance locally, but the Russian's effort, dated 1953, had appallingly little to recommend it.

Not all of it touched the depths of crudeness and strident monotony of the second movement, which sounded like Berlioz's Rackoczy March and Prokofiev's Battle on the Ice from "Alexander Newsky" played simultaneously. But it tried.

The only moment that struck me as worthy of the man who wrote the First and Fifth symphonies came at the close of the third movement. Here, a solo violin quietly played a plaintive scrap of a motive, and a horn sounded a distant answer.

But 50 minutes just for that? Come, now, Shostakovich.

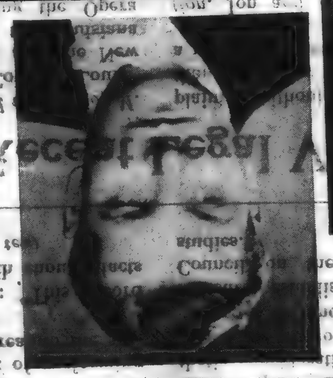
My heart went out to the musicians, who must have played the work several times in rehearsal and who would have to go through it again Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

Leinsdorf conducted both these extended and unfamiliar works without score, no inconsiderable feat.

Louis Kraner

James Robertson

John Barnett

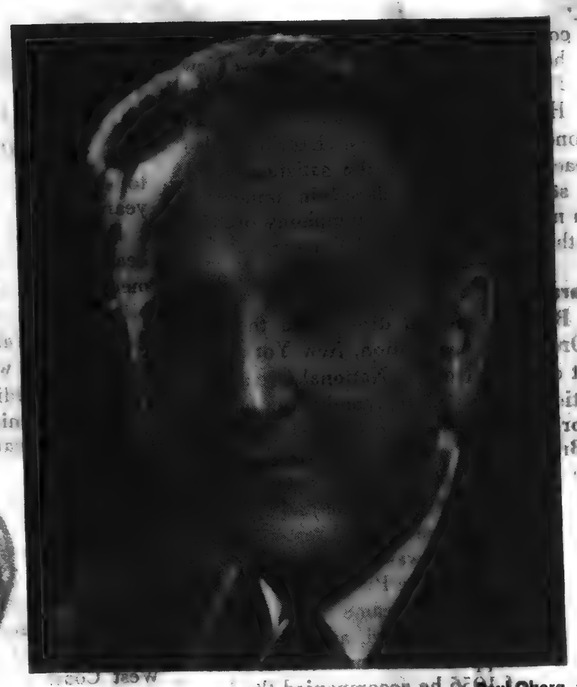


Michel Piastro

Erich Leinsdorf

Josef Krips

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244 2??
MAR 1962



Paul Oberg

The fourth annual A. F. of M. String Congress, to be held on Michigan State University campus, East Lansing, Michigan, June 17 through August 12, is a continuing scholarship music program dedicated to the development of young string musicians in the United States and Canada. The American Federation of Musicians is indeed privileged to co-sponsor this outstanding program for the furtherance of good music in America.

FOURTH ANNUAL

A. F. OF M. CONGRESS of STRINGS

THE Fourth A. F. of M. String Congress will again be held on the beautiful campus of Michigan State University, East Lansing, Michigan, June 17 to August 11. Paul Oberg, Dean of the Congress, will again head the distinguished faculty, and six eminent conductors will be in charge of the string orchestras: Josef Krips, Erich Leinsdorf, John Barnett, Mishel Piastro, James Robertson and Robert Shaw. Besides these, Dr. Oberg will be assisted on the faculty by Warren Benfield, double bass with the Chicago Symphony; Rafael Druian, concertmaster, Cleveland Orchestra; Hyman Goodman, concertmaster, Toronto Symphony Orchestra; Frank Houser, concertmaster, San Francisco Symphony; Louis Krasner, professor of violin and chamber music, Syracuse University, and head of the Krasner Chamber Music Ensemble; William Lincer, solo viola, New York Philharmonic; Robert Jamieson, principal cellist, Minneapolis Symphony; Theodore Salzman, solo cellist, Pittsburgh Symphony.

As in the previous years, the student body at the Congress will consist of one hundred winners of scholarships provided by A. F. of M. locals. The young string players are to be selected, also as in previous years, by auditions conducted and financed by the respective locals.

Locals have always been most generous in their contributions, and we are sure that they will need no urging this year to contribute the $300 scholarships and to do so at the earliest possible date. The need for promptness is apparent, since locals are accepted as participants in the order in which they make their contributions. In past years the Congress has been greatly oversubscribed and some locals have therefore had to be refused.

The campus of the University, one of the most beautiful in the world, provides modern dormitories for both men and women students. Among the many facilities are tennis courts, a swimming pool and an ice-skating arena.

Frank Houser | William Lincer | Hyman Goodman | Warren Benfield | Robert Jamieson | Theodore Salzman | Rafael Druian

216

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

MAR 20 1962

SMART SET

By ROSE WALSH

Fashions Do a Big Job

What would the ladies do to raise money for all the worthy projects they sponsor if it weren't for fashion shows? The pleasurable events grow bigger, better and more fascinating every year. What the proceeds accomplish is really marvelous.

The St. Columban's Kindergarten Guild has a very elegant fashion show planned for Tuesday evening, March 27, in St. Agatha's Auditorium, Milton, to benefit the fund for a new Columbian Sisters novitiate. This bulding which will eventully join the kindergarten and convent no the spacious, attractive grounds in Milton, will be a training center for sisters. The nuns, for the most part, do hospital work in their Philippines, Burma, Korea and Hong Kong missions.

Mrs. John J. Glancy and Mrs. Thomas Goode head the large committee with Mrs. John L. Morosini, a former model, serving as fashion coordinator and chairman of models.

Assisting with other committee duties are Mrs. George Boomhower, Mrs. James Kerrigan, Mrs. Robert A. Driscoll, Mrs. Joseph Gallagher, Mrs. Edward Craffey, Mrs. Alexis Scarr, Mrs. Robert Manganelli, Mrs. David Dinger, Mrs. John Austin and Mrs. John P. Mahoney.

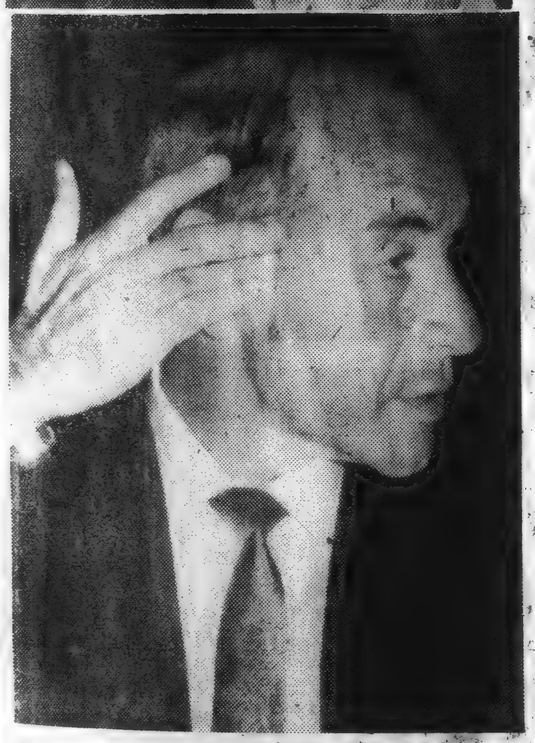
★ ★ ★

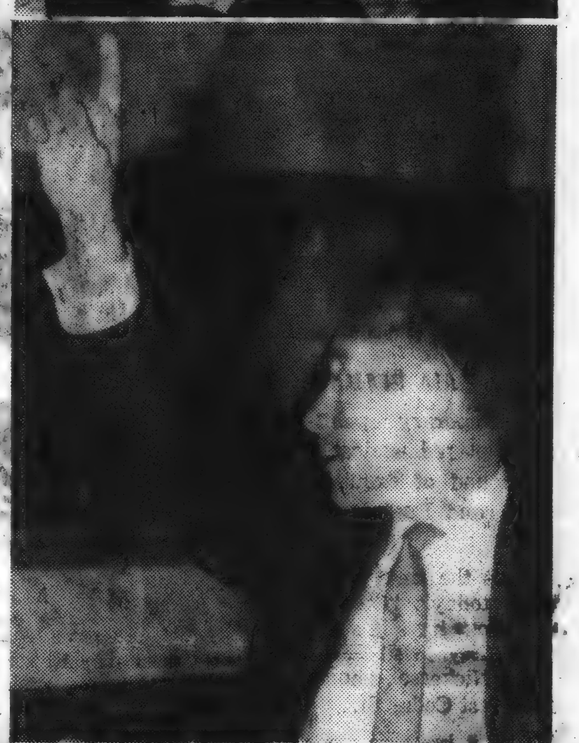
DINING IN JAMAICA—Dr. and Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf dine at the Half Moon Hotel and Cottage Colony in Montego Bay, Jamaica, BWI, where they are vacationing. He is the new conductor and director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and former director of the Met Opera.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAY 1 1960

Traveler Scope . . . Where The News Comes Alive In Pictures

Meet New Mr. Music!





(Traveler Staff Photo by John Landers Jr.)

MAESTRO Erich Leinsdorf, Vienna-born conductor, demonstrates his views and moods at press conference today. He'll take over as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra just before Labor Day. Appropriately enough, he'll be a neighbor of Arthur Fiedler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops. Story on Page 5.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

220

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

FEB 17 1962

Postlude

Master Organist Heard at Packed St. Matthews

By Paul Hume

Pierre Cochereau, famed as organist of Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, drew to St. Matthew's Cathedral last night an audience that filled every seat and spilled over into all the available standing room.

Hume

One of the leading exemplars today of the great French tradition in organ playing, Cochereau gave most of his attention to works of the largest dimension. He opened the evening, however, with a set of beguiling ancient European dances to which he brought the most patrician style and a marvelous ear for the clear, lively stop.

From then on it was a matter of the grandest scope, with the E Flat Prelude and Fugue of Bach, called "St. Anne," the Mozart F Minor Fantasy, the Fantasie of Cesar Franck, and Olivier Messiaen's heaven-storming "God With Us."

The various divisions of the Bach Prelude were phrased with immaculate touch, illuminating in a welcome way both the architectural design and the inner voices of the work. The Fugue was taken rather deliberately, but this helps in buildings such as St. Matthew's where too rapid a pace brings on tonal confusion.

Mozart's Fantasy is one of his most audacious pieces, harmonically speaking, and a marvel of contrasts. Cochereau played its larger pages with genuine bravura and its quiet andante with great tenderness, as if to remind us how nearly this was Mozart's requiem.

The Franck is an uneven work, touched with inspiration, as are so many of his pieces, that same inspiration that finally burst forth in his orchestral symphony. Last night its fine moments were emphasized in fine, legato playing, while its weak moments were helped by judicious tempos.

Messiaen's attempt to put into music something of the awe of God coming among men is a stunning admixture of shifting rhythms and flaming colors in the form of fistfuls of notes thrown out in seeming abandon. Handled by a master, it is a unique triumph and Cochereau is an easy master. In the final melee, the wall of sound rolled around the church in a solid hymn of glory.

After the program listed, the distinguished organist, following a custom kept more alive in France than anywhere else, improvised with extreme brilliance upon a theme, which he transformed in richly varying ways by a skill that can have few equals.

Organ Recitals

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
FEB 18 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Pierre Cochereau, organist of Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris and one of the leading exemplars of the French tradition in organ playing, will give a recital today at 6 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Mr. Cochereau's recital is the third of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concerts, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The one-hour concert will open with anonymous "Ancient Dances" and include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat major ("St. Anne"), the Fantasy in F minor by Mozart, Franck's Fantaisie in E major and Olivier Messiaen's "God Among Us."

After the program listed, Mr. Cochereau, following a custom kept more alive in France today than anywhere else, will improvise upon themes submitted to him but not previously seen by him. The American composer Leon Kirchner has composed a theme for Mr. Cochereau's improvisations.

Isaac Stern is soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special Pension Fund concert at 3 p.m. in Symphony Hall today. All tickets for this concert, which will consist of four compositions for violin and orchestra, have been sold.

Dr. Munch and the Orchestra will be out of town this week to give concerts in Hartford, New Haven, New Brunswick, Brooklyn and New York City.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 21 000

JAN 1962

Winner of $500 Boston Contest to Play In Symphony Hall

In collaboration with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Chapter has announced a competition for young organists; the winner will receive a $500 cash award and an opportunity to appear in concert in Symphony Hall in the 1962-63 Boston Symphony organ series. Last season marked the inauguration of a highly successful series of concerts on the large Aeolian-Skinner in Symphony Hall. This year's series began Dec. 17 with a recital by E. Power Biggs. Ray Ferguson plays Jan. 7, Pierre Cochereau, Feb. 18 and Catharine Crozier March 25. Next season's series has been planned to include the winner of the Young Artists' Competition.

The competition is open to all organists in the North Atlantic region, including the New England states, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Those who wish to compete must have either a residential or professional address in one of the states named, and must be not less than 25 years of age nor more than 35 as of March 31.

The winning contestant will have survived three stages of intermediary competition. Applicants are first required to submit a tape recording of their playing, on the basis of which the initial eliminations will be made. The second stage is an appearance in Boston April 28 when a judging committee will further appraise the contestants' abilities. Winners in the April adjudication will be heard at the annual meeting of the Boston Chapter May 7, at a recital in Symphony Hall. Four judges representing both the Guild and the Symphony will select the final winner. The award will be presented on the date of the winner's concert in Symphony Hall in the 1962-63 season.

The tape recording which applicants for the competition are requested to submit must be made on high quality tape at 7½ inches per second. A selection from among the major preludes and fugues of J. S. Bach as well as at least one work from a later period must be included in the music performed. The total running time of the tape is not to exceed 25 minutes. Tapes, accompanied by a fee of $5, will be accepted by the committee up to and including March 31. Mary Crowley Vivian, chairman of the competition committee, requests that applications and inquiries be addressed to her at 32 Avon Hill, Cambridge 40, Mass.

It is hoped that young musicians of high caliber will be attracted by the competition. The committee has reserved the right to withhold the award in the event that none of the contestants measures up to the required standards of performance.

NOTRE DAME ORGANIST IN THE GRAND MANNER

Pierre Cochereau is an organist in the grand French manner. If his position as organist at Paris' Notre Dame Cathedral indicates it, his Symphony Hall recital last night proved it.

Mr. Cochereau has the technique of the virtuoso, and his imagination is comparable. Many will argue that his use of registration and dynamics were out of character with Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E flat or the F minor Fantasy of Mozart.

NO QUESTION

There is no question that Bach and he would not perform alike; however, Bach was known as an experimentalist, and no one can predict how he would have reacted to the versatility of the Aeolian-Skinner organ at Symphony Hall. But if Mr. Cochereau's version of the Prelude was heavy, the Fugue was properly Baroque.

There are stronger points with the Mozart Fantasy. Ornamentation was a little cumbersome, and the gradual crescendos were almost foreign to composers of the classical period, who kept volume levels relatively constant and changed them rather abruptly.

The organist's interpretative abilities were right at home with the E major Fantaisie of Cesar Franck, who commanded an organ 100 years advanced over the classicists. All Franck's intensions for variation and color were carried out with keyboard artistry and polish.

TWO THEMES

Two themes, one selected by Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch and the other composed by Leon Kirchner, formed the basis of a 4-movement "symphony" improvised by Mr. Cochereau to conclude the program. Fingering and footwork were brilliant, and again the organ responded with courage and success.

McL. H.

The Program

Organist Pierre Cochereau, of the Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, performed last night at Symphony Hall. The program:
Ancient Dances.....Anonymous
Prelude and Fugue in E flat major..Bach
Fantasy in F minor.....Mozart
Fantaisie in E major.....Franck
"God Among Us".....Messiaen
Improvisation.....Cochereau

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

FEB 15 1962

Notre Dame, Paris Organist At Symphony This Sunday

Pierre Cochereau To Give Organ Concert at 6 P. M.

Pierre Cochereau, famed as organist of Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris and one of the leading exemplars of the great French tradition in organ playing, will give a recital Sunday at 6 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Mr. Cochereau's recital is the third of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concerts, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The one-hour concert will open with anonymous "Ancient Dances" and include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat major ("St. Anne"), the Fantasy in F minor by Mozart, Franck's Fantaisie in E major and Oliver Messiaen's "God Among Us."

After the program listed, Mr. Cochereau, following a custom kept more alive in France today than anywhere else, will improvise upon themes submitted to him but not previously seen by him. Doctor Munch — whose father was organist of St. William's Church in Strasbourg — and the contemporary American composer Leon Kirchner have composed the themes for Mr. Cochereau's improvisations.

When Mr. Cochereau recently performed at St. Matthew's Cahedral in Washington, D.C., his audience, as reported in the Washington Post - Times Herald, "filled every seat and spilled over into all available standing room" Some tickets for his Symphony Hall Organ Concert at 6 p.m. February 15 are still available — all unreserved and $100 — at Symphony Hall Box Office.

Isaac Stern is soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special Pension Fund concert at 3 pm. in Symphony Hall February 15. All tickets for this concert, which will consist of four compositions for violin and orchestra, have been sold.

Doctor Munch and the Orchestra will be out of town next week to give concerts in Hartford, New Haven, New Brunswick, Brooklyn and New York City. Doctor Munch has invited Carlo Maria Giulini to conduct the Orchestra's concerts in Boston for the two weeks beginning March 2. Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor for the concerts of March 16 through 20.

Complete programs:

Sunday, February 18, 3:00 p.m., Symphony Hall, Charles Munch conducting: Bach, Violin Concerto in A minor; Mozart, Adagio in G Major, K 261; Mozart, Rondo in C Major, K. 373; Brahms, Violin Concerto. Soloist: Isaac Stern.

Sunday, Feb. 18, 6:00 p.m. Symphony Hall: Pierre Cochereau, Organist: Anonymous, Ancient Dances; Bach, Prelude and Fugue in E flat major; Mozart, Fantasy in F minor; Franck, Fantasie in E major; Messiaen, "God Among Us"; Improvisations

PIERRE COCHEREAU, famed as organist of Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris and one of the leading exemplars of the great French tradition in organ playing, will give a recital tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock in Symphony hall. Mr. Cochereau's recital will be the third of this season's Symphony hall organ concerts which are being sponsored by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The one hour concert will open with anonymous "Ancient Dances" including Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat major ("St. Anne"), the Fantasy in F minor by Mozart, Franck's Fantaisie in E major and Olivier Messian's "God Among Us."

After the program listed, Mr. Cochereau, following a custom kept more alive in France today than anywhere else, will improvise upon themes submitted to him but not previously seen by him. Dr. Charles Munch—whose father was organist of St. William's church in Strasbourg—and the contemporary American composer, Leon Kirchner, have composed the themes for Mr. Cochereau's improvisations.

Auditions will be held this week in Hartford, Philadelphia and New York for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Auditions for Boston are listed for March 19.

222

Joseph Silverstein

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
DEC 23 1961

Music

Music Teachers Choose Officers for Next Year

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — The Lowell Federation of Music Teachers has elected officers for the coming year. Those elected were Anna Scannell, president; Jack Payne, vice president; Louise Dunn, secretary ,and Eva M. Lequin, treasurer. Those named to the board of directors included: Ernest Woessner, Mrs. Frank Boudreau and Nicholas Giangrasso. Program chairman will be Violetta Dubois.

Richard Burgin

This organization has continued to grow and to expand its activities in the community. The idea of introducing music to people of all ages through recitals, informal musical get-togethers, lectures by qualified teachers and students, and to date, the most important of all, the National Piano Guild regional auditions has done much for music here.

However, there have been other activities. Scholarships, and benefit concerts have also been part of the Federation's contribution to the community,

Eric Leinsdorf who will succeed Dr. Charles Munch as director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has selected the brilliant young violinist, Joseph Silverstein, as concert master. Richard Burgin, who has held the first chair for 42 years and has decided to retire from this position will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

THE NEWLY NAMED concertmaster is 29 years old. He came to the orchestra in 1955 as a member of the second violin section. At that time he was the youngest member of the world famed organization.

A native of Detroit and graduate of Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, Mr. Silverstein was a member of the Philadelphia orchestra and concertmaster of the Denver and Houston Symphony orchestras before he came to the Boston Symphony orchestra.

In 1959 he entered the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music competition at Brussels and was the only American, of the seven American entrants, among the first 10 winners. The competition which drew 37 contestants from 18 nations, awarded him third prize.

In October of 1960 he won the Naumburg Foundation award. In adidtion to a cash prize this award includes an appearance with the New York Philharmonic which has been scheduled for Dec. 30, and a solo recital in New York on Jan. 19, 1962, at Town hall. Mr. Silverstein was granted a temporary leave last fall from the Boston Symphony orchestra to fulfill his Naumburg engagements in New York and elsewhere, but he will rejoin the orchestra next month.

BIG RAPIDS, MICH.
PIONEER
D. 3,155
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
FEB 2 3 1962

Joseph Silverstein Will Play at Ferris Convocation Tuesday Night

Joseph Silverstein, award-winning violinist, will play at the Festival of Arts All-College Convocation at 8:30 p. m. Tuesday, Feb. 27 at Ferris Institute's Starr Auditorium.

Two years ago Silverstein won the Naumburg Award, the largest prize ever awarded in musical competition. The prize, totaling about $25,000, included $5,000 in cash, a two-year management contract, subsidized foreign concert tours, a New York solo recital, and appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

In 12 years of concert playing, Silverstein has performed with the Houston, Philadelphia, Denver, and Boston symphony orchestras. He is presently concertmaster designate of the Boston Symphony.

Silverstein won a medal and several solo appearances in Belgium at the Queen Elizabeth Concours International de Violin at Brussels in 1959.

This season Silverstein makes his debut with the New York Philharmonic, will give a recital at Town Hall in New York City, and is currently conducting a concert tour of the South and Mid-West.

For the convocation, Silverstein will play "Romance in F" by Beethoven, Mendelssohn's "Violin Concerto in E Minor," "Sonata No. 1 in G Minor" by Bach, Tchaikowsky's "Serenade Milan Chollque," and "Polonaise No. 1 in D Major" by Wieniawski. Pianist Lawrence Davis will accompany Silverstein.

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

The convocation is sponsored by the General Education Assembly committee and the Festival of Arts. Begun four years ago to celebrate 75th anniversary of the college, the Festival this year has also included a Ferris Playhouse production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a concert featuring cornet virtuoso Leonard B. Smith with the Ferris Concert Band, and a Winter Choral Concert.

A faculty art exhibit at the Student Center will remain open to the public through March 2.

The convocation is open to the public. There will be no admission charge.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
PORTSMOUTH STAR
SUN 144,920
JAN 21 1962

Silverstein Soloist With Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, 29-year-old concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the violin soloist with the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra in its concert Monday at 8:30 p.m. at the Center Theater. He will perform the Tchaikovsky Concerto in D major with the group under Edgar Schenkman.

It will be Silverstein's first appearance in Norfolk. He has been a member of the Boston Symphony for seven years, and has been guest soloist with that body several times.

He also has been soloist with the Detroit, Denver, Houston, Indianapolis and Belgian National Symphonies.

He came to the Boston Symphony by way of the Houston, Denver and Philadelphia Orchestras. On Dec. 30 he was soloist with the New York Philharmonic at Carnegie Hall, and he recently played a recital at Town Hall in New York.

Silverstein has won a number of awards, among them the 1961 Naumberg Foundation Instrumental Award which brought him a $5,000 cash prize, a solo recording with Columbia, a two-year manager's contract and several solo appearances. He also was an award winner in the Belgian Queen Elisabeth International Competition in 1959.

Concert tickets will be on sale all day Monday at the box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
SEP 28 1961

VIOLINIST Joseph Silverstein of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in recital, accompanied at the piano by Martin Boykan, inaugurating the Brandeis University concert series this Friday evening at 8:30 p.m. in the Slosberg Recital Hall. Mr. Silverstein, who won the 1960 Naumburg Competition, will perform works of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Hindemith.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1962

orchestral world

Boston—Joseph Silverstein, violinist and winner of the 1960 Naumburg Award, has been appointed concertmaster of the Boston Symphony to replace Richard Burgin who retires this season.

San Diego—Robert E. MacIntyre has been named manager of the San Diego Symphony. He was former manager of the Birmingham (Ala.) Symphony.

222

Joseph Silverstein

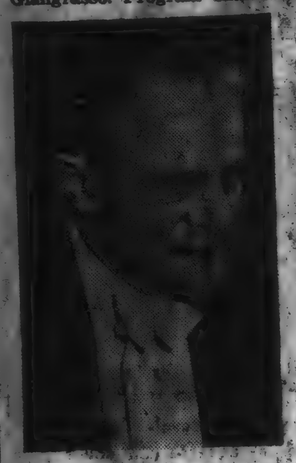
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
DEC 23 1961

Music

Music Teachers Choose Officers for Next Year

By Alfred Burin

LOWELL — The Lowell Federation of Music Teachers has elected officers for the coming year. Those elected were Anna Scannell, president; Jack Payne, vice president; Louise Dunn, secretary, and Eva M. Lequin, treasurer. Those named to the board of directors included: Ernest Woessner, Mrs. Frank Boudreau and Nicholas Giangrasso. Program chairman will be Violetta Dubois.



Richard Burgin

This organization has continued to grow and to expand its activities in the community. The idea of introducing music to people of all ages through recitals, informal musical get-togethers, lectures by qualified teachers and students, and to date, the most important of all, the National Piano Guild regional auditions has done much for music here.

However, there have been other activities. Scholarships, and benefit concerts have also been part of the Federation's contribution to the community.

Eric Leinsdorf who will succeed Dr. Charles Munch as director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has selected the brilliant young violinist, Joseph Silverstein, as concert master. Richard Burgin, who has held the first chair for 42 years and has decided to retire from this position will conduct as the orchestra's associate conductor.

THE NEWLY NAMED concertmaster is 29 years old. He came to the orchestra in 1955 as a member of the second violin section. At that time he was the youngest member of the world famed organization.

A native of Detroit and graduate of Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, Mr. Silverstein was a member of the Philadelphia orchestra and concertmaster of the Denver and Houston Symphony orchestras before he came to the Boston Symphony orchestra.

In 1959 he entered the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Music competition at Brussels and was the only American, of the seven American entrants, among the first 10 winners. The competition which drew 37 contestants from 18 nations, awarded him third prize.

In October of 1960 he won the Naumburg Foundation award. In addition to a cash prize this award includes an appearance with the New York Philharmonic which has been scheduled for Dec. 30, and a solo recital in New York on Jan. 19, 1962, at Town hall. Mr. Silverstein was granted a temporary leave last fall from the Boston Symphony orchestra to fulfill his Naumburg engagements in New York and elsewhere, but he will rejoin the orchestra next month.

BIG RAPIDS, MICH.
PIONEER
D. 3,155
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
FEB 26 1962

Joseph Silverstein Will Play at Ferris Convocation Tuesday Night

Joseph Silverstein, award-winning violinist, will play at the Festival of Arts All-College Convocation at 8:30 p. m. Tuesday, Feb. 27 at Ferris Institute's Starr Auditorium.

Two years ago Silverstein won the Naumburg Award, the largest prize ever awarded in musical competition. The prize, totaling about $25,000, included $5,000 in cash, a two-year management contract, subsidized foreign concert tours, a New York solo recital, and appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

In 12 years of concert playing Silverstein has performed with the Houston, Philadelphia, Denver, and Boston symphony orchestras. He is presently concertmaster designate of the Boston Symphony.

Silverstein won a medal and several solo appearances in Belgium at the Queen Elizabeth Concours International de Violin at Brussels in 1959.

This season Silverstein makes his debut with the New York Philharmonic, will give a recital at Town Hall in New York City, and is currently conducting a concert tour of the South and Mid-West.

For the convocation, Silverstein will play "Romance in F" by Beethoven, Mendelssohn's "Violin Concerto in E Minor," "Sonata No. 1 in G Minor" by Bach, Tchaikowsky's "Serenade Milan Cholique," and "Polonaise No. 1 in D Major" by Wieniawski. Pianist Lawrence Davis will accompany Silverstein.

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

The convocation is sponsored by the General Education Assembly committee and the Festival of Arts. Begun four years ago to celebrate 75th anniversary of the college, the Festival this year has also included a Ferris Playhouse production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," a concert featuring cornet virtuoso Leonard B. Smith with the Ferris Concert Band, and a Winter Choral Concert.

A faculty art exhibit at the Student Center will remain open to the public through March 2.

The convocation is open to the public. There will be no admission charge.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
PORTSMOUTH STAR
SUN 144,820
JAN 21 1962

Silverstein Soloist With Symphony

Joseph Silverstein, 29-year-old Belgian Queen Elisabeth International Competition in 1959, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the violin soloist with the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra in its concert Monday at 8:30 p.m. at the Center Theater. He will perform the Tchaikovsky Concerto in D major with the group under Edgar Schenkman.

It will be Silverstein's first appearance in Norfolk. He has been a member of the Boston Symphony for seven years and has been guest soloist with that body several times.

He also has been soloist with the Detroit, Denver, Houston, Indianapolis and Belgian National Symphonies.

He came to the Boston Symphony by way of the Houston, Denver and Philadelphia Orchestras. On Dec. 30 he was soloist with the New York Philharmonic at Carnegie Hall, and he recently played a recital at Town Hall in New York.

Silverstein has won a number of awards, among them the 1961 Naumberg Foundation Instrumental Award which brought him a $5,000 cash prize, a solo recording with Columbia, a two-year manager's contract and several solo appearances. He also was an award winner in the Concert tickets will be on sale all day Monday at the box office.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1962

orchestral world

Boston—Joseph Silverstein, violinist and winner of the 1960 Naumburg Award, has been appointed concertmaster of the Boston Symphony to replace Richard Burgin who retires this season.

San Diego—Robert E. MacIntyre has been named manager of the San Diego Symphony. He was former manager of the Birmingham (Ala.) Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
SEP 28 1961

VIOLINIST Joseph Silverstein of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in recital, accompanied at the piano by Martin Boykan, inaugurating the Brandeis University concert series this Friday evening at 8:30 p.m. in the Sloseberg Recital Hall. Mr. Silverstein, who won the 1960 Naumburg Competition, will perform works of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Hindemith.

Burgin Successor Chosen by Leinsdorf in Keen Competition

Silverstein at 30 Earns Top Rank in Symphony

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244 2
FEB 1962

By CYRUS DURGIN

Joseph Silverstein is a dark, stocky young man whose mind is as serious as his face, who is dedicated to music and especially to his violin.

When Erich Leinsdorf takes over as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, next Fall, Silverstein at the age of 30 will become its concertmaster, in succession to Richard Burgin.

DURGIN

Silverstein's attainment to this position is as remarkable as his musical progress since he first sat down six years ago at the age of 23, at the last stand of second violins on the stage of Symphony Hall.

★ ★ ★

Since 1955, he has been a consistent winner, and his awards include several solo performances with the Orchestra under Dr. Charles Munch, third prize in the 1959 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Music Competition at Brussels (the only candidate among seven American entrants to place in the first 10 winners), and the Naumburg Foundation Award of 1960.

His winning of the post of concertmaster is the most remarkable of all, in the sense that competition for the chair was unheard of until Erich Leinsdorf decided to audition Boston Symphony violinists in this manner. It is, of course, the conductor's prerogative to name his concertmaster.

When Richard Burgin's approaching retirement was announced just after last Summer's Tanglewood Festival, Leinsdorf made known his intention to invite Symphony violinists to compete.

They had about three months to prepare themselves. The required music consisted of portions of the Concertos by Berg and Beethoven; unaccompanied violin sonatas of Hindemith, a Faure Sonata, and string quartet movements.

★ ★ ★

Ten Boston Symphony violinists were heard at the first audition, at Symphony Hall Nov. 19 and 20. Three finalists emerged. Leinsdorf heard them in New York a week ago last Friday.

The test pieces this time were incidental solos from the orchestra repertory that a concertmaster would be expected to play. Last Monday afternoon, Leinsdorf announced his choice.

From second violin to first section to first soloist to concertmaster in what will be seven years, is brilliant advance.

Silverstein is well aware of his merited good fortune. But the way he speaks leads you to believe that he is primarily concerned with "the challenge and the responsibility of this plum."

Grove's Dictionary defines concertmaster "the chief of the first violins . . . close to the conductor's left hand . . . the position is a most important one, as the animation and 'attack' of the orchestra depend in great measure on the concertmaster . . . It is his duty to play any passages for solo violin that may occur in works other than violin concertos . ."

★ ★ ★

Silverstein, who had a year as concertmaster and associate conductor of the Denver, Col., Symphony before he came to Boston, puts it this way:

"The concertmaster occupies first chair among the strings. He is liaison man between the conductor and the strings. He should see to all matters like bowings and bow technic, things that a conductor shouldn't have to be bothered with.

"Section rehearsals, that is rehearsals by the strings alone, have been few in recent years, but Mr. Leinsdorf, who naturally will have his own way of doing things, may want some section rehearsals to establish the style of playing composition as he prefers them done."

I have grown by doing so.

"There is as healthy a learning situation playing in an orchestra as anything a Conservatory can provide. Just think of some of the men in this orchestra.

"Richard Burgin was a student of Leopold Auer and knew Joachim. Another violinist studied with Sevcik and Ysaye. The great traditions of playing are handed down like that, and they are priceless.

"Two men sitting at the same string desk teach each other. There isn't a young man who has joined the Boston Symphony since I have been in it, who hasn't grown visibly as a musician.

"I shall always be grateful for the good fortune to have known Richard Burgin. He has a vast knowledge of music. Just chatting with him over a cup of coffee turns out to be a valuable lesson.

"The musical diet of orchestral repertory is too nourishing to give up. I've been on leave this Fall, under the terms of the Naumburg Award, giving concerts on tour. I've missed the section playing more than I can tell you.

★ ★ ★

"Just this year I've had to make the decision between section playing and solo concerts, and I chose the orchestra. Why? Several reasons. You have to play things that don't interest you much of the time when you tour, or perform the same concerto 10 times a month.

"It's fun giving solo concerts, but it is rewarding to be in the orchestra. Furthermore I don't like to travel.

"I've a wife and two children, we've become naturalized Bostonians, and very partisan Bostonians at that, and I like to be home with my family."

The variable and sometimes precarious path of musical art has taken Joseph Silverstein a long way to his present home in Natick from the city of Detroit, Mich., where he was born March 21, 1932. His father was a violin teacher, his mother a non-professional who liked to play the piano a little. Joseph is an only child.

"I must have been three when I picked up a small violin for the first time. My father taught me but never forced music upon me. The only thing that ever came easier than playing the violin, was baseball."

★ ★ ★

"When Josef Gingold became concertmaster of the reorganized Detroit Symphony, I became a pupil of his. After that, Mischa Mischakoff taught me. At 12 I went to Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, to study with Efrem Zimbalist.

"He was a very interesting teacher, for he had his own way of playing. He was a wonderful coach those five years at Curtis.

When he was about 18, Silverstein joined the Houston, Tex., Symphony. Efrem Kurtz was conductor then, and the Houston policy called for numerous guest conductors, among them the late Serge Koussevitzky who, after he retired from the Boston Symphony, had two enjoyable years of guesting about.

Silverstein's conversation oscillates between precise speech and talking in quips.

"Call the concertmaster an assistant chef," he grinned. "He cuts up the mushrooms and does other essential menial jobs."

Then, suddenly serious again, "He must also be a sort of translator of the conductor's wishes into the language of string players."

The young musician stubbed out his cigarette in an ashtray of Symphony Hall's Green Room, took out pipe and tobacco pouch.

★ ★ ★

"Playing in the string section of an orchestra does not crush individuality," he pronounced with a sudden emphasis that burst like a squall over a glassy bay. "There's a foolish notion that it does, but that is stupid. I've been playing in symphony orchestras since I was 18, and I feel that Silverstein in Houston, later as a member of the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Denver Symphony, has played under various notables of the baton, from whom, incidentally, he has learned of conducting by observation.

The roster is impressive: Leopold Stokowski, Eugene Ormandy, Bruno Walter, Sir Thomas Beecham, William Steinberg and others.

The violinist has his own firm ideas about what makes great conductors and who they are.

"Any idiot can learn to beat time after awhile, but what sets the big ones apart from the rest is their knowledge and their power of persuading you that you simply must play as they want you to."

Between seasons, for some time after he had gone to Houston, Silverstein studied with Mischakoff, and played in the latter's quartet and his orchestra at Chautauqua.

★ ★ ★

Silverstein has no interest in becoming a conductor himself. "I'm much too in love with studying the violin and with the challenge of the new job."

With all his dedication to music, Joseph Silverstein has his feet firmly stanced on earth, and he is addicted to sports.

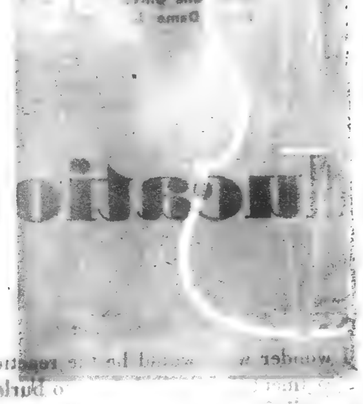
"Any professional sport interests me," and as he spoke his usually serious face—even his quips are uttered deadpan — lighted up. "Well, maybe not hockey.

"The Sunday afternoons when pro football games are on the air is a holy time in my household."

"All I play nowadays is ping-pong and do a little bowling. My wife and I like ping-pong and bridge. My ping-pong technic is brilliant but erratic, and she usually wins." He didn't mention their comparative bridge prowess, except to say "We are non-arguing players."

Mrs. Silverstein was Adrienne Shufro, a childhood acquaintance in Detroit. "We had a whirlwind courtship of 11 years before I asked would she marry me." Their children are Bernice (Bunny), 4½, and Deborah (Debby), 2.

SYMPHONIC HIGHLIGHTS



APPOINTMENTS Joseph Silverstein will be the new concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, beginning in the fall of 1962. Silverstein has in the past few years received awards via the 1959 Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Foundation. He won the concertmaster post through a competition among Boston Symphony violinists. (He has been violinist in the Boston Symphony since 1955.) Silverstein was born in Detroit in 1932, has had as teachers, Josef Gingold, Mischa Mischakoff and Efrem Zimbalist, has been a member of the Houston, Philadelphia and Denver symphony orchestras . . . Gary J. Beswick has been engaged as the concertmaster of the Santa Clara (California) Philharmonic Orchestra. He formerly held the same position with the Monterey County Symphony.

CONCERT MASTER, at 30 years of age, for Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Joseph Silverstein next Fall. He earned high position in auditions under Erich Leinsdorf, who will be conductor next year.

224

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
D. 112,537
JAN 22 1962

1961

Virginian-Pilot Photo by Clark

Joseph Silverstein rehearses for tonight's concert at Center Theater while Edgar Schenkman leads Norfolk Symphony Orchestra.

'First Class,' Guest Says of Symphony

By JOHN H. TRATTNER
Virginian-Pilot Sports Writer

NORFOLK — The violinist, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony at 29, was enthusiastic. "I'm delighted to hear you, and to play with you," he said. "It's one of the pleasantest surprises I've had in a long time."

He was addressing members of the Norfolk Symphony, with whom he had just rehearsed the Tchaikovsky D major Concerto. The violinist, Joseph Silverstein, and the orchestra, led by Edgar Schenkman, will perform it tonight in a conert at 8:30 in Center Theater.

"This orchestra really astonishes me," Silverstein added later. "Sometimes, on tour, you can run into some pretty rinky-dink orchestras. But this one is absolutely first-class. Of course, one of the reasons for that is its first-class conductor."

Frank and unassuming, Silverstein takes his important post in Boston seriously and modestly. And while he draws experience, insight and satisfaction from his virtuoso appearances, his symphony and chamber music work understandably preoccupy him at present.

MAIN GOAL

"I waited a long time for a job like this," he reflects. "My main goal right now is to be a good concertmaster."

A native of Detroit and a product of Philadelphia's Curtis Institute, Silverstein studied there with Efrem Zimbalist Sr. After stints with orchestras in Denver, Houston and Philadelphia, he joined the Boston Symphony seven years ago. He takes over as concertmaster this season.

He will play about 35 solo performances this year, a result of his winning the 1961 Naumberg Instrumental Award. His is a full schedule. Besides his regular work in Boston—and on tour with that orchestra—he played a Town Hall recital in New York last Friday, and is due in Detroit at the end of this week. As a soloist, he draws from a concerto repertoire that includes Bach, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Bruck and Prokofieff.

Silverstein went through the Tchaikovsky twice on Sunday with the Norfolk players. During the second run-through Schenkman found few things to correct ("In measure seven make it C-sharp, please, just a little quirk of mine. A wonderful note, C-sharp. Sometimes I think every note should be C-sharp") but Silverstein shook his head, displeased with himself.

Why? "I practiced that for an hour and a half," he replied, "and I'm still playing it wrong."

Afterwards, he handled well-wishers and other callers with patience, and children with the experienced touch of a family man (a wife and two daughters). For two small feminine autograph seekers who came with pencil only, Silverstein obligingly found a sheet of paper.

"Do you have a Stradivarius violin?" asked one. The violinist said he did not. His instrument is a Guadagnini, made in 1756.

"Do you have perfect pitch?" inquired her friend. Silverstein allowed that he had. The little girl beamed. "I thought so," she said with satisfaction.

Tickets for the concert are available all day at the Center Theater box office. Reservations should be telephoned to Mrs. Pierre Schmitz. A special rate of one dollar is offered to students and enlisted service personnel.

225

New Trustees

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
FEB 16 1962

High Honor To Mrs. Perkins

By PEGGY BROWN

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced with pleasure the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz to the Orchestra's Board of Trustees.

We present this announcement so formally because such election is a gigh honor.

It is especially so for Mrs. Perkins. She is the first woman elected to the Orchestra's Board. since Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the Orchestra in 1881, established the Trustees in 1918.

Long prominent is greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins is presently a member of the Executive Committee of Children's Hospital. She resides in Westwood.

Berkowitz is a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys. He graduated from B.U. Law School in 1916. He is a director of several corporations and a trustee and past-president of Beth Israel Hospital, among other honors.

We understand a Ladies' Council of the Friends of the Boston Symphony is presently being formed. Mrs. Perkins is expected to be the Trustee's advisor to the council.

Incidentally, violinist Isaac Stern has offered his services as soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony for a Pension Fund concert. It will be Sunday at 3 p.m.

This concert, the Orchestra's 127th Pension Fund concert, will mark Stern's only appearance in Boston this season. It will also be the last Pension Fund concert conducted by Dr. Munch before his retirement.

While we're in a musical vein, here's an explanation that might help puzzled friends of the Nes England Metropolitan Opera Final Auditions. The auditions were sponsored by the Junior League of Boston, Inc.

George Shick, member of the Metropolitan Opera staff and for last weekend's final auditions, refused to award a first prize to New England contestants. His decision came as a shock to thoe who feel New England abounds in musical talent.

Schick stated, "If the judges of the operatic contest wanted o be lenien and le singers wih inferior qualifications pass, the ujdgs would not help these singers. Rather, they would embarrass them because those singers would encounter defeat . . . on the steep ladder of an operatic career."

He did not feel that any of the finalists from New England measured up to national Metropolitan Opera standards. The Junior League's purpose in sponsoring the auditions is to help discover new talent for he discover new talent for the a Metropolitan Opers.

Regional auditions have been held throughout the U.S. This is the first time the N.E. region will not be represented in the March 20th national competition in New York ciy.

LUNCHEON HONORS MUSIC SCHOOL

The Boston Music School's Committee was honored at today's pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. Spring flowers decorated the head table Bloomfield and his wife were introduced.

For 51 years the school has served the greater Boston comchildren, young people and aduls ing on the highest level to children, young people and adult of limited means.

At the head table with the Bloomfields and luncheon chairman Mrs. E. Anhony Kutten were Raymond Donnell, school direcor; Mrs. Gordon B. Thayer, Linwood D. Scriven, Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jt., John O. Wilson and Mrs. Leslie MacDill.

Also Mrs. Alexander Steinert, one of hte original incorporators of the school. And Cyril Jones, Mrs. John Codman, Mrs. R. Frothingham Lombard and Susanna B. Dabney, whose families have all provided for the continuation of the school through the years.

STEPHENS COLLEGE PRESIDENT FETED

The Stephens College Alumnae Club of Greater Boston is having a tea today in honor of Seymour A. Smith, president of the college. The club is meeting at the Algonquin Club, 217 Commonwealth Ave., from 3 to 5 o'clock.

Smith is currently speaking at Harvard to the Institue of Academic Deans on the innovations in the educational programs at Stephens. These are the House Plan and the development of plans for the new Learning Center with its advanced resources.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

1962

NEW GROUP TO AID BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — For the first time, there is now a Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here, greeting officers of the all-feminine group, is Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees. The ladies from left are: Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood, newly-elected first woman member of trustees; Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Hamilton, and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline, co-chairman of Council.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
3ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Westwood Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000

FEB 21 1962

FIRST WOMAN ever named to the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
FEB 20 1962

★ ★ ★

BEING THE FIRST WOMAN elected to the board of trustees of the 81-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra has brought a shower of congratulations to Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood. The Orchestra has always been pretty much of a man's world—there are only — women currently playing in it—so the trustee honor is noteworthy.

Mrs. Perkins, the former Marian Gibbs, prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, is presently a member of the executive committee of the Children's Hospital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

FEB 16 1962

Mrs. Perkins and Berkowitz Named Trustees of Symphony

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz to the Orchestra's board of trustees.

Mrs. Perkins is the first woman to be elected to the Orchestra's board since Henry Lee Higginson, who had founded the Orchestra in 1881, established the trustees in 1918. Long prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins is presently a member of the executive committee of Children's Hospital. Mrs. Perkins resides in Westwood.

Mr. Berkowitz, a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys, graduated from Boston University Law School in 1916. A director of several corporations, he is also a trustee and past-president of Beth Israel Hospital, an honorary trustee of Temple Ohabei Shalom, a trustee of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston, a Fellow of Brandeis University and a member of the visiting committee of the Harvard Medical School. Mr. Berkowitz resides in Newton Center.

New Trustees

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
FEB 16 1962

High Honor To Mrs. Perkins

By PEGGY BROWN

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced with pleasure the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz to the Orchestra's Board of Trustees.

We present this announcement so formally because such election is a gigh honor.

It is especially so for Mrs. Perkins. She is the first woman elected to the Orchestra's Board, since Henry Lee Higginson, who founded the Orchestra in 1881, established the Trustees in 1918.

Long prominent is greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins is presently a member of the Executive Committee of Children's Hospital. She resides in Westwood.

Berkowitz is a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys. He graduated from B.U. Law School in 1916. He is a director of several corporations and a trustee and past-president of Beth Israel Hospital, among other honors.

We understand a Ladies' Council of the Friends of the Boston Symphony is presently being formed. Mrs. Perkins is expected to be the Trustee's advisor to the council.

Incidentally, violinist Isaac Stern has offered his services as soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony for a Pension Fund concert. It will be Sunday at 3 p.m.

This concert, the Orchestra's 127th Pension Fund concert, will mark Stern's only appearance in Boston this season. It will also be the last Pension Fund concert conducted by Dr. Munch before his retirement.

While we're in a musical vein, here's an explanation that might help puzzled friends of the New England Metropolitan Opera Final Auditions. The auditions were sponsored by the Junior League of Boston, Inc.

George Shick, member of the Metropolitan Opera staff and for last weekend's final auditions, refused to award a first prize to New England contestants. His decision came as a shock to thoe who feel New England abounds in musical talent.

Schick stated, "If the judges of the operatic contest wanted o be lenien and le singers wih inferiot qualifications pass, the ujdgs would not help these singers. Rather, they would embarrass them because those singers would encounter defeat . . . on the steep ladder of an operatic career."

He did not feel that any of the finalists from New England measured up to national Metropolitan Opera standards. The Junior League's purpose in sponsoring the auditions is to help discover new talent for he discover new talent for the a Metropolitan Opera.

Regional auditions have been held throughout the U.S. This is the first time the N.E. region will not be represented in the March 20th national competition in New York ciy.

LUNCHEON HONORS MUSIC SCHOOL

The Boston Music School's Committee was honored at today's pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. Spring flowers decorated the head table Bloomfield and his wife were introduced.

For 51 years the school has served the greater Boston com- children, young people and aduls ing on the highest level to children, young people and adult of limited means.

At the head table with the Bloomfields and luncheon chairman Mrs. E. Anhony Kuttas were Raymond Donnell, school direcor; Mrs. Gordon B. Thayer, Linwood D. Scriven, Mrs. William W. Dunnell Jt., John O. Wilson and Mrs. Leslie MacDill.

Also Mrs. Alexander Steinert, one of hte original incorporators of the school. And Cyril Jones, Mrs. John Codman, Mrs. R. Frothingham Lombard and Susanna B. Dabney, whose families have all provided for the continuation of the school through the years.

STEPHENS COLLEGE PRESIDENT FETED

The Stephens College Alumnae Club of Greater Boston is having a tea today in honor of Seymour A. Smith, president of the college. The club is meeting at the Algonquin Club, 217 Commonwealth Ave., from 3 to 5 o'clock.

Smith is currently speaking at Harvard to the institute of Academic Deans on the innovations in the educational programs at Stephens. These are the House Plan and the development of plans for the new Learning Center with its advanced resources.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Westwood Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000
FEB 21 1962

FIRST WOMAN ever named to the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood.

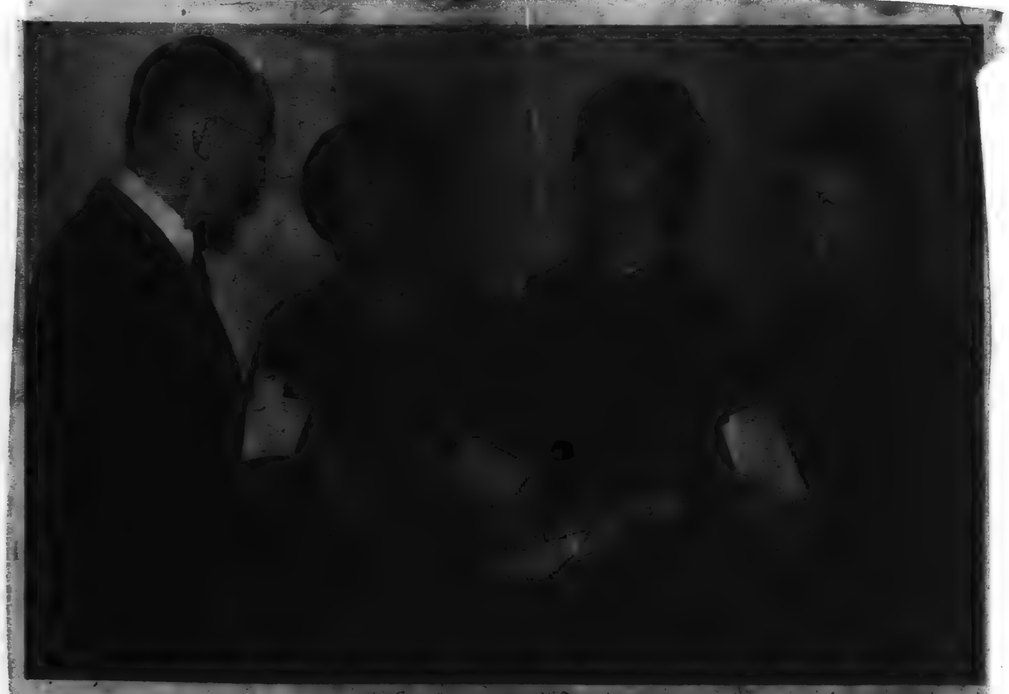
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
FEB 20 1962

★ ★ ★

BEING THE FIRST WOMAN elected to the board of trustees of the 81-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra has brought a shower of congratulations to Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood. The Orchestra has always been pretty much of a man's world—there are only — women currently playing in it—so the trustee honor is noteworthy.

Mrs. Perkins, the former Marian Gibbs, prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, is presently a member of the executive committee of the Children's Hospital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAR 25 1962



NEW GROUP TO AID BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — For the first time, there is now a Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here, greeting officers of the all-feminine group, is Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees. The ladies from left are: Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood, newly-elected first woman member of trustees; Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Hamilton, and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline, co-chairman of Council.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
FEB 16 1962

Mrs. Perkins and Berkowitz Named Trustees of Symphony

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz to the Orchestra's board of trustees.

Mrs. Perkins is the first woman to be elected to the Orchestra's board since Henry Lee Higginson, who had founded the Orchestra in 1881, established the trustees in 1918. Long prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins is presently a member of the executive committee of Children's Hospital. Mrs. Perkins resides in Westwood.

Mr. Berkowitz, a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys, graduated from Boston University Law School in 1916. A director of several corporations, he is also a trustee and past-president of Beth Israel Hospital, an honorary trustee of Temple Ohabei Shalom, a trustee of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston, a Fellow of Brandeis University and a member of the visiting committee of the Harvard Medical School. Mr. Berkowitz resides in Newton Center.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

FEB 16 1962

New Symphony Trustee

Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz have been elected to the Board of Trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra. The election of Mrs. Perkins marks the first time a woman has served in this capacity. She is prominent in Boston civic affairs. Mr. Berkowitz, member of a firm of attorneys, has also been active in civic duties.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

FEB 16 1962

SMART SET

By ROSE WALSH

Met Decision Shocker

What a real disappointment to the Junior League of Boston's New England Metropolitan Opera Auditions committee! George Shick, member of the Met Opera staff and the judge for last week's final auditions refuses to award a first prize to New England contestants.

He states, "If the judges of the operatic contest wanted to be lenient and let singers with inferior qualifications pass, the judges would not help these singers, but rather would embarrass them because they would encounter defeat . . . on the steep ladder of an operatic career."

Mr. Shick added, "what is of greatest importance is the fight for standards: vocal and musical; feeling for style and general artistic and human background." He did not feel that any of the finalists from New England measured up to the national Metroplitan Opera standards.

The judge's decision came as a shock to Boston music circles who have felt for years that New England was a leader in national musical talent. The purpose of the New England auditions (others have been held throughout the United States) sponsored by the Junior League is to help discover new talent for the Met Opera.

Second place winner was Michaline Chomiez of Rhode Island; third prize went to Lois Ann LaFlamme of Cambridge. Carroll Cox of Cambridge, Leslie Loosle and Joy McIntyre of Boston received honorable mention.

"PEACE DECORUM," Harvard's Hasty Pudding 114th annual show, opening in Cambridge for a 10-night run on March 21, will offer plenty of clever, amusing dance numbers. Its director, David Tihmar of Hollywood (discovered by Agnes DeMille) is widely known as a dancer, choreographer and director. He created one of the dances performed by Fred Astaire in the movie "Holiday Inn," and has appeared in 33 musical productions.

In Washington, where the Pudding's spoof on the Peace Corps and the New Frontier, will be given in April, the sponsor list will include such top-flight names as Atty. General Robert Kennedy, C. Douglas Dillon, secretary of the Treasury; Senator Leverett Saltonstall, Robert C. Weaver, Solicitor General Archibald Cox, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., Congressman James Roosevelt of California, Christian Herter, Senator Joseph Clark of Pennsylvania, Charles E. Bohlen and Paul H. Nitze.

Among the first patrons and patronesses for the Cambridge performances are the Francis Keppels (she is chairman for Vincent Club's "Hold Your Hats"); Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel S. Drury, Jr., the David B. Stones, Mrs. Jacob Wirth, the Henry Setons.

Also Nathaniel T. Clarks, the Russell S. Codmans, Dr. and Mrs. Carlyle G. Flake, Jr., Mrs. Charles D. Coryell, the Richard I. Johnsons, the Thomas B. Williamses, Hubert L. Smith, Mrs. Richard Harte, Mrs. Barbara S. Chase and Mrs. Henry S. Grew.

HONORED—The distinction of being the first woman trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra goes to Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood. She will act as trustee advisor to the orchestra's newly-formed Council of Friends.
Record American Photo by Louis Teton

FRIDAY DOINGS—Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn beginning at 12:30 will honor the Boston Music School's Committee, whose founder Daniel Bloomfield, is planning to attend. While he was a sophomore at Harvard he became interested in social work among young people in the West End and felt that there was a need for many of them to express themselves especially in music. Harry Ellis Dickson, delightful raconteur, will continue his series of talks on "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Friday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock Husney Mahfuz, who was King Saud's recent Boston host, will exhibit rare Persian rugs from the palaces of the Middle East at the Araby Gallery, 667 Boylston st., Copley Square. The showing is prompted by the growing interest in the cultural background of the Middle East. Several Boston doctors and friends have expressed a desire to see the fine examples of the handcraft art treasured in King Saud's palaces.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973

FEB 21 1962

First Woman in Musical Post

(Associated Press Wirephoto)
BOSTON—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, as he announced the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins (right) of Westwood to the orchestra's Board of Trustees. Mrs. Perkins is the first woman to be elected to the board since Henry Lee Higginson, whoi had founded the orchestra in 1881, established the trustees in 1918.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

FEB 16 1962

Mrs. Perkins and Berkowitz Named Trustees of Symphony

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced the election of Mrs. James H. Perkins and Abram Berkowitz to the Orchestra's board of trustees.

Mrs. Perkins is the first woman to be elected to the Orchestra's board since Henry Lee Higginson, who had founded the Orchestra in 1881, established the trustees in 1918. Long prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins is presently a member of the executive committee of Children's Hospital. Mrs. Perkins resides in Westwood.

Mr. Berkowitz, a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys, graduated from Boston University Law School in 1916. A director of several corporations, he is also a trustee and past-president of Beth Israel Hospital, an honorary trustee of Temple Ohabei Shalom, a trustee of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston, a Fellow of Brandeis University and a member of the visiting committee of the Harvard Medical School. Mr. Berkowitz resides in Newton Center.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Suburban Free Press
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,628

FEB 15 1962

Boston Symphony Friends

Henry B. Cabot of Strawberry Hill addressed the newly-formed group known as "A Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" last week when the executive committee of the Council met at a luncheon at the Chilton Club. Mr. Cabot is president of the board of trustees of the Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Clipper
DUXBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,111

FEB 15 1962

Mrs. Frank Christian of King Caesar Rd. was one of the members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who attended a Council luncheon Friday at the Chilton Club in Boston. Henry Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra told the group of the problems faced by a modern orchestra.

227

Social Chatter
By Alison Arnold

Symphony Orchestra Friends, Trustee to Discuss Problems

BOSTON IS PROUD of its Symphony Orchestra and Bostonians are quick to rally to its support. A Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being formed, and Mrs. James H. Perkins has invited the newly formed executive committee of the Council to luncheon at the Chilton Club tomorrow.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address the group and will discuss the needs and problems confronting today's modern orchestra.

Mrs. Perkins will explain the formation of the Council and the role it will play in the support of the orchestra. Mrs. Louis W. Cabot and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, co-chairman of the Council, will outline the plans for next year when the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be invited to participate in the orchestra's activities.

* * *

Society: Virtuoso Isa[a]c For B.S.O.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

When violin virtuoso Isaac Stern joins the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its Pension Fund Concert soloist on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, he will be helping to carry on a tradition of 128 concerts in 59 years.

Started by conductor William Gericke in 1903, the concerts helped to make pensions for Boston Symphony musicians a reality. Three years later, the Boston artists were giving their proceeds to victims of the San Francisco earthquake. Musicians in straightened circumstances after World War I, including founder Gericke himself, were aided by later concerts.

Privileged ticket holders at this Sunday's concert at Symphony Hall will include Mrs. George B. Dabney of Dedham, Dr. Charles D. J. Regan of Boston, who is taking South American colleagues; and Wellesley students Susan Stewart and Jane Griffith, who have invited half a dozen friends.

Cambridge Symphony goers on Sunday will number Mrs. Roy Elliott Bates, Mrs. Edwin Pratt, Mrs. T. H. Ward, Mrs. Roger T. Hagan and Edward L. Mark. Heading for Symphony Hall from Beacon Hill and Back Bay will be William Magill, Miss Dianna R. Brown, Miss Laurie Plesser, Mrs. Richard Southgate, Miss E. Florence Greenough, Mrs. Richard Sears, Miss Anne Van Winkle, Miss Eleanor Humphries, Miss Margot Miller and Peter Brandt.

Also shharing in the special excitement of a Pension Fund benefit Sunday will be biochemist Montserrat Tetas and colleagues at Brandeis University; Richard M. Whitney of West Roxbury, Robert Severance of Arlington, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Mrs. Stephen Wheatland, Mrs. James Gamble and Mrs. John E. Boit of Brokoline; and Dr. and Mrs. Keith H. Lamont, Miss Judith White, Mrs. Howard T. Kingsbury, and Alexander B. Porter, of Chestnut Hill.

FIRST WOMAN ever named to the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood.

Coming from Bethesda, Md., especially for the concert is Dr. Walter W. Boyd. Robert S. Davis will arrive with guests from Little Compton, R.I. Others planning to take guests Sunday include William Helm of Weston, Rev. John M. Hebert of North Easton, Mrs. Richard De Lancie of Wellesley Hills, John E. Andrews of Norwell, H. F. Pereira of Dedham, Miss R. Frances Neal of Boston, Mrs. William Dexter of Louisburg sq., Miss Alice Farnum of Watertown, and Mrs. Paul Bartlett of Weston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

FEB 15 1962

BSO TRUSTEE—Abram Berkowitz has been named to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of trustees, according to an announcement by Henry B. Cabot, president. Mr. Berkowitz, a member of the firm of Ropes and Gray, attorneys, graduated from Boston University Law School in 1916. A director of several corporations, Mr. Berkowitz is also a trustee and past president of Beth Israel Hospital, an honorary trustee of Temple Ohabei Shalom, Brookline, a trustee of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston, a Fellow of Brandeis University and a member of the Visiting Committee of the Harvard Medical School. Mr. Berkowitz resides in Newton Center.

blue enclosures in the programs at the Hall of Musi[c]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

FEB 16 1962

Symphony Names Mrs. J. H. Perkins, Abram Berkowitz

The first woman trustee in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was announced yesterday as Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood.

Her election was announced together with that of Abram Berkowitz, Boston attorney, by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees.

Trustees for the orchestra, founded in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, were established in 1918.

BERKOWITZ

MRS. PERKINS

Long prominent in greater Boston civic affairs, Mrs. Perkins now serves as a member of the executive committee of Children's Hospital.

Atty. Berkowitz, who lives in Newton Center, is a member of the law firm of Ropes and Gray and a trustee and past president of the Beth Israel Hospital.

Rehearsal for Symphony Friends

A SPECIAL EVENT has been arranged for members of the newly established Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. By invitation, they will attend the orchestra's rehearsal. Wednesday morning, April 18, when the renowned Mlle. Nadia Boulanger will conduct.

In 1938 she was the first woman ever to conduct the orchestra. On April 18, she'll present three works composed by her late sister, Lili. Besides being noted as a choral conductor and concert organist, Nadia Boulanger has unique fame as a teacher of many of our leading composers. Details of the event, which includes a luncheon, have just been completed at a planning session of the Council's steering committee at the Brookline home of Mrs. Norman L. Cahners. She and Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham are co-chairmen of the Council's committee. Other committee members at the meeting were Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood, recently elected first woman trustee of the orchestra, Mrs. Edward S. Stimpson of Wellesley Hills and Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman of Cambridge.

MRS. JAMES PERKINS

* * *

228

Harvey Genereux

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

FEB 8 1962

Symphony Stage Manager Harvey Genereux, at 64

A solemn high Mass of requiem for Harvey Genereux, 64, of 59 Beaufort Ave., Needham, stage manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Friday at St. Bartholomew's Church, Needham. He died Tuesday.

It was his task to arrange for transporting the orchestra's seven tons of baggage on domestic and foreign tours, which sometimes extended from Ann Arbor, Mich., to New London, Conn., or from Formosa to New Zealand.

Born in Saskatchewan, he joined the orchestra in 1929 and found that his fluency in French stood him in good stead in dealing with players, conductors and guest artists.

An official baton-maker and supplier for the orchestra's conductors, he was responsible for maintaining an ample supply of short, slender wands during the long tenure of conductor Serge Koussevitsky who seemed to match each broken note with a broken baton.

He leaves his wife, Priscilla (Charbonneau); and two sons, George and Paul, both of Boston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

FEB 7 1962

Harvey Genereux, Stage Manager for Boston Symphony

NEEDHAM — Harvey Genereux, 64-year-old stage manager and baggagemaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died last night following a heart attack at his home, 59 Beaufort Ave., Needham.

Mr. Genereux, who joined the maintenance staff of the BSO on Oct. 10, 1929, while Serge Koussevitzky was conductor of the orchestra, supervised the transportation of the BSO's seven tons of baggage on tours throughout the country and on tours of the Far East and in Europe.

He accompanied the orchestra to the Berkshires every summer since 1936, when the BSO gave its first Festival concert at the former Vanderbilt estate, now Foxhollow School, and to Tanglewood since the orchestra made its permanent summer home there in 1938.

During Dr. Koussevitzky's 25 years with the BSO, Mr. Genereux was the conductor's official baton maker and he was called upon from time to time in recent years to remodel batons for Koussevitzky's successor, Dr. Charles Munch.

A native of Saskatchewan, Mr. Generux was bilingual. His ability to converse in French was a constant asset in his contacts with the orchestra players, conductors, guest artists and others.

He leaves his wife, the former Priscilla Charbonneau; two sons, Paul, a student at Wentworth Institute in Boston, and George, a student at Christian Brothers Academy, West Roxbury.

The body is at the Fallon Funeral Home, Needham. The funeral will be held Friday morning at 10 at St. Bartholomew's Church here, with a High Mass of Requiem.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

FEB 8 1962

Plan Genereux Rites Tomorrow In Needham

A solemn high Mass of requiem for Harvey Genereux, 64, of 59 Beaufort Ave., Needham, stage manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Friday at St. Bartholomew's Church, Needham. He died Tuesday.

It was his task to arrange for transporting the orchestra's seven tons of baggage on domestic and foreign tours, which sometimes extended from Ann Arbor, Mich., to New London, Conn., or from Formosa to New Zealand.

Born in Saskatchewan, he joined the orchestra in 1929 and found that his fluency in French stood him in good stead in dealing with players, conductors and guest artists.

An official baton-maker and supplier for the orchestra's conductors, he was responsible for maintaining an ample supply of short, slender wands during the long tenure of conductor Serge Koussevitsky who seemed to match each broken note with a broken baton.

He leaves his wife, Priscilla (Charbonneau); and two sons, George and Paul, both of Boston.

T. P. Storer

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

FEB 10 1962

Symphony Members At Services for Harvey Genereux

NEEDHAM, Feb. 9—Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra attended a solemn requiem Mass in St. Bartholomew's Church here Friday for Harvey E. Genereux, the orchestra's stage and baggage master.

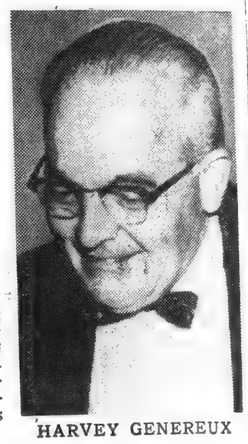
Mr. Genereux, 64, died Tuesday at his home, 59 Beaufort av., Needham. He supervised transportation of seven tons of baggage on the B.S.O.'s trips to West German, Russia, Formosa, Japan, Australia and New Zealand.

He also made birch batons for the symphony's conductors, including Serge Koussevitsky and Dr. Charles Munch.

Among those at the services were Henry B. Cabot, president of the symphony's trustees, Thomas P. Perry, manager, Leonard Burkat, Rosario Mazzeo, James J. Brosnahan, Edward Charron, Frank X. Cunniff, Edith Bossler, Dorothy Lyons and Dorothy Sullivan.

Mr. Genereux leaves a wife, Priscilla (Charbonneau), and two sons, George and Palu.

Genereux, With Boston Symphony Since 1929, Master Baton Maker



HARVEY GENEREUX

Services for Harvey Genereux, 64, stage manager, baggage master and baton maker for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be held Friday, with a requiem Mass at 10 a.m. in St. Bartholomew's Church, Needham.

Mr. Genereux died Tuesday at his home, 59 Beaufort av., Needham.

He has been with the orchestra since 1929, when he joined the maintenance staff.

Although his primary task was supervising transportation of the orchestra's seven tons of baggage on each tour, he molded the intricately balanced batons for the symphony conductors, including Serge Koussevitsky and Dr. Charles Munch.

Koussevitsky never conducted without a baton fashioned by his official baton maker, a fact in which Mr. Genereux took justifiable pride. One of the foremost baton makers, his silky smooth, white birch rods found their way to all parts of the world.

A native of Saskatchewan, he spoke fluent French, which increased his value to the Symphony during overseas tours and through his contacts with conductors and guest artists.

He leaves a wife, Priscilla (Charbonneau), and two sons, George, 18, a student at Christian Brothers' School, Needham, and Paul, 20, a freshman at Wentworth Institute.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 29,955

FEB 8 1962

Stage Manager Of Boston Symphony Orchestra Dies

NEEDHAM, Mass. (UPI)—A solemn high mass of requiem will be celebrated at St. Bartholomew Church Friday for Harvey Genereux, 64, stage manager and baggagemaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He died at his home here Tuesday after a heart seizure.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

FEB 11 1962

Deaths

HARVEY GENEREUX, 64, of Beaufort Ave., Needham, stage manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past three decades, died on Tuesday.

★ ★ ★

HUSSEIN KHALIDI, 66, former prime minister and foreign minister of Jordan, died at Amman, Jordan, on Tuesday. A member of one of the oldest families in Palestine he was interested in politics for many years and became a Jordanian in 1948.

DR. KENDALL EMERSON, Sr., 86, managing director of the National Tuberculosis Association from 1928 to 1947 died at his Brookline home on Monday.

★ ★ ★

GAETANO CARD. CICOGNANI, 80, Prefect of the Congregation of Rites, died in Rome. He was a brother of Amileto Cardinal Cicognani, Vatican Secretary of State and former Apostolic Delegate to the United States.

229

Symphony Factotum Harvey Left Tales and Affection

By CYRUS DURGIN

Everybody called him Harvey at Symphony Hall. Everyone there knew him, and further knew he had a last name—Genereux. But it was always just Harvey.

He was one of the few non musicians connected with the Boston Symphony Orchestra whom the public saw frequently on stage. Harvey held two positions, baggage master and stage manager, and in his second capacity he commanded any alteration of the stage during concerts.

If you noticed, you saw a ...rish, slightly paunchy man with thinning gray hair and spectacles, dressed usually in a light gray or brown suit. He would give the orders where and how to move the piano, before and after a soloist played a concerto. If you noticed carefully, you observed there was no wasted motion. All was accomplished quickly and effi- ently.

That was the sort of man Harvey Genereux was, and when he died last week at the age of 64, the Boston Symphony lost one of its most loyal staff members. Harvey left behind him a wealth of affection on the part of the many who knew him, and a good number of tales which testified to his character.

Boaz Piller, for many years bass-bassoonist but now retired a decade, told me yesterday of a typical generosity. ((As a noun in French, Genereux means generous.)

"Over many years," said Piller, "Harvey to me was only kindness, and to other people, too. He did many things to help Monteux, Koussevitsky and Munch in addition to making their batons.

"When the Finnish-Russian war broke out, I gathered about 900 pounds of food and clothing to send to friends of mine in Finland. Harvey stored it all in the basement of Symphony Hall, and then, every night after his regular work, for a week, I would meet him there and Harvey fashioned boxes, brought barrels, and packed all that food and clothing. If it had not been for Harvey, that shipment never could have been sent. He merely smiled that he was glad to do it."

Harvey was no plaster saint, and he had his crotchets. He could get angry, and thoroughly so. He also possessed a deep and unyielding sense of the dignity and importance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and no one was more loyal to it than he.

Twice during the trip abroad in 1956, which I had the good fortune to accompany, Harvey's resolute determination saved the Orchestra an unimaginable amount of difficulty. After the three concerts had been given in Moscow, followed by a party for the Boston Symphony, the Orchestra was scheduled to depart for Prague on a series of shuttle flights beginning at 2 a.m. Sunday.

Harvey, having noted Soviet methods (he had been shocked when Soviet women were detailed to carry heavy baggage up multiple flights of stairs because there was no freight elevator in the former Hall of the Nobles in Leningrad), was suspicious that they might foul up transportation of instruments and trunks.

Accordingly, he decided to fly with the baggage, not with the Orchestra personnel. He remained on the airport field until every last piece of Boston Symphony property was aboard, then flew alone with his responsibility.

About four days later, The Boston Symphony personnel flew from Prague to Vienna, and the baggage was routed by train. Everything should have arrived in plenty of time for a concert that night. But—the Czech border guard held up the car and placed armed soldiers around it. Harvey was aboard and played an important part in having the car attached to another train. The concert that night began only an hour late.

Few knew, apparently, that Harvey Genereux was musical. He sang tenor in church, and once at a Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, when the chorus was short on men, he joined the tenor section for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

HARVEY GENEREUX making baton for Koussevitsky at Symphony Hall several years ago.

Leslie Rogers, late librarian of the Boston Symphony once told me a yarn about Harvey, and I never knew whether Leslie was kidding. Anyway, it was about the so-called Wagner tubas, tenor tubas invented by Richard Wagner and which, when rarely used in symphonic music, are played by the horn section. A group of musicians —non-hornists—were discussing the Wagner tubas, and wondered what key they are pitched in. Leslie Rogers said that Harvey was passing by and overheard them. "B-flat," he promptly answered!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

FEB 10 1962

Many Attend Genereux Rites

A solemn High Mass of requiem for Harvey Genereux, 64, of 59 Beaufort Ave., Needham, stage manager for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was celebrated at 10 a.m. yesterday at St. Bartholomew's Church, Needham. He died Tuesday.

Attending the services were many members and officials of the orchestra, including Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees.

Others included Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager; Leonard Burkat, Rosario Mazzeo, James J. Brosnahan, Edward Charron, Frank X. Cunniff, Edith Bossler, Dorothy Lyons, and Dorothy Sullivan.

230

From Ashes, a Future

Boston

By Nobuo Abiko

Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

IN AN AGE constantly berated for its low cultural taste and its predilection for sheer entertainment, an educational television and radio station is discovering that it has had "a far greater impact than we had any reason to believe."

From a handful of cents contributed by a small boy forgoing his week's candy and ice cream, as well as from $10,000 checks sent by anonymous donors, WGBH—Boston's educational TV and FM station—is learning how much its community values it.

It was just six short weeks ago that a sudden early-morning fire, of origin still unknown, swept the station, leveling its studios and destroying or damaging thousands of dollars' worth of radio and television equipment and taped materials.

It was a stunning blow to a station which has become, in one brief decade, the hub of both an educational radio and television network which will ultimately link stations from the Maine-Canadian border to the District of Columbia.

Stations Offer Facilities

But if the catastrophe came swiftly, the public response which followed came almost as quickly.

While the wreckage "was still warm," a station official recalls, Boston's commercial stations had offered the use of their facilities. Large numbers of volunteers pitched in with the station's staff to salvage tapes, equipment, and office files from the fire and to move them to temporary new quarters in a crowded office building.

Various organizations donated all kinds of used furniture—including a woman's dressing table—to equip the new offices. In answer to pleas broadcast over WGBH-FM, a legion of listeners donated homemade tapes of programs previously broadcast and scheduled for later reruns. One long-time supporter even donated his entire personal studio of hi-fi equipment, worth thousands of dollars, for the station's use.

Finally, in response to the station's announcement of a $1,500,000 rebuilding drive, donations began pouring in—some from as far away as England, the Netherlands, and Hawaii.

Most surprising has been the heartwarming response of WGBH's younger viewers.

Her students' donations, wrote a junior high school principal from Newton Center, Mass., represented "voluntary sacrifice" in many cases, "such as one pupil choosing to go without lunches," and another postponing his haircut for a week.

To date, WGBH has collected $365,000 from some 11,000 contributors. Of this total—which compares with the 14,300 who contributed all of last year, WGBH's biggest year—about 50 per cent are "people we had not heard from previously," reports Hartford N. Gunn Jr., general manager of the station.

Proximity to Opportunity

"It lifts us to a whole new plateau of support," enthuses David O. Ives, assistant general manager for fund-raising and community relations, who hopes "to get 30,000-35,000 names on the books" by the end of the campaign. Insurance, incidentally, is expected to cover one-third of the rebuilding costs.

Since its debut some 6½ years ago—May 2, 1955—as New England's first educational television (ETV) station, WGBH-TV has attained a position of national prominence. Already it is well on the way to fulfilling the hopes and expectations voiced by Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard University, during the station's initial fund-raising campaign.

Panel discussions—a staple of ETV

"Television is, for good or evil, going to make more impact on human minds than any earlier means of communication," said Harvard's president. "In view of this situation, it seems to me clearly important that an effort be made to establish throughout the country a system of educational television. . . .

"Boston is certainly one of the educational centers of the world. . . . If there is a likelihood that any community can make something out of an educational television station, it would seem that Boston ought to be the one to do it."

As Mr. Ives points out, "the basic cause" of WGBH's prominence is its close association with such neighboring educational and cultural institutions as Harvard, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and the New England Conservatory of Music. In all, 12 such institutions are banded together as the Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council. They contribute a little less than half of the station's publicly raised operating capital.

And they have made possible the station's distinguished programing, which includes such features as a series of public affairs discussions moderated by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, in-school TV courses in French and nature study, live Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, programs from the Museum of Fine Arts and the Museum of Science, and college-level credit courses in literature, drama, psychology, and other subjects.

'Fourth Network'

When WGBH-TV debuted in 1955, it was one of but 12 ETV stations scattered throughout the United States. Today there are close to 60. All are affiliated with the National Educational Television and Radio Center in New York City (NET).

Through nationwide distribution of film, kinescope, and video-tape materials, many of them produced on order from its affiliates, NET constitutes a "fourth network" for the nation's viewers.

It is no small achievement then that WGBH today ranks as NET's foremost contributor, producing "four times as much" national programing as its nearest competitor, according to David M. Davis, assistant general manager for TV at WGBH.

In addition, WGBH is the hub of a burgeoning Eastern Educational TV Network (EEN), which envisions an ultimate live linkage of stations from the Maine-Canadian border to Washington, D.C., and west to Pennsylvania and Buffalo, N.Y. At present the network includes only two other ETV stations—in New Hampshire and Maine. The latter was inaugurated but two weeks ago.

The projected EEN is a counterpart of the Educational Radio Network (ERN), centered on WGBH-FM, which just last week received a $40,000 grant from the United States Office of Education. It currently connects six stations.

Many Awards Won

WGBH's six-year rise to national stature has been suitably accompanied by numerous TV and radio awards. Only last April, the station captured more television awards than any other station or network in the highly rated Ohio State University competition. In news commentator Louis M. Lyons, curator of the Nieman Fellowships at Harvard, it boasts a winner of broadcasting's top prize, the George Foster Peabody Award.

(Incidentally, like 75 per cent of WGBH's performers, Mr. Lyons has volunteered his talents free of charge to the station. Without such altruism, station officials state, they could never hope to put on the high-quality programs they have been able to in the face of the station's restricted budget.)

The national recognition accorded WGBH reached its apogee when Newton N. Minow, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, in testimony before a Senate subcommittee on ETV, called the station "probably the best channel in the country."

Crisis Far From Over

What next? Despite the encouraging rate of current public response, WGBH officials warn that the crisis is far from over.

The present arrangements, they emphasize, are strictly makeshift.

Live programs now originate from the (Roman) Catholic Television Center in Boston, while the more elaborate productions for NET distribution are done at a studio loaned by commercial station WHDH-TV, Channel 5.

The latter arrangement, however, expires next June. And WGBH has already been asked not to contract any further production commitments. Such curtailment of programing for NET would eliminate an important source of income, officials point out, and would start the station on a lingering decline.

"Our major problem is to maintain production facilities," says Mr. Davis. Producing national programing for NET is "a very basic part of our operation," adds Mr. Ives.

"If we are going to continue on a long-range basis," insists Mr. Gunn, "we must have our own studios. An organization can temporize only so far; then it loses its significance."

Mr. Gunn sets one year as the absolute limit for obtaining new studios. And they will be built, not found. Mr. Gunn points out that it took him nine months in 1954 to find the old studio, which the station outgrew "several times over" within three years.

In fact, at the very moment of the fire, WGBH officials were planning a campaign for new facilities. Obsolete facilities, Mr. Gunn relates, had become a heavy financial and technical burden, costing increasingly more to maintain while offering no room for creative elaboration in program quality.

Now, with the fire, operation is even more drastically hampered. WGBH productions, says Mr. Gunn, are limited in scenery and in the number of cameras, props, and special effects. Furthermore, the distance between temporary facilities has inflicted "terrific wear and tear" on the station's already understaffed personnel.

"Communications problems are terrific when you have people spread all over town," says Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis sets Sept. 1, 1962, as the target date for construction of WGBH's own studio. Mr. Gunn says he may have to settle for "a blockhouse—just four walls and a roof," around which offices and other necessary additions can be built later. The station has already received several offers of land, including offers from Harvard and Northeastern Universities, but has reached no final decision.

Twofold Consequences

In view of WGBH's expansion plans previous to the Oct. 14 fire, the consequences are twofold.

On one hand, says Mr. Ives, disaster has forced the station into "a whole lot of desperate decisions." It has eliminated the advantages of "a steady, slow, dogged campaign" as planned earlier.

Yet, on the other hand, "We will never have the public sympathy we have now," says Mr. Ives. "The first has surely shocked the whole community to the importance of our enterprise."

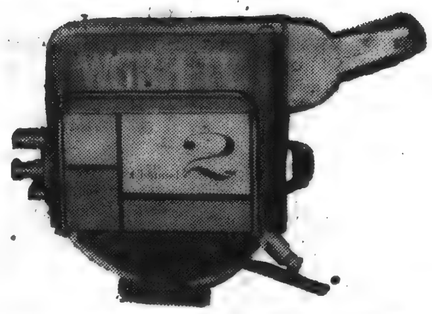
If the fire has lent dramatic assistance to an expansion drive which might otherwise have lacked appeal (wrote one typical contributor, "I am one of those sluggish souls who 'always meant to support' your station, but it has taken this recent disaster to move me to action"), it may also "have endangered the whole future of the station."

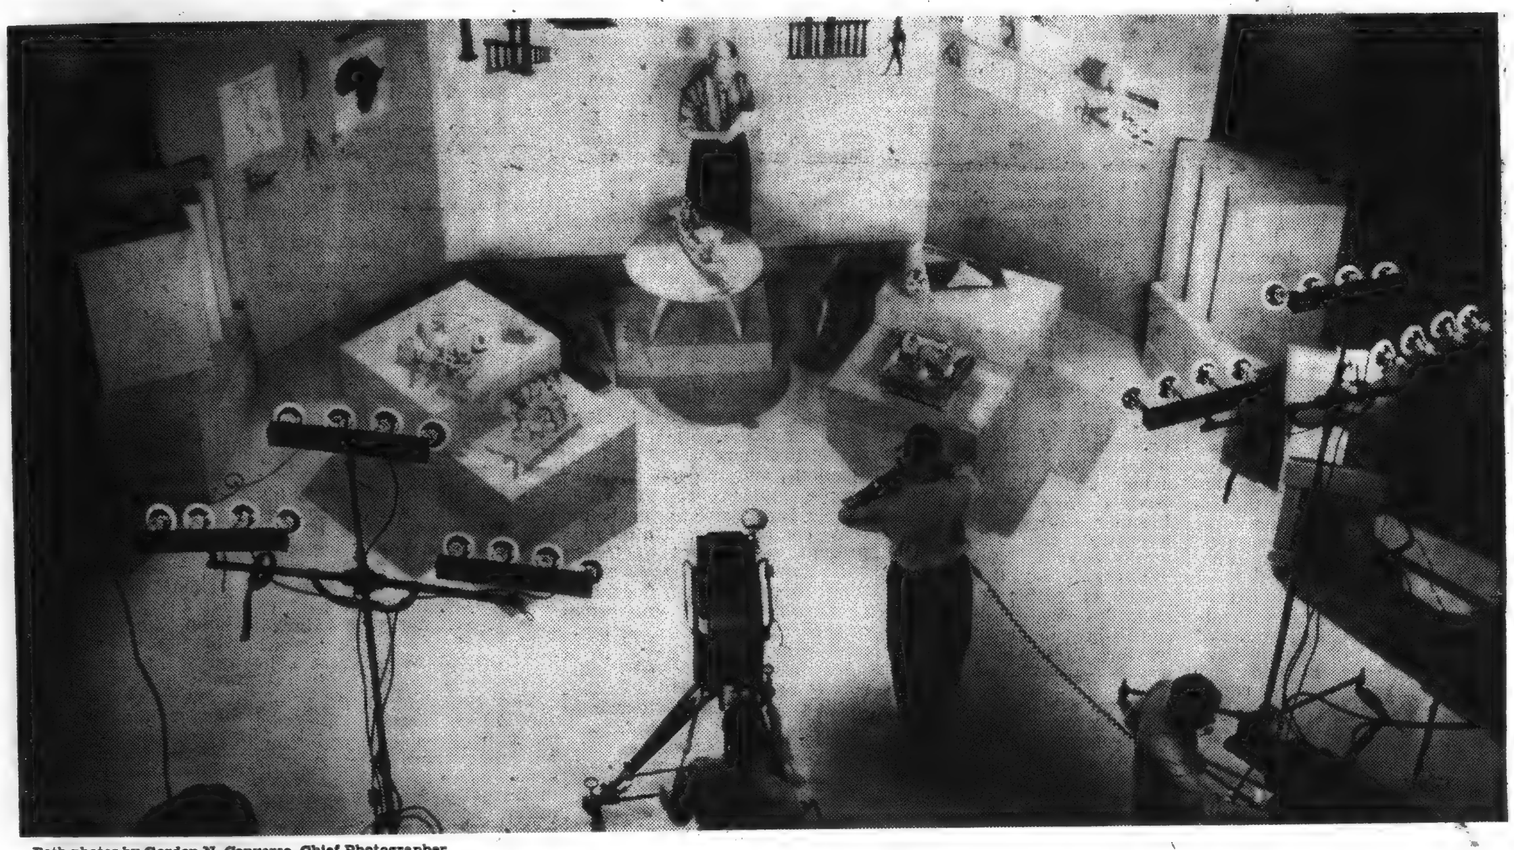
"The great danger," warns Mr. Ives, "is that we may have to continue on a reduced scale, being compelled to throw things on the air just to keep going."

W.G.B.H. Benefits

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 29 1961

Response to disaster dramatizes public appreciation of notable cultural contribution of Boston's TV-FM station WGBH.





Both photos by Gordon N. Converse, Chief Photographer

An evening art program for boys and girls, featuring life in ancient Egypt, goes into production

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 25 1961

Conservatory Maps Aid to WGBH

James Aliferis, president of the New England Conservatory, has announced a campaign by students, faculty, and administration of his school to enlist funds for fire-destroyed station WGBH.

Beginning with the first of a series of five Conservatory Symphony Orchestra concerts this Thursday, Oct. 26, at 8:30, donations will be received at the doors for the restoration of the educational radio-television station. The conservatory presents approximately 15 concerts throughout the year in Jordan Hall.

"As one of the twelve members of Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council," Dr. Aliferis said, "our long association with WGBH has been extremely fruitful. WGBH has broadcast our faculty recitals and lectures, our concerts and our operas. Therefore, the faculty and students of the conservatory have pledged a yearly musical contribution in support of the station's one and one-half million dollar fund drive."

The central project of the conservatory's campaign for WGBH will be a benefit concert scheduled for Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19. This will include presentations by faculty members, as well as works by the student chorus and orchestra.

"Frederick Jagel, Jeanne Graf, Mac Morgan, Miklos Schwalb, and others have enthusiastically agreed to perform in the November benefit concert," Dr. Aliferis said.

The alumni of the conservatory, after a meeting last week, announced that their part in the large-scale project will be a presentation to Ralph Lowell at the Nov. 19 concert.

For their share, students of the Conservatory have made plans to visit area music stores to enlist contributions of books, records, and scores for a raffle to be held in November, the proceeds going to WGBH.

Special students—those who take at least one course or private lessons at the Conservatory but are not working for a degree — will receive pledge cards for donations.

"All of us at 290 Huntington Avenue are engaged in aiding WGBH in finding the right home for its studio," Dr. Aliferis stated. "Of course we can never replenish the tape recordings which were so valuable, but we are pledged to support their fund in any way we can. We hope that soon they will be functioning 100 per cent. May our moral support encourage them to know that they are not alone in their struggle to return to their excellent production of educational broadcasting."

For the November benefit, invitations will be sent to the other 11 members of the Lowell Institute. This includes Harvard, MIT, Brandeis, Boston College, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston University, Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of Science, Northeastern University, Tufts, and Lowell Institute.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 19 1961

TICKETS FOR SYMPHONY will be the prize awarded in a contest sponsored by students at the New England Conservatory of Music for the benefit of Channel 2, WGBH-TV. Kicking off the contest was Dr. Charles Munch, shown with students, Robin Hendrich, left, and Frances Zak.

232

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,800
DEC 2 8 1961

W.G.B.H., A Public Responsibility

The Twentieth Century Fund's gift of $125,000 toward the rebuilding of the W.G.B.H. educational radio and T.V. station is good news to that station's many admirers. This brings the rebuilding account to a more hopeful $550,000, approximately one-third of the money needed to rebuild.

And on the local scene we have the the equally good news that the Winchester Rotary Club has voted unanimously to donate $200 to the rebuilding fund. Rotary is hopeful that other service organizations both in Winchester and in other towns will follow suit.

The Star hopes not only that individual contributions from Winchester will continue to help W.G.B.H. get a new home, but also that generous grants from other foundations will push the fund-raising drive way over the top. Here, indeed, is an educational cause that is the proper concern of all public and private organizations, and it would seem to us that no organization could contribute to a cause more worthy.

Certainly if we can spend over a million dollars on a single missile without batting an eyelash, we should be able to raise a million and one half dollars for education, which remains our final defense and the soundest basis for peace. W.G.B.H., a non-commercial station entirely dependent on the generosity of civic-minded people, should not have to go a-begging for assistance in Massachusetts which has a goodly share of wealthy towns inhabited by educated people. Winchester's responsibility here is plain. Our average income is $8,109, as opposed to a national average of $6,723 and a state average of $7,511.

* * *

Without W.G.B.H. Channel 2 and F.M. radio, Winchester's cultural life would be immeasurably poorer. That is to say: without Boston Symphony concerts from Symphony Hall or Tanglewood; without the station's innumerable academic panels on which one hears lively, informed and uncompromising debate among some of the world's top authorities; or without such programs as the book review presented by Dr. Duhamel of Boston College, Alan Watts' lectures on Oriental philosophy, or the recent exchange on nuclear war between Harvard's Professor H. Stuart Hughes and Rand analyst Herman Kahn.

We would suppose, too, that Winchester shared our admiration for the Robert Herridge Theatre and for the utterly wonderful Open End. We would also say that our day is enriched by newscaster Louis Lyons' Harvardized twang reporting on world affairs, by William Pierce's sophisticated comments on the symphony, and by Bill Cavness' polished reading of such classics as "Dr. Zhivago" and "Cold Comfort Farm." What a breath of cultural fresh air is W.G.B.H.!

* * *

In addition, W.G.B.H. provides televised classroom assistance to some 250,000 school children. Its programming of music, although decidedly "symphohic" in emphasis, satisfies a sophisticated interest in the classical jazz idiom, as well. The weekly jazz show presented by Fr. O'Connor of B. U., for example, has won more than regional acclaim.

Enriched by the Boston and Cambridge area's vast educational resources, W.G.B.H. is a source of enlightenment and pride to everyone who respects culture. The Star again urges everyone who believes in education to give as much as he can to help the station rebuild. In an access of Victorian pride a Bay State poet once called Boston the "Hub of the Universe." W.G.B.H. has helped make this assertion something more than a provincial boast. Because it has, we should support it. (P.W.S.)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
NOV 1 0 1961

Society:

Milton Party to Precede Harvard-Princeton Game

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A real Ivy League party tonight will precede tomorrow's Harvard-Princeton game, the pennants and the party-goers lining the Milton Hoosic Club's attractive ballroom. Dinner will be at 8:30, with dancing continuing until 1 o'clock. A windup party for the gala weekend will be a Sunday buffet lunch at the Club, and chairmen for both the dinner-dance and the luncheon are Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Watson Jr. and Dr. and Mrs. Alfred L. Hurst.

Giving cocktail parties before the dance tonight are Mr. and Mrs. John L. Bremer 2d, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Sawyer, and Mr. and Mrs. William Musgrave. Sunday buffet guests will include the H. M. Steel Swifts, the William Baileys, and the Robert Codys.

★ ★

MAILING 7000 invitations tomorrow for a benefit concert Dec. 8 by the Zimbler Sinfonietta, will be Mrs. W. Ray Kitchel and a senior and junior committee who are meeting at the French Center to complete this big-scale mailing. Honorary committee members include Boston Symphony's Charles Munch, Henry B. Cabot, Mme Serge Koussevitzky, Prof. Eugene Blackman, Mrs. Helen Zimbler, Dr. Asa Knowles, Thomas D. Perry Jr., and juniors include Beaver Country Day Schoolers Laurence and Carol Kitchel, and Rebecca Portnoi whose father Henry Portnoi, is co-chairman of the benefit with Mrs. Kitchel. Mrs. Bernard Bignier, Mrs. George Florin, Miss Jane Pierce and Mrs. Carl Washburn are others.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 9 1961

Boston Symphony Players Assist WGBH Fund Drive

By Louis Chapin

WGBH had some more rebuilders on the job last night. The Zimbler Sinfonietta gave a benefit concert in the Alumni Auditorium at Northeastern University; while there were some seats to spare, about 1,200 people did come to lend their hands to the work.

Constructive is certainly the word for this project, from the points of view of the performers and their audience almost as much as from that of WGBH itself (burned to the ground Oct. 14). The string orchestra and Channel 2 have been collaborating off and on for about 10 years, and even now plans are afoot for a series of television tapes illustrating the conductorless group's rehearsal techniques. Many of the audience, of course, have been enjoying the collaboration.

* * *

Last night they were given a comfortable program with nothing to unsettle conservative confidence. Yet the names of Tansman and Stravinsky were there, sandwiched between Corelli and Vivaldi.

The 17 Boston Symphony players (reduced by one first violin from the usual complement) opened with a suite drawn from Arcangelo Corelli's violin sonatas and arranged for string orchestra by Ettore Pinelli within the last century. The playing was romantic and relaxed, somewhat more in the arranger's than the composer's stylistic milieu. This was notably true of the Mendelssohnian feather-whispers in the closing Badinerie.

* * *

Alexander Tansman's "Triptych," from 1930, was also concerned with the special business of strings, its outer movements generally brisk and syncopated, its central Andante (and parts of the final Presto) speaking in the friendly melodic and harmonic way.

"Apollon Musagète" by Igor Stravinsky shows a neo-classically conservative phase of this many-faceted composer. Commissioned as a ballet score for the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Music Festival of 1928, it illustrates in its "white" instrumentation and choreographic pattern the severe emotionless discipline which the composer had then set himself, as against his earlier vividness. The Sinfonietta, however, let some good-natured warmth slip into it, and Stravinsky's austerities became a sequence of dances of mild and pleasing precision.

The familiar D minor Concerto by Antonio Vivaldi, who, like Corelli, was a founding father of string technique, brought forward the solo duet of George Zazofsky and Harry Ellis Dickson. Mr. Zazofsky is music director of this ensemble (established originally by the late Josef Zimbler), and he and his fellow-members were happily applauded for a pleasant and constructive evening.

233

Mrs. Hirshman

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 25 1961

MRS. HENRIETTA HIRSHMAN WHEELED INTO COURT
Aged N. Y. Woman Was Badly Beaten Here in Robbery
(Record American Photo by Morris Ostroff)

Crippled Woman Points to Attacker

Crippled six months ago by a handbag snatcher, Mrs. Henrietta Hirshman, 76, sat in a wheel chair in Suffolk Superior Court Tuesday and pointed at her alleged assailant in the prisoner's dock and declared: "That's the man there. He did it."

Her finger pointed at Jerome A. Barefoot, 29, of Columbus ave., South End, who was chased and captured near where Mrs. Hirshman was knocked to the ground near Massachusetts and Westland aves., the night of last April 27 and robbed of about $30.

Mrs. Hirshman, who is secretary to Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was confined to Beth Israel Hospital for three months and has been living in New York City with her son for the past three months.

She was flown to Boston for the trial and taken to the courthouse in an ambulance and then wheeled into court.

sailant pushed her violently to the ground and hit her when she tried to scream. She suffered a fractured hip and a shoulder fracture and has been unable to walk since the assault, she testified.

Barefoot, who has been confined to Charles Street Jail in lie u of $20,000 bail ever since his capture, has pleaded innocent.

Atty. Edgar Rimbold, of the Mass. Defenders Committee, cross-questioned Mrs. Hirshman and drew from her an admission that the only description she gave police of her assailant was that "he was a colored man."

But, under Rimbold's questioning, she insisted she got "a very clear look at his face," and added that it was the defendant.

Barefoot watched the witness closely from the moment she entered the courtroom and was wheeled in front of an all-male jury.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 26 1961

Hub Man Jailed in Theft From Cripple

Found guilty by an all-male jury in 20 minutes of the robbery of a handbag and $30 last April from Mrs. Henrietta Hirschman, 76, who suffered near fatal injuries in the assault and since has been confined to a wheelchair, Jerome A. Barefoot, 29, of 455 Columbus ave., was given a minimum State Prison sentence, Wednesday, in Suffolk Superior Court.

A 2½ to 3-year sentence was imposed by Judge Edward O. Gourdin, which means Barefoot will be eligible for release in a little over six months, in consideration of six months he spent in Charles st. Jail awaiting trial.

Mrs. Hirschman, formerly a resident of the Hemenway Hotel, Westland ave., Back Bay, while she was employed as a secretary by Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, went to New York to stay with her son after long hospitalization for fractures of the hip and shoulder and other injuries.

She was flown to Boston over the weekend and taken in a wheelchair and ambulance to a hotel and the court.

Mrs. Hirschman testifying from her wheel chair on Tuesday identified Barefoot as her assailant.

Barefoot, who said he attended Howard University in Washington, D. C., and came to Boston to go to school testified he was unable to continue his education because he failed to find employment.

He denied attacking Mrs. Hirschman, but said he saw the purse on the ground, grabbed it and ran.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
OCT 26 1961

Hub Robber Gets 2½-3 Yrs.

Boston —(UPI)— A jury deliberated only 20 minutes yesterday before convicting Jerome A. Barefoot, 29, of the robbery of the elderly secretary to Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Barefoot was sentenced immediately to 2½ to 3 years in Walpole State Prison by Superior Court Judge Edward O. Gourdin.

The robbery victim, Mrs. Henrietta Hirshman, 76, crippled in the accompanying assault, sat in a wheelchair in the courtroom Tuesday and pointed to the defendant, declaring, "That's the man. He did it."

Barefoot was captured near the robbery scene last April 27. Since then he had been held in Charles Street Jail.

were hap-
a pleasant
ening.

BLANK PAGE

Symphony Personnel Concerts

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

APR 13 1962

Evolution of Drum

On Saturday, at 11, Arthur Press, percussionist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a demonstration performance entitled "Evolution of the Drum" at the Brattle Theater in Cambridge.

On the same day, the performance will be repeated at 2:30 at the First Unitarian Church in Concord.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

FEB 4 1962

Wellesley Community Group Fine Example Of Real Achievement

By CYRUS DURGIN

We Americans, for all our emphasis upon making money and getting ahead, are in possession of cultural assets. They were not given to us, either; we earned them. Especially is this true, I believe, in music. Over the past two generations local orchestras by the hundreds, largely amateur but with semiprofessionals in many of them, have come into being all over most of our 50 states. These local orchestras, which represent the collective effort of citizens of all ages, social, economic and occupational brackets, are among the most valuable of our cultural assets.

★ ★ ★

The Wellesley Community Orchestra, which on Friday night will present the mid-Winter concert of its 13th season, in the Wellesley Junior High School Auditorium at 8:30, is a close-at-hand fine example of real achievement. It is among numerous praiseworthy local orchestras of this part of New England, and I happen to know more about it because I have been closer to it in recent years than to others.

The Conductor

The dictum that a professional orchestra is only as good as its conductor, is applicable in part to amateurs. Wellesley enjoys the great benefit of having had from the inception of its orchestra, Rolland Tapley as conductor. A first violin of the Boston Symphony, an artist of solo caliber, Mr. Tapley is a musician of learning, high gifts and authority. He is also conductor of the North Shore Philharmonic in Lynn and of the New Hampshire Philharmonic in the Granite State city of Manchester. He is unusually well equipped by temperament to draw the most and the best from amateur instrumentalists.

These factors, together with the individual ability of the Wellesley players, have made possible over a dozen seasons, performance of a surprisingly wide repertory of symphonic movements, concertos, overtures and miscellaneous pieces from the literature of the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries. That so much has been done so well is the surest proof and highest recommendation of their work together.

Because of this, the Wellesley Community Orchestra further has enjoyed visits of eminent professionals as guest conductors and soloists, including Arthur Fiedler and the new Boston Symphony concertmaster-designate, Joseph Silverstein. Next Friday night Noah Bielski, also of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist in the D major Paganini Violin Concerto.

The Meaning

What has all this meant to Wellesley? For the public, it has meant a source of listening pleasure; for the musicians, an outlet for their personal abilities and for their devotion to the making of music, which in itself is great pleasure; for the entire community, it has wrought what is often called a "cultural tone." Frankly, I believe that any city or town which supports a local orchestra, is for that reason superior.

Like a cherished flower garden, an orchestra creates beauty where there was none before. Who are these creators in Wellesley? Citizens, not necessarily plain, who earn their living in other ways than music. Of course there are doctors and dentists in the Wellesley Community Orchestra—medical men, as a profession, I have found to be among the most dedicated to music.

Going down the roster, you find students—from B. U., B. C., the New England and Boston Conservatories, Beaver Country Day and Wellesley College. You find a secretary, a tax lawyer, piano tuner, a decorator, a veepee of a big Boston bank; a mechanic, librarian, a specialist in public school music; a military chemical engineer, civil engineer, computer research machinist, press operator, school planning consultant, a retired professor of philosophy, telephone company employee, dairy sales manager, member of the Salvation Army, mill foreman, orchid grower, insurance clerk—and numerous wives who take time for music after they have spent the day caring for home and family.

Financing

Where under the sun would you find any other avocation that brings together, in friendship and a common love for utilizing ability, so many people of all sorts? Music is what does it, and I believe that where you find good music you find good citizens.

They do not get paid for this. Their concerts are free. The Wellesley Recreation Commission provides certain services but the financing comes from dues paid by members of the orchestra and patrons, and from advertising in the program books. I wish all cities and towns would recognize the value of their community orchestras by voting them funds for essential expenses.

The conductor naturally must be paid—that is the way he earns his living. But it takes money also to buy music stands, to buy or rent scores and instrumental parts, and some other incidentals. It takes less, however, than water and sewer systems, fire and police, highways and playgrounds.

Enjoy CYRUS DURGIN in the daily Globe, too. To have the morning or evening Globe home delivered, call AVenue 8-8000 any time.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 63,288

JAN 26 1962

De Pasquale's Pianist Listed

Miss Vosgerchian With Violist Here

In his viola concert here Sunday for the Friends of Music, Joseph de Pasquale will be accompanied by the noted pianist, Louise Vosgerchian.

The program by Mr. de Pasquale will be at 8:30 p. m. at Keith Junior High School. A reception for the artist will be held following the concert.

This is the final concert in the 1961-62 series sponsored by the Friends of Music. Leo Berkowitz is chairman of the sponsoring committee.

Mr. de Pasquale will open his program with "Concerto in B Minor" by Antonio Vivaldi and follow with "Sonata Op. 120, No. 1," by Johannes Brahms.

The program will be concluded with "Four Pieces for Viola and Piano, Op. 113," by Robert Schumann, and "Sonata Op. 11, No. 4" by Paul Hindemith.

Violist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several years, Mr. de Pasquale has been widely acclaimed for his work with the orchestra and his concert engagements.

Miss Vosgerchian has been described by critics as "a pianist with virtuoso talent and a first-rate musical mind," and by Rudolph Serkin as "one of the finest musicians anywhere." A preceptor in music at Harvard University, she has had success here and abroad as a concert pianist and as soloist with the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony.

Recognized also as a composer, she was awarded the Salabert prize in composition in Paris in 1954. In 1961 three of her works were performed over WNYC in New York.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400

JAN 28 1962

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

When Joseph de Pasquale offers a recital tonight at 8:30 in Keith Junior High School Auditorium, the concluding program of the current Friends of Music Series, the audience will be hearing one of the outstanding violists of our day. Mr. de Pasquale, no stranger to these concerts, has an enviable musical background. After receiving his early training in music from his father, a professional, Mr. de Pasquale studied at the Curtis Institute under the great violist, William Primrose. During World War II, he learned to play the trumpet and performed both in the U. S. Marine Band and the Marine Orchestra. After the war, he played with the ABC Orchestra, and, in 1947, became first violist of the Boston Symphony (he was only 27 at the time) under Serge Koussevitsky. Since then, Mr. de Pasquale has established a solid reputation among the nation's musicians. Not long ago, on a TV program, he appeared with his three brothers, all of whom also are members of major orchestras. The violist will be assisted tonight by pianist Luise Vosgerchian.

EARL J. DIAS

Still 'Way Out—Modern Music Played, Explained

HAROLD FARBERMAN began the second season of the New Arts Orchestra, Inc., with a lecture concert on and of modern music, in Boston Conservatory Auditorium last night. Excerpts were heard from the following: "Le Marteau Sans Maitre," Boulez; "Pierrot Lunaire," Schoenberg; Serenade, Schoenberg; Goethe-Lieder, Dallapiccola; Three Little Pieces for Cello, Webern; Sequenza, Berio; Octandre, Varese. Principal soloists were Eleanor Davis, soprano, and John Jerras, flute.

BY CYRUS DURGIN

Harold Farberman, percussionist of the Boston Symphony, composer and most prominent avant gardist of these parts, attempted the impossible at Boston Conservatory Auditorium, last night. This was a concert of modern music and a spoken explanation of what makes it what it is.

Since the program ranged from Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire" of 1912, Anton Webern's Three-Little Pieces for Cello, of 1914, down to Boulez's "Le Marteau Sans Maitre" of 1958, it is plain that any comprehensive dissertation would have taken much more time.

The total effect was of crushing boredom and of the obscurity which comes of fragmentary information and disconnected continuity. Though Farberman had set up two blackboards full of notation and form charts, he did not get very far in stating the gospel of 12-tone and other technical aspects of music written in our time.

The music spoke for itself—Boulez's ingrown, picking style, and that of Berio's sound-effects flute piece, all out of Webern, whose own cello music pecks and rasps. This stuff is all ingrown, narcissistic musical fabrication, not creation. It is the trashy clutter of an artistic dead-end alley, where little details and intellectual theory, plus a burning desire for recognition, disregard that one talent which governs the stature and fate of art: talent.

There is nothing alive here, nothing seminal, nothing of the vigor and variety of life, nothing passionate, human and emotional.

By comparison, the vigorous thumpings and snorts of Edgar Varese's Octandre is an experimental masterpiece.

Something these piddling fabricators have not learned is that experimentation in timbres and instrumental resources does not by itself produce musical communication. Useful products of experiment will be absorbed into the living body of creation, the rest will wither.

This stuff is still 'way out, and queer. Did Bach think it necessary to explain fugues which today sound young at the age of 200 years and more? And do any of these exegesists ever bother to attempt explanation of the one fruitful modern still living who leads all the rest—Paul Hindemith? They do not!

236

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT
D. 115,710

MAR 12 1962

Virginian-Pilot Photo by Abourilie

For a violinist a Strad, and for a cellist a Goffriller. Peter Schenkman and wife Judy believe his five-year search for his 17-century Italian instrument was more than worth it.

Symphony Wins, Red Sox Losers

By ROBERT C. RAMAGE
Virginian-Pilot Staff Writer

NORFOLK — The sharp smack of a hard-hit baseball stopping suddenly and safely in the gloved left hand of a shortstop.

The educated, fluid movement of strong fingers on the stringed neck of a violoncello.

Ten years ago, 14-year-old Peter Schenkman found both these things compellingly attractive and hopelessly incompatible.

He wanted both, but he could have only one.

RIGHT DECISION

Now Schenkman, 24, looks occasionally at the quarter-inch thickness of the calluses that tip the fingers of his left hand and smiles because he made the right decision.

Had the hand kept its baseball glove, the fingers would look different.

The calluses rose on his fingertips because day in, day out, for the 10 years since he made his choice between Bach and baseball, five hours a day, the fingers have fought the biting tensile strength of a cello's strings.

Schenkman wasn't the kind of ball player who makes the big leagues.

But he is the kind of cello player who can go that high.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Schenkman chose the cello. Now he has been signed to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the top three orchestras in the country.

The life of a professional musician is not an easy, somehow Bohemian, affair as the layman often thinks.

Schenkman knew that when he decided he would be a cellist.

His parents, Edgar Schenkman, conductor of the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Schenkman, were violinists.

"Perhaps I picked the cello because I wanted to make a start towards forming a family string quartet," young Schenkman said at rehearsal Sunday.

NO JEST

But there is nothing frivolous in his approach to his profession. The calluses are too thick to be a jest.

The climax of his training as a budding professional musician was four years at Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

In the summer of 1958, he was invited to play at the Marleboro, Vt., festival of music. He accepted and won himself a bride and another professional advance.

His bride was flautist Judy Lyons, like Schenkman a New Yorker, who also played at Marleboro. And the advance was an invitation to play at the Pablo Casals Festival in Puerto Rico in 1959.

Schenkman is currently a professional soldier as well as a professional musician. He is nearing the end of a three-year hitch during which he has been playing with the U.S. Army Band.

But civilian or soldier, for five hours each day, seven days a week, he must practice, rehearse, master new material and toughen the fingertip calluses.

His father, has won much admiration for the great demands he makes of himself and his musicians. His son is no less demanding of himself.

For five years, he has been trying to find a cello which to cellists is what a Stradivarius is to a violinists. He traveled the country, examined and rejected 25 superb instruments.

RIGHT INSTRUMENT

Then William Moenaing & Sons, musical instrument company of Philadelphia, found an early 18th century cello in Switzerland and offered it to Schenkman. It was a Goffriller, the cello equivalent of a Strad. Enlisted musician Schenkman now owns and plays it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired a new conductor, Eric Leinsdorf. There were fewer applicants for possession of the baton than for the right to sit in the orchestra's cello section.

Twenty-five other top-flight musicians auditioned besides Schenkman. But it was Schenkman who was accepted into the company of the great.

NOT NERVOUS

He is completely undismayed by the thought of moving in this circle. "No, I'm not the least bit nervous," he told a questioner.

Does he feel he has the potential to be a Casals? "Maybe when I'm 80," he said.

Just now he wants to learn himself as intimately as he wants to learn his cello.

FREE CHOICE

Schenkman's father never urged him into music, never required him to study a note, to touch a bow to a string.

The younger Schenkman will be his father's soloist at the Norfolk Symphony's concert in the Center Theater tonight at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are still on sale at the City Arena box office today, and tonight from 7:30 at the theater.

When the young cellist bows out from under his father's baton tonight, the conductor and the soloist alike will take a fierce professional pride in the fact that it was the boy, not the father, who decided the fingers should wear calluses instead of a baseball glove.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 2 8 1962

Roger Voisin De Cordova Soloist

Roger Voisin, principal trumpet player for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the guest soloist at the De Cordova Museum's gala benefit concert on Friday, March 23. The concert will be held at Cary Hall in Lexington and will benefit the De Cordova building fund. Following the performance there will be an after-the-concert party at the De Cordova and a preview of the Museum's new exhibition, "Prints by Pablo Picasso." Tickets for the concert and preview are available at the Museum.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. —
NOV 1 1961

FREE CONCERT AT LA SALLE

The Boston Percussion Ensemble, numbering seven Boston Symphony Orchestra members and with Harold Faberman conducting, will give a free concert Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. for Newton residents at Lasell Junior College.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 28 1962

Of Clarinets and Eiderducks

By ROBERT TAYLOR

ROSARIO MAZZEO, a graying, round-faced man with a bristling mustache, is known in haunts of Bach and Brahms and coot and tern.

He is bass clarinet with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and inventor of the Mazzeo System clarinet, which is coming into increasing use throughout the world. He is a photographer whose prints currently adorn the "Photography At Mid-Century' show at the DeCordova Museum, Lincoln. He is an ornithologist of high repute, who once spotted three northern phalarope, fairly rare here, from a Swan Boat in the Public Garden.

MAZZEO

And a lively conversationalist, one might add, whose tabletalk kindles all his enthusiasm. One might begin—as we did the other day—chatting about the frictionless clarinet, pass on to the themes that interest him as a photographer, and wind up discussing the winter headquarters of the eiderduck, which happens to be Monomoy.

★ ★ ★

"THE FRICTIONLESS CLARINET," said Mr. Mazzeo, "was an instrument that I played during the orchestra's visit to Australia last year. It had been made with industrial gems—a Mazzeo System clarinet, of course—and had a rare brilliancy.

"About five years ago I perfected the system as the successor to the Albert and Boehm Systems. Essentially it removes the break in the clarinet's tone color, and is becoming popular. The first major orchestra to use Mazzeo System clarinet was The Minneapolis Symphony: the entire clarinet section of the Moscow State Symphony recently selected it.

"The photography that I do has little relation to the Boston Symphony itself. At the DeCordova I show pictures of an egret, the Cathedral at Leningrad, a cross-section of a redwood stump. Naturally, I've shot pictures when the Symphony tours, but I'm much too busy as performer and personal manager, to use the orchestra as subject.

"The egret at the DeCordova, incidentally, came from an egret sanctuary established by the Japenese in the 16th century. When the Boston Symphony toured Japan, Roger Tory Peterson and I were lucky enough to visit this farm. I counted at least 20,000."

★ ★ ★

"HOW DO YOU COUNT large numbers of birds? In blocks." Rosarie Mazzeo framed out a segment. "'Julian Huxley once told me he was counting fulmars,' a kind of gull, in the Westman Islands off Iceland, and reached 500,000 before he stopped. I believe in watching birds on their ground; the Harlequin duck, for instance, occasionally appears around Gloucester or Marblehead, but is by no means a rarity in Iceland.

"Indeed, I think Iceland, of all the countries I've visited offers most in terms of birding, scenery, climbing: my three enthusiasms. They grow bananas in Reykjavik, you know, as a side effect of the Gulf Stream. Actually, the capital isn't very appealing, but once you go to a place like Myvtn Lake the experience is unforgettable. Outside Lake Baikal, I believe it's the world's foremost nesting ground for ducks.

'I usually observe the fall migrations despite the musical schedule. Among the best places was aboard a trawler 500 miles east of Gloucester: but I've also studied migrations from Mount Katahdin ,Mount Desert Island and Matinicus Rock.

"The most unusual experience I've ever had birding was that of the Manx shearwater I picked up on an island off Wales and fetched to Boston, banded and released. Ten days later he had made home, the arrival verified by two observers from Oxford.

"Now how did that bird know enough to distinguish home? It's the first time that a shearwater has ever homed from Boston. Questions like that keep ornithologists fascinated," said Rosaria Mazzeo. "Not to mention professional photographers and players of the clarinet. Did I tell you about the half-million eiderduck who annualily winter off Monomoy?"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,512
OCT 1962

Good Audience Hears Concert

"In the end it is the public who writes our history, who names the masterpieces and the great interpreters, and it is hard to please," wrote Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his book, "I Am A Conductor." An attentive and near capacity audience at the city auditorium was indeed pleased last night when the N. H. Philharmonic Orchestra, most skillfully conducted by Rolland Tapley, presented an ambitious concert under auspices of the Wesley Methodist church.

Any large symphony orchestra playing well is in reality a complicated and mighty musical instrument that needs somebody to "play it" and that is the conductor. Mr. Tapley, a leading first violinist of the Boston Symphony, did just this, guiding more than 70 musicians with a sweeping yet precise beat affected intermittently by a sudden or delicate nuance. The resultant interpretations showed good taste, imagination, and, above all, inspiration.

The Phedre Overture, written by Jules Massenet and performed in Paris for the first time on Dec. 8, 1900, opened the program. "Phedre," less known and perhaps somewhat weaker in the usual overture repertoire, still provided the orchestra with a suitable warm-up piece. Strong opening chords followed by a more subdued passage for winds and strings in the minor mode soon leaped into an allegro. Here the strings made a shaky transition that was quickly replaced by a strong lyric melody played in unison, with good ensemble and balance. The overture came to a close in the traditional manner except for a delightful additional cadence that came unexpectedly after what we thought were the final chords.

Do Nine Variations

The history of the following piece, Variations on a theme of Haydn, by Johannes Brahms, does not indicate that the theme was actually Haydn's. Whether it was or not did not upset Brahms, who utilized this good traditional tune in a form he had mastered in his youth—the theme with variations.

The Philharmonic produced a creditable rendition of the nine variations that perhaps started less securely than the overture. Despite the fact that the stage was too small and much sound was lost in the heavy draperies surrounding the stage, by the fourth variation intonation improved noticeably, and the orchestra appeared much more confident and eager to respond to the sensitivity of Mr. Tapley's conducting. This was especially apparent in the scherzo of the fifth variation and the quiet agitato of the eighth.

One of the highlights of the evening came just before intermission in the form of a Suite from the Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," by Walter Piston. These short movements, numbering 12, were written in collaboration with Hans Weiner, and were first performed with the Boston Pops and the Hans Weiner dancers on May 30 in 1938, with Arthur Feidler conducting.

Show Versatility

Changes in rhythm, color, tempo and texture brilliantly displayed the versatility of the orchestra. Flashes of solo instruments as well as full sonorous tutti combined to produce good orchestral ensemble. Evelyn Querfurth, solo flautist, confirmed the title of this suite by executing a difficult movement with clean articulation and pure controlled tone. From the dissonent tremolos in the opening movement, to the dog's bark at the end of the Circus March, to the Polka Finale, Piston treats his movements with humorous overtones of contemporary rhythms and harmonies that never completely materialize, as they do in his more serious works.

THE TANGLEWOOD QUINTET will be at Temple Beth El Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Women and Society

September 24, 1961
W-1
Providence Sunday Journal

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
APR 8 1962

SINFONIETTA WILL PERFORM AT UCONN

STORRS, Conn.—The Zimbler Sinfonietta, a versatile chamber ensemble composed of 17 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform at the University of Connecticut Wednesday at 8.15 p. m.

One of the high lights of the concert, which will be held in the Von der Mehden Recital Hall, will be a performance of Bach's "Piano Concerto in D minor," by Dr. Petter Juel-Larsen, a U of C professor who teaches music history.

Karl Zeise, one of the country's top cellists and member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was enthusiastically received in his performance of the new and richly Russian flavored Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, by Dmitri Kabalevsky. Written in 1948, this work was first performed in Moscow in 1952.

The first movement immedi... confirmed the fact that Mr. Zeise was in complete command of both his instrument and his music. This lightly scored concerto provided the artist with ample opportunities for exciting technique as was evident in the play between clarinet and cello in the Allegro and Andantino movements and the tricky double-stops and pizzicato's in the cadenza of the Largo. The latter was pepeated as an encore.

Plays Stradivari

An interesting observation reveals the fact that Mr. Zeise played on a Stradivari cello made in 1741, and used a bow made by Dominique Peccate in the middle of the 19th century that is valued at between six and seven hundred dollars.

The concert concluded with the Finale from Symphony No. 2 in D, by Sibelius.

A short address to the audience by orchestra president Carl Bartlett outlined the aim of the orchestra and its needs. The orchestra would like to provide amateur musicians of New Hampshrie with an opportunity to play good music for others in this state. In order to do this most effectively, it needs sponsors, musicians, and, of course, the support of the citizens of New Hampshire.

Even though the N. H. Philharmonic operates on the lowest of budgets, any lack of funds is more than made up by the skill of the members of this group and their enthusiasm for their art—an enthusiasm which speaks well for the future of good music in our state.

...local "Y".

—HENRY W. WEGIEL

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
OCT 1961

Boston Conservatory of Music News

The Boston Conservatory of Music announces the addition of Katja Andy to its piano faculty. Miss Andy is well known in Chicago where she was a member of the piano faculty at DePaul University. Before that she served fourteen years as the principal assistant to Edwin Fischer in his master classes at Berlin and Zurich. At the Boston Conservatory she will present a series of historical recitals, and teach advanced students in piano.

The Fenway Series, devoted to faculty and guest artists' recitals, has begun its impressive second season. This year sees the debut of the Gabrieli Trio, outstanding members of the Boston Symphony string section, now in residence at the Conservatory. Among other programs planned are a concert given to works in all media by the Canadian composer, Minuetta Kessler, Hindemith's Ludus Tonalis as presented by Allan Sly, ensembles from little-known operas, and cello-piano sonatas performed by Richard Kapuscinski and Robert Dumm.

Also new to the staff this year is John Moriarty, the young man who has made a fine name for his work as coach for the Santa Fe Opera Co. this year, and the Washington Opera.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

Boston—The Boston Civic Symphony will hold its first workshop for conductors late in April under the direction of Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Kansas City, Missouri—The Kansas City Philharmonic opened a new series of concerts at the University of Kansas City on January 31 with pianist Malcolm Frager as soloist. Sixteen members of the orchestra are on the faculty of the school.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
OCT 31 1961

Newton Concert

The Boston Percussion Ensemble wil give a free concert for Newton residents at Lasell Junior College tomorrow at 8 p.m. The group is made up of seven members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Harold Faberman as conductor.

They will give an explanation and demonstration of symphony and timpani instruments followed by the playing of a group of symphonic works. The invitation is extended by Lasell Junior College to Newton residents as an expression of the cordial relationship between them.

NOW APPEARING
10-61

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,512
JAN 22 1962

Good Audience Hears Concert

"In the end it is the public who writes our history, who names the masterpieces and the great interpreters, and it is hard to please," wrote Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his book, "I Am A Conductor." An attentive and near capacity audience at the city auditorium was indeed pleased last night when the N. H. Philharmonic Orchestra, most skillfully conducted by Rolland Tapley, presented an ambitious concert under auspices of the Wesley Methodist church.

Any large symphony orchestra playing well is in reality a complicated and mighty musical instrument that needs somebody to "play it" and that is the conductor. Mr. Tapley, a leading first violinist of the Boston Symphony, did just this, guiding more than 70 musicians with a sweeping yet precise beat affected intermittently by a sudden or delicate nuance. The resultant interpretations showed good taste, imagination, and above all, inspiration.

The Phedre Overture, written by Jules Massenet and performed in Paris for the first time on Dec. 8, 1900, opened the program. "Phedre," less known and perhaps somewhat weaker in the usual overture repertoire, still provided the orchestra with a suitable warm-up piece. Strong opening chords followed by a more subdued passage for winds and strings in the minor mode soon leaped into an allegro. Here the strings made a shaky transition that was quickly replaced by a strong lyric melody played in unison, with good ensemble and balance. The overture came to a close in the traditional manner except for a delightful additional cadence that came unexpectedly after what we thought were the final chords.

Do Nine Variations

The history of the following piece, Variations on a theme of Haydn, by Johannes Brahms, does not indicate that the theme was actually Haydn's. Whether it was or not did not upset Brahms, who utilized this good traditional tune in a form he had mastered in his youth—the theme with variations.

The Philharmonic produced a creditable rendition of the nine variations that perhaps started less securely than the overture. Despite the fact that the stage was too small and much sound was lost in the heavy draperies surrounding the stage, by the fourth variation intonation improved noticeably, and the orchestra appeared much more confident and eager to respond to the sensitivity of Mr. Tapley's conducting. This was especially apparent in the scherzo of the fifth variation and the quiet agitato of the eighth.

One of the highlights of the evening came just before intermission in the form of a Suite from the Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," by Walter Piston. These short movements, numbering 12, were written in collaboration with Hans Weiner, and were first performed with the Boston Pops and the Hans Weiner dancers on May 30 in 1938, with Arthur Feidler conducting.

Show Versatility

Changes in rhythm, color, tempo and texture brilliantly displayed the versatility of the orchestra. Flashes of solo instruments as well as full sonorous tutti combined to produce good orchestral ensemble. Evelyn Querfurth, solo flautist, confirmed the title of this suite by executing a difficult movement with clean articulation and pure controlled tone. From the dissonent tremolos in the opening movement, to the dog's bark at the end of the Circus March, to the Polka Finale, Piston treats his movements with humorous overtones of contemporary rhythms and harmonies that never completely materialize, as they do in his more serious works.

Karl Zeise, one of the country's top cellists and member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was enthusiastically received in his performance of the new and richly Russian flavored Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, by Dmitri Kabalevsky. Written in 1948, this work was first performed in Moscow in 1952.

The first movement immediately confirmed the fact that Mr. Zeise was in complete command of both his instrument and his music. This lightly scored concerto provided the artist with ample opportunities for exciting technique as was evident in the play between clarinet and cello in the Allegro and Andantino movements and the tricky double-stops and pizzicato's in the cadenza of the Largo. The latter was pepeated as an encore.

Plays Stradivari

An interesting observation reveals the fact that Mr. Zeise played on a Stradivari cello made in 1741, and used a bow made by Dominique Peccate in the middle of the 19th century that is valued at between six and seven hundred dollars.

The concert concluded with the Finale from Symphony No. 2 in D, by Sibelius.

A short address to the audience by orchestra president Carl Bartlett outlined the aim of the orchestra and its needs. The orchestra would like to provide amateur musicians of New Hampshrie with an opportunity to play good music for others in this state. In order to do this most effectively, it needs sponsors, musicians, and, of course, the support of the citizens of New Hampshire.

Even though the N. H. Philharmonic operates on the lowest of budgets, any lack of funds is more than made up by the skill of the members of this group and their enthusiasm for their art—an enthusiasm which speaks well for the future of good music in our state.
—HENRY W. WEGIEL

THE TANGLEWOOD QUINTET will be at Temple Beth El Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Women and Society

September 24, 1961
W-1
Providence Sunday Journal

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
APR 8 1962

SINFONIETTA WILL PERFORM AT UCONN

STORRS, Conn.—The Zimbler Sinfonietta, a versatile chamber ensemble composed of 17 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform at the University of Connecticut Wednesday at 8.15 p. m.

One of the high lights of the concert, which will be held in the Von der Mehden Recital Hall, will be a performance of Bach's "Piano Concerto in D minor," by Dr. Petter Juel-Larsen, a U of C professor who teaches music history.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
OCT 1961

Boston Conservatory of Music News

The Boston Conservatory of Music announces the addition of Katja Andy to its piano faculty. Miss Andy is well known in Chicago where she was a member of the piano faculty at DePaul University. Before that she served fourteen years as the principal assistant to Edwin Fischer in his master classes at Berlin and Zurich. At the Boston Conservatory she will present a series of historical recitals, and teach advanced students in piano.

The Fenway Series, devoted to faculty and guest artists' recitals, has begun its impressive second season. This year sees the debut of the Gabrieli Trio, outstanding members of the Boston Symphony string section, now in residence at the Conservatory. Among other programs planned are a concert given to works in all media by the Canadian composer, Minuetta Kessler, Hindemith's Ludus Tonalis as presented by Allan Sly, ensembles from little-known operas, and cello-piano sonatas performed by Richard Kapuscinski and Robert Dumm.

Also new to the staff this year is John Moriarty, the young man who has made a fine name for his work as coach for the Santa Fe Opera Co. this year, and the Washington Opera.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

Boston—The Boston Civic Symphony will hold its first workshop for conductors late in April under the direction of Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Kansas City, Missouri—The Kansas City Philharmonic opened a new series of concerts at the University of Kansas City on January 31 with pianist Malcolm Frager as soloist. Sixteen members of the orchestra are on the faculty of the school.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
OCT 31 1961

Newton Concert

The Boston Percussion Ensemble will give a free concert for Newton residents at Lasell Junior College tomorrow at 8 p.m. The group is made up of seven members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Harold Faberman as conductor.

They will give an explanation and demonstration of symphony and timpani instruments followed by the playing of a group of symphonic works. The invitation is extended by Lasell Junior College to Newton residents as an expression of the cordial relationship between them.

NOW APPEARING
10-61

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
OCT 1961
1961

HAROLD FARBERMAN

HAROLD FARBERMAN, percussionist wtih the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a rising American composer, is also the director of Boston's New Arts Orchestra. His music has been performed in this country, Europe and Israel under such conductors as Leopold Stokowski. He is presently completing a string quartet for the Lenox Quartet and a woodwind quintet for the Dorian Quintet and his own orchestra has specialized in the contemporary music of Boulez, Stockhausen, Berio and numerous American composers.

PERCUSSION FOR COMPOSERS BY HAROLD FARBERMAN

It has been particularly gratifying to me to observe more and more composers (young and old) move toward the percussion section as a means of valid musical expression. Although a great deal of the writing for the percussion instruments is as yet rather hesitant and frankly experimental, it is nevertheless a step that should have been taken long ago. It is my opinion, as a professional player and composer-conductor, that little of musical value has been written for the percussion section, except in rare instances.

And, of course, the composer is at fault. The rapid growth of woodwind and brass instruments in the past one hundred years, both in the improvement of the instruments themselves and the performing technique, is due mainly to the demands the composer placed on the player and, indirectly, on the instrument-maker. It is also quite true that until recently the composer's rather archaic approach to the percussion section has resulted in an almost complete lack of growth instrumentally and technically (from a performer's point of view).

It is interesting to note that the emergence of the jazz percussionist has been one of the major factors in the development of the classical percussion section. Composers, fascinated, began to listen and watch, and to incorporate what they heard and saw in their own writing, and the results often led to a welcome departure from the standard orchestral percussion writing.

Let us therefore take a closer look at what the percussion section is, and explore its possibilities from a strictly compositional point of view. It may hasten the removal of the percussion section from its woeful estate of "noise-makers" into the realm of "music-makers."

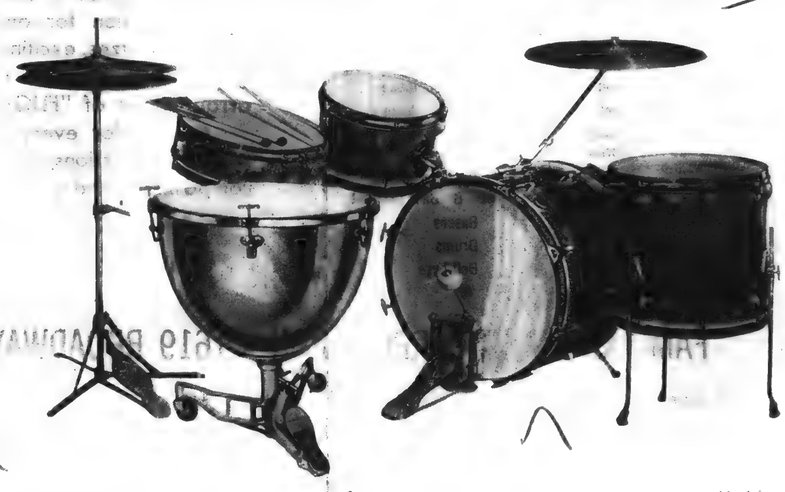
From the composer's point of view, just what are the capabilities of the percussion section? For me it is a means of expression ranging from the most powerful voices in the orchestra to the most delicate and subtle. Melodically it can offer from among its many instruments of definite pitch a vast and colorful six octave range, from the 42-inch timpani to the piccolo-xylophone and glockenspiel, with good sound and texture throughout. For pure sounds or colors of indefinite pitch it contains instruments that can create nerve-racking tensions, or the softest and most delicate of sounds. As a section, then, we have in the percussion a melodic range as large and varied as any in the orchestra, plus a means of producing an enormous range of non-pitch sounds that place it in a unique, and as yet largely unexplored, position.

I am not saying, of course, that the percussion section as a whole can do what the string section can, any more than the brass section can do what the woodwind section can, but why should composers write for the string, woodwind and brass sections what percussionists can do best?

It is my good fortune to be a member of an orchestra that plays a good deal of contemporary music and, indeed, commissioned twelve new works a year ago. It is my feeling that a good percentage of this new music would be more interesting and sound better if certain sections were re-orchestrated for the percussion section, leaving those instruments that were formerly playing free for better usage.

Like the other sections, percussion can be broken down into units. First, the mallet instruments: xylophone, marimba, xylo-marimba, glockenspiel and chimes. A second unit consists of drums: snare, piccolo-snare, tenor, bass and tom-toms. (It is not unusual to find two or three of each of the smaller drums with a section—each player will have a drum of his own of which he is particularly fond.) Another group includes the cymbal family and the accessory instruments. A good cym-

(Continued on page 84)



MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston, Mass.

The Civic Symphony Orchestra of Boston, Kalman Novak, Conductor, announces that it will hold its first Conductors' Workshop under the artistic direction of Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The workshop, which will take place late in April, will consist of a series of seminars with Mr. Burgin and Mr. Novak, and two rehearsals of the Civic Symphony Orchestra at which the conductors chosen to participate will rehearse the orchestra under Mr. Burgin's close supervision.

Conductors will be chosen from among serious students of conducting and conductors of community orchestras in the New England area.

Percussion for Composers

(Continued from page 40)

bal player will have more than one set of hand cymbals and three or four suspended cymbals, each with a different color quality. Completing this family are the tam-tam, the smaller, higher pitched gong and the very small antique cymbals of definite pitch. Among the accessories we have triangles, tambourines, wooden and metal castagnets and various pitched wood blocks. The whip (or slap-stick) and the ratchet also fit into this group. The timpani, three and preferably four (with pedal mechanism for quick pitch changes), comprise our fourth category.

For the sake of comprehensiveness I would like to call attention to another group of percussion instruments that will eventually find their way into the section as standard instruments. This group consists of instruments of Latin-American derivation, the most common being maraccas, cabassa, claves, gourd, timbales, bongos and conga drum. There has also been a great influx of African instruments recently. I have found, in actual use, that one of the most interesting is the lujon, a pitched instrument somewhat like a marimba, and I advise all composers to try to locate one and hasten to listen to its sound quality.

It is clear that instruments of one unit may be blended with one another or cross-blended with different instruments of another group. Besides this there are the enormous possibilities of using instruments from these groups in various combinations with the other sections of the orchestra. It is rather difficult to talk about the newer techniques of writing for percussion when one feels that such a technique has, in fact, never existed. There is a large area for further experimentation in the choice of sticks or mallets used in the playing of various instruments. A few examples will suffice: I have found it preferable at times to use a xylophone mallet on the chimes when a sharper, more penetrating sound is needed.

Though the use of timpani with solid wooden heads is a scarcely new compositional device (see Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique and Richard Strauss' Ein Heldenleben), a wooden stick with a smaller striking surface, such as a snare drum stick, has an attractive sound and can be very useful (Elgar uses snare drum sticks for a timpani roll in the Enigma Variations). The use of two different mallets in certain timpani passages where an enormous dynamic contrast is called for, is very useful. One wooden and one regular felt stick will bring off the desired effect. I have often used the tambourine, lying on a flat surface, struck with snare drum sticks or xylophone mallets, when a rapidly articulated series of staccato notes with tambourines is called for. This is invariably better than thumb rolls, fingers or fist articulations on the tambourine.

Composers should not overlook the possibilities of wire brushes on the snare drum (a most common jazz technique). The brush sound can be amplified tenfold if exactly the same brush pattern is used on a large timpani (28 or 32-inches). On the timpani the use of the brush should be confined to a "swish" pattern (rhythmically passing the brush over the surface of the drum without lifting it from the head).

Careful consideration should be given to the use of the vibraphone, with and without its electric vibrato. In my own Symphony for Percussion and Strings I found the vibraphone with vibrato against a string orchestra playing non-vibrato to be extremely effective. For subtle shadings, one should investigate the striking of the cymbals with other than the ordinary mallets (one possibility being Bartók's use of a nail file on a suspended cymbal in his Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion). An antique cymbal struck with a triangle beater rather than another antique cymbal is more likely to produce a tone of very pure quality.

The impact of Latin American instruments upon contemporary jazz has introduced a new percussion technique in this country, but as ancient as the first tribal drum messages. It involves the use of the performer's hands on the drum head in place of sticks. This technique (employed on the bongos, conga drum, timbales, etc.) makes use of the player's fingers also, and occasionally the elbows. In short, it is not a skill acquired without proper training and sufficient practice. I have yet to meet a symphonic percussion player who is really qualified to play the various instruments requiring a hand technique. Yet it is possible to use the principles involved: I have had players rub their hands (palms down) over the drum head to an indicated rhythmic pattern with satisfying results. This method excludes the necessity of the player having the extremely calloused hands that are necessary for the performer to have in order to produce the correct sound on these instruments.

Composers should not shy away from experimenting with various combinations of percussion instruments. Some of the most unlikely on paper come off splendidly in performance. (In Evolution I wrote a canon for xylophone, timpani and Chinese tom-tom).

In all probability, it is the movement underneath the melodic material that is the major stumbling block to a composer unaware of what the percussion section can produce musically. If harmony (any brand) is meant to take you from Point A to various other points, creating and easing tension on the way before returning home to Point A, then I maintain that the percussion section is fully equipped to do just that. For harmony is sound control, and sounds of infinite variety are what the percussion section can produce better than any other section of the orchestra. For example, given any melodic line in any instrument, it is possible to move that line, employing only percussion instruments of either definite or indefinite pitch beneath or above it. And while doing this the instruments employed can create the necessary feeling of tension and its release.

It is also possible to create thematic material from within the percussion section and not only with the instruments of definite pitch. Unfortunately, I find that the composers who have been writing percussion music have been too intrigued by the novelty of the medium. Until composers can think of the percussion section as an equal of the string section, in so far as producing music is concerned, I'm afraid not much percussion music of worth will be written. For obvious reasons, one has to believe in the materials one is working with.

A final word to a composer about to undertake a purely percussion piece. It is tremendously tempting to overwrite; it is not uncommon to hear of new percussion works that advertize the employment of ninety percussion instruments. One hears little afterwards of the musical value of the piece. One of our most revered pioneer percussion pieces is a mess—orchestration-wise. Half of what is written will never be heard under the most ideal performing conditions. Quantity does not mean quality. Five percussion instruments, well-chosen, can be more rewarding than ninety.

It is my hope that eventually enough composers of talent will write enough music for percussion to establish chamber ensembles that will perform on a regular basis. That will be Magna Carta Day for all percussionists.

THE END

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 43,669

APR 2 1962

Obituaries

W. C. Gebhardt, Stoughton, Was Noted Musician

STOUGHTON. — William C. Gebhardt, 533 Central street, husband of the late Laura (Shafer) Gebhardt, died Sunday in his 78th year. A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, he was born in Boston, the son of Max Gebhardt and Annie Lenz.

A student of Albert Hackebath, first horn player of the Boston Symphony, he played at the Colonial Theatre at the age of 16, and later played with John Philip Souza's band. In 1907, when only 23, he was engaged by the Boston Symphony orchestra. After playing for the St. Louis Symphony for one season in 1915, he toured with the Imperial Russian ballet for several seasons when Vaslev Nijinski was its featured performer. He eventually returned to the Boston Symphony where he played for 42 seasons. In his long tenure he played for Dr. Carl Muck, Raband, Pierre Monteaux, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and Arthur Fiedler.

He leaves a daughter, Norma Rubel, three grandchildren, several nieces and nephews. Rev. Dr. Hugh Penny, interim pastor of Stoughton Congregational church; will officiate at the private funeral services from the funeral home, 115 Monk street, Wednesday at 1:30. Interment will be in Forest Hills.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle & News Sentinel
STOUGHTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,240
APR 5 1962

Obituaries

WILLIAM C. GEBHARDT, NOTED MUSICIAN, DIES AT AGE 77

William C. Gebhardt, 533 Central street, husband of the late Laura (Shafer) Gebhardt, died Sunday in his 78th year. A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, he was born in Boston, the son of Max Gebhardt and Annie Lenz.

A student of Albert Hackebath, first horn player of the Boston Symphony, he played at the Colonial Theatre at the age of 16, and later played with John Philip Souza's band. In 1907, when only 23, he was engaged by the Boston Symphony orchestra. After playing for the St. Louis Symphony for one season in 1915, he toured with the Imperial Russian ballet for several seasons when Vaslev Nijinski was its featured performer. He eventually returned to the Boston Symphony where he played for 42 seasons. In his long tenure he played for Dr. Carl Muck, Raband, Pierre Monteaux, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and Arthur Fiedler.

He leaves a daughter, Norma Rubel, three grandchildren, several nieces and nephews. Rev. Dr. Hugh Penny, interim pastor of Stoughton Congregational church, officiated at the private funeral services from the Lowe & Powers funeral home, 115 Monk street, Wednesday at 1:30. Interment was in Forest Hills.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

APR 3 1962

W. C. Gebhardt, Stoughton, Retired Symphony Player

STOUGHTON—William C. Gebhardt, 77, retired first horn player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died Monday at his home, 533 Central St.

A native of Boston, he was a professional musician at the age of 16, as a member of the orchestra at the Colonial Theater in Boston.

He joined the Boston Symphony in 1907, but left several years later to tour one season with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

He subsequently toured this country for several seasons with the Russian Ballet troupe, which then had the famed Nijinsky as its dancing star.

He then returned to the Boston Symphony, with which he played until his retirement seven years ago.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. Norma Rubel, with whom he lived.

Private services will be held Wednesday at Lowe and Powers Funeral Home, 115 Monk St. Interment will be in Forest Hills cemetery, Boston.

Percussion for Composers

(Continued from page 40)

bal player will have more than one set of hand cymbals and three or four suspended cymbals, each with a different color quality. Completing this family are the tam-tam, the smaller, higher pitched gong and the very small antique cymbals of definite pitch. Among the accessories we have triangles, tambourines, wooden and metal castagnets and various pitched wood blocks. The whip (or slap-stick) and the ratchet also fit into this group. The timpani, three and preferably four (with pedal mechanism for quick pitch changes), comprise our fourth category.

For the sake of comprehensiveness I would like to call attention to another group of percussion instruments that will eventually find their way into the section as standard instruments. This group consists of instruments of Latin-American derivation, the most common being maraccas, cabassa, claves, gourd, timbales, bongos and conga drum. There has also been a great influx of African instruments recently. I have found, in actual use, that one of the most interesting is the lujon, a pitched instrument somewhat like a marimba, and I advise all composers to try to locate one and hasten to listen to its sound quality.

It is clear that instruments of one unit may be blended with one another or cross-blended with different instruments of another group. Besides this there are the enormous possibilities of using instruments from these groups in various combinations with the other sections of the orchestra. It is rather difficult to talk about the newer techniques of writing for percussion when one feels that such a technique has, in fact, never existed. There is a large area for further experimentation in the choice of sticks or mallets used in the playing of various instruments. A few examples will suffice: I have found it preferable at times to use a xylophone mallet on the chimes when a sharper, more penetrating sound is needed.

Though the use of timpani with solid wooden heads is a scarcely new compositional device (see Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique and Richard Strauss' Ein Heldenleben), a wooden stick with a smaller striking surface, such as a snare drum stick, has an attractive sound and can be very useful (Elgar uses snare drum sticks for a timpani roll in the Enigma Variations). The use of two different mallets in certain timpani passages where an enormous dynamic contrast is called for, is very useful. One wooden and one regular felt stick will bring off the desired effect. I have often used the tambourine, lying on a flat surface, struck with snare drum sticks or xylophone mallets, when a rapidly articulated series of staccato notes with tambourines is called for. This is invariably better than thumb rolls, fingers or fist articulations on the tambourine.

Composers should not overlook the possibilities of wire brushes on the snare drum (a most common jazz technique). The brush sound can be amplified tenfold if exactly the same brush pattern is used on a large timpani (28 or 32-inches). On the timpani the use of the brush should be confined to a "swish" pattern (rhythmically passing the brush over the surface of the drum without lifting it from the head).

Careful consideration should be given to the use of the vibraphone, with and without its electric vibrato. In my own Symphony for Percussion and Strings I found the vibraphone with vibrato against a string orchestra playing non-vibrato to be extremely effective. For subtle shadings, one should investigate the striking of the cymbals with other than the ordinary mallets (one possibility being Bartók's use of a nail file on a suspended cymbal in his Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion). An antique cymbal struck with a triangle beater rather than another antique cymbal is more likely to produce a tone of very pure quality.

The impact of Latin American instruments upon contemporary jazz has introduced a new percussion technique in this country, but as ancient as the first tribal drum messages. It involves the use of the performer's hands on the drum head in place of sticks. This technique (employed on the bongos, conga drum, timbales, etc.) makes use of the player's fingers also, and occasionally the elbows. In short, it is not a skill acquired without proper training and sufficient practice. I have yet to meet a symphonic percussion player who is really qualified to play the various instruments requiring a hand technique. Yet it is possible to use the principles involved: I have had players rub their hands (palms down) over the drum head to an indicated rhythmic pattern with satisfying results. This method excludes the necessity of the player having the extremely calloused hands that are necessary for the performer to have in order to produce the correct sound on these instruments.

Composers should not shy away from experimenting with various combinations of percussion instruments. Some of the most unlikely on paper come off splendidly in performance. (In Evolution I wrote a canon for xylophone, timpani and Chinese tom-tom).

In all probability, it is the movement underneath the melodic material that is the major stumbling block to a composer unaware of what the percussion section can produce musically. If harmony (any brand) is meant to take you from Point A to various other points, creating and easing tension on the way before returning home to Point A, then I maintain that the percussion section is fully equipped to do just that. For harmony is sound control, and sounds of infinite variety are what the percussion section can produce better than any other section of the orchestra. For example, given any melodic line in any instrument, it is possible to move that line, employing only percussion instruments of either definite or indefinite pitch beneath or above it. And while doing this the instruments employed can create the necessary feeling of tension and its release.

It is also possible to create thematic material from within the percussion section and not only with the instruments of definite pitch. Unfortunately, I find that the composers who have been writing percussion music have been too intrigued by the novelty of the medium. Until composers can think of the percussion section as an equal of the string section, in so far as producing music is concerned, I'm afraid not much percussion music of worth will be written. For obvious reasons, one has to believe in the materials one is working with.

A final word to a composer about to undertake a purely percussion piece. It is tremendously tempting to overwrite; it is not uncommon to hear of new percussion works that advertize the employment of ninety percussion instruments. One hears little afterwards of the musical value of the piece. One of our most revered pioneer percussion pieces is a mess—orchestration-wise. Half of what is written will never be heard under the most ideal performing conditions. Quantity does not mean quality. Five percussion instruments, well-chosen, can be more rewarding than ninety.

It is my hope that eventually enough composers of talent will write enough music for percussion to establish chamber ensembles that will perform on a regular basis. That will be Magna Carta Day for all percussionists.

THE END

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 43,669
APR 2 1962

Obituaries

W. C. Gebhardt, Stoughton, Was Noted Musician

STOUGHTON. — William C. Gebhardt, 538 Central street, husband of the late Laura (Shafer) Gebhardt, died Sunday in his 78th year. A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, he was born in Boston, the son of Max Gebhardt and Annie Lenz.

A student of Albert Hackebath, first horn player of the Boston Symphony, he played at the Colonial Theatre at the age of 16, and later played with John Philip Souza's band. In 1907, when only 23, he was engaged by the Boston Symphony orchestra. After playing for the St. Louis Symphony for one season in 1915, he toured with the Imperial Russian ballet for several seasons when Vaslev Nijinski was its featured performer. He eventually returned to the Boston Symphony where he played for 42 seasons. In his long tenure he played for Dr. Carl Muck, Raband, Pierre Monteaux, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and Arthur Fiedler.

He leaves a daughter, Norma Rubel, three grandchildren, several nieces and nephews. Rev. Dr. Hugh Penny, interim pastor of Stoughton Congregational church, will officiate at the private funeral services from the funeral home, 115 Monk street, Wednesday at 1:30. Interment will be in Forest Hills.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle & News
Sentinel
STOUGHTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,240
APR 5 1962

Obituaries

WILLIAM C. GEBHARDT, NOTED MUSICIAN, DIES AT AGE 77

William C. Gebhardt, 533 Central street, husband of the late Laura (Shafer) Gebhardt, died Sunday in his 78th year. A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, he was born in Boston, the son of Max Gebhardt and Annie Lenz.

A student of Albert Hackebath, first horn player of the Boston Symphony, he played at the Colonial Theatre at the age of 16, and later played with John Philip Souza's band. In 1907, when only 23, he was engaged by the Boston Symphony orchestra. After playing for the St. Louis Symphony for one season in 1915, he toured with the Imperial Russian ballet for several seasons when Vaslev Nijinski was its featured performer. He eventually returned to the Boston Symphony where he played for 42 seasons. In his long tenure he played for Dr. Carl Muck, Raband, Pierre Monteaux, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and Arthur Fiedler.

He leaves a daughter, Norma Rubel, three grandchildren, several nieces and nephews. Rev. Dr. Hugh Penny, interim pastor of Stoughton Congregational church, officiated at the private funeral services from the Lowe & Powers funeral home, 115 Monk street, Wednesday at 1:30. Interment was in Forest Hills.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 3 1962

W. C. Gebhardt, Stoughton, Retired Symphony Player

STOUGHTON—William C. Gebhardt, 77, retired first horn player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died Monday at his home, 533 Central St.

A native of Boston, he was a professional musician at the age of 16, as a member of the orchestra at the Colonial Theater in Boston.

He joined the Boston Symphony in 1907, but left several years later to tour one season with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

He subsequently toured this country for several seasons with the Russian Ballet troupe, which then had the famed Nijinsky as its dancing star.

He then returned to the Boston Symphony, with which he played until his retirement seven years ago.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. Norma Rubel, with whom he lived.

Private services will be held Wednesday at Lowe and Powers Funeral Home, 115 Monk St. Interment will be in Forest Hills cemetery, Boston.

BLANK PAGE

241

Simpson Retirement

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
APR 30 1962

Simpson Retires From Symphony

Gordon F. Simpson, manager of the Symphony Hall box office, has retired. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra staff in 1916, at the age of 35.

Before his move to Boston Mr. Simpson was employed in the box office of the Lyric Theater in Baltimore, where he was in charge of ticket sales for the Boston Symphony's Baltimore concerts.

Karl Muck was the orchestra's conductor when Mr. Simpson came to Symphony Hall. He has been in charge of the box office through the Boston careers of Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

In his 46 years at Symphony Hall, he has seen the orchestra expand its annual activities to a 50-week season in which 221 concerts are given.

J. Robert Carr, formerly in charge of the box office at the Shubert Theater, will replace Mr. Simpson in Symphony Hall box office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
APR 27 1962

Simpson Retires From Box Office

Gordon B. Simpson, manager of the Symphony Hall box office, has retired.

Mr. Simpson joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra staff in 1916 at the age of 35. Before his move to Boston he was employed in the box office of the Lyric Theater in Baltimore, where he was in charge of ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Baltimore concerts.

Karl Muck was the orchestra's conductor when Mr. Simpson came to Symphony Hall. Since then Mr. Simpson has been in charge of the Orchestra's box office throughout the Boston careers of Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch. In his 46 years at Symphony Hall he has also seen the orchestra expand its annual activities to a fifty-week season in which 221 concerts are given.

J. Robert Carr, formerly in charge of the box office at the Shubert Theater (Boston) will replace Mr. Simpson in the Symphony Hall box office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889
APR 27 1962

Box Office Manager Retires

Gordon B. Simpson, manager of the Symphony Hall box office, has retired after 46 years on the Symphony Hall staff. Mr. Simpson came in 1916 at the age of 35. Karl Muck was then the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor; since that time Mr. Simpson has been in charge of the box office throughout the Boston careers of Henri Raboud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

Simpson Retires As Boxoffice Head At Symphony Hall

Gordon B. Simpson has retired as manager of the Symphony Hall boxoffice after 46 years of service. He will be succeeded by J. Robert Carr, formerly in charge of the boxoffice at the Shubert Theater.

Simpson joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra staff in 1916, at the age of 35. Before coming to Boston he had been employed in the boxoffice of the Lyric Theater in Baltimore. One of his duties there was taking charge of ticket sales for the Boston Symphony's Baltimore concerts.

Karl Muck was conductor of the Boston Symphony when Simpson joined the Orchestra staff. In his 46 years at Symphony Hall, Simpson has seen the Orchestra expand its annual activities to a 50-week season, including the Berkshire Festivals, in which 221 concerts are given. He has served under five conductors — Muck, Rabaud, Monteux, Koussevitzky and Munch.

242

Mme. Koussevitsky

The Social World

Olga Koussevitsky Recalls Era of Great Music

BY LOIS BAUR

MEMORIES, now 10 years old, brought the widow of Serge Koussevitsky to Chicago for a day recently. She came to attend a concert of 20th century music commemorating the 10th anniversary of her husband's death.

"I never travel without a purpose," said Olga Naumoof Koussevitsky, sipping tea in an Ambassador East suite. "I used to come to Chicago with Dr. Koussevitsky. It was like a festival event—the friends he had here."

OLGA KOUSSEVITSKY

"We stayed with Mrs. John Alden Carpenter—my husband used to play some of Mr. Carpenter's compositions. I remember many gay parties—the Chauncey McCormicks, the Hans van der Mawritzes, the George T. Langhornes—and so many young and talented musicians."

Olga's eyes — they're a chameleon grey-green-blue—misted and her voice drifted off. "Dr. Koussevitsky had no children. To him all those young musicians were his children. He loved helping them. One of them, remember, was Leonard Bernstein."

Koussevitsky was hero of heroes to young musicians. He made the Boston Symphony one of the musical wonders of the world. He founded the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass. where youth is the vital spark.

In the '20s he dominated the New England scene. In conservative Boston, where superlatives are used sparingly, Serge Koussevitsky was a demi god. He was the lion of society wherever the symphony toured. And wherever they toured, Olga went too.

"But now," said Olga, "I travel alone and the parties are with the musicians after the concert."

The concert in Chicago was held at the Natural History Museum under auspices of the Free Concerts Foundation. The program, arranged by the Library of Congress, contained works by some of the young composers whose genius was channelled by Dr. Koussevitsky.

Olga came to Chicago at the invitation of Mrs. J. Dennis Freund, a longtime friend of the Koussevitskys and the founder and sponsor of the free public concerts held monthly in the museum.

Olga is a handsome woman with a madonna face reflecting a quiet sadness. She's a descendant of one of Russia's noble families, was born on a country estate in the middle region of the great Volga river.

She was 27 years younger than Dr. Koussevitsky when she married him in 1947, five years after the death of his first wife, Natalya. Olga was Natalya's niece—had lived with the Koussevitskys for 18 years as secretary and companion. It was Natalya's inherited fortune from her father's tea empire, and the family's banking interests in Boston which formed the nucleus of the Koussevitsky Foundation which Olga today heads.

"I had known Serge Koussevitsky since I was a little girl in Russia," she said. "Five years after they moved to the United States the Koussevitskys asked me to come and live with them. Their life became my life. And when she died I tried to maintain the ways of life she had. It was inevitable that we married."

Her marriage to Koussevitsky lasted only four years. The conductor died in 1951 at 77.

She keeps his apartment in Boston, also the fabulous summer home in Lenox, Mass., in the heights of the Berkshires, a five minute walk from Tanglewood.

Koussevitsky's study, an inspirational eyrie, has been kept just the way he left it.

There's also a sculpture of the famous Koussevitsky hands. This house has inspired many young composers. Each summer, as her husband wished it, Olga invites a composer and his family to live in the house. In the quiet serenity of this place so near to the sky, the musician is given the background he needs for his creativity.

Like many women who have lived in the shadow of greatness, Olga has developed a noble selflessness. She lives in an apartment on W. 60th street in New York City. She is interested in hearing young musicians with promise. She is president of the American International Music fund which records on tape first performances, copies of which are then made available for audition and study purposes.

The Koussevitsky Music Foundation of which she is president [Composer Aaron Copeland is vice president], commissions new and eminent composers to write important new works.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
OCT 26 1961

Mme. Koussevitzky In Magazine Debut

Eleven pencil drawings by Mme. Olga Koussevitzky and a short article are published in a six-page spead in the first issue of a new music magazine, Bravo! The drawings, caricaturing well - known musicians, were first shown publicly at the Lenox Library in July.

The magazine, which will publish another group of the caricatures in its second issue, notes that "few have been in a better position to know the great figures of modern music than Mme. Koussevitzky," widow of the Boston Symphony Orchestra director.

In addition to sketches of herself and husband, the initial group includes Van Cliburn, Bruno Walter, George Szell, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Fritz Reiner, William Steinberg, Charles Munch and Leonard Bernstein. Brief comments by the artist accompany each sketch.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 63,288
JAN 8 1962

Conductor's Mother Dies

BROOKLINE, Jan. 8 (AP)—Mrs. Anna Naoumoff, 83, mother of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, died yesterday. She was the widow of Alexander Naoumoff, minister of agriculture in the Russian Czarist Government.

243

Kreisler - Ibert Deaths

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
FEB 3 0 1962

Private Rites in N.Y. Thursday for Kreisler

Rud

PRESENTATION of an American flag to Heaton Hall in Stockbridge for a new flag pole was made in 1955 by Fritz Kreisler, left, to John Rock, owner of hostelry where the Kreislers spent 12 summers. During their stay at Heaton Hall the Kreislers, because of ill health, in recent years only occasionally attended Tanglewood concerts, but frequently entertained friends.

NEW YORK (AP)—A private funeral service for Fritz Kreisler will be held Thursday at 10 a.m. at the Roman Catholic church of St. John the Evangelist.

The world-famous violinist and composer died in a hospital Monday of heart trouble and old age. He would have been 87 on Friday.

His widow, Harriet, has been seriously ill at home for some time.

Over the years, his name had become almost synonymous with violin music. A man with a huge affection for the common man, he had helped popularize good music among the masses.

Versatile Composer

Kreisler not only was a master performer, but also a versatile composer, his works ranging from chamber music and operetta to folk dances that have become classics.

In the last several years, Kreisler and his wife, Harriet, lived in virtual seclusion in their Manhattan apartment. With his hearing and sight failing, Kreisler seldom appeared in public.

Rarely Practiced

In his performing days, Kreisler could make his Stradivarius sing, or cry, or laugh, with a skill that touched the hearts of millions. But he never took a formal lesson after he was 12 and he rarely praticed.

His mass of unruly white hair and a mustache gave him an appearance of Old World charm. His face was keenly expressive, and his hands — amazingly unveined and unwrinkled in later years—never seemed to rest.

He gave his first concert in his native Vienna, Austria, at 10 and his last in 1950 at 75. His first United States tour, as a gangling teen-ager, earned him $37 a week. Later, he earned thousands per performance.

He made more than $1½ million in royalties from recordings.

Although there was a deep gentleness in Kreisler's music, and in the man, too, his life was marked by several incidents of danger.

Nearly Killed in 1941

He was badly wounded in World War I while serving in the Austrian army, nearly killed by an automobile in 1941, had a serious case of appendicitis in 1946 and had undergone two major operations since 1950.

Born Feb. 2, 1875, in Vienna, Austria, the son of a physician, Kreisler obtained a typically thorough European education, but became typically American in spirit.

At the time of his naturalization as an American citizen, he celebrated by playing the piano in the office of his manager. In a modern age, beset by organization and speed, he liked to talk of the old days.

"We didn't know what hatred was in the old days," he said. "We only knew love."

Kreisler traveled the world, speaking this sentiment with his violin.

He did indefatigable research into the compositions of the old masters, popularizing some of the great ones that had been neglected, including "Humoresque."

CONGRATULATIONS are extended to violinist William Primrose, left, by the eminent violinist-composer, Fritz Kreisler, following the former's performance of "Harold in Italy" at the Festival concert at Tanglewood.

Some Recollections

By JAY C. ROSENFELD
Eagle Music Critic

ON THE OCCASION of his 50th birthday in 1925, the New York musicians' society, the Bohemians, gave Kreisler a dinner and concert. After the meal and several eloquent tributes to the guest of honor, four instruments appeared, seemingly out of nowhere, and then the Schubert A minor quartet music showed up, by equal magic, and an improvised foursome led by Kreisler took the four chairs. He consented graciously. The other three were Sascha Jacobsen, second violin; Louis Kaufman, viola; and Willem Willeke, cello.

* * *

FOLLOWING THE hubbub of enthusiasm that followed the first movement, Kreisler pleaded with Leopold Auer to lead the slow movement. Here Kreisler played second violin; William Kroll, the viola; and Willeke, cello. The guests by this time had caught the remarkable nature of the event and nothing would do but to have Mischa Elman play the scherzo, with Edward Bachman as second, and with Kroll and Willeke filling out the ensemble. After further frantic demonstrations Carl Flesch was impressed into service for the finale, with Kreisler as second and the other parts filled as in the scherzo.

I don't believe anyone marveled at his violinistic technique. You listened to Kreisler. The warmth of his playing was guided by an impeccable sense of refinement and good taste. I always had the feeling that he was telling me a story, and, listening, I was as contented as a child secure in his grandmother's arms.

EVERYTHING about him was distinguished: his promenades on the streets of Stockbridge, where he spent 12 summers at Heaton Hall; his entrance on stage. There was dignity, a complete absence of everything superfluous in gesture or manner. He stood and walked as erect as a military man, but his music and playing were a paradoxical mixture of modesty and the loftiest aspiration.

One of the most significant features in the life of Fritz Kreisler was the reverence and affection everyone in music unreservedly accorded him. No one envied Kreisler, nor compared him to anyone else. He was unique, hors concours, universally beloved.

* * *

THERE IS NO artist on today's platform who did not approach Kreisler with deference, who did not concede him to be the pinnacle as a musician and as a man. I can recall on occasion only a few seasons ago at Tanglewood when as internationally famous an artist as Francescatti had just finished playing the Tchoikovsky concerto. With his native magnanimity Kreisler sought out the soloist of the afternoon and congratulated him on his performance.

They spoke in French. Francescatti acknowledged Kreisler's felicitations saying, "Merci, Maitre," and continuing, with a hopeful plea for leniency, he asked, "But it was too fast, wasn't it?"

"To tell you the truth," Kreisler answered, "Oui." And the soloist was genuinely grateful for the comment.

CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

NIAGARA FALLS GAZETTE
Wednesday, February 7, 1962

Ibert, 71, Dies; Noted Composer

PARIS (AP)—Jacques Ibert, internationally known French composer, died Monday night at his Paris home. He was 71 and had been ill with influenza.

His best known works included Escales, Angelique, le Roi d'Yvetot and le Chevalier Errant. Before his last illness he had been at work on a symphony for Charles Munch and the 76th anniversary of the Boston Symphony. He also composed music for a number of French films.

244

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Friday, February 2, 1962

17

Around the Town

Area Mourns Fritz Kreisler

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The news of the death of the beloved Austrian-born violinist, Fritz Kreisler, last Monday at the age of 86 was received with great sorrow by the citizens of Albany, and particularly by the writer who was one of his greatest admirers, not only as a man but as an unstanding credit to his incomparable art. We have sat beneath the spell of his music many wonderful nights when he played under the management of the late Ben Franklin at the Washington Avenue Armory, Harmanus Bleecker Hall and finally the Palace Theatre where he gave his first concert January, 1942, following his near-fatal automobile accident in New York City the previous year.

We were reviewing the concert for The Times-Union and it was one of the most difficult assignments of our newspaper career. The theatre was crowded with professional and amateur violinists and music lovers for whom the name of Kreisler meant an evening of absolute delight. His New York manager sent him to Albany as the first try-out engagement, following his accident.

However, we recall, vividly, the loss of many of the great attributes of his violinistic art, not only as soloist in the grand manner, but as an executant almost without peer. The spirit was in his playing, but the substance was missing. His subsequent concerts were few and far between. An increasing deafness mitigated against his tonal accuracy and he finally retired from public performance after a full life of adding to the cultural growth of his adopted country.

Summers in Saratoga

Mr. Kreisler spent many of his summers in Saratoga as the guest of one of his countrywomen, Mrs. Elizabeth Winde who operates the Beverly Hotel, formerly the home of the late Senator Edgar T. Brackett in Upper Broadway. Here he could relax after his difficult concert tours and partake of his favorite Viennese foods.

We were privileged to be a guest at a birthday party for Monty Wooley some ten years ago in the Worden Hotel. Mr. Kreisler and his American wife were also prominent among the many well-wishers. When we asked the host to introduce us to the famous violinist, Mr. Wooley mentioned the fact that we were from Albany.

"Did you happen to know Ben Franklin?" was his opening question. We informed Mr. Kreisler that we had been associated with Mr. Franklin, not only in music but during the period he was a display advertising salesman for The Albany Times-Union.

"Mr. Franklin was one of my closest friends," said Mr. Kreisler. "He managed my concerts in Albany, Schenectady, Utica and Pittsfield, Mass. I never had a contract with him. That wasn't necessary. As an independent manager, all that was necessary was a telephone call or letter from Mr. Franklin and the deal was consummated. I was so grateful for his up-state promotion of my concerts that I would have played for him, even without compensation," proving that there is sentiment in business, especially in the realm of commercialized music.

Mr. Kreisler was a regular visitor each summer to the music festival at Tanglewood, occuping the box of the widow of Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where he was the center of attention during the intermissions.

We stopped one Sunday afternoon and introduced ourself as the close friend of Mr. Franklin, recalling our Saratoga visitation. He was most cordial and we chatted for several minutes. Mr. Charles Munch, the successor to Mr. Koussevitzky, had just finished playing the Fourth Symphony of Brahms.

Kreisler was entranced by the performance. "You will never hear the real Brahms until you have listened to Mr. Munch's interpretation of the works of the great German composer" was his succinct critique. And he couldn't have been more right with us especially as his vocal appraisal coincided with our own mental reservation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

FEB 2 1962

THESE DAYS — By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Kreisler's Great Genius

TO HAVE KNOWN Fritz Kreisler was to have tasted of the richness of centuries of human culture. During recent years, he and I spent our summers in the Berkshires and it was a joy to be with a man whose genius knew no limit. He was as much at home in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew as in the modern languages. He could discuss world politics in amazing detail. His knowledge of music was overwhelming and withal he was a modest man who was interested in the aspirations of the simplest Tanglewood student.

During his last years, he was partially deaf and blind, the result of an accident when a truck hit and knocked him down and he lived in darkness. Even so, he did not lose his interest in the affairs of the world and a conversation with him was always an everlasting memory.

Two tragic occasions stand out in my memory. One was at the Dutch Treat Club when Fritz decided that he would try to play the piano and he could no longer strike the right notes. He was full of fun that night and could laugh at his mistakes.

The other was at Fiddletop, the home of Zino Francescatti in Monterey in the Berkshires. Our families were gossiping after lunch. Mrs. Harriet Kreisler always watched over Fritz motherly, fearful that he would be made miserable by his inabilities, but the two violinists got into a corner and had what might vulgarly be called a jam session. They played on and on, Kreisler showing Francescatti how he played Beethoven's violin concerto.

It was probably the last time that Kreisler played either the violin or the piano. He was a very happy man. He loved the Berkshires; he adored Francescatti; he was among friends. He let himself go.

I do not recall Kreisler coming to a Tanglewood concert after that. In fact, when I called on him during the following summer, he was already suffering from the numerous ailments that beset him. But we talked of the many worlds he loved.

TO KREISLER, music was not something apart. It was a manifestation of life in all its richness. He composed perhaps 200 pieces in his lifetime, everything from the noblest music to a light opera, "Apple Blossom." For such a sentence as this, Fritz would have reprimanded me. He would have said that all music that is beautiful and that adds to the richness of life is good and that snobbery is always intolerable.

He loved the United States. Although during the frightful years of World War I, he suffered from a divided loyalty, he really never could think of his beloved Austria and his beloved America as separate or as enemies. In front of the Heaton Hall hotel in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, stands a flagpole, erected in honor of Fritz Kreisler. I was present at the ceremonies and made a short address. The American flag was raised and flew each day during the season. It will be a permanent memorial to a noble soul. It will be his American memorial.

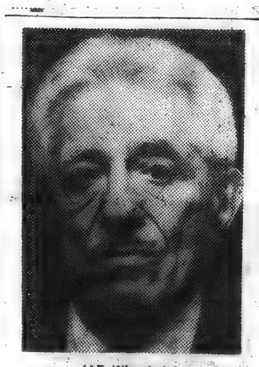
FRITZ Kreisler was beyond doubt the greatest violinist of his day and although younger generations cannot hear him play, the phonograph and radio will continue to bring him to future generations. He loved life and he loved humanity and he knew no rancor or envy, expecting the next generation to be more wonderful than the one he would leave behind. His sense of humor was as rich as his understanding of man was keen.

Copyr., 1962, King Features Synd., Inc.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

JAN 30 1962



(AP Wirephoto)
FRITZ KREISLER
He loved Boston

Famed Violinist Kreisler Had Fond Memories Of Recitals In Boston

NEW YORK (UPI)—The young Austrian already had been hailed by critics as "supreme among violinists of our time" when, in 1906, he arrived in Boston for a solo engagement. It was with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Fritz Kreisler cherished fond memories of Boston. It was the scene of his triumphant American concert debut 17 years earlier. He had been looking forward to this return visit.

Kreisler graciously accepted conductor Karl Muck's invitation to join the violin section during one of the orchestra's rehearsals. But the rehearsal became something of a nightmare for the famed violinist.

Muck made numerous interruptions to criticize Kreisler for his inadequate playing and an uneasy embarassment began to vibrate through the orchestra pit. Stone-faced musicians seemed to be looking at him with the condescending compassion usually reserved for the bungling beginner.

The 31-year-old Kreisler was profoundly baffled. Muck was a conductor whose opinion commanded respect. But nothing like this had ever before happened to the child prodigy who quickly matured into a violinist of immense stature.

What could possibly have gone wrong?

Then suddenly the orchestra pit shook with laughter. Instantly grasping the joke that had been played on him, Kreisler joined in the hilarity.

The story, still a favorite among Boston music lovers, is no doubt apocryphal. It nevertheless illustrates the beloved violinist's warmth and gentle humanity. These qualities are deeply familiar to the millions who have listened to his music these many decades.

For nearly 70 years Fritz Kreisler's music charmed the world. He finally retired from the concert stage in 1950. Since then, he played for an occasional charity, but that was all.

On Jan. 13 he was admitted into Columbia-Presbyterian hospital to undergo treatment for an undisclosed illness. Yesterday, at the age of 86, he died. The cause of death was not revealed.

Funeral services will be held Thursday in the Church of St. John the Evangelist here.

The services, at 10 a.m. in the Roman Catholic church, will be private.

Miscellaneous

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
WED FEB 7 1962

JACQUES IBERT, 71, COMPOSER, IS DEAD

Ex-Head of French Academy in Rome Wrote 'Escales'

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Feb. 6—Jacques Ibert, internationally known French composer, died last night at his home here. He was 71 years old.

The noted musician became ill with influenza ten days ago. With the exception of the war years, he directed the French Academy in Rome from 1937 until last year.

M. Ibert had been working recently on a symphony that Charles Munch was to have conducted on the forthcoming seventy-sixth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The holder of many musical distinctions and awards, M. Ibert was also a Commander of the Legion of Honor.

He is survived by his widow and a son, Jean-Claude.

Combined Influences

M. Ibert combined in his music several traditions. He used French impressionism with the dry wit and neoclassicism of more recent French musical thought as well as a more genial humor, sweetness and color that appealed to popular taste.

By far his best-known work was the "Escales," called in English "Ports of Call." It was supposed to have been inspired by a Mediterranean cruise while the composer was in the French Navy during World War I.

His extensive output included eight operas. The best known of his operas are "Angélique" and "Le Roi d'Yvetot," both of which were produced in this country. Two others were written in collaboration with Arthur Honegger; still another was written for radio performance.

His piano work, "Le petit âne blanc" gained wide popularity. Other well-known scores include a Divertissement and a "Suite Elisabéthaine" for orchestra. He wrote a considerable number of other orchestral, vocal, chamber and solo works as well as five ballet scores.

"King Among Craftsmen"

"A king among craftsmen, if not a composer working by divine right" was the way one critic described him. In "Le Roi d' Yvetot" ("The King of Yvetot") a gentle poke at man's preoccupation with the affairs of state, the task involved the flux and shifting patterns of a forty-voice chorus.

Yet M. Ibert's work was little known in this country.

M. Ibert also composed for films, his credits including Orson Welles' "Macbeth" and Gene Kelley's "Invitation to the Dance." His music for "The Italian Straw Hat" by Eugene Labiche and Marc-Michel was heard here when the play was produced off Broadway in 1957.

M. Ibert was born in 1890 and studied at the Paris Conservatory with André Gédalge and Gabriel Fauré. He received the Prix de Rome in 1919 and it was during this first stay at the Villa Medici of the French Academy in Rome that he wrote "Escales."

His father wanted him to be a business man. He wanted to be an actor. He tried acting school, then switched to music, as his mother had wanted.

At the conservatory, finding himself behind the others and in classes with M. Honegger and Darius Milhaud, he rushed to catch up. But his early dreams of being an actor were not forgotten.

'Man of the Theatre'

"I am still a man of the theatre," he said in later life, and his operas, ballets and film scores showed this.

His experimentation grew. In 1950 the Paris Opéra presented his, "The Knight Errant," based on "Don Quixote." It called for a massive orchestra and 120 singers.

The year he went to Rome he married Mlle. Marie-Rose Verber, daughter of Jean Verber, the painter, breaking a tradition that only unmarried persons could work at the academy. His return there in 1937 was also exceptional since he was the first director in the history of the institution not to be either a painter or a sculptor.

M. Ibert visited this country in 1950. He taught at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. In 1955 he became director of the Paris Opéra and Opéra-Comique but left the post a year later. It was said that he took the position with reluctance and could not fulfill all his duties because of illness.

'New York Is a Dream!'

It took four attempts before M. Ibert was able to come to the United States.

"New York is a dream!" he exclaimed. "It is a dream I have dreamed for thirty years. But New York is like a woman. She is coquettish."

A tall, lithe man, he touched his white mustache and told of being "crazy with activity" since he landed.

With my friends I ride the streets at night, look at the buildings, the enormous traffic, the police sirens," he said. The movement of the city also had an appeal.

"I like this about America," he explained, "it is precise. I, too, am precise. In Italy when you make an appointment for 5 o'clock they come at 7. In France everything is an hour late. In South America it is always 'mañana.' Here everyone is prompt."

He smoothed his white hair.

"You must pardon my English," he said. "I read a great many American books, because I have the same kind of feeling. I like Faulkner and 'The Naked and the Dead.' They are very strong. Henry Miller is also a very strong writer."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 43,669
MAR 1 1962

Women Moving Into Symphony Orchestra Jobs

BY GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

NEW YORK. — (UPI) — In tune with the times, the women are moving into another province once belonging to the men—the nation's symphony orchestras.

Twenty to thirty years ago, about the only feminine touch to the average orchestra was the girl at the harp. Today, it's an unusual symphony without several female musicians, and some orchestral groups have as high as 50 per cent feminine membership, said Max Aronoff, member of a famous classical musical group and director of a school for musicians.

Aronoff, a Philadelphian, said there are three major factors causing this feminine invasion.

"It's like in any other field," said Aronoff. "Women are all over the place . . . You find them in jobs everywhere they'd never held before."

Also, he said, the nation is on a "culture kick," musical education is expanding, and so consequently is the number of women musicians.

And, as the number of symphonies grows, with almost every city of any size boasting one, the need for musicians grows. Women are helping to meet the demand.

Aronoff said the women are playing instruments a far cry from the gentle harp. The Boston Symphony has a woman flutist, the San Francisco Symphony has a woman bass fiddler, there are women trombonists with the Minneapolis Symphony—and women cellist, bassoonists, trumpeters and tympanists all over the place.

"Time was," said Aronoff, "when a woman wouldn't study the cello . . . It might make her bowlegged. Today, there are several fine cellists."

Husband-Wife Teams

Aronoff said there are numerous husband-wife teams among the more than 1150 symphonies in the United States.

"Boy first meets girl at music school," he said, "and when they marry they decide to keep on making music together, so they join an orchestra."

The musician said there might be a little discrimination against women here and there, but not so far as he and most conductors are concerned.

"You used to hear comments that 'Aw, she plays like a woman,'" he said. "That's applesauce. There are two types of musicians—good and bad, ability has nothing to do with their sex."

Aronoff, 55, is a viola player. He was studying music by the age of seven, by the age of 12 gave his first lesson, and is an original member of the Curtis String Quartet which for 35 years has toured the world.

Directs Music School

He also is founder and director of the New School of Music, Philadelphia, established 20 years ago. Its talented student body ranges in age from a seven-year-old girl prodigy of the violin to a woman in her 60's.

During a business trip to New York, Aronoff explained that the non-profit institution offers orchestra training as it major subject and has placed students in just about every symphony in the country.

Aronoff is a musician's musician, but far from the "long hair" in his genial approach to musical culture.

He confessed plans for attending the next concert in Philadelphia by Peter Seegar, banjo-playing specialist in folk music. He confessed also that the idea came from his 16-year-old son, Benjamin, who is a Seegar fan and plays the banjo, Seegar-style.

"Benjy thinks I'm a square," said Aronoff. "But I might add, my son is a good viola player."

NIAGARA FALLS GAZETTE
Monday, February 26, 1962

Women Move Into Orchestra Field

By GAY PAULEY

NEW YORK (UPI) — In tune with the times, the women are moving into another province once belonging to the men—the nation's symphony orchestras.

Twenty to 30 years ago, about the only feminine touch to the average orchestra was the girl at the harp. Today, it's an unusual symphony without several female musicians, and some orchestral groups have as high as 50 per cent feminine membership, said Max Aronoff, member of a famous classical musical group and director of a school for musicians.

* * *

ARONOFF, a Philadelphian, said there are three major factors causing this feminine invasion.

"It's like in any other field," said Aronoff. "Women are all over the place . . . you find them in jobs everywhere they'd never held before."

Also, he said, the nation is on a "culture kick," musical education is expanding, and so consequently is the number of women musicians.

And, as the number of symphonies grows, with almost every city of any size boasting one, the need for musicians grows. Women are helping to meet the demand.

* * *

ARONOFF said the women are playing instruments a far cry from the gentle harp. The Boston Symphony has a woman flutist, the San Francisco Symphony has a woman bass fiddler, there are women trombonists with the Minneapolis Symphony—and women cellists, bassoonists, trumpeters and tympanists all over the place.

"Time was," said Aronoff, "when a woman wouldn't study the cello . . . It might make her bowlegged. Today, there are several fine cellists."

Aronoff said there are numerous husband-wife teams among the more than 1150 symphonies in the United States.

"Boy first meets girl at music school," he said, "and when they marry they decide to keep on making music together, so they join an orchestra."

The musician said there might be a little discrimination against women here and there, but not so far as he and most conductors are concerned.

"You used to hear comments that 'aw,' she plays like a woman,'" he said. "That's applesauce. There are two types of musicians—good and bad. Ability has nothing to do with their sex."

* * *

ARONOFF, 55, is a viola player. He was studying music by the age of seven, by the age of 12 gave his first lesson, and is an original member of the Curtis String Quartet which for 35 years has toured the world.

He also is founder and director of the New School of Music, Philadelphia, established 20 years ago. Its talented student body ranges in age from a seven-year-old girl prodigy of the violin to a woman in her 60's.

During a business trip to New York, Aronoff explained that the non-profit institution offers orchestra training as its major subject and has placed students in just about every symphony in the country.

Arnoff is a musician's musician, but far from the "long hair" in his genial approach to musical culture.

* * *

HE CONFESSED plans for attending the next concert in Philadelphia by Pete Seeger, banjo-playing specialist in folk music. He confessed also that the idea came from his 16-year-old son, Benjamin, who is a Seeger fan and plays the banjo, Seeger-style.

"Benjy thinks I'm a square," said Aronoff. "But I might add, my son is a damned good viola player."

24

Miscellaneous

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

Contemporary Music Topic After Week-Long Festival

Does the American symphony orchestra accept its responsibility for contemporary music?

This was the subject of a debate which came towards the end of the week-long festival of 20th century music at Smith College March 11-18.

Taking part were Thomas A. Perry and Leonard Burkat, manager and assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Eric Salzman and Peter Schickele, composers, Kurt Stone, representing the Associated Music Publishers, and Dean Doris Silbert, moderator.

Mr. Salzman, who is also a music critic on the staff of the New York Times, said that conductors are so occupied with rehearsals, performances and cultivation of possible donors that they seldom have time to read new scores. He contended also that leading American orchestras are old and well established and thus tend to be conservative, with conservative boards of directors who are opposed to new music. He called for a "sense of commitment, of involvement" on the part of conductors so that they would find the time to read such music.

Mr. Schickele told the Sage hall audience that in some of the cities outside New York which support symphony orchestras the younger, "alert" people are losing interest because of the "warhorses" on the programs. He said the most conservative musical institution in New York is the Metropolitan Opera, in contrast to such "very vital" institutions in Germany, which are subsidized by the government.

Mr. Stone said that on the other hand, an American orchestra, not subsidized by the government, cannot afford to play music which "will drive the customers away." He added that his firm published probably more contemporary music than any other, but that any piece which is difficult to play and takes a long time to rehearse is apt to go to a college or a community group "where there is plenty of time and no extra expenses involved."

Mr. Perry said that the orchestra does accept its responsibility for presenting contemporary music and that it has a duty to present the music it judges best and not merely what the public might dictate. He told the audience that there exists a strong relationship between an orchestra and composers and that to present music of the latter "should not be considered an obligation, a duty, but should be looked on more as a friendly, informal arrangement — one that has charm rather than one which is a burden."

Mr. Burket read from the list of composers represented in the Smith music festival and said that the Boston Symphony included nearly all of them in its repertoire. He denied that a "healthy" orchestra would be subject to any dicta-

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Monday, April 16, 1962

Alice Hughes

Director Defines His Role As Leader of Philharmonic

When NBC's Philharmonic Symphony conductor, Toscanini, was living, there were constant chords of rivalry between his New York orchestra and that of the late Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. Now that both of these most highly regarded baton-wavers are listening serenely to celestial music on high, there is no dissonance between the two director-conductors: Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony and Leonard Bernstein, of the New York Philharmonic. Each reigns unchallenged. Bernstein's concerts are sold out solid, for a year ahead, particularly those delightful musicales he arranges, explains and concertizes for young people. And as for Munch, Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons make Symphony Hall almost a shrine in Boston.

Every four or five weeks the Boston troupe travels to New York for a half-week of concerts in Carnegie Hall in the Brooklyn Academy of Music and in Princeton. Last weekend was a particularly emotional one, because it was the New York swan song of Charles Munch. After this coming summer music festival in the Berkshires, over which Munch will wave his baton for the last time as conductor, he will retire, and hand over his famed band to the new man, Erich Leinsdorf. Munch, who comes from Alsace, has given the orchestra a French flavor in his music selection and interpretation. Koussevitzky championed the music of Russia's Rachmaninoff and Stravinsky, and also Finland's Sibelius, among others. Leinsdorf, trained in the Viennese tradition, will undoubtedly inject the sound and flavor of his preferred music.

* * *

THE NEXT TIME the Boston Symphony orchestra plays in New York, it will be this autumn, when the Philharmonic hall at our New Lincoln center will have been opened as our leading concert hall. Its first performance will be that of the New York Philharmonic, on Sept. 23. The next day the Boston Symphony will play to its audience, followed by the Philadelphia on the 25th and the Cleveland orchestra on the 26th. On the 27th through 29 the Metropolitan Opera Company will have its innings. This new concert hall at Lincoln center has 158 fewer seats than Carnegie Hall, which has done stoic service for New York's major musical events since May 5, 1891.

The fact that the above four orchestras have been booked during the week of the world-premiere of the Lincoln Philharmonic hall would seem to point to them specifically as the top-most concert orchestras of the East. California and other states west of the Hudson river have excellent musical organizations, but for the time being, the summit status rests on these four great symphony orchestra. In the April issue of "Town and Country" Charles Munch explains his role in life: "It is to help saddened souls to escape to happier worlds through music."

(Copyright, 1962, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE
D. 8,671
JAN 15 1962
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

Virtuoso Tells Of Playing With Boston Symphony

Sigurd Rascher will appear in concert Thursday 7:30 p.m. with the APSC Band in the Clement Fine Arts Building. Dr. Aaron Schmidt, director of bands at APSC, has stated that Rascher is one of the great virtuoso performers in the world today. Rascher has been described as the world's greatest saxophonist.

Rascher here tells of getting to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra shortly after returning from a 1938 tour in Australia:

"To break established tradition and set a precedent takes conviction and persistence. — Conviction that you are (musically speaking) right and persistence to get through to the man who will understand you.

"Returning to Europe from a tour in Australia in 1938, I felt I had to see the conductors of some of the great orchestras. In Boston, I ascertained the Symphony's rehearsal time and was told at the office to wait for Maestro Koussevitzki in the green room; the manager would tell him about me.

"With great expectations I stood there, sax in hand. In came Koussevitzki, looked perplexed at me and the sax, and said coldly, 'Young man, get out of here!'

(Continued on Page 5, Col. 3)

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
D. 278,059 S. 314,832
FEB 11 1962

Only Once Was There The 'Boston Sound'

By Everett Helm

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra occupies a very special place in my affections and musical scheme of things. I was exposed to it week in, week out, for five years during my Harvard days. This was the Golden Age of Koussevitzky, when the orchestra achieved artistic heights that have now become legendary.

The sound the orchestra made in those days is hard to define. Let it be called the "Boston sound"—a combined result of Koussevitzky's particular kind of ear, his insistence upon musical (not merely mechanical) perfection, and his having assembled a body of players that were certainly without peer in the entire world.

Years, many years, have passed since I last heard the B.S.O.—years during which I have listened frequently to other great orchestras: the Vienna Philharmonic, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Philharmonia Orchestra of London, the NBC under Toscanini, the Cleveland, Philadelphia and New York orchestras. As a result, it was with intense curiosity that I bent my ears to two concerts the Bostonians gave in Carnegie Hall in the Borough of Manhattan.

The guest conductor was the bearded veteran of 78, Ernest Ansermet. The performances were, on the whole, rather routine and uninspired. The Bach suite for strings and flute left me wondering whether I had mistaken the day — or the hall. To hear (and see) the Boston strings sawing away perfunctorily was a traumatic experience that hurt. The gentlemanly but uncommunicative performance of Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements" left little impression. Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" was decidely an improvement; both conductor and orchestra seemed happier. But only with the Mussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" did things really come to life. The orchestra played with ALICE EHLERS, harpsichordist, with violinist Eudice Shapiro will give a concert Thursday and next Sunday at 8:30 p.m. in Hertz Hall at U. C.

Virtuoso

(Continued from Page 1)

"An attempt to explain myself was quickly squelched with a brusque movement of his hand towards the door. I had no choice. But I did not give up. Into the hall I sneaked and listened to the rehearsal. In the intermission I sought out Concertmaster Burgin and explained my presence.

"He promised to speak to the maestro and asked me to be ready after the rehearsal. There I stood in the hallway as Koussevitzki rushed by. Seeing me, he said, 'I have no time, but if you can play while I'll dress, go ahead!'

"He disappeared and, as I mounted my mouthpiece, I heard through the half-open door the splashing of the shower. I had not played 32 measures when a figure, all wrapped in a turkish towel, ran across the room and shouted into the hall, 'Come in.' Hear this young man,' and motioned me to continue.

" 'Vot is dat?' he asked me. When told, he would not believe it to be an original composition by Jacques Ibert; seeing the score, he asked for my name. I simply pointed to the dedication. That did it.

"A number of musicians had come in — the score passed from hand to hand. Incredulous headshaking. 'Do you play the Debussy Rapsodie?' —'Indeed I do!'— 'Leave your address with the manager!'

"With that, the man in the turkish towel vanished. The battle had been short, victory assured. My American debut was in October 1939 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sorge Koussevitzki conducting.

"Quipped the Boston Globe: 'The busts of Bach and Beethoven did not topple from their pedestals at the sight of a saxophone in Symphony Hall . . .'" the virtuosity it still, obviously, possesses. The rapport between conductor and players was noticeable, albeit not overpowering.

Boston Symphony

Only once, however, did the old "Boston sound" manifest itself—in Brahms' second symphony, with which the second concert opened. Not so much because of Ansermet, whose idea of this work is essentially French and a bit academic, but because of Koussevitzky, whose shade seemed to haunt the performance and to materialize at some moments more clearly than at others. Or so it seemed to me. Call it what you will: spirit or tradition. It is by no means inconceivable that one of these was at work (or were they both?) in this performance of one of "Koussy's" favorite works.

The Boston orchestra is not what it used to be. But it is still a very good orchestra. Next season it will have a new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, whose current success at the Met is formidable. Things are looking up in Boston.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS-TELEGRAM
D: 83,871

MAR 20 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JAN 19 1962

Stravinsky at 80

The World's Greatest Living Composer

By IRWIN SHAINMAN

WILLIAMSTOWN.

THIS YEAR, Igor Stravinsky, the world's greatest living composer, is celebrating his 80th birthday. Celebrations in the form of special presentations and commemorative concerts are taking place all over the world. A White House dinner last night has honored one of the most active and agile creative minds of the 20th century.

This is as it should be and is a well-deserved tribute to a towering figure. A figure whose music, when first performed in Paris, caused surprise in 1910, shock in 1912, and riots in 1913 but in one half of a century, his works have become accepted and respected classics wherever serious musicians gather. To his everlasting credit, he has won this acceptance without resorting to compromise, simplification, popularization and willing cultivation of either press or public.

* * *

IN SPITE OF his success and a goodly share of "fame and fortune," Stravinsky has never seen fit to rest on his laurels. He has never stopped working, composing and experimenting. He has distinguished himself in virtually every area and form of music from the ballet and symphony to small chamber works, and from the opera house to the concerto and piano sonata. He has never turned his back on a creative challenge and the results have included everything from a Mozart-style opera, a ballet for circus elephants, a concerto for a swing band, music for radio, and a Mass.

It is interesting that a man of such versatility and international acclaim has been called by some historians, "a composer in isolation." Isolated in the sense that even though he was born in Russia, has lived in Italy, Switzerland, France and has a home in California, he is regularly associated with no nationality.

* * *

ISOLATED he is in the sense that he represents no school or style. By the time the public catches up to him in one area, he has shifted gears and gone off on a new stylistic turn. His music has ranged through every "ism" and "neo" and every time the experts agree that "this is it," it turns out that it isn't. At the present time a man of his age might be expected to be enjoying the comfortable retirement his long years of toil have earned him. If still occasionally writing one might well expect something quite sentimental and romantic. On the contrary, he is not only working harder than ever, but his music is austere and calculated. His incisive mind is now probing the depths of the most orthodox forms of serial and dodecaphonic techniques.

Igor Stravinsky

Isolated he is in the sense that he has never had a center of activity, say, a university campus, where he could teach or attract a coterie of pupils. With the exception of his famous Harvard lectures on the "Poetics of Music" he has never held a teaching position. When a young composer suggests that he writes like Stravinsky, one must ask, "Which Stravinsky?"

* * *

LOCAL MUSIC lovers have been fortunate in the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has championed the music of this eminent composer. In fact, Stravinsky wrote his "Symphony of Psalms" to honor the BSO, and we sincerely hope that suitable note of this special birthday will be taken at Tanglewood this coming summer.

Stravinsky has always been a man of humility, sincerity and deep faith in the importance and seriousness of what he was doing. We certainly agree that it has been important, serious and worthwhile and we wish him many more years of life, health and activity.

WITH THE ARTS

Musicians' Future Gloomy

By HAROLD LUNDSTROM
Deseret News Music Editor

SIX OF the nation's most distinguished musical personalities — Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman — recently participated in a special seminar. The general topic was "The Direction of Music in America."

On the subject of the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, the panel expressed some gloom. Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the famed Boston Pops:

"I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field.

"I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. (In the Utah Symphony it is 20 weeks.) What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year 'round position."

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony, added:

"I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain small middle or upper middle class of people.

"In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music.

"Then, the surroundings must be right. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up. Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, distinguished conductor-composer, stated:

"Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of the symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government. We are not by nature predisposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me.

Mr. Bernstein

"But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is unjust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies . . . support the arts to an extraordinary extent including . . . Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . ."

SPEAKING of the aspirations of young symphonic composers, Aaron Copland, the moderator, said:

"Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras, and the cure is simple. All that has to happen is that our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers.

"Contemporary works of a more advanced kind are becoming less and less played on symphony programs. The young composer who writes a score and has very little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

MR. LEINSDORF added: "I feel very sad for the young composer of today who does not know for whom he is writing.

"Haydn . . . knew he was writing for Prince Esterhazy for many years. In fact, when somebody asked the old master, 'Why have you written so many quartets, so many symphonies, so many sonatas, so many baritone trios? Why have you never written a quintet?' Haydn thought a bit and replied, 'because nobody ever asked me to write any.'

"Haydn . . . then was writing for an audience whom he knew. I feel very keenly for the loneliness of today's young composer who is writing for an unknown audience."

To the question: "What constitutes originality in composition," Mr. Bernstein stated:

"The good scores are the ones that are original without trying, without the composer necessarily saying 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

APR 5 1962

Monteux Turns 87; Work Goes On

Pierre Monteux, whose conducting has been a high point of the Tanglewood season for the past several years, celebrated his 87th birthday in Rome, Italy, yesterday.

Mr. Monteux was in Rome to conduct two concerts with the Santa Cecilia Academy Orchestra, Italy's national symphony.

From Italy, Monteux goes to London where he will conduct several concerts for the London Symphony. Mr. Monteux recently signed a 25-year contract with the London Symphony, with an option to renew for another 25 after that.

Mr. Monteux announced in Rome that his dog, a 16-year-old poodle named Fif, will have a book coming out in September. It is titled "Everyone Is Someone." The title comes from Mr. Monteux's remark when a Nova Scotian hotel keeper refused his family accommodations when she saw the dog.

148

FAUSTO CLEVA
WHAT IS CONDUCTING TECHNIQUE?
FRITZ REINER
CHARLES MUNCH
LEONARD BERNSTEIN
GEORG SZELL
ARTURO TOSCANINI
LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI
EUGENE ORMANDY
PIERRE MONTEUX

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
JAN 1962

By Elizabeth A. H. Green

The wide-spread twentieth century interest in the conductor's art is being recognized by the publication of many fine articles concerning this phase of musical virtuosity. A turning-point has arrived, as conductor Igor Markevitch of the Lamoureux Orchestra of Paris suggested in the September issue of the Music Journal (Markevitch: The Technique of Conducting, pp. 34-35).

To quote: "An exact system of rules on conducting, so clear that the conductor's every gesture will be understood exactly as meant and fully take the place of the spoken word, should and can be created."

Nicolai Malko (1883-1961), eminent European conductor, devoted much of his professional life to the intricate study of this "exact system." He did for the manual technique what other great teachers, such as Scherchen, have done for the score-study aspect of the art. His book, The Conductor and His Baton (Wilhelm Hansen, Copenhagen, 1950), contains what is, without exception, the greatest single chapter in print on the manual technique. This magnificent chapter of 126 pages (Chapter V, The Conductor's Gestures), deals with the expressive qualities in the conductor's hands, the real technique for making music above and beyond the actual time-beating. The latter (time-beating) Malko deals with thoroughly in his third chapter.

During his long professional career, Malko guest-conducted a large percentage of the great orchestras of the world, both symphonic and operatic. He spent time studying and analyzing his own conductorial gestures, and the reactions to them on the part of the countless professional musicians who played under his baton. The gestures which produced, universally, the desired responses were noted and refined. The gestures which caused unwanted reactions were thrown out. Gradually the technical science of the art emerged.

Teaching continuously throughout his career, Malko also perfected the methods for transmitting the manual technique clearly and accurately to the conscientious student who would patiently devote himself to the necessary study and its accompanying manual practice. Pupils of Malko circle the globe. Shortly before his death, he wrote of a conducting class in Australia, mentioning the interesting fact that among the students there were two talented young oriental women.

The existence of the exact science of the manual technique of conducting is being increasingly recognized in our great country. Consequently, the defeatist fable that "one can teach all there is to the manual side of the art in about twenty minutes" is being relegated to the oblivion it justly deserves.

It is now understood that the young conductor can acquire a professional brand of technique in the classroom: that much is teachable. What the student does with it afterwards depends upon himself, his God and his orchestra. No teacher can create musical talent, musical imagination, personal magnetism. A teacher can only unlock these things where they already exist.

So now, what is conducting technique? In its most elementary aspect, conducting technique concerns itself with the performance of the unvarying rhythmic beat, strictly in time. Growing up from this "kindergarten" beginning, the beat assumes the professionally-recognized direction (of the most common time-signatures) for each unit of time within the measure. Then, when all beats are performed in the correct direction, regardless of what comes before or after them, the conductor as such begins to emerge by proving his ability to vary the time in accordance with the demands of the musical content, thereby carrying his players along with him.

If he matures beyond this point, he begins to relate the size of his gestures to the dynamic indications stated in the score, not permitting such size-variations to upset by accident his intended time. Here he finds that a large sweeping gesture, accompanied by impulse of will, brings a loud tone from the players, regardless of what may be emphatic "piano" markings on the printed page. He learns, too, that small, calm gestures seldom produce the electrifying double-forte which lifts orchestra and audience to exciting emotional heights.

Having acknowledged the truth of these things, the young conductor next discovers that a "piano" following immediately upon the heels of a forte, requires a sudden gesture of the left hand if the drop to piano is to be instantaneous.

Somewhere along the way, this young man with the baton has discovered the value of a clearly stated cut-off in the stick. He may not yet have listened conscientiously enough to hear that his cut-off with too much impulse of will has produced an unpleasant accent at the end of the tone (a simple, psychological reaction on the part of the players). But, if he trains his ear, he will soon begin to hear such things. When he corrects the players by word of mouth he has half-won the battle. But if he corrects his gesture, then he is beginning to understand what conducting really is.

Now arrives the state of consciousness that something is wrong: his time-beating is sometimes misread, even by the best of players. A kindly expert explains to him that his arms move naturally in arcs, and that the harder he hits the beat, the higher his hand will bounce. Ah! So the tip of the stick should be trained to move in straight lines, not in horizontal arcs around the conductor's body nor in a perpendicular arc which permits the tip to flick back over the conductor's shoulder (pointing momentarily at the audience) on the last beat of each measure. Perhaps "exercises," like scales and etudes, have to be practiced to get the stick to move in the requisite straight lines. Further, control has to be imposed to prevent the hand from flying up too high after the down-beat, which high rebound spoils the clarity of outline of beats within the measure.

Meanwhile, what about the left hand? This, too, should be able to make the time-beating gestures, but should "know enough" not to do so most of the time. Its independence from the right hand has to be acquired and then trained. The left hand has its own inflections to add to the musical performance and should not chatter along in unison with the right hand. There are exercises for establishing independence and then for perfecting the language of left hand. And so the technique grows.

Cues, fermatas, advanced time-beating patterns in fives and sevens, changes of speed across double bars, changes in meter in consecutive measures—a need for knowing how and for perfecting skill after skill: with all this we have said nothing of the "irregular" time-beating required in the modern fast fives and sevens, nor of the texture of the gesture to match the texture of the tone. We have not mentioned the handling of difficult beginnings, the "how" of the legato, the tenuto, the staccato, accentuation in all of its nuances of meaning, nor the conducting of the wonderful silences of music. We have disregarded any reference to phrasal conducting, to the momentary delineation of the phrase itself instead of the particular beats of which it is comprised.

These are not "matters of experience." They are all genuinely teachable techniques. The young conductor who has patiently acquired them does not have to wonder about the comments made by his players in his absence. He has learned to write a language which amateur and professional alike can read and understand. He can step confidently up to the next rung of the ladder.

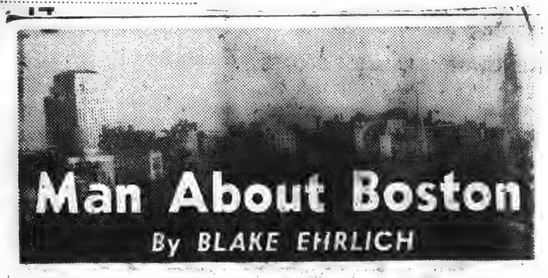
The time is fast approching when even the conductors of amateur groups will no longer be able to get by on a meager knowledge of time-beating accompanied by sheer musical enthusiasm and cheer-leading tactics. The science of the manual technique of the conductor is an exact science, teachable, readable, understandable. It is beginning to permeate its own twentieth-century musical world just as the knowledge of atomic radiation has permeated the general consciousness of twentieth-century man.

We cannot afford, any longer, to know too little if we wish to be successful with the baton. THE END

Note: At the time of his death, Mr. Malko was the permanent conductor of the Sydney, Australia, Symphony Orchestra. He was formerly conductor of the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg, director of the Leningrad Philharmonic, and permanent guest conductor of the Danish State Radio Symphony Orchestra. His concert tours took him throughout Europe, North and South America, Israel and, most recently, Japan. During the summers of 1936 and 1937 he gave "Master Classes" at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria.

150

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
JAN 22 1962



Please Say It Isn't So, Boston Music Lovers

IF THIS WERE a French newspaper I could have a headline here reading: Boston's Golden Age of Music, Is It Gone?

People who ought to know tell me that it is gone, but I don't know enough about either Boston or music to tell for myself. As a reporter, I just can't go on hearsay.

I can ask questions, though. Is it true that great musical artists, aside from soloists with the Symphony, don't flock here as they once did to perform? Is it true that the New England Conservatory has lost its once-leading position as a developer of musical artists?

It seems to me that Boston lives in a sea of music. A covey of FM stations devotes hundreds of air hours a week to good music. Some of our churches—Old North and King's Chapel come readily to mind—have highly developed musical programs.

The Fine Arts and Gardiner Museums give numerous small concerts. The universities burst with music. Everywhere there are amateur groups playing for their own amusement. The schools have impressive orchestras and choirs. We haven't lost the Symphony and the Pops.

ONE OF THE THINGS that raises this whole question is the return of Boris Goldovsky's opera troupe from a tour of the country. In 10 weeks they played 54 cities, and it was literally a triumphal tour.

In every kind of hall, from school gyms to huge civic auditoriums, they played to packed houses. They actually made a profit. And they expect to lose it all and go back into the red in their home town of Boston.

It's not that they're looking for a profit, because it's a non-profit organization, but they are looking for some response. Why should Boston be colder to opera than Kankakee or New York?

At the age of 16, this company, the New England Opera Theater, Inc., is the oldest in Boston, a city of long-lived institutions. There are gas stations here older than this. Does Boston just hate opera?

IF PEOPLE in other towns break down the doors to see this particular troupe, why do Bostonians stay away? I put the question to Mrs. Joyce Newdick, executive director of the company.

I must say that after I met Joyce, I didn't much care what her answer was, because she charmed me right out of my tree.

She is a tiny, comely creature, looking about as executive as a bluebird. With a mind like a chrome steel trap.

She said, "The Boston public should realize that a well done opera is the equal in sheer entertainment of a musical comedy, only that the music is better."

TO HER MIND, a Goldovsky opera is well nigh perfect. "To be with Goldovsky, a performer must have a beautiful voice, be a good actor and a good musician. Our performances—always in English—are always valid and vital theater."

The object is not just to give the public a good time, but to train opera personnel, she said. Their leadership program gives to directors, stage managers, conductors and other off-stage essential workers the living experience of putting on an opera.

"In the past 15 years the number of opera groups in America has trebled—civic operas and university workshops," she said. "The people running these have learned at the master's knee." Master Boris Goldovsky, she meant.

That's a very broad statement, but it's only now that the spell is less intense, that I see how broad it is.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
APR 7 1962

Saturday Chat

Just What and Where Is Music?

By Philip S. Marden

LOWELL—One of the things which physical disability compels me to forego is the regular attendance at the Friday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony. I shall miss them, and even the presentation on Channel 2 of the concerts in Sanders theatre at Harvard will not quite fill the gap chiefly because I cannot make my TV set give an adequate reproduction. I don't know whether this is the fault of the machine or of the "mike" at the sending end, but for one reason or another the reception is not good. If I tune up to make the pianissimi really audible, the fortissmi suddenly blasts me out of my easy chair.

Early in my married life, Katrina persuaded me to attend the Friday afternoon concerts, to which she was an addict ever since her school-teaching days in Milton. That must have been around 1906, and I have continued my subscription without interruption ever since. It comes hard to abandon a custom which has become so rooted.

I USED TO wonder whether or not Katrina began her devotion to the Friday concerts primarily because of her love of music or because she felt it would be culturally improving. At any rate that has been the case with me. I have learned to appreciate good music more than I did at starting, and I certainly know more about it, but I cannot say that I like it all, especially the unfamiliar modern compositions of which in recent years I have heard so much. Much of it still seems to me, not music but simply ear-torturing noise. Some of it I have been compelled to listen to several times over, like the sacre du Printemps (the Rite of Spring), without awakening any greater appreciation for it. I confess this with a flush of shame, well realizing that it shows my ignorance; but I fall back on that famous last resort of the Bromide, "I don't know much about art but I know what I like" and I scorn to pretend what isn't so. If that be treason, make the most of it! I suspect that the professed admiration for dissonant modern music is insincere and a highly reprehensible fraud.

I know it is idle to dispute matters of taste. De gustibus non disputandum. I'm not going to claim that anything I don't like cannot be called music but only that I don't see how a thing that sounds like Bedlam in the nursery, which outrages the ordinary ear by a series of squeals and dissonant shrieks, can be called by that honorable name. For music, to me, should at least be pleasant to hear, even if you have to learn to like it.

In my sixty years, or so, of symphony-going I have learned to like a lot of stuff that originally was downright dull. But I have also listened to things I know perfectly well I could never learn to regard as anything but a most God-awful racket without form and void—in short not music at all. I often wonder if the members of the orchestra feel the same repugnance.

In my nearly sixty years I have seen a variety of conductors. The first was a German named Fiedler (not Arthur of that ilk), Rabaut, Monteux, Muck (pronounced Mook) Koussivitzki, and the current Munch who is in his last year and who is usually pronounced "Moonch," which is Bostonian for the "French u."). They were all competent, and some of them rated tops, Dr. Muck I remember had two terms, sadly interfered with by World War I. I recall that on his return to the podium the old Papyrus Club welcomed him back with a "Muck zuruck" dinner. I had a stunt to do—i.e., to programmatize the menu in the style of Philip Hale, bound up with the Symphony program cover. I wish I could find a specimen of that imitation of Mr. Hale's magistereal work, for I regarded it as one of the best things I ever did, and even Mr. Hale liked it enough to have it bound up with the collection of his programs in the New York public library —or so I was told.

I am not qualified to make dogmatic criticisms of the Boston Symphony, but it seems to me to overdo its zeal to keep us informed about what is being done in the world of modern music. Why is that a necessity? We go to the concerts to hear good music, played by the best orchestra in the world. We do it because it gives us pleasure. Why insist on trying to make us tolerate what gives us pain?

"THE MAN WHO hath no music in himself, whose soul is not moved by a concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils." But how about the man whose soul is equally moved by a discord of harsh noises? Something worse, I believe—something like homicide or juvenile delinquency. Granted that we ought to be kept en rapport with what is happening in the world of modern music, when it is worth our while. But why inflict it on us when ultimate acceptance is a preposterously unlikely guess?

Of course there is always a chance. The world now acclaims as masterpieces some noble works which once were hissed and booed off the stage. But it does not follow that this will always happen. Once a discord always a discord. It may be justified if it "rushes in that harmony should be prized" but it may be eternally offensive. I feel that there is room for a reasonable amount of common sense in making predictions. A Rachmaninoff concerto may always be more highly rated than a Rhapsody in Blue.

Leonard Bernstein the other night gave a Stravinsky concert and referred to the famous Igor as "the greatest living composer." Some would dispute that because I believe Sibelius is still living, but the fashion now favors the novel defiance of tradition as out of date and accepts everything that would shock your grandmother as true art. I still insist that this may be overdone, as, in the Symphony programs, it long has been, for me.

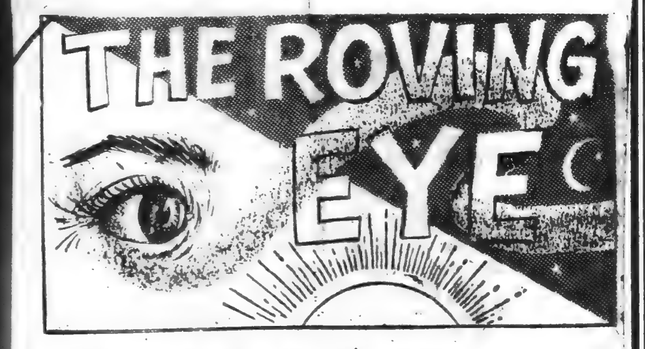
DOES BOSTON HATE OPERA? She said, "If Boston wants to remake its reputation as the well spring of culture, then it must support those institutions which enrich the arts."

She talked about the deep personal values of music, beyond the mass cultural considerations. The idea, I gathered, was that if man is really headed for the stars, he needs more than a slide rule.

And you know, she never did answer my question.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 21 1962

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22 000
JAN 1962



How It Is in Anytown

By ROBERT TAYLOR

DEAR FOLKS:

I hope you are fine. How is everything in Clapboard, O.? Ma and me are enjoying our trip through the East, though if we had to do it all over again we would choose some other month than February when the roads are slipperier than a hog on ice, as the folks say out here (Ha, Ha).

"Turning across the river into Cambridge, the tourist will probably find that the place answers his expectations, though if he is honest he will admit to himself that parts of it are a little scruffy, a little too much like Anytown, U. S. A."

—Marcus Cunliffe on Harvard in the magazine "Encounter."

Now what I'm really writing you about is this decision Ma and me have reached: I am not coming back to the putty knife factory. Yes, people, we have discovered our dream town here in the so-called sophisticated East—Cambridge, Massachusetts, U.S.A., the spot for our golden retirement years.

So you can tell President Irving S. Fyncche that his star putty knife honer won't be back: I am going to take a job with the Harvard Faculty. I'm not kidding. Remember how we used to say back home that Harvard folks were snobbish? Well, Ma and me have found out different, they are just opposite.

★ ★ ★

FOR ONE THING there is the town of Cambridge which is really a city, and—you won't believe this—the most down-to-earth spot you ever imagined! Sort of like Anytown, U.S.A., you might say. It is prettier than a cover by Norman Rockwell.

Harvard Sq., for instance, the local depot, strikes us as just about the most typical spot in America. On a bench in front of the harness store, a bunch of the old-timers can be found 'most all the time "spinnin' yarns" and snappin' their galluses, and to look at them you would not think they had a plugged nickel.

Just an ordinary crowd, chawin' terbaccer and watching all the girls go by—Artie Schlesinger, Dave Riesman, Hank Kissinger and Archie MacLeish. Just a-playin' checkers and a-philosophizin' 'bout life. It is a scene that takes you back to Clapboard, the way it used to be afore they built the 10-lane highway through the middle of town.

★ ★ ★

YOU CAN FIND the boys most any night in front of the harness store 'cept for band concert evenings when Charley Munch brings his 76 trombones over from Boston. But the rest of Cambridge is plain folks as well, though I must admit they over-do just a tiny mite.

The guide that took us through Harvard Yard showed us a man he claimed was President Pusey on one end of a log and a student on the other! (Don't tell Jake Twombley down at the Grange; he went to Williams and might think Nate's stealing Mark Hopkins' thunder.) Still that's part of Harvard's charm, the charm of recognition.

All the kids in Cambridge wear beanies covered with bottle caps, and they are always crying because they have just knocked a baseball through the plate glass window of a police station. That kindly adult who is retrieving the horsehide for them and who is blushing guiltily before a sarjint with arms akimbo might be anyone from Sam Morison to I. A. Richards.

★ ★ ★

AND WHAT SWELL TIMES they have, down at the local barber shop, where each customer has his own mustache cup with names like Crane Brinton and Roscoe Pound floridly inscribed! You hear some real quartet singin' when the frost is on the punkin and some perfesser is in voice. I mean I could go on like this, painting pictures to you about the sleigh rides and the huskin' bees, the taffy pulls and box socials, but Ma and me are settlin' down with our kind of people: American stereotypes. I nope we don't get bored.

Yours Truly,
Pop.

P.S. By the way, where is Anytown, U.S.A.? Understand they have a lot of odd types there. Ma and me would like to see it on our next vacation.

They said it!

IN MUSIC JOURNAL 1942-1962

The brief quotations below are selected from articles appearing in this magazine since 1942, when it had its official start. Obviously there is room for only a few excerpts from the mass of material available and these samples have been deliberately chosen from the standpoint of general interest and popular appeal.

RICHARD RODGERS

"Music for the American Theatre"
September-October, 1943

The man who writes music for the theatre is obliquely criticized because he makes money out of it. This is the healthiest sign of all, for his public has paid up to $4.40 apiece and what does it get for it? Groceries, new shoes, or a table lamp? Nothing except pleasure and escape and once in a while an emotional experience. This brings it very close to art, for in no other profession is money paid for an emotional experience.

The man who writes music for the theatre is directly criticized because he is incapable of doing his own orchestrations. This is true, but he is entitled to a petulant "So what?" Neither can he play the clarinet in the pit nor come out on the stage and sing one of his own songs. Since the theatre is an entirely collaborative field and orchestration is a highly specialized component, he turns naturally to an experienced specialist for aid.

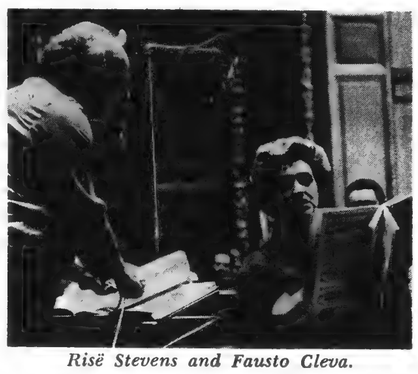
ROBERT SHAW

"Democracy in Music"
May-June, 1945

The happy fact is that group singing—the choral art—has more to offer to the enrichment of community life in America than any of its compatriot recreational or art activities; and the sad fact is that, with a few notable exceptions, it has been the exercise of a limited few who happened to belong to the same school, church, or social order. For one of the great potentials of a working democracy, choral singing has received rather lonesome treatment.

One man paints a picture. Fifteen people are enough for a "little theatre." Two dozen men with muscles can handle both sides of almost any sport situation, and thirty to fifty can do a job on the Poet and Peasant Overture. But one hundred fifty or fifteen hundred people with fallen arches and ten thumbs can make like a chorus—and can do it in terms of the Brahms Requiem or The Night Is Young and You're So Beautiful, or anything in between.

There really is no reason why the choral art should be so slow. Almost everyone likes to sing; almost everybody can handle a series of recognizable pitches. And while any conductor is happy to have a "trained" voice or two in his chorus, and will make welcoming noises at a "musician"—someone who can read—there still are a lot of good choruses built of men and women whose only studio is the bathroom shower. This is the first unique attribute of the choral art: it requires only the sincere desire to sing. No years at the conservatory; no tediously acquired co-ordinations. They won't hurt, but you can get along without them.



Risë Stevens and Fausto Cleva.

Risë Stevens

"Choral Music"
January-February, 1947

I first became truly interested in choral work shortly after the filming of the Paramount picture Going My Way. Working in a story which concerned the combating of juvenile delinquency through the organization of a church choir, I found myself believing in the role to the extent where I was actually living it. As a matter of fact, I became so enthusiatic that on my subsequent concert tour through the South I actually rolled up my sleeves and went to work in a practical way.

That work has taught me many things about choral groups. To begin with, I am for them all the way. There is not another medium which can teach so much so unobtrusively and so democratically.

My own personal experience with church choirs has been rather limited. Like most aspiring singers, I did a church choir stint—as a soloist with the St. James Episcopal Church in Elmhurst, Long Island, when I was about eighteen. The importance of that type of training for the young soloist can hardly be stressed too much. First and foremost, it gives the necessary experience—bridging the gap between school and concert—which can be gained in practically no other way. And the familiarity with the simple, beautifully sincere idiom of all hymnal literature is one which stands the singer in good stead throughout his career.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

"A Living Music Culture"
March-April, 1948

The quest of our time is to educate the people to a true democratic consciousness. Music, of all the arts, comes nearest to achieving democratic ideals. It is, therefore, our direct duty and aim to spread musical culture in the masses, to stimulate interest in music so that it penetrates the living consciousness of the people, and to establish a creative and living contact between youth and their elders in the field of professional music.

What is the essence of a living musical culture? Let me say, in general terms, that in reducing musical culture to basic lines we divide it into two main plans.

In the first place there is the plan of general musical development—that is to say, extra-professional musical education, within the reach of everyone and essential in some degree to all. The aim of general musical development is to bring the masses of people closer to music and thereby introduce music into life, not in an accidental manner, but in a cultural way.

I believe that general culture, in a certain measure, plays a more important role than even professional musical education, just because of the participation of the masses, which influences the course of culture and the very process of its development. In the sense in which we understand it, this problem is new to music, and up to now has been little developed. Its solution requires new methods of work because it depends on the sensitiveness of the leader-professionals and on their ability to bring music closer to the general public, but remaining at all times on that higher level, on which art at the given moment stands.

The active drawing of the wide masses nearer to music consists in breaking down the artificial barriers between the initiated and the uninitiated, and in making the language of music as accessible to the general understanding and emotion as is the spoken language. But the most important step of all is to introduce into the consciousness of listeners the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of mere amusement and entertainment.

Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 21 1962

How It Is in Anytown

By ROBERT TAYLOR

DEAR FOLKS:

I hope you are fine. How is everything in Clapboard, O.? Ma and me are enjoying our trip through the East, though if we had to do it all over again we would choose some other month than February when the roads are slipperier than a hog on ice, as the folks say out here (Ha, Ha).

"Turning across the river into Cambridge, the tourist will probably find that the place answers his expectations, though if he is honest he will admit to himself that parts of it are a little scruffy, a little too much like Anytown, U. S. A."

—Marcus Cunliffe on Harvard in the magazine "Encounter."

Now what I'm really writing you about is this decision Ma and me have reached: I am not coming back to the putty knife factory. Yes, people, we have discovered our dream town here in the so-called sophisticated East—Cambridge, Massachusetts, U.S.A., the spot for our golden retirement years.

So you can tell President Irving S. Fyncche that his star putty knife honer won't be back: I am going to take a job with the Harvard Faculty. I'm not kidding. Remember how we used to say back home that Harvard folks were snobbish? Well, Ma and me have found out different, they are just opposite.

★ ★ ★

FOR ONE THING there is the town of Cambridge which is really a city, and—you won't believe this—the most down-to-earth spot you ever imagined! Sort of like Anytown, U.S.A., you might say. It is prettier than a cover by Norman Rockwell.

Harvard Sq., for instance, the local depot, strikes us as just about the most typical spot in America. On a bench in front of the harness store, a bunch of the old-timers can be found 'most all the time "spinnin' yarns" and snappin' their galluses, and to look at them you would not think they had a plugged nickel.

Just an ordinary crowd, chawin' terbaccer and watching all the girls go by—Artie Schlesinger, Dave Riesman, Hank Kissinger and Archie MacLeish. Just a-playin' checkers and a-philosophizin' 'bout life. It is a scene that takes you back to Clapboard, the way it used to be afore they built the 10-lane highway through the middle of town.

★ ★ ★

YOU CAN FIND the boys most any night in front of the harness store 'cept for band concert evenings when Charley Munch brings his 76 trombones over from Boston. But the rest of Cambridge is plain folks as well, though I must admit they over-do just a tiny mite.

The guide that took us through Harvard Yard showed us a man he claimed was President Pusey on one end of a log and a student on the other! (Don't tell Jake Twombley down at the Grange; he went to Williams and might think Nate's stealing Mark Hopkins' thunder.) Still that's part of Harvard's charm, the charm of recognition.

All the kids in Cambridge wear beanies covered with bottle caps, and they are always crying because they have just knocked a baseball through the plate glass window of a police station. That kindly adult who is retrieving the horsehide for them and who is blushing guiltily before a sarjint with arms akimbo might be anyone from Sam Morison to I. A. Richards.

★ ★ ★

AND WHAT SWELL TIMES they have, down at the local barber shop, where each customer has his own mustache cup with names like Crane Brinton and Roscoe Pound floridly inscribed! You hear some real quartet singin' when the frost is on the punkin and some perfesser is in voice. I mean I could go on like this, painting pictures to you about the sleigh rides and the huskin' bees, the taffy pulls and box socials, but Ma and me are settlin' down with our kind of people: American stereotypes. I nope we don't get bored.

O Voir,

Pop.

P.S. By the way, where is Anytown, U.S.A.? Understand they have a lot of odd types there. Ma and me would like to see it on our next vacation.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
JAN 1962

They said it!

IN MUSIC JOURNAL 1942-1962

The brief quotations below are selected from articles appearing in this magazine since 1942, when it had its official start. Obviously there is room for only a few excerpts from the mass of material available and these samples have been deliberately chosen from the standpoint of general interest and popular appeal.

RICHARD RODGERS

"Music for the American Theatre"
September-October, 1943

The man who writes music for the theatre is obliquely criticized because he makes money out of it. This is the healthiest sign of all, for his public has paid up to $4.40 apiece and what does it get for it? Groceries, new shoes, or a table lamp? Nothing except pleasure and escape and once in a while an emotional experience. This brings it very close to art, for in no other profession is money paid for an emotional experience.

The man who writes music for the theatre is directly criticized because he is incapable of doing his own orchestrations. This is true, but he is entitled to a petulant "So what?" Neither can he play the clarinet in the pit nor come out on the stage and sing one of his own songs. Since the theatre is an entirely collaborative field and orchestration is a highly specialized component, he turns naturally to an experienced specialist for aid.

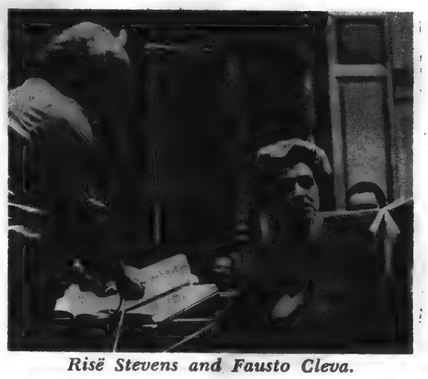
ROBERT SHAW

"Democracy in Music"
May-June, 1945

The happy fact is that group singing—the choral art—has more to offer to the enrichment of community life in America than any of its compatriot recreational or art activities; and the sad fact is that, with a few notable exceptions, it has been the exercise of a limited few who happened to belong to the same school, church, or social order. For one of the great potentials of a working democracy, choral singing has received rather lonesome treatment.

One man paints a picture. Fifteen people are enough for a "little theatre." Two dozen men with muscles can handle both sides of almost any sport situation, and thirty to fifty can do a job on the Poet and Peasant Overture. But one hundred fifty or fifteen hundred people with fallen arches and ten thumbs can make like a chorus—and can do it in terms of the Brahms Requiem or The Night Is Young and You're So Beautiful, or anything in between.

There really is no reason why the choral art should be so slow. Almost everyone likes to sing; almost everybody can handle a series of recognizable pitches. And while any conductor is happy to have a "trained" voice or two in his chorus, and will make welcoming noises at a "musician"—someone who can read—there still are a lot of good choruses built of men and women whose only studio is the bathroom shower. This is the first unique attribute of the choral art: it requires only the sincere desire to sing. No years at the conservatory; no tediously acquired co-ordinations. They won't hurt, but you can get along without them.



Risë Stevens and Fausto Cleva.

Risë Stevens

"Choral Music"
January-February, 1947

I first became truly interested in choral work shortly after the filming of the Paramount picture Going My Way. Working in a story which concerned the combating of juvenile delinquency through the organization of a church choir, I found myself believing in the role to the extent where I was actually living it. As a matter of fact, I became so enthusiatic that on my subsequent concert tour through the South I actually rolled up my sleeves and went to work in a practical way.

That work has taught me many things about choral groups. To begin with, I am for them all the way. There is not another medium which can teach so much so unobtrusively and so democratically.

My own personal experience with church choirs has been rather limited. Like most aspiring singers, I did a church choir stint—as a soloist with the St. James Episcopal Church in Elmhurst, Long Island, when I was about eighteen. The importance of that type of training for the young soloist can hardly be stressed too much. First and foremost, it gives the necessary experience—bridging the gap between school and concert—which can be gained in practically no other way. And the familiarity with the simple, beautifully sincere idiom of all hymnal literature is one which stands the singer in good stead throughout his career.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

"A Living Music Culture"
March-April, 1948

The quest of our time is to educate the people to a true democratic consciousness. Music, of all the arts, comes nearest to achieving democratic ideals. It is, therefore, our direct duty and aim to spread musical culture in the masses, to stimulate interest in music so that it penetrates the living consciousness of the people, and to establish a creative and living contact between youth and their elders in the field of professional music.

What is the essence of a living musical culture? Let me say, in general terms, that in reducing musical culture to basic lines we divide it into two main plans.

In the first place there is the plan of general musical development—that is to say, extra-professional musical education, within the reach of everyone and essential in some degree to all. The aim of general musical development is to bring the masses of people closer to music and thereby introduce music into life, not in an accidental manner, but in a cultural way.

I believe that general culture, in a certain measure, plays a more important role than even professional musical education, just because of the participation of the masses, which influences the course of culture and the very process of its development. In the sense in which we understand it, this problem is new to music, and up to now has been little developed. Its solution requires new methods of work because it depends on the sensitiveness of the leader-professionals and on their ability to bring music closer to the general public, but remaining at all times on that higher level, on which art at the given moment stands.

The active drawing of the wide masses nearer to music consists in breaking down the artificial barriers between the initiated and the uninitiated, and in making the language of music as accessible to the general understanding and emotion as is the spoken language. But the most important step of all is to introduce into the consciousness of listeners the truly spiritual essence of music, which stands high above the level of mere amusement and entertainment.

Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

ERWIN GOLDMAN

252

NEW ENGLANDER
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 12,500
JAN 1962

MUSIC MUSIC MUSIC In New England

SO MANY VARIATIONS ARE THERE on the theme of music in New England that one need only examine a few of them to hear the movements of a symphony of happy business.

The scale runs from jazz at Newport, R. I., which, riots and all, garners for the city $2 to $3 million every year in one swinging weekend, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays to capacity audiences 50 weeks a year—the longest season of any private orchestra.

In the middle of the scale are the concerns that work at the business of making this musical munificence available to everyone with access to a phonograph or radio—firms involved in one way or another in the highly active field of high fidelity. The best way to hear the high notes in the hi-fi world is to visit one of the retail outlets—modern centers that have replaced the old-fashioned hardware type of operation with glistening supermarket-style functions in which products are displayed in open racks for easy access and attractiveness.

The largest distribution center in New England is Radio Shack Corp., which started out in a tiny basement in Boston and has spread to six locations in three states. As a fair indication of how many people have been bitten by the hi-fi bug, consider that since June, 1960, the corporation has opened three stores, broken ground for a fourth, and made plans for two more.

Center attraction at the stores are the Audio Comparator sound rooms. Designed for acoustic perfection, they allow the customer to listen to literally hundreds of components in direct comparison. Since Radio Shack designed and constructed the first such room in 1947, it has been copied all over the world.

So excellent has the corporation found the field that it has even gone into the manufacture of a low- and medium-priced line of equipment under the Realistic trademark. It's also producing a line of recordings on the Realistic Hallmark label.

Even with all this going, the firm sees no slacking off period ahead. While the national demand dropped somewhat in the general decline (hi-fi equipment still being a luxury, not a necessity), Radio Shack felt no let up. A few figures will show their growth over the past few years: sales in 1958 were $5.5 million, 1960 sales hit $18 million.

With stereo becoming stronger and the advent of multiplex broadcasting, the market should continue to grow. Multiplex is a system recently approved by the FCC for broadcasting stereo that can be received on one FM receiver. Previously a combination of two receivers, one FM, and one AM, was needed.

In hi-fi equipment itself, monaural is definitely on its way out, most sales now are of stereo components. As multiplex goes into operation (WCRB in Boston is broadcasting it already), monaural records will gradually cease to be made. Consequently, monaural owners will have to switch to stereo equipment also—meaning further impetus for the market.

In the vanguard of the companies profiting from that impetus will be the firm that's led the field all the way, H. H. Scott, Inc., of Maynard, Mass. A young company founded less than 15 years ago, and managed by a young group, Scott has made an enviable name for itself by specializing in cultural electronics.

One out of every four hi-fi equipment components sold today is a Scott instrument. The firm manufactured the first hi-fi amplifier by modern-day standards, and was largely influential in industrial designs which brought high fidelity from the hobby room and cellar into the living room.

Peter Dyke of Scott comments, "Our industry has largely been responsible for the resurgence of interest in fine reproduction of fine music. Interestingly enough, I believe the public spends more money on classical records than is spent on professional baseball attendance." David Beckerman of Radio Shack backed that claim by estimating the sale of hi-fi equipment and long playing records at somewhere in the area of $50 million a year—in the New England region alone.

Scott's high standards for equipment and its avant-garde philosophy of business making a cultural contribution have helped make its components the best selling in the country. The firm has grown with the industry: in 1960 its volume was six times that of fiscal 1955 and 60 times that of its first year, 1948.

Its success has led to embarrassment at times, for people generally assume the firm to be 10 or 20 times its actual size, of about 300 employes. Again Peter Dyke: "I think, as the educational and cultural level of the population grows interest in good music and good music reproduction will accelerate even faster . . . it just isn't possible for me to estimate an upper limit. The opportunities literally are unlimited—or at least those with the imagination and courage to risk, innovate, change and grow.

(Continued on page 41

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
FEB 5 1962

SMART SET By ROSE WALSH

Symphony Luncheon Has Sharp Notes

I'm not a gambler at heart but I would be willing to place a small bet that the Friday Symphony concert subscribers who attended the pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn went right over to Symphony Hall and began looking at all the musicians in a new light.

Harry Ellis Dickson, who has been picturing the human side of the world-famous ensemble in his delightful weekly series of "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra" talks at the popular luncheons described some of his colleagues in this fashion:

"The first violinists are the snobs in the orchestra" and they are looked on with awe and disdain by the others, he says. The second violinists (Harry Dickson is one) "are friendly"; the flutists "are the optimists who expect that everything is going to be all right."

In contrast "the horn players are fatalists, always anticipating that anything can happen." And he added, "It sometimes does."

"The oboists are madmen who never talk to anyone except themselves. And the percussionists are happy and contented," he continues.

He is not forgetting the other musicians, but has promised to describe them another time. And you may be sure the ladies who wouldn't dream of missing one of the luncheons will hold him to that promise.

Friday's guests of honor were Junior League committee members of the Metropolitan Opera Regional Auditions. (The auditions are being held next Friday and Saturday at Jordan Hall). Mrs. Brooks Potter, regional chairman, gave a brief talk about the purpose of the project—helping to discover new American talent for the Met Opera.

Ronald Holgate, a previous year's auditions winner, (now ulaying on Broadway in "Milk and Honey",) was seated at the head table as were Mrs. Richmond Holder, Mrs. John Cornish (Junior League president); Mrs. Kimball Powning (who has a busy schedule getting ready for her daughter's wedding Feb. 17); Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, co-chairman of the weekly luncheons; and Mrs. John G. Cushman.

Globe 4/23

Spare That Tree, Plea Of Newton Neighbors

A group of Newton residents, conducted by the publicity director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will render a concert of protest this morning at Newton City Hall against the removal of a tree.

Laning Humphrey of 364 Woodward st., in the Waban section, has accused Public Works Commissioner Willard Pratt of "arboricide" for his directive to saw down a 150-year-old ash tree on Woodward st.

Pratt plans to eliminate the tree because it protrudes into the street, which is being repaved. He requested the forestry division to cut to three days the usual week's notice for a public hearing, so construction work would not be delayed.

Humphrey, accompanied by Mrs. Leo Smith of 344 Woodward st., in front of whose property the ash tree stands, will lead a delegation of neighbors at a hearing at 9:30 this morning.

Humphrey, backed by a record of protecting Newton's tree population, volleyed: "They want to take down a healthy, noble old tree with a wonderful spread of branches and replace it with asphalt. Newton is known as the Garden City because of its trees. They provide our fresh air and shade."

Contractor William P. Capone of West Roxbury, whose firm is resurfacing Woodward st., said the tree "is not obstructing our work at all."

Assistant forestry superintendent George Maguire said even one complaint at today's hearing would cause the matter to be turned over to Mayor Donald L. Gibbs.

Alderman William Hardy Prentice of Waban said he had talked with the director of public works and had urged him to save the tree if possible.

Prentice added, however, that the tree appeared "pretty well dead and shows no signs of life."

That the tree is dead has not been officially determined, but the issue is very much alive.

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.

Waban Residents Ask That Tree Be Spared

Neighbors on Woodward St. in Waban who have grown accustomed to the shade of a 150-year-old ash tree are urging Mayor Gibbs to spare it.

They appeared at City Hall this morning to protest its removal to Street Commissioner Frank K. Perkins, following a notice that the ancient tree was to be cut down because it protruded into the street which is being repaved.

Groups of neighbors, sometimes as many as 20 at a time, gathered under the four-foot branches yesterday to read the removal notice posted by the city. One of the children took a tape measure and counted 144 inches around the huge trunk.

A charge of "arboricide" was leveled against a city official by Laning Humphrey of 364 Woodward St., a next-door neighbor to the tree. Mr. Humphrey is press representative for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He and Mrs. Leo Smith of 344 Woodward St. at tended this morning's hearing.

(TREE—Page 6)

Mr. Perkins promised to send a man from the forestry division to examine the tree and its relation to the road construction, to determine whether it is a traffic hazard. The final count of last resort would be the mayor, Perkins said.

Mr. Humphrey based his protest on Newton's garden city character. "They want to take down a healthy, noble old tree with a wonderful spread of branches and replace it with asphalt," he complained.

"Newton is known as a Garden City because of its trees. They provide our fresh air and shade," he argued.

Whether or not the tree is healthy is in dispute, however. Newton Alderman W. Hardy Prentice, while agreeing that it be spared, said that it showed no signs of life.

However, according to Mr. Humphrey, appearances can be deceiving, and a tree of this type often appears to be dead, then blossoms out again.

252

NEW ENGLANDER
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 12,500
JAN 1962

MUSIC MUSIC MUSIC In New England

SO MANY VARIATIONS ARE THERE on the theme of music in New England that one need only examine a few of them to hear the movements of a symphony of happy business.

The scale runs from jazz at Newport, R. I., which, riots and all, garners for the city $2 to $3 million every year in one swinging weekend, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays to capacity audiences 50 weeks a year—the longest season of any private orchestra.

In the middle of the scale are the concerns that work at the business of making this musical munificence available to everyone with access to a phonograph or radio—firms involved in one way or another in the highly active field of high fidelity. The best way to hear the high notes in the hi-fi world is to visit one of the retail outlets—modern centers that have replaced the old-fashioned hardware type of operation with glistening supermarket-style functions in which products are displayed in open racks for easy access and attractiveness.

The largest distribution center in New England is Radio Shack Corp., which started out in a tiny basement in Boston and has spread to 40 locations in three states. As a fair indication of how many people have been bitten by the hi-fi bug, consider that since June, 1960, the corporation has opened three stores, broken ground for a fourth, and made plans for two more.

Center attraction at the stores are the Audio Comparator sound rooms. Designed for acoustic perfection, they allow the customer to listen to literally hundreds of components in direct comparison. Since Radio Shack designed and constructed the first such room in 1947, it has been copied all over the world.

So excellent has the corporation found the field that it has even gone into the manufacture of a low- and medium-priced line of equipment under the Realistic trademark. It's also producing a line of recordings on the Realistic Hallmark label.

Even with all this going, the firm sees no slacking off period ahead. While the national demand dropped somewhat in the general decline (hi-fi equipment still being a luxury, not a necessity), Radio Shack felt no let up. A few figures will show their growth over the past few years: sales in 1958 were $5.5 million, 1960 sales hit $18 million.

With stereo becoming stronger and the advent of multiplex broadcasting, the market should continue to grow. Multiplex is a system recently approved by the FCC for broadcasting stereo that can be received on one FM receiver. Previously a combination of two receivers—one FM, and one AM, was needed.

In hi-fi equipment itself, monaural is definitely on its way out, most sales now are of stereo components. As multiplex goes into operation (WCRB in Boston is broadcasting it already), monaural records will gradually cease to be made. Consequently, monaural owners will have to switch to stereo equipment also—meaning further impetus for the market.

In the vanguard of the companies profiting from that impetus will be the firm that's led the field all the way, H. H. Scott, Inc., of Maynard, Mass. A young company founded less than 15 years ago and managed by a young group, Scott has made an enviable name for itself by specializing in cultural electronics.

One out of every four hi-fi equipment components sold today is a Scott instrument. The firm manufactured the first hi-fi amplifier by modern-day standards, and was largely influential in industrial designs which brought high fidelity from the hobby room and cellar into the living room.

Peter Dyke of Scott comments, "Our industry has largely been responsible for the resurgence of interest in fine reproduction of fine music. Interestingly enough, I believe the public spends more money on classical records than is spent on professional baseball attendance." David Beckerman of Radio Shack backed that claim by estimating the sale of hi-fi equipment and long playing records at somewhere in the area of $50 million a year—in the New England region alone.

Scott's high standards for equipment and its avant-garde philosophy of business making a cultural contribution have helped make its components the best selling in the country. The firm has grown with the industry: in 1960 its volume was six times that of fiscal 1955—and 60 times that of its first year, 1948.

Its success has led to embarrassment at times, for people generally assume the firm to be 10 or 20 times its actual size, of about 300 employes. Again Peter Dyke: "I think, as the educational and cultural level of the population grows, interest in good music and good music reproduction will accelerate even faster . . . it just isn't possible for me to estimate an upper limit. The opportunities literally are unlimited—or at least for those with the imagination and courage to risk, innovate, change and grow."

(Continued on page 41)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
FEB 5 1962

SMART SET

Sympho... Has Sha...

I'm not a gambler... to place a small bet th... subscribers who attend... at the Midtown Motor Inn went right over to Symphony Hall and began looking at all the musicians in a new light.

Harry Ellis Dickson, who has been picturing the human side of the world-famous ensemble in his delightful weekly series of "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra" talks at the popular luncheons described some of his colleagues in this fashion:

"The first violinists are the snobs in the orchestra", and they are looked on with awe and disdain by the others, he says. The second violinists (Harry Dickson is one) "are friendly"; the flutists "are the optimists who expect that everything is going to be all right."

In contrast "the horn players are fatalists, always anticipating that anything can happen." And he added, "It sometimes does."

"The oboists are madmen who never talk to anyone except themselves. And the percussionists are happy and contented," he continues.

He is not forgetting the other musicians, but has promised to describe them another time. And you may be sure the ladies who wouldn't dream of missing one of the luncheons will hold him to that promise.

Friday's guests of honor were Junior League committee members of the Metropolitan Opera Regional Auditions. (The auditions are being held next Friday and Saturday at Jordan Hall). Mrs. Brooks Potter, regional chairman, gave a brief talk about the purpose of the project—helping to discover new American talent for the Met Opera.

Ronald Holgate, a previous year's auditions winner, (now playing on Broadway in "Milk and Honey",) was seated at the head table as were Mrs. Richmond Holder, Mrs. John Cornish (Junior League president); Mrs. Kimball Powning (who has a busy schedule getting ready for her daughter's wedding Feb. 17); Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, co-chairman of the weekly luncheons; and Mrs. John G. Cushman.

...even Kille...
...Crash of...
...r Force C...

...EENSBORO, N. C... Air Force C47 tr... crashed shortly ...ff yesterday...

Globe 4/23

Spare That Tree, Plea Of Newton Neighbors

A group of Newton residents, conducted by the publicity director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will render a concert of protest this morning at Newton City Hall against the removal of a tree.

Laning Humphrey of 364 Woodward st., in the Waban section, has accused Public Works Commissioner Willard Pratt of "arboricide" for his directive to saw down a 150-year-old ash tree on Woodward st.

Pratt plans to eliminate the tree because it protrudes into the street, which is being repaved. He requested the forestry division to cut to three days the usual week's notice for a public hearing, so construction work would not be delayed.

Humphrey, accompanied by Mrs. Leo Smith of 344 Woodward st., in front of whose property the ash tree stands, will lead a delegation of neighbors at a hearing at 9:30 this morning.

Humphrey, backed by a record of protecting Newton's tree population, volleyed: "They want to take down a healthy, noble old tree with a wonderful spread of branches and replace it with asphalt. Newton is known as the Garden City because of its trees. They provide our fresh air and shade."

Contractor William P. Capone of West Roxbury, whose firm is resurfacing Woodward st., said the tree "is not obstructing our work at all."

Assistant forestry superintendent George Maguire said even one complaint at today's hearing would "cause the matter to be turned over to Mayor Donald L. Gibbs.

Alderman William Hardy Prentice of Waban said he had talked with the director of public works and had urged him to save the tree if possible.

Prentice added, however, that the tree appeared "pretty well dead and shows no signs of life."

That the tree is dead has not been officially determined, but the issue is very much alive.

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.

Waban Residents Ask That Tree Be Spared

Neighbors on Woodward St. in Waban who have grown accustomed to the shade of a 150-year-old ash tree are urging Mayor Gibbs to spare it.

They appeared at City Hall this morning to protest its removal to Street Commissioner Frank E. Perkins, following a notice that the ancient tree was to be cut down because it protruded into the street which is being repaved.

Groups of neighbors, sometimes as many as 20 at a time, gathered under the foot branches yesterday to read the removal notice posted by the city. One of the children took a tape measure and counted 144 inches around the huge trunk.

A charge of "arboricide" was leveled against a city official by Laning Humphrey of 364 Woodward St., a next-door neighbor to the tree. Mr. Humphrey is press representative for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He and Mrs. Leo Smith of 344 Woodward St. at tended this morning hear... ing.

(TURN — Page 6)

Mr. Perkins promised to send a man from the forestry division to examine the tree and its relation to the road construction, to determine whether it is a traffic hazard. The final court of last resort would be the mayor, Perkins said.

Mr. Humphrey based his protest on Newton's Garden City character. "They want to take down a healthy, noble old tree with a wonderful spread of branches and replace it with asphalt," he complained.

"Newton is known as the Garden City because of its trees. They provide our fresh air and shade," he argued.

Whether or not the tree in question is healthy is in doubt, however. Newton Alderman W. Hardy Prentice, while urging that it be spared, said that it showed no signs of life.

However, according to Mr. Humphrey, appearances can be deceiving, and a tree of this type often appears to be dead, then blossoms out again.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

FEB 7 1962

★ ★ ★

Pre-Symphony Luncheon

GUEST OF HONOR at the pre-Symphony luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. Friday, will be Dr. Mabel Daniels, dean of women composers. After graduating magna cum laude from Radcliffe College, Miss Daniels continued her musical studies in Munich. She's the only woman composer whose work has been performed three times by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and she holds several honorary degrees.

Sitting at the head table with Dr. Daniels and listening to Harry Ellis Dickson's talk, "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra," will be Mme. Olga Koussevitzky, Dr. and Mrs. Leonard W. Cronkhite, Chester E. Williams, new president of the New England Conservatory, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwin Badger, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Mr. and Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth.

★ ★ ★

But even then Schwann could not foresee that by 1960 the catalog would have grown from 674 listings to almost 30,000, or that it would be a standard nationwide guide for record dealers—some 3,800 now subscribe. The listing has even worked its way to 38 foreign countries.

Nowhere else in the world . . .

The original 11 labels listed have swelled with the music business so that now 478 mono and 211 stereo labels are represented. The 1949 issue totaled 26 pages, monthly issues now run well over 250 pages.

William Schwann attributed this tremendous growth to a number of factors in addition to the force of long playing records. A greater interest in music and in hi-fi equipment—"It's fashionable"—is one reason. Also tape recording the original is easier and cheaper. It used to take truckloads of equipment to record a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now only a couple of tape recorders are needed.

Even the Schwann list itself has been a factor in this musical explosion. The catalog lists a record only if it is available to all dealers—but there have been listings by error that resulted in the holder of a few hundred copies of a recording finding himself swamped with orders. The urge to fill these orders meant in a few cases that the holder ended up in the recording business—by mistake, as it were.

Elsewhere in the printed music department is hymnal publishing, for which New England is also a center. There's the Pilgrim Press, Boston, publishing house for the Congregational Christian Churches, which has been publishing a hymnal since 1902. The revised edition brought out in 1958 has sold 275,000 copies already.

The usual accompaniment for hymns is an organ, and to make the picture complete, New England even boasts of being the home of the Aeolian Skinner Organ Co., the "Cadillac of the pipe organ makers." In business since 1905 and operating two plants, one in Boston and one in Dorchester, the firm produces full-size organs, not small substitutes.

The organs cost anywhere from $25,000 to $300,000. The company has a constant waiting list for its instruments, each of which is built to order: in fact a customer may wait up to three years.

The firm, which employs about 100 people, has built and installed pipe organs all over the United States. Builder of the organs for the Boston Symphony, the Detroit and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestras, it is presently building the organ for the New York Philharmonic that will go into the new Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York.

It has also produced the largest church organ in the United States, with 13,000 pipes, located in the Christian Science Church, Boston. Another of its world-famed instruments is the organ in the Salt Lake City Tabernacle.

Perhaps the story of music in New England most fittingly culminates in a glance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops, two of the region's most revered institutions, known throughout the world.

It's difficult to estimate how many people hear these two perform during a year. There are the Symphony's Boston concerts, as well as its summer season at the 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass. And there are the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall, along with the Esplanade concerts. In addition, 50 TV and 50 radio stations carry the concerts across the country. One figure will serve as an indicator: between 1917 and 1956, some 30 million records of 500 works performed by Pops and Symphony were sold.

The orchestra has carried the message of good music in New England to Japan, Australia, Russia, and Europe, in three tours. As a cultural ambassador abroad and a symbol for good music at home, it draws to the region talented people who wish to live and work in an area where fine music is a by-word.

The orchestra's 50-week season is a feat unheard of in music finance. Moreover, it raises 90 per cent of its annual budget of $2.5 million, in a nation whose average for this accomplishment is about 40 to 50 per cent.

Perhaps good music in New England is available especially because of the good music schools here—for one example of the countless year round and summer schools, there's the New England Conservatory, Boston. One of the oldest and finest in the country, it handles some 1,400 students in its undergraduate, graduate, and preparatory departments. But when one talks to school officials, an air of distress is heard that reveals one of the few sour notes in the field.

Not limited to New England, but as important here as elsewhere, is the problem of support for music and musicians. It's notoriously a hard way to make a living—and the feelings of virtuosos are not made any cheerier by the knowledge that an off key rock and roller who hits the jackpot will make a fortune, while well trained and talented performers struggle to keep body and bassoon together. ●

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

FEB 5 1962

Talk Of Arias In Room 252

By PEGGY BROWN

An unusually large crowd joined the "Two-Fifty-Two Club" last Friday noon at the Midtown Motor Inn.

Room 252 at 220 Huntington Ave. is where specially invited guests to the pre-Symphony luncheon gather for a somewhat private reception before going down to the luncheon.

Friday's special guests were the Junior League of Boston's committee members for the Metropolitan Opera Auditions in New England.

AT THE HEAD TABLE

Joining luncheon chairman Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten at the head table were Mrs. Brooks Potter, Regional chairman; Mrs. Richmond Holder, chairman of the New England Regional Auditions Board; Mrs. Robert Boas, Mrs. John C. Cushman and Mrs. Kimble Powning.

Ronald Holgate, a former auditions winner, added his male presence to that of Harry Ellis Dickson at the head table.

We had the honor of being seated at a table with Mrs. Richard Thompson of Salem. Her guest was Paul Hickfang, the six-foot-seven baritone who sang the Don Basilio role in "The Barber of Seville" last week at the Wilbur Theater.

Much of the conversation was of arias and airs. So it was befitting — and a delightful surprise — when the mother of a very air-minded young man, Allan Shepard Jr., was introduced to the luncheoners.

Before Harry Ellis Dickson's witty, as usual, talk, Mrs. Potter spoke about the Metropolitan Opera Auditions. She explained the opportunities they give aspiring young singers from all over the country.

Another organization which aids performing artists, this time those at the opposite end of the success scale, will report on its activities tomorrow afternoon. The Charlotte Cushman Charitable Foundation, Inc., will have a tea and reception at the College Club, 40 Commonwealth Ave., from 3 to 5 p.m.

Socially Speaking

Sibyl Bowan, well-known entertainer from both stage and television, will speak to the members and guests on the recent activities of the Actors' Fund of America.

The Fund's beautiful new home in Englewood, N. J., opened last May. It provides a charming, hospitable setting for needy, elderly actors and actresses to spend their sunset years.

The Foundation has a deep interest in this home, for it contributed the Charlotte Cushman Wing and a Memorial Garden in memory of the late Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, who was president of the Charlotte Cushman Club of Boston for many years.

Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Foundation president, will be assisted in receiving by Mrs. Charles E. Bacon and Mrs. Charles J. Innes, vice presidents; Mrs. William R. Dickinson, recording secretary, and Mrs. Lyman P. Gutterson, corresponding secretary and treasurer.

Members of the Board of Directors, who will pour tea, include: Mesdames John Mosely Abbott, Paul Ryder Bishop, John T. Bottomley, Richard Erlich, Harry J. Murphy, Virginia C. Burgevin and Mary W. Straub. Also Rebekah Hobbs and Ruth Noble.

Mrs. George Glover Crocker will serve punch. Hostesses at the door will be Mrs. Paul Hayden, Mrs. George Roberts, Edith McPeake and Alma Landry. Stars from current theater attractions have been invited to attend.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 7 1962

Pre-Symphony Luncheon

GUEST OF HONOR at the pre-Symphony luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, Friday, will be Dr. Mabel Daniels, dean of women composers. After graduating magna cum laude from Radcliffe College, Miss Daniels continued her musical studies in Munich. She's the only woman composer whose work has been performed three times by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and she holds several honorary degrees.

Sitting at the head table with Dr. Daniels and listening to Harry Ellis Dickson's talk, "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra," will be Mme. Olga Koussevitzky, Dr. and Mrs. Leonard W. Cronkhite, Chester E. Williams, new president of the New England Conservatory, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwin Badger, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Mr. and Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth.

But even then Schwann could not foresee that by 1960 the catalog would have grown from 674 listings to almost 30,000, or that it would be a standard nationwide guide for record dealers—some 3,800 now subscribe. The listing has even worked its way to 38 foreign countries.

Nowhere else in the world . . .

The original 11 labels listed have swelled with the music business so that now 478 mono and 211 stereo labels are represented. The 1949 issue totaled 26 pages, monthly issues now run well over 250 pages.

William Schwann attributed this tremendous growth to a number of factors in addition to the force of long playing records. A greater interest in music and in hi-fi equipment—"It's fashionable"—is one reason. Also tape recording the original is easier and cheaper. It used to take truckloads of equipment to record a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now only a couple of tape recorders are needed.

Even the Schwann list itself has been a factor in this musical explosion. The catalog lists a record only if it is available to all dealers—but there have been listings by error that resulted in the holder of a few hundred copies of a recording finding himself swamped with orders. The urge to fill these orders meant in a few cases that the holder ended up in the recording business—by mistake, as it were.

Elsewhere in the printed music department is hymnal publishing, for which New England is also a center. There's the Pilgrim Press, Boston, publishing house for the Congregational Christian Churches, which has been publishing a hymnal since 1902. The revised edition brought out in 1958 has sold 275,000 copies already.

The usual accompaniment for hymns is an organ, and to make the picture complete, New England even boasts of being the home of the Aeolian Skinner Organ Co., the "Cadillac of the pipe organ makers." In business since 1905 and operating two plants, one in Boston and one in Dorchester, the firm produces full-size organs, not small substitutes.

The organs cost anywhere from $25,000 to $300,000. The company has a constant waiting list for its instruments, each of which is built to order; in fact a customer may wait up to three years.

The firm, which employs about 100 people, has built and installed pipe organs all over the United States. Builder of the organs for the Boston Symphony, the Detroit and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestras, it is presently building the organ for the New York Philharmonic that will go into the new Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York.

It has also produced the largest church organ in the United States, with 13,000 pipes, located in the Christian Science Church, Boston. Another of its world-famed instruments is the organ in the Salt Lake City Tabernacle.

Perhaps the story of music in New England most fittingly culminates in a glance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops, two of the region's most revered institutions, known throughout the world.

It's difficult to estimate how many people hear these two perform during a year. There are the Symphony's Boston concerts, as well as its summer season at the 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass. And there are the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall, along with the Esplanade concerts. In addition, 50 TV and 50 radio stations carry the concerts across the country. One figure will serve as an indicator: between 1917 and 1956, some 30 million records of 500 works performed by Pops and Symphony were sold.

The orchestra has carried the message of good music in New England to Japan, Australia, Russia, and Europe, in three tours. As a cultural ambassador abroad and a symbol for good music at home, it draws to the region talented people who wish to live and work in an area where fine music is a by-word.

The orchestra's 50-week season is a feat unheard of in music finance. Moreover, it raises 90 per cent of its annual budget of $2.5 million, in a nation whose average for this accomplishment is about 40 to 50 per cent.

Perhaps good music in New England is available especially because of the good music schools here—for one example of the countless year round and summer schools, there's the New England Conservatory, Boston. One of the oldest and finest in the country, it handles some 1,400 students in its undergraduate, graduate, and preparatory departments. But when one talks to school officials, an air of distress is heard that reveals one of the few sour notes in the field.

Not limited to New England, but as important here as elsewhere, is the problem of support for music and musicians. It's notoriously a hard way to make a living—and the feelings of virtuosos are not made any cheerier by the knowledge that an off key rock and roller who hits the jackpot will make a fortune, while well trained and talented performers struggle to keep body and bassoon together. •

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
FEB 5 1962

Talk Of Arias In Room 252

By PEGGY BROWN

An unusually large crowd joined the "Two-Fifty-Two Club" last Friday noon at the Midtown Motor Inn.

Room 252 at 220 Huntington Ave. is where specially invited guests to the pre-Symphony luncheon gather for a somewhat private reception before going down to the luncheon.

Friday's special guests were the Junior League of Boston's committee members for the Metropolitan Opera Auditions in New England.

AT THE HEAD TABLE

Joining luncheon chairman Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten at the head table were Mrs. Brooks Potter, Regional chairman; Mrs. Richmond Holder, chairman of the New England Regional Auditions Board; Mrs. Robert Boas, Mrs. John C. Cushman and Mrs. Kimble Powning.

Ronald Holgate, a former auditions winner, added his male presence to that of Harry Ellis Dickson at the head table.

We had the honor of being seated at a table with Mrs. Richard Thompson of Salem. Her guest was Paul Hickfang, the six-foot-seven baritone who sang the Don Basilio role in "The Barber of Seville" last week at the Wilbur Theater.

Much of the conversation was of arias and airs. So it was befitting — and a delightful surprise — when the mother of a very air-minded young man, Allan Shepard Jr., was introduced to the luncheoners.

Before Harry Ellis Dickson's witty, as usual, talk, Mrs. Potter spoke about the Metropolitan Opera Auditions. She explained the opportunities they give aspiring young singers from all over the country.

Another organization which aids performing artists, this time those at the opposite end of the success scale, will report on its activities tomorrow afternoon. The Charlotte Cushman Charitable Foundation, Inc., will have a tea and reception at the College Club, 40 Commonwealth Ave., from 3 to 5 p.m.

Sibyl Bowan, well-known entertainer from both stage and television, will speak to the members and guests on the recent activities of the Actors' Fund of America.

The Fund's beautiful new home in Englewood, N. J., opened last May. It provides a charming, hospitable setting for needy, elderly actors and actresses to spend their sunset years.

The Foundation has a deep interest in this home, for it contributed the Charlotte Cushman Wing and a Memorial Garden in memory of the late Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, who was president of the Charlotte Cushman Club of Boston for many years.

Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Foundation president, will be assisted in receiving by Mrs. Charles E. Bacon and Mrs. Charles J. Innes, vice presidents; Mrs. William R. Dickinson, recording secretary, and Mrs. Lyman P. Gutterson, corresponding secretary and treasurer.

Members of the Board of Directors, who will pour tea, include: Mesdames John Mosely Abbott, Paul Ryder Bishop, John T. Bottomley, Richard Erlich, Harry J. Murphy, Virginia C. Burgevin and Mary W. Straub. Also Rebekah Hobbs and Ruth Noble.

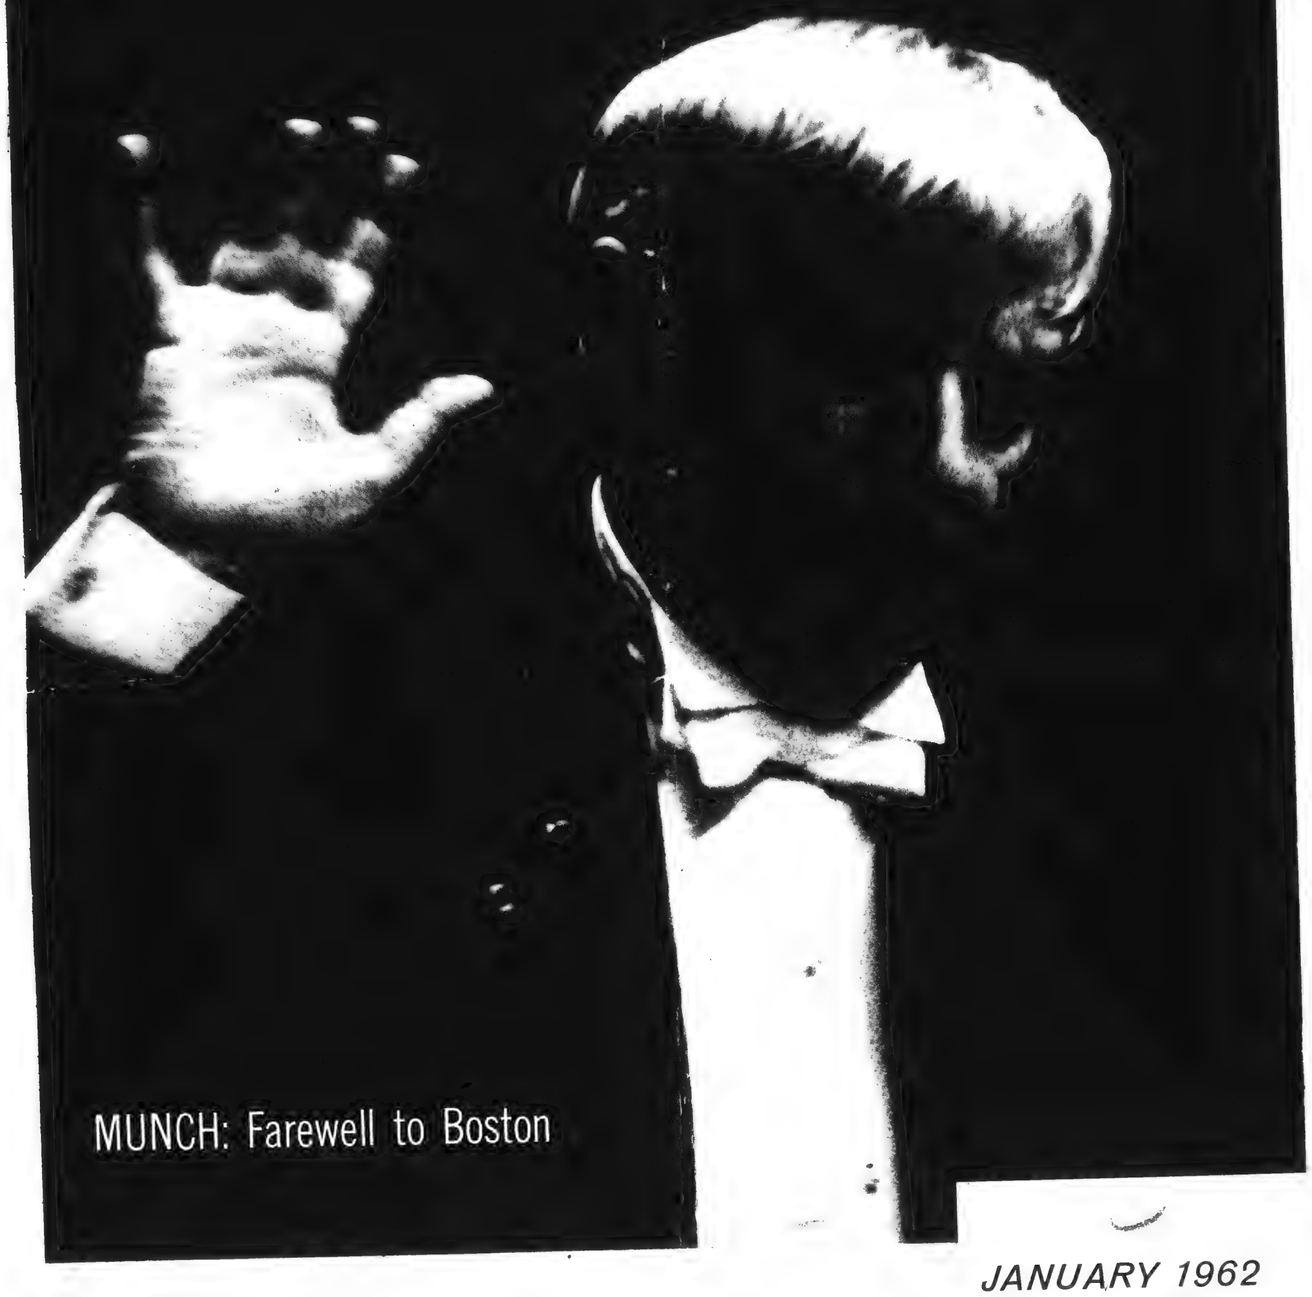
Mrs. George Glover Crocker will serve punch. Hostesses at the door will be Mrs. Paul Hayden, Mrs. George Roberts, Edith McPeake and Alma Landry. Stars from current theater attractions have been invited to attend.

Socially Speaking

254

the music magazine
MUSICAL COURIER

JANUARY
1962
FIFTY CENTS



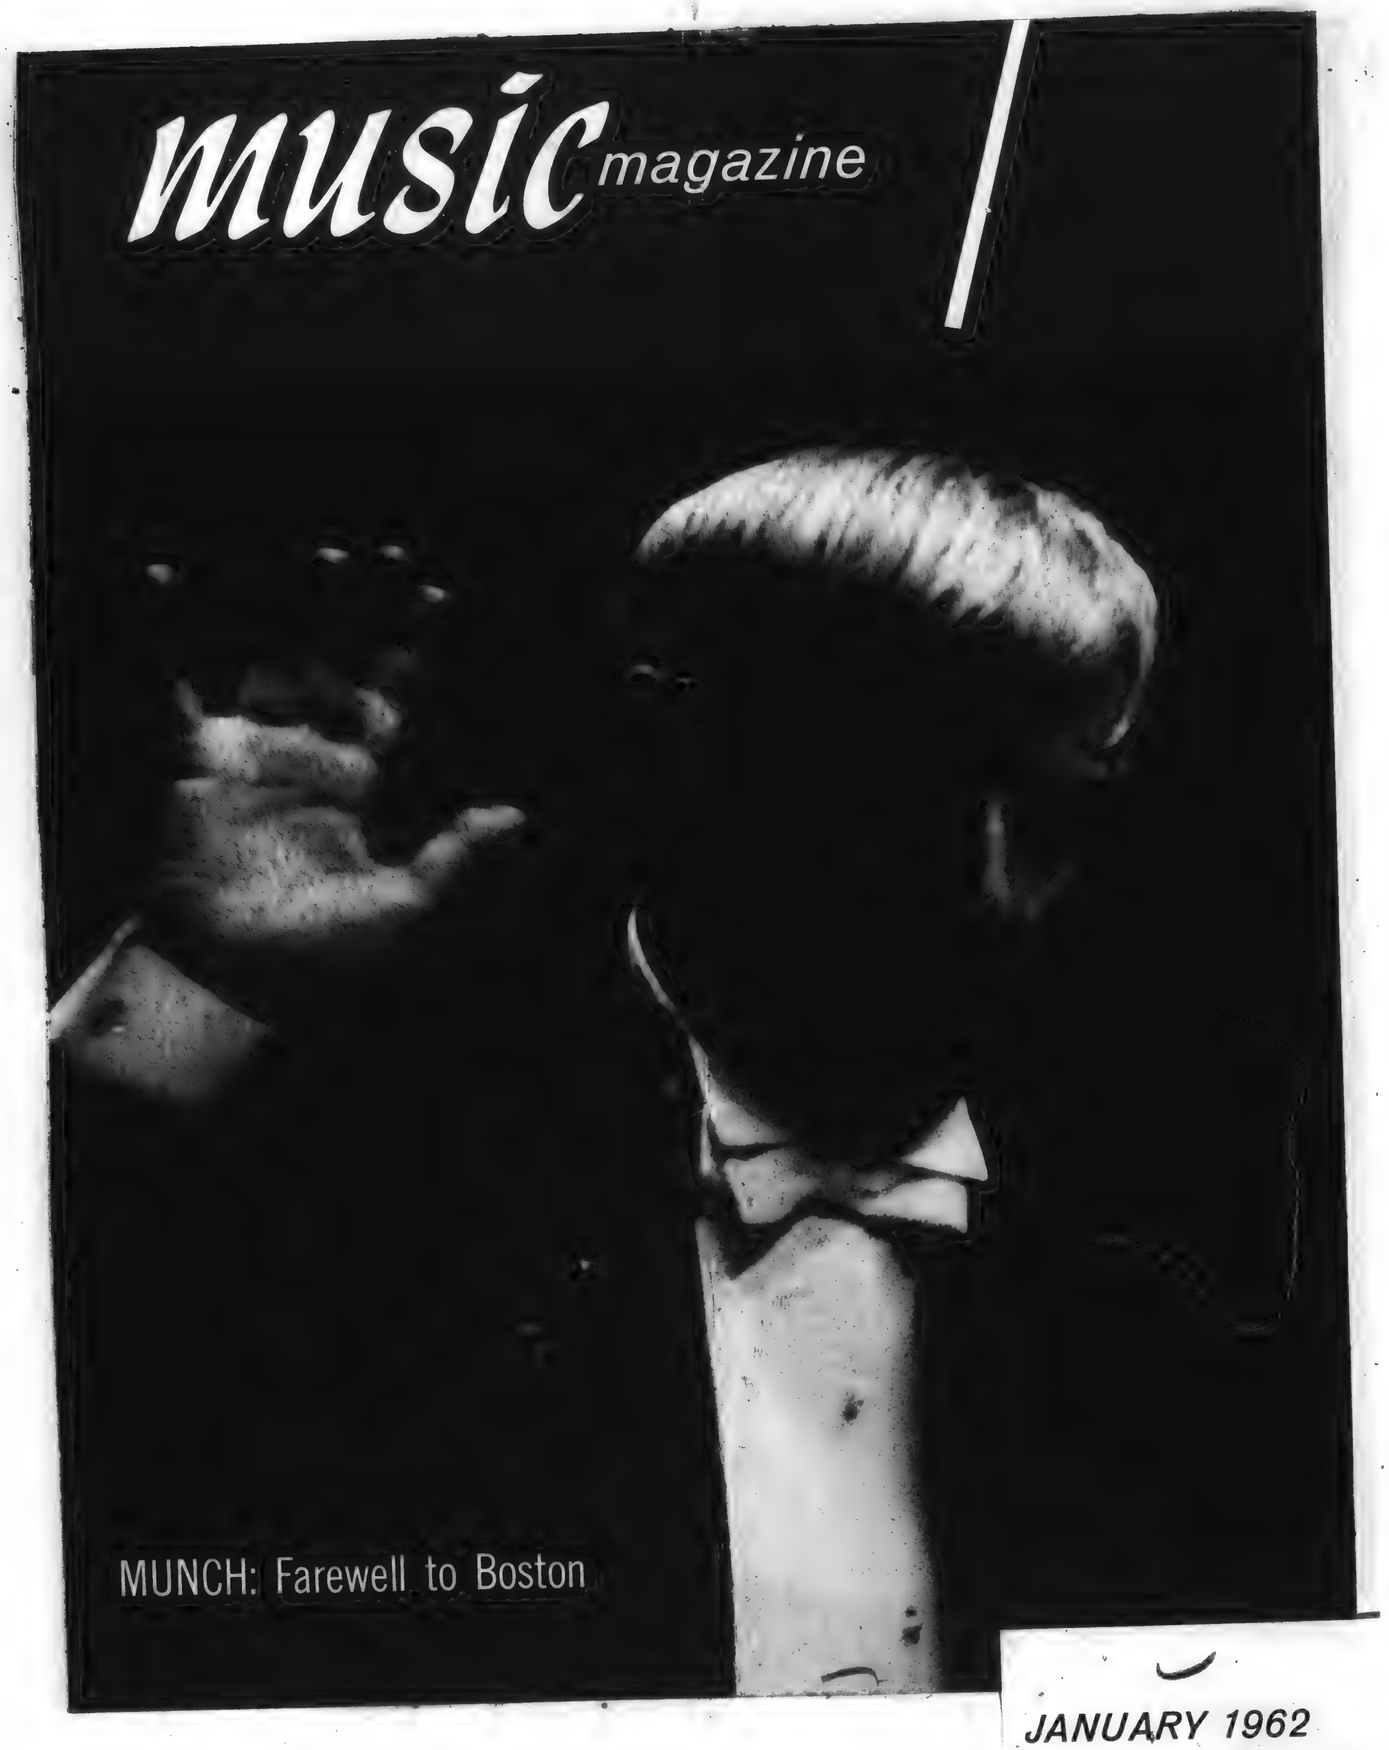
MUNCH: Farewell to Boston

JANUARY 1962

On the Cover:

CHARLES MUNCH—conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire at the end of this, his 13th year. The orchestra's founding history, and future are discussed, starting on page 8.

music magazine



MUNCH: Farewell to Boston

JANUARY 1962

On the Cover:

CHARLES MUNCH—conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire at the end of this, his 13th year. The orchestra's founding history, and future are discussed, starting on page 8.

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1962

Echoes:

by ROBERT DUMM

HOW MANY HUNDRED TIMES had one heard the Boston Symphony? One might even catch oneself off-guard feeling the settled pride of ownership; that is, until not long ago when we heard it "out of town," right in Symphony Hall. It was a concert planned for world visitors to the UNESCO Conference on Africa.

The program seemed usual enough, in print: Copland's music from the Quiet City, Debussy's Iberia, Beethoven's "Eroica": an American, a Munch specialty, and the long-ordained prophet of world-cohesion. Dr. Munch in this, his last of 13 years with the orchestra, had hardly ever seemed so fit, commanding nothing less than magic from his men. The distinctive hush of the Copland, Debussy's suave sensuality, Beethoven's rigor under the Munch baton gave fresh meaning to the word "style." It was the very symbol of harmony-in-diversity,

"THE NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO ARE TO BE SMOOTHED, ADMONISHED, TOUCHED UP IS WONDERFUL."

So mused Colonel Henry Higginson at one point in his leadership of the orchestra he had founded. From 1881 to 1919 the farsighted Yankee had fondled and fostered his hobby as other rich men had their painting, or horses, or yachts. His sense of personal mission has led to service after service: summer concerts on the Esplanade, Tanglewood, tours, recordings.

But the indicated next role of the symphony, already splendidly assumed in a tour of the Orient under Munch, is that of world-ambassador of the best in American culture, and that role may yet prove the greatest. Let's have a closer look at an orchestra with a past and a future.

"MUSICIANS ARE NOT LIKE OTHER MEN AND MUST BE TREATED DIFFERENTLY."

Again Higginson's words blend among the echoes of Symphony Hall. Nor are these players quite like other musicians. They share a colleagueship of virtu-

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 38,700
JAN 1962

Echoes:

by ROBERT DUMM

HOW MANY HUNDRED TIMES had one heard the Boston Symphony? One might even catch oneself off-guard feeling the settled pride of ownership; that is, until not long ago when we heard it "out of town," right in Symphony Hall. It was a concert planned for world visitors to the UNESCO Conference on Africa.

The program seemed usual enough, in print: Copland's music from the Quiet City, Debussy's Iberia, Beethoven's "Eroica": an American, a Munch specialty, and the long-ordained prophet of world-cohesion. Dr. Munch in this, his last of 13 years with the orchestra, had hardly ever seemed so fit, commanding nothing less than magic from his men. The distinctive hush of the Copland, Debussy's suave sensuality, Beethoven's rigor under the Munch baton gave fresh meaning to the word "style." It was the very symbol of harmony-in-diversity,

"THE NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO ARE TO BE SMOOTHED, ADMONISHED, TOUCHED UP IS WONDERFUL."

So mused Colonel Henry Higginson at one point in his leadership of the orchestra he had founded. From 1881 to 1919 the farsighted Yankee had fondled and fostered his hobby as other rich men had their painting, or horses, or yachts. His sense of personal mission has led to service after service: summer concerts on the Esplanade, Tanglewood, tours, recordings.

But the indicated next role of the symphony, already splendidly assumed in a tour of the Orient under Munch, is that of world-ambassador of the best in American culture, and that role may yet prove the greatest. Let's have a closer look at an orchestra with a past and a future.

"MUSICIANS ARE NOT LIKE OTHER MEN AND MUST BE TREATED DIFFERENTLY."

Again Higginson's words blend among the echoes of Symphony Hall. Nor are these players quite like other musicians. They share a colleagueship of virtu-

256

Boston Symphony, Past and Future

As administrator (dean of the Boston Conservatory of Music), educator, and musician Robert Dumm is in a position to observe well the past and the possibility of his city's orchestra.

osity; they are men who can step forward (and often do) for the solo part in a concerto or can meet their own public in a Jordan Hall recital on a night off. Sitting among the first violins is Joseph Silverstein, recent winner of a Naumburg. Heading the cellos, Samuel Mayes; Joseph DiPasquale, the violas; Doriot Dwyer, the flutes; Roger Voisin, the trumpets, and so around the stage.

Harold Farbermann, percussionist, has his own New Arts Orchestra; Victor Manusevitch, violinist, directs the Cambridge Civic Symphony; Richard Kapuscinski, cellist, founded the Fine Arts Quartet—Boston knows them all well enough to feel personally let down if they have an off day. Such an ensemble requires more of a guide than a goad in its conductor, and woe to the visiting prima donna-type who presses an authority the players do not feel him to possess by "eminent domain."

The fine balances of this 104-man ensemble result from the careful selection of replacements, slow turnover, workable retirement provisions, stimulating association, the lure of Boston. The balances have defined the orchestra ever since Higginson signed his first German emigrés to long-run contracts. The changes in its sound over the years reflect the national styles of its conductors: Georg Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Max Fiedler, Karl Muck, of its German profile; Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, and Charles Munch for the French; Serge Koussevitzky for a Russo-cosmopolitan savor all its own. What comes next, under the Austrian touch of Erich Leinsdorf, arouses lively speculation.

"THE PUBLIC THAT INHERITS AND THE PUBLIC THAT IS GROPING MAY YET IN THE FOURTH OR FIFTH DECADE MAKE THE WIDEST, WORTHIEST PUBLIC THE ORCHESTRA HAS YET KNOWN."

So opined H. T. Parker in the Boston Herald of 1911. If we tune that echo to read "ninth decade," we read its present subscribership of swelling thousands. Boston, it seems, cannot have enough of its symphony. Extra concerts, eight fine music FM stations, stereo enough to whirl away a lifetime of listening have proved habit-forming. The habit, one suspects, is a bit narcotic, and who might blame an urbanite for swathing his nerves in soothing sound, a sort of euthanasia-impromptu.

This very season the orchestra management offered a new Monday evening series, the first addition to the concerts since 1925. This run, with the Thursday open rehearsals, Tuesdays concerts, a longer Tanglewood calendar, brings the orchestra's performing year to 50 out of 52 weeks, a severe pace compared to orchestras which count 25 or 30 weeks a full year. From the standpoint of business it was a sure thing for there is no apparent end to the line of standees outside the ticket window. The men rejoice in their full year's work, paid vacation, freedom from occasional odd jobs. It is a pioneer step among orchestras, as was the pension fund plan, which has relieved aging musicians of killing pressure, without preventing them from teaching and performing after they retire.

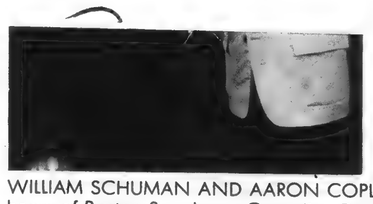
"THIS COMES FROM MY HEART. MAY IT TOUCH THE HEART."

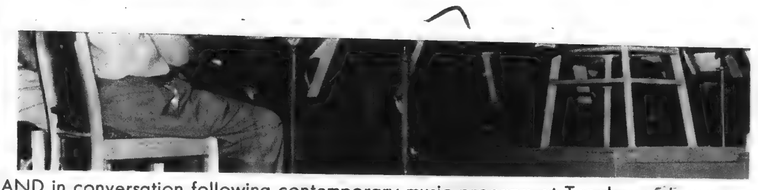
Charles Munch likes to repeat those words, Beethoven's, about his Ninth Symphony. Long after "le beau Charles" steps down from his podium next August, I shall remember him as he once conducted Ravel's Daphnis et Chloë Suite. Things were well under way; he had the flutes rustling and the clarinets murmuring. Dawn had just turned into blazing noon when he dropped both arms gently to his side, inclined a bit backwards, and simply let a tidal wave of sound pour gratefully over his head. He willingly stood aside to let the unexpected take over, and we were possessed that night by sheer welling sound.

One of the last practicing Romantics, Munch feels that, for all the calculation one might apply to a piece at rehearsal, it is the moment of performance, with its extra spurt of adrenalin, that counts. "The concert is not the place to form new opinions," he has said. "Concert time is when feelings must be made to reach an extreme of intensity."

SYMPHONY HALL on Huntington Avenue houses the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Hall's galleries are crammed wth students for "open rehearsals." Some of its seats have been occupied by the same series subscribers for 50 years.

Lenscraft Photos, Inc.





WILLIAM SCHUMAN AND AARON COPLAND in conversation following contemporary music program at Tanglewood, summer home of Boston Symphony. Comedian Danny Kaye gets what he asks for in rehearsal for a Pension Fund concert at Tanglewood.

and seconded the motion. It was Toscanini, too, who recommended him to the staff of the Met when he was only 25. Then the sudden death of Artur Bodanzky, head of the German repertory there, elevated him to that post. More than one player recalls the split-second rehearsals of those years (a whole opera in one morning), painstaking backstage work with principals, the disciplined baton that pulled many a pro through the last hairbreadth squeeze of Die Walküre or Salomé when that singer had to substitute on short notice. Such authority belied his youth, as well as an imperiousness that withered all comeback.

Every stage of his fast-moving career marked achievement: Cleveland in 1943, a brief tenure with the symphony before his service call; Rochester in 1947, nine years as conductor; director of the New York City Opera in the mid-1950s, and music consultant to Rudolf Bing at the Met. Between times Leinsdorf saw Boston would not like to fall behind. The record does not speak as unequivocally on this point although Leinsdorf has introduced operas by Walton, Poulenc, Stravinsky, and Martin to his rounds of repertory. But for that "contemporizing" of the familiar repertoire that results from entirely fresh readings we have high hopes.

"TO PEOPLE UNKNOWN TO ME WHO, LEADING GREY LIVES, NEEDED THIS SUNSHINE."

So Henry Higginson, in his farewell address in 1919, bequeathed renewal to the people of Boston. The orchestra he began has radiated its influence over increasing thousands of lives. One of my first impressions on coming to this never-never land was that of a taxi driver who stolidly ran all the lights up Huntington Avenue as he gave his countdown on each work that was being offered at "Symphony" that weekend. rehearsals, one of Munch's most popular innovations. Demand to hear the symphony on its home ground has never been so great. If it kept shop seven nights and matinees, Boston would cannibalistically devour it.

How neighborly the musicians themselves behave, how unlike the custodians of an "institution." The neighborliness shone through one recent evening when Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, strode to the podium. He has the same spring and modernity that recommended him to Monteux in 1920, though he plans to retire next year. It was no wonder that the orchestra played well for him for it does as much under other beckoning arms. But something new had entered the sound, something heady and raw had tinged the suavity, something teamy and testy. We all shared the good years, the players seemed to say, the best years.

They were a team—they seemed to say—a team unbeaten and proud. ●

256

Munch rehearses his musicians in a spirit of easy cooperation. "The orchestra is not a docile or mechanical instrument. It is a social body, a collection of human beings. It has a psychology and reflexes. It can be guided, but it must not be offended." Once, when the men had got out of hand, Munch called an anguished supplication, "Oh, you're not going to make me a policeman, are you?"

That plea comes from the heart of his concept of conducting; not to act as a teacher, but as an inspirator. The concert must be a bonus paid by the good will invested at rehearsal. What did it mean at rehearsals when Munch would mutter "pas nécessaire" (he has not learned English), "pas nécessaire," as he turned page after page of the score? Or that a recording might be made after a single brush-up rehearsal? Indifference, laxness? Not at all. Munch felt he could count on the good will the men felt towards him, and he has not erred often. (They do not forget the evenings he gave them leave to play elsewhere, and nevertheless recommended full pay, "since it is for the good of the orchestra.")

"THE TELEPHONE MUST AT ANY PRICE BE KEPT FROM RINGING."

Throughout his sojourns in this country Munch has kept as guarded as a publicity-shy movie star, a condition essential to his way of work. "When you go onstage for the first rehearsal, you must already know the score as well as you ever will." His need for the conservation and concentration of forces has dictated a strict inaccessibility, which is policed by a personal staff that intercepts not only calls but mail to his home.

Behind the letter of Munch's words one reads a good man and devoted artist, and a humble man to whom craft came hard, but who has accepted the burden of unending work. His enjoyment of music is personal and total. "Music always suggests something to me; just a color or a landscape or perhaps a sensation that can be felt and expressed only in sound. My taste for painting often brings visual images to mix with the sounds." If then he has not always pressed his musicians to the last heel-click of punctilio and starched elocution of the notes, the musicians have nevertheless "spoken" largely and frequently under his inspired musical impulse. "Au revoir, Charles, et merci!"

"BUT YOU MUST CAN!"

Any talk of Boston Symphony conductors must go on amidst the still fulminous incense of Serge Koussevitzky, whose image lives on in the players and countless members of the Boston and Tanglewood audiences. Many an American composer can date his first "break" with a score he commissioned, and many a musician recalls with half-frightened fascination certain involuntary ulcers that bloomed under that voluntarily endured tyranny. For close to 30 years his name and that of the orchestra were unforgettably fused.

Under his training the ensemble attained a voluptuous, intense sound and a breathless readiness that made each performance a sort of rite. His aristocratic, imperious way hardly could have been bettered by a czar, yet the men took it. They rightly felt that what he asked was in the name of musical perfection, and they felt enlarged by what he was able to make them do. "You can*not*? But you must can!" he shouted to a bass player. Then, after a signal for an impossible, but beautiful extreme of tone, "But you know what to do—you are the artists." With that, they were, and they did.

Koussevitzky's vision of building young talent was always the core of his plans for Tanglewood, and his faith in the future of new music lives in the commissions of the Koussevitzky Foundation. Under his imprint the symphony became a national orchestra as well as the pride of Back Bay, and a definitive interpreter on records. There is hardly one of the present not-so-young generation of American musicians who did not have his first hearings of major works through Koussevitzky's prism on the old 78s.

"ONLY A WIENERKIND CAN PLAY SCHUBERT!"

That was what Colonel Higginson had asserted to Wilhelm Gericke when he signed him to conduct in the '80s. Higginson had never stopped loving Vienna and the jewel-pivoted grace of her music. That is the sound the symphony is likely to assume next year under its next conductor, Erich Leinsdorf.

John B. Sanromá Gus Manos

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY conducted the orchestra for nearly 30 years with an "aristocratic imperiousness" through which he obtained a voluptuous, intense sound. Charles Munch, one of the last practicing Romantics, "conceives his part to be that of inspirator." His devotion to his craft has provided for future conductor Erich Leinsdorf a responsive "instrument" to which the latter brings recognized talents and training.

WILLIAM SCHUMAN AND AARON COPLAND in conversation following contemporary music program at Tanglewood, summer home of Boston Symphony. Comedian Danny Kaye gets what he asks for in rehearsal for a Pension Fund concert at Tanglewood.

and seconded the motion. It was Toscanini, too, who recommended him to the staff of the Met when he was only 25. Then the sudden death of Artur Bodanzky, head of the German repertory there, elevated him to that post. More than one player recalls the split-second rehearsals of those years (a whole opera in one morning), painstaking backstage work with principals, the disciplined baton that pulled many a pro through the last hairbreadth squeeze of Die Walküre or Salomé when that singer had to substitute on short notice. Such authority belied his youth, as well as an imperiousness that withered all comeback.

Every stage of his fast-moving career marked achievement: Cleveland in 1943, a brief tenure with the symphony before his service call; Rochester in 1947, nine years as conductor; director of the New York City Opera in the mid-1950s, and music consultant to Rudolf Bing at the Met. Between times Leinsdorf saw Boston would not like to fall behind. The record does not speak as unequivocally on this point although Leinsdorf has introduced operas by Walton, Poulenc, Stravinsky, and Martin to his rounds of repertory. But for that "contemporizing" of the familiar repertoire that results from entirely fresh readings we have high hopes.

"TO PEOPLE UNKNOWN TO ME WHO, LEADING GREY LIVES, NEEDED THIS SUNSHINE."

So Henry Higginson, in his farewell address in 1919, bequeathed renewal to the people of Boston. The orchestra he began has radiated its influence over increasing thousands of lives. One of my first impressions on coming to this never-never land was that of a taxi driver who stolidly ran all the lights up Huntington Avenue as he gave his countdown on each work that was being offered at "Symphony" that weekend. rehearsals, one of Munch's most popular innovations. Demand to hear the symphony on its home ground has never been so great. If it kept shop seven nights and matinees, Boston would cannibalistically devour it.

How neighborly the musicians themselves behave, how unlike the custodians of an "institution." The neighborliness shone through one recent evening when Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, strode to the podium. He has the same spring and modernity that recommended him to Monteux in 1920, though he plans to retire next year. It was no wonder that the orchestra played well for him for it does as much under other beckoning arms. But something new had entered the sound, something heady and raw had tinged the suavity, something teamy and testy. We all shared the good years, the players seemed to say, the best years.

They were a team—they seemed to say—a team unbeaten and proud. ●

256

One thing is certain: he knows the musical capital that has been entrusted to him. At last year's open rehearsal, when he was visiting, he wheeled the men through a first-reading of Schubert's Rosamunde music, then turned beaming to the audience: "Where—where now, could you find an orchestra to do that?"

What can be read in the calm, level gaze, the worldly charm of the man? A lover of tradition, surely, who will understand what the symphony has meant to the city and to its own musicians.

His record is promising. Bruno Walter had already made him his assistant at Salzburg when Toscanini heard him and seconded the motion. It was Toscanini, too, who recommended him to the staff of the Met when he was only 25. Then the sudden death of Artur Bodanzky, head of the German repertory there, elevated him to that post. More than one player recalls the split-second rehearsals of those years (a whole opera in one morning), painstaking backstage work with principals, the disciplined baton that pulled many a pro through the last hairbreadth squeeze of Die Walküre or Salomé when that singer had to substitute on short notice. Such authority belied his youth, as well as an imperiousness that withered all comeback.

Whitestone Photo

Whitestone Photo

WILLIAM SCHUMAN AND AARON COPLAND in conversation following contemporary music program at Tanglewood, summer home of Boston Symphony. Comedian Danny Kaye gets what he asks for in rehearsal for a Pension Fund concert at Tanglewood.

Every stage of his fast-moving career marked achievement: Cleveland in 1943, a brief tenure with the symphony before his service call; Rochester in 1947, nine years as conductor; director of the New York City Opera in the mid-1950s, and music consultant to Rudolf Bing at the Met. Between times Leinsdorf saw service at opera houses all over Europe and made records with half the orchestras of the world.

Leinsdorf at the helm meant thorough preparation, controlled and energetic delivery, luminosity, and polish. Considering his considerable ambit over the years, one is interested to find him believing that best results grow from a continuous association of a conductor and his orchestra. Given his own orchestra again, we shall find him tuning it as a single instrument, electrically responsive to his lucid intentions.

Whether he will present contemporary music as often as either of his predecessors livens the speculation for Boston would not like to fall behind. The record does not speak as unequivocally on this point although Leinsdorf has introduced operas by Walton, Poulenc, Stravinsky, and Martin to his rounds of repertory. But for that "contemporizing" of the familiar repertoire that results from entirely fresh readings we have high hopes.

"TO PEOPLE UNKNOWN TO ME WHO, LEADING GREY LIVES, NEEDED THIS SUNSHINE."

So Henry Higginson, in his farewell address in 1919, bequeathed renewal to the people of Boston. The orchestra he began has radiated its influence over increasing thousands of lives. One of my first impressions on coming to this never-never land was that of a taxi driver who stolidly ran all the lights up Huntington Avenue as he gave his countdown on each work that was being offered at "Symphony" that weekend. It may as well have been the game at Fenway Park; he "knew the score" and racked it up casually, without a pinch of irony, as a fact of life.

That's what "Symphony" is in Boston —a habit first; in some cases, a way of life. There are Friday afternoon subscribers who have settled into the same seat for 50 years and have tolled their weeks by tickets the way other people use paychecks. Purely habit, purely social? No — at least not in the way of other cities.

Habit does not explain at all the immediate sellout of the new series this year. And wave after new wave of students cram the galleries at the open rehearsals, one of Munch's most popular innovations. Demand to hear the symphony on its home ground has never been so great. If it kept shop seven nights and matinees, Boston would cannibalistically devour it.

How neighborly the musicians themselves behave, how unlike the custodians of an "institution." The neighborliness shone through one recent evening when Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, strode to the podium. He has the same spring and modernity that recommended him to Monteux in 1920, though he plans to retire next year. It was no wonder that the orchestra played well for him for it does as much under other beckoning arms. But something new had entered the sound, something heady and raw had tinged the suavity, something teamy and testy. We all shared the good years, the players seemed to say, the best years.

They were a team—they seemed to say—a team unbeaten and proud. ●

257

'62-'63 Prospectus

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN JAN 4 1962

A WRONG START

First Week of Programs at Lincoln Center Lacks Flair and Imagination

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

SOME Lincoln Center supporters have been watching recent developments with something of the sinking feeling of a lover discovering that his beloved has false teeth. It was bad enough when the Boston Symphony, announcing its entrance into this citadel of democratic culture, raised its prices in Philharmonic Hall some 50 per cent. But now that the first week's programs at Lincoln Center have been announced, it would seem that commercial considerations have prevailed over artistic ones, and that all the ideals we had been reading about have been set to a singing commercial.

There are many things that Lincoln Center could have done. If the enterprise is to be looked on as an American cultural dream come true, the American elements could and should have been played up. The best of our composers should have been commissioned to write music for the occasion; and the best of world music, appropriate to the occasion, also could have played a part. Or if Lincoln Center had wished to stress its international role, the door should have been thrown open to the great foreign artists and organizations. Gaze upon our handiwork, they could have been told. Perform for us in our new hall, beside the best of our own musicians.

Far From Visionary

But what actually has been announced is a long way from the great vision that Lincoln Center has been talking about. The two New York Philharmonic programs, certainly, are not calculated to inspire confidence among musicians throughout the world, or among those of the concert-going public who have taste.

Lincoln Center is supposed to represent high standards, adventure, the best in the performing arts. The opening concert, one had expected, would be something very special, a symbol of what the center is to stand for. And what does the announced opening program actually stand for? An extravaganza, a big patchwork that has neither the virtue of consistency nor taste, a gaudy affair that rings as hollow as a broken drum.

Choral Beginning

Leonard Bernstein will be leading the Philharmonic and twelve vocal soloists in a movement from Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," a movement from Mahler's Eighth Symphony, a new work commissioned by the Philharmonic from Aaron Copland (the nature of the score has not yet been announced, but presumably it is for chorus and orchestra) and Vaughan Williams' "Serenade to Music."

Presenting single movements of masterpieces is a disservice to the composer and the kind of esthetic amputation one would not expect from the director of a major orchestra in one of the world's musical capitals. It is the kind of program that will make a big noise, and will parade many faces, but its content has elements more of the circus than of idealism and imagination.

Bad as this program is, the second Philharmonic program is even worse: a vaudeville that will have thirteen soloists trooping on and off in music by Strauss, Haydn, Vivaldi and Bach. A gesture to the twentieth century will be made with the inclusion of Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps." Stravinsky, on his eightieth birthday, deserves better.

From Philadelphia

The Philharmonic is not the only organization with opening-week programs that are making musicians giggle. Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra will come up with a routine in which Adlai Stevenson is narrator in Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." Is it nasty cynicism to suggest that the juxtaposition has more of a publicity than a musical angle? ("So what'll we have on our first program?" "Well, fellers, we gotta make a big splash. Now there's this here Adlai Stevenson. . ." "Gad, what an idea! You've blown the lid off the pressure cooker with that one!")

On this program, Van Cliburn will play the Rachmaninoff Third Piano Concerto (isn't he ashamed?). Walter Piston will be represented with a pièce d'occasion, the "Lincoln Center Overture." This is the only work commissioned by Lincoln Center during the opening week. Ravel's well-worn "Daphnis and Chloe" ends this program.

The Boston and Cleveland orchestras will present new works by Samuel Barber and Alvin Etler. Otherwise the selections are traditional: "Eroica" Symphony, Brahms Violin Concerto and the like. At least these are respectable programs. But it cannot be said that there has been much of a special effort to do something memorable.

Fortunately the opening week will have at least one event worthy of the occasion, and it is coming from the most conservative organization on the premises—the Metropolitan Opera. On Sept. 29 and 30, Ernest Ansermet will direct the American première of Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida." This is a major work by a major twentieth-century composer. Here, then, will be the excitement and adventure promised by Lincoln Center.

The ironical part of the first week is in the three popular-priced concerts, with seats from $4 to $1. (The opening concert on Sept. 23 is a benefit at a $250 top, $100 bottom; and the other concerts during the week have a $30 top. All of these are benefits.) But are the Metropolitan Opera and the big orchestras being offered to the public at popular prices? No; in the cheaper series are the Juilliard String Quartet, the New York Pro Musica and the two-piano team of Gold and Fizdale.

It so happens that these are among the finest organizations in America. But they normally attract an audience of connoisseurs. What Lincoln Center in effect is saying is that the organizations everybody wants to hear are being priced out of average reach during the first week of benefits, and that the only popular-priced concerts being offered are those that have the least glamour and the least audience appeal.

Money Problems

Now, the need for money is pressing, and nobody would begrudge Lincoln Center any number of benefits for whatever the traffic can bear. And one is certain that the opening week of concerts are not going to set the pattern for the future operation. But it is equally certain that Lincoln Center has made a bad start, sacrificing ideals to what it may consider necessity. Though, really, where's the necessity? The audience will come, on this auspicious occasion, no matter what is played. It could have been just as easy to search out, with imagination and resource, fine and unusual pieces of music of past and present that would have been appropriate to the occasion, and to present them with all possible honesty and dignity.

It is true that the first week will probably bring Lincoln Center a few hundred thousand dollars. But there are other considerations. See Mark, viii, 36.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

FEB 25 1962

Symphony to Play At Sept. Opening Of Lincoln Center

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its new music director-designate, Erich Leinsdorf, will be one of five orchestras which will perform during the first week of the new Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York city.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Monday evening, Sept. 24, in Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, a new Piano Concerto by Samuel Barber, commissioned by G. Schirmer, Inc., with John Browning as soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

The actual opening concert at Lincoln Center, Sept. 23, will be given by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN FEB 18 1962

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By ROSS PARMENTER

EARLIER this month the Boston Symphony Orchestra sent its subscribers notice of the prices it will charge at Philharmonic Hall next season.

They were all higher than those it has been asking at Carnegie Hall. A spokesman for the orchestra, when asked to explain the increase, said one reason was that Lincoln Center would charge more rent for the new hall.

But there were two other reasons. The orchestra's other costs have also gone up, and, quite frankly, the orchestra felt it could get more for its tickets.

When concert managers were queried if they, too, would be charging more at Philharmonic Hall, a good deal of indecision was revealed about just how much more they would ask. One manager said they were all watching one another and what one asked was likely to affect what the others asked. What they haven't discovered yet is what the traffic will bear.

Sol Hurok said he would keep his Carnegie Hall price scale at Philharmonic Hall. He has decided he can make up the rental difference — $1,185 a night at Philharmonic as opposed to $825 at Carnegie—because Philharmonic will have more higher-priced seats. Herbert Barrett expects to charge about 10 per cent more at Philharmonic.

Not So Bad

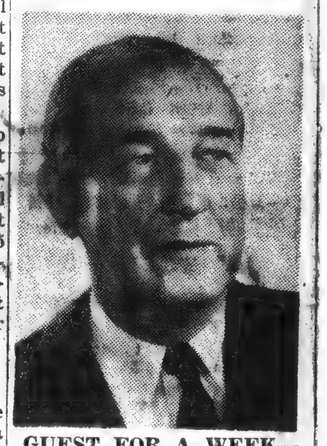
The Boston Symphony's rise averages nearly 50 per cent a ticket. In percentage terms this seems a lot, but Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, points out that the Boston has not raised its New York ticket prices in more than ten years. In justice to the orchestra, too, it needs to be said that $12 is not really very much for five symphonic concerts. This is the lowest-priced subscription. The new top figure for five concerts is $32. The second of the Boston's subscription series at Philharmonic, incidentally, will be on Friday nights, replacing the old Saturday afternoon series at Carnegie.

Carlos Moseley, manager of the New York Philharmonic, says the Philharmonic's jump will not be nearly so steep as the Boston's. For one thing, the Philharmonic has been lifting its Carnegie prices in anticipation of a move to Lincoln Center. Thus the new prices will not be such a shock. And the top prices will not be essentially higher. The average will go up because there will be more higher-priced seats and fewer low-cost ones.

Philharmonic's ground floor will have 1,378 seats in contrast to Carnegie's 996. But, in contrast to Carnegie's 838-seat balcony, Philharmonic Hall will have no fourth tier at all. At Philharmonic, the physically highest seats will be a floor lower than at Carnegie, and they will be on what is to be called the Second Terrace.

TUBA PLAYER: When the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra wants a new tuba player it does not spare expense. Witness what it did to get its latest one. The player in question is Roger Bobo, 23-year-old tuba player from Los Angeles, who will leave the Rochester Philharmonic to go to the Netherlands. First the Concertgebouw heard Mr. Bobo's artistry via tape, then it asked Mr. Bobo to come to Europe to audition in person. And it offered to pay his round-trip plane ticket. So he left Rochester on a Friday, auditioned in Amsterdam over the week-end, won the job, and was back in Rochester by Tuesday to rehearse for the Rochester Philharmonic's Thursday concert.

WIDOW: Mrs. Fritz Kreisler has received hundreds of messages from all over the world expressing regret at the death of her husband. Her health is poor and she has found herself unable to cope with the flood of correspondence. Accordingly she turned to this paper to convey an omnibus appreciation. She asked that this be said: "I can not tell how much these expressions of sympathy have meant to me. They have not assuaged my grief, but have given me strength to bear my loss. My regret is that I can't respond to all of them personally."



GUEST FOR A WEEK—Alfred Wallenstein takes over Philharmonic podium at Carnegie Hall Thursday.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Massenet's "Werther," which has not had a New York performance with orchestral accompaniment in a dozen years, will be given a full revival by the Opera Theatre of the Manhattan School of Music on March 2 and 3. Carlton Gauld will stage the production and Emerson Buckley will conduct it. . . . Pablo Casals was recently elected to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers as a composer. . . . The Montreal Symphony is going to Russia, and the Canadian artists it has invited to go along as soloists are Ronald Turini, pianist, and Teresa Stratas, soprano. . . . Say what you will, things do change in Boston. The Boston Symphony has elected its first woman to the board of trustees. She is Mrs. James H. Perkins. . . . The Park Avenue Synagogue has commissioned Jan Meyerowitz to compose a new Friday Evening Service. It will have its première at the synagogue on May 4.

258

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
D. 278,013 S. 235,855
JAN 5 1962

Some Program Notes: Boston Orchestra in Prospect for Spring?

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

THE evening affording no theatre subject inviting of anybody's lengthy regard, your correspondent surrenders the critical prilege for this issue and resorts to a few notes and impressions. It may be of some interest to mention that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, planning a southern tour in April, is seeking a Houston engagement. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor-elect of that famous assembly, will be along as the generalissimo. The fee being asked is a very stiff one indeed, but the offer is getting consideration. It used to be an axiom here that the interest of the Houston musical audience is worn thin by April, but last season's turnout for the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra, a spring visitor, did something to change that idea.

Roussel

Incidentally, when Joseph Silverstein, the excellent Boston orchestra violinist, was here recently to perform with our own Symphony, he asked me whether we'd yet had Danny Kaye as a guest conductor. I presumed this to be a musician's humor and replied with a little joke of my own. But he was in earnest. The movie comedian, he assured me, is serious about his conducting and not at all bad at the job. Perhaps we should have him some time—with Jack Benny as violin soloist.

* * *

I am also reminded that Van Cliburn confided to me on his last visit to town that he wants to get into conducting, preferably in the operatic field. This ought to suggest something to the Houston Grand Opera Association. I do not think Cliburn would look unfavorably on a proposition offering him a chance to try his hand at the new job in his home region. Why not make him a bid to take over one opera production as a guest? Small chance that anything could be lost on a venture of that kind.

A suite for flute, 'cello and harpsichord written by Arthur Hall, the excellent Houston composer and head of the Shepherd School of Music, Rice University, will have its premiere at a concert of the Lyric Art Quartette in the university's Hamman Hall on Friday, Jan 12. Appearing in the special number will be Byron Hester, solo flute of the Houston Symphony, and Klaus Speer, harpsichordist, with Marion Davies, of the Lyric group, as the 'cello performer.

And while we're passing out tips to the wise, this seems a good moment to remind everybody that the next balletic event scheduled for town should be a premium affair. The occasion will be the appearance, under the patronage of Mrs. Edna W. Saunders, of the American Ballet Theatre. The date is Jan 31—one regular performance only, after a morning show which is strictly for students.

The note is here entered because the two programs presented by this organization at the Music Hall last winter were the finest ballet Houston has been privileged to witness in many years. Completely fresh in decor and beautifully staffed, the productions represented in every way the highest standards and style of the art, and were perfectly thrilling to encounter. It was ironical that they had the thinnest attendance of our dance season.

Lucia Chase has done a wonderful job in the reorganization of her company (which lost most of its properties in a fire while touring in Europe two years ago), and Houston's dance public should catch on.

* * *

APPARENTLY this is to be a season of no touring drama whatever. Productions of "A Thurber Carnival" and "The Sound of Music" were announced as possibilities for Music Hall visits when bookings were arranged in the fall, but nothing more has been heard of the projects and I find no evidence that the shows in question are still making the rounds. Though our own play season has been a pretty good one, the winter has been dramatically thinner for the collapse of the Broadway Theatre League series, a good effort that deserved to succeed.

Should your attention wander a little from the music in forthcoming performances of the Symphony, you may find it amusing, as I have done a few times, to observe that James Austin, the orchestra's first trumpet, bears a somewhat striking resemblance to certain pictures of John F. Kennedy. Or does it just look that way from my side of the hall?

The Alley's splendid success with its production of Ben Jonson's "Volpone" has rather valuably demonstrated that a classic work of the drama is not barred from becoming a popular hit in the local houses by reason of being a classic, as some people appear to believe. "Volpone" is a riot in Nina Vance's arrangement, and the characterizations of its major performers are the juiciest acting the local stages have offered in many a turn.

And I note that the skeleton of the mastodon they discovered near town the other day has been proved to be only 18,000 years old. That reminds me of the last joke I heard on television.

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
D. 66,493 S. 65,765
FEB 24 1962

WMSB Highlights

Boston Symphony Plans 5 Concerts

A rare musical treat awaits Channel 10 viewers in five superb performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Scheduled for Friday showings at 11 a. m. and reruns on Sundays at 2 p. m., the series begins this Friday on Michigan State university WMSB-TV.

Under the direction of Charles Munch, the quality of the famed orchestra is enhanced in these performances by unexcelled camera work. Each concert, recorded in Sanders theater in Cambridge, Mass., is presented in its entirety. In addition, each includes an intermission interview with a distinguished musician or composer.

Dr. Munch has led the Boston Symphony orchestra to international fame in tours of the United States, Europe, the Soviet Union, Japan and other countries of the far east. During this period he also has been a regular participant in the annual Berkshire Music Festivals.

The first program of the series consists of three symphonic works: Haydn's Symphony in B-Flat Major, No. 98; Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches," and Beethoven's Symphony Number 7 in A-Major, Op. 92.

During intermission, William Pierce, who acts as commentator, interviews Walter Piston about his "Three New England Sketches," his early years as a painter and restaurant piano player, and his musical studies in America and Paris.

Other WMSB highlights:

PHILOSOPHY

"What does it mean to be human?" The attempts of existentialism to answer this puzzling question will be the substance of a new program.

The program, to be presented at 12:30 p. m. Sunday and again Thursday at 11:30 a. m., is the first of a 10-part series entitled "Self-Encounter." The series has been designed to explain and illustrate the principles if existential philosophy.

Viewers who find such questions interesting might also like to sample the series entitled "Eastern Wisdom and Modern Life," presented at noon Sunday and 11:30 a. m. Wednesday. This week, Alan Watts, distinguished interpreter of eastern philosophy, explains how self-contradiction is involved in our ideas of man's nature.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

A wide variety of viewing on public affairs will be offered during the week.

Rob Downey's "Convention Report," an analysis of what's going on as a new state charter is written at the constitutional convention, is a regular offering at 7 p. m. Mondays.

For the longer view, the "Great Decisions" program continues at 1 p. m. Sunday and 12:30 p. m. Monday. This week's offering is entitled "Nigeria, Democracy in a New Climate." Howard K. Smith and Ron Cochran will examine the fledgling African state and its possible role as a model for yet-to-emerge African nations.

A global problem coming more and more to our attention is water—which is precisely the title of a documentary to be presented at 3:50 p. m. Sunday. The global water crisis, the program contends, can only be dealt with through scientific and economic co-operation on an international scale.

CHILD EDUCATION

In "Why Johnny Reads Junk" at 11 a. m. Wednesday, Maria Piers explores what books are best for different age groups. Kay Eyde, at 1 p. m. Monday and Tuesday, interviews Jean Le Pere, who describes "necessary reading" for the adolescent girl (Monday) and the adolescent boy (Tuesday).

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
TUE FEB 20 1962

ORCHESTRA ADDS A CONCERT SERIES

Philadelphians Will Give 7 Extra Programs in '62-63

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 19—To satisfy the ticket demands of music lovers, the Philadelphia Orchestra has added a new series of seven Thursday evening concerts to its program for the 1962-63 season, which opens in mid-September.

The series will be the first on Thursday nights in the orchestra's sixty-two year history. It will supplement the previously scheduled twenty-eight Friday afternoon and twenty-eight Saturday evening concerts, and fourteen Monday night performances.

C. Wanton Balis Jr., president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, announced the series' addition today, saying it "was arranged in view of the heavy demand for tickets to the Saturday and Monday evening series, which are virtually sold out by subscription."

The directors believe, Mr. Balis explained, that the orchestra can better serve the public by increasing the number of concerts offered at the Academy of Music here.

Prices for the series range from $10 to $31.25. They will be given on Sept. 20, Dec. 6, Jan. 3, Feb. 21, March 7, April 11 and May 2.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct all but the March 7 concert, which will be under the direction of Charles Munch, retiring music director of the Boston Symphony.

The soloists will include Robert Cassadesus and Philippe Entremont, pianists, and Lorne Munroe, the orchestra's first 'cellist. On April 11 a special choral program of Beethoven's oratorio "The Mount of Olives" and Bach's Easter Oratorio will be presented.

During the thirty-five-week season, the orchestra is giving forty-seven concerts out of town and eighty-four at the academy. In approximately the same amount of time, next season's program calls for forty-seven performances in the former category, and about ninty-five here.

The orchestra association's contract with the American Federation of Musicians requires members of the orchestra to perform a specified amount of services during a season. A service can be either a concert or a rehearsal.

"Since we have to raise money locally," a spokesman said, "we will have to play more locally."

"If the demand for tickets comes up to expectations, he added, the Thursday evening series probably will be continued in future seasons."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 868,958 S. 1,186,625
FEB 9 1962

N. Y. Concert Tickets to Go Up 50%

Tickets for the five New York City concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season will average nearly 50 per cent higher when the orchestra moves from Carnegie hall to the new Philharmonic hall in Lincoln Center. The increase in subscription concert admission amounts to between $1 and $1.00 a ticket in all price categories for each concert, with subscription cost ranging from a low of $12 to a high of $32.

A symphony spokesman said that Lincoln Center's higher rent fees were a definite factor in the price increase. Basic cost of renting Philharmonic hall is $1,185 a night as against $825 for Carnegie. Lincoln Center also is asking much higher fees for box office services.

According to managers, other orchestras expect to raise prices and tickets for recitals and other musical events also are likely to cost more in the new hall.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
TUE FEB 20 1962

STEVENSON CAST AS CONCERT 'STAR'

U.N. Aide to Narrate at First Week of Philharmonic Hall

Adlai E. Stevenson will be a soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra in the new Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, two days after the official opening on Sunday, Sept. 23.

The Chief United States Delegate to the United Nations will take on a role new for him—as a narrator with orchestra in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

The concert, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, will be part of the series of twelve orchestral, operatic and chamber programs that will fill the first week of center activities. The opening event of the week will be a concert by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein that President Kennedy may attend. The President has been officially invited and there are strong hopes he may attend.

Details of the arrangements for this first week were announced yesterday by William Schuman, president of the center. There will be seven benefit performances with a variety of major performing organizations, conductors and soloists, all contributing their services. Also announced are ticket prices ranging from $1 to $250.

The week's programs will include new works by Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland and Walter Piston, commissioned especially for the occasion. There will also be a New York première of an orchestral composition by Alvin Etler.

Tickets for the opening night Philharmonic concert will cost $250 for loge seats and $100 for all other places. Prices of $5 to $30 a seat will prevail for the six other large-scale benefit programs.

Bostonians to Play

These last-named consist of a Boston Symphony Orchestra program under Erich Leinsdorf on Monday, Sept. 24, the Philadelphia program the following evening, a second Philharmonic concert under Mr. Bernstein on Wednesday, the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell on Thursday and performances of Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida" by the Metropolitan Opera company under Ernst Ansermet on Saturday and Sunday evenings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
FEB 22 1962

Compose Works for Lincoln Center

Aaron Copland

Walter Piston

Samuel Barber

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
APR 22 1962

List Opening Bills for Lincoln Center

Seven benefit concerts, three one hour chamber music programs at popular prices, and three special educational concerts and recitals for invited audiences are on the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts' opening week agenda, beginning Sept. 23. The New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Cleveland orchestra, and the Metropolitan Opera company will take part. World premieres of commissioned works by Barber, Copland and Piston are scheduled as well as the previously announced American premiere of Falla's posthumous opera "Atlantida" in concert form. All will be held in Philharmonic hall, first of the center buildings to be completed.

• • •

Here is a brief rundown of the benefit programs:

Sunday, Sept. 23 — New York Philharmonic, conducted by Leonard Bernstein. Excerpts from Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" and Mahler's Eighth Symphony, Vaughan Williams' Serenade to Music, new work by Copland. Schola Cantorum and 11 soloists including Dorothy Kirsten, Eileen Farrell, Shirley Verrett-Carter, Richard Tucker, John Vickers, George London, Robert Merrill.

Monday, Sept. 24 — Boston Symphony orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf. Premiere of Barber's Piano Concerto, John Browning, soloist; Brahms, Beethoven, and Strauss.

Tuesday, Sept. 25 —Philadelphia orchestra, Eugene Ormandy. Premiere of Piston's "Lincoln Center Overture," Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," Adlai E. Stevenson, narrator; Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, Van Cliburn, soloist, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites.

Wednesday, Sept. 26—New York Philharmonic, Mr. Bernstein. Strauss' Festival Prelude for Great Orchestra and Organ, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," concertos for multiple instruments by Haydn, Vivaldi, and Bach.

Thursday, Sept. 27—Cleveland orchestra, George Szell. New York premiere of Etler's Concerto in One Movement, Brahms' Violin Concerto, Isaac Stern, soloist.

Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 29 and 30.—Falla's "Atlantida," Metropolitan Opera orchestra, chorus, and soloists including Rosalind Elias and George London.

• • •

The Juilliard String Quartet, the New York Pro Musica, and Gold and Fizdale, duo-pianists, present popular priced concerts the afternoons of Sept. 24, 26, and 28, respectively.

Concerts for invited audiences include the Juilliard orchestra, Sept. 28, for school and college teachers, the New York Philharmonic, Sept. 29, for young people, and an organ recital Sept. 30 under interfaith auspices.

Lincoln Center Gala Opening To Feature Tanglewood Stars

Tanglewood stars will glitter among the host of performers who will appear during a series of benefit concerts that will take place in the week following the official opening of the new Lincoln Center for Performing Arts in New York City on Sunday, Sept. 23.

There will be seven benefit performances with a variety of major performing organizations, conductors and soloists, all contributing their services. Ticket prices will range from $1 to $250.

The week's programs will include new works by Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland and Walter Piston commissioned especially for the occasion. There will also be a New York premiere of an orchestral composition by Alvin Etler.

There will be a Boston Symphony Orchestra program under Erich Leinsdorf, two New York Philharmonic concerts under Leonard Bernstein, the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell and the Metropolitan Opera Company under Ernst Ansermet.

There will be chamber concerts featuring the Juilliard String Quartet, the New York Pro Musica under Noah Greenberg and due pianists Gold and Fizdale.

The opening night Philharmonic concert will have Adele Addison, Irene Dalis, Eileen Farrell, Dorothy Kirsten, Jennie Tourel, Shirley Verrett-Carter, Donald Bell, Charles Baessler, George London, Robert Merrill, Richard Tucker and Jon Vickers as soloists with the Schola Cantorum under the direction of Hugh Ross.

Adlai E. Stevenson, chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations will serve as narrator with the Philadelphia Orchestra in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 205,824 S. 231,922
JAN 14 1962

Fine Arts

Between the Lines

BY DIANNE COPELON

THAT saucy Aussie at the Playhouse Theatre, the pixy brunette, Lyle O'Hara, is a show-stopper both on and off stage. When she makes a "Bell, Book and Candle" entrance in a moth-eaten old fur coat (which she insists came from the Playhouse's own wardrobe) there's a full five-minute pause for audience laughter.

LYLE O'HARA

Backstage she delights in receiving visitors but is disturbed when some knock on her door and ask to see the Siamese cat, Pyewacket. "He's a boy, and you'll find him in the boy's dressing room," she tells them.

If you meet her on the street during these cold days she'll be wearing a kangaroo coat, one a bit more stylish than her stage coat. Stop her and ask for a few verses from the song about the cuckoo and you, too, may roll down the street laughing.

THE WORD FROM BOSTON: Edna W. Saunders is negotiating with the Boston Symphony Orchestra management to bring that great orchestra here in April, 1963—not this year. The group would make Houston one of the stops on an eight-city flying tour. It's an expensive orchestra, but the rewards of hearing it—in any hall—are beyond dollars.

Boston Symphony Coming Here Next Fall under Terms of Spooner Will

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a concert at Memorial Hall during Thanksgiving Week, on Monday, Nov. 19 of this year. The concert will be free and open to the public.

The Nov. 19 symphony program was announced today by Charles H. Randall, Jr., trust officer of the Plymouth Bank, and trustee of the concert fund of the James Spooner will.

James Spooner, who died in 1954, was a lifetime resident of Plymouth and Cordage official. He was an ardent music-lover a member of the Plymouth Choral Society, Plymouth Men's Glee Club, Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra, Phinney's Pilgrim Band and the Plymouth Cordage Band.

The Spooner Trust provided by Mr. Spooner's will, furnishes the money to pay for "high-grade public concerts in Plymouth to which the public shall be admitted without charge." He specifically mentions the Boston Symphony Orchestra and concerts by outstanding singers.

Mr. Spooner's will also provides a fund to provide for "professional musicians" at the First Parish in Plymouth. He also left his house on North St., to be preserved as a museum, and a fund to maintain it.

An advisory committee, consisting of Philip S. Barnes, Harold A. Boyer and Alfred Volta, has met with the trust department of the bank from time to time over the past several months making preliminary arrangements for the concert. A full announcement will be made when further arrangements for the concert have been completed.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S: 488,161
THU FEB 8 · 1962

Bostonians Raising Prices Of Concerts Here

Patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will find listening to its music more costly next year, when the orchestra will give its series of five concerts in Philharmonic Hall at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts instead of Carnegie Hall.

New York subscribers to the concerts have just received the new schedule of prices per seat which, compared with last year's, is as follows: $32 instead of $24; $26 instead of $21; $22 instead of $15; $18 instead of $12; $14 instead of $9, and $12 instead of $7.50.

While the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra have not set their price scales, they, too, are expected to charge more.

One reason for the additional expense given was that Philharmonic Hall would cost more to rent than Carnegie — $1,185 compared with $825—a concert. Another is that owing to the difference in construction features (the Lincoln building will have a second terrace instead of a balcony) there will be fewer of the less expensive seats and more of the expensive ones.

260

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126,055 S. 184,493

FEB 11 1962

Boston Symphony To Bypass City

By STEPHEN HAMMER

For the first time in years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will bypass Rochester next season.

And its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf who spent a decade leading the Rochester Philharmonic, will not be available for a guest appearance here next year either.

This is the kind of information you are apt to run into in spending a day behind the scenes of the Civic Music Association where the atmosphere is as devoid of artistic glamor as that of any other business office.

This came to light — more or less in passing — during a day spent in the office of Thomas Iannaccone, executive secretary of the CMA.

The Boston Symphony is passing up all Eastern appearances next fall in favor of a West Coast tour. And Leinsdorf had to turn down a bid to conduct the Rochester orchestra early in 1963 because his schedule permits no guest appearances.

Opening for Orchestra

Iannaccone did not hid the fact that he is disappointed because the Boston Orchestra can't come. But at the same time, he added, this will open the opportunity to fit into the Artists Series another of the world's great orchestras for which negotiations are under way. He would not reveal its identity.

Visiting artists are not selected by Iannaccone and his staff; they just take care of the mechanics of bookings. Philharmonic soloists are chosen by the conductor, Iannaccone explained, and a CMA committee, headed by Arthur L. Stern and Dr. Andreis Roodenburg, determines who should be brought in for other concerts.

To Iannaccone and the rest of the CMA staff, the operations they're involved in are almost totally devoid of the glamor associated with the arts.

"This is a busy operation," he said. "We're not exposed to the glamor end. I think it's fair to say that hardly any of the artists I have booked in here are my friends—I hardly have the chanec to sit down with them in private conversation.

"Both the artist and the manager have their special area of responsibility," he continued. "The artist, of course, is responsible for performing at the highest level of his ability. The manager is responsible for providing what the artist needs while he is here."

5½-Inch High Stool

As if on cue, the telephone rang, with Andres Segovia — scheduled that night to play a guitar recital—on the other end. After a brief exchange of pleasantries Iannaccone easily slipped into the role of manager.

"A stool exactly 5½ inches high?" he said into the phone. "I understand, sir. We'll have one ready.—It's good to have you here again, sir.—Goodbye."

He next called Merritt Torrey, the stage manager responsible for such items.

"Get Mr. Segovia a stool exactly 5½ inches high," he requested, "no more and no less. If you can't find one, make one.

"But," he added, anticipating the artist's possible need, "don't be surprised if he wants something else when he sees what you have. Just give him what he wants."

The current CMA campaign for $237,000 to overcome the boxoffice deficit is, of course, important to Iannaccone and his staff, but it does not keep them from their managerial functions. February, it happens, is the traditional time for concluding negotiations for outside talent to be brought in the following season.

Negotiations by Phone

Most of the negotiations are done by telephone, the manager said, because "it's easier to dicker that way. Besides, you can get a lot of answers in one phone call that it would take weeks of correspondence to get by mail."

Just the same, Iannaccone was displaced from his office that afternoon by a group of auditors tallying the first totals on the fund drive. The manager yielded cheerfully and set up shop in the nearby office of his assistant, Herbert Yates.

In the course of the day, he dealt with numerous problems brought to him by his staff. Yates wanted guidance on the distribution of literature and campaign announcements during concerts while the drive is on. Mrs. Inez Reedy, the public relations director, stopped by to ask him to lunch with a visiting ballerina; he declined. Mrs. Leonore Humphries, the bookkeeper, needed decisions on the meaning of contract language, and his signature on checks for the ballet. His secretary, Mrs. Marie Jukes, came in with a variety of problems and questions.

Picture of Calm

Even while dealing with several issues simultaneously, Iannaccone is a picture of calm. This could be the result of his background—after all, what are a few minor civilian crises compared to the turmoil of the Normandy beachhead on D-Day, 1944, when he was an infantry officer leading one of the first landing parties ashore. He fought from there to Leipzig, many months and battles later, and did not come home until the war was over—after winning a Purple Heart and a Silver Star.

Iannaccone has lived in Rochester since early childhood. His first contact with the CMA was in 1937 when—aged 18—he was hired as an office boy just out of East High School. But he did not consider a career in the organization until 11 years, two colleges and a war later.

As he neared his 1948 graduation from Syracuse University (journalism and political science, Phi Beta Kappa, summa cum laude), he was asked to come back by the late Arthur M. See, then executive secretary, as his assistant.

"I had other plans at the time," he recalls, "but I decided to take the job. I've never regretted it."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,2[illegible]

BURRELLE'S PRESS CLIPPING SERVICE PAGE ONE

THU FEB 8 1962

Ticket Cost to Rise At Lincoln Center

By ROSS PARMENTER

Tickets for concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Philharmonic Hall next season will average nearly 50 per cent higher than the orchestra's tickets have been at Carnegie Hall.

Other orchestras, too, expect that the average of their ticket prices will be raised at the new auditorium in the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. Tickets for recitals and other musical events in the new hall are also likely to be higher. One reason is that it will cost considerably more to rent Philharmonic Hall than Carnegie.

The new Boston Symphony price scale is the first concrete evidence of just what prices at Philharmonic Hall will be. The scale tends to confirm recent fears and also suggests the future general pricing pattern.

Philharmonic Hall will have no balcony. Those who used to sit in the balcony for the Boston Symphony's concerts at Carnegie Hall will have to move down a tier to sit in what will be called the "Second Terrace." Instead of being able to buy a balcony subscription for five concerts for $7.50, the minimum-priced subscription buyer will have to pay $12 for a subscription in the Second Terrace.

The percentage of the lowest price raise—60 per cent—is higher than the other percentages, but they are also substantial. A $9 subscription will cost $14 next season. A $12 subscription will be upped an even 50 per cent to $18 and $7 is being added to the $15 subscription, $5 to the $21 series and $8 to the $24.

The New York Philharmonic has not yet settled what its subscription prices will be at the hall bearing its name. In principle, it does not intend to alter its highest or lowest prices. That is, $100 will remain its highest price for a subscription ticket and there will still be $1.50 tickets for Sunday afternoon concerts. But the average will be higher because, owing to the nature of Philharmonic Hall, there will be more of the expensive seats and fewer of the less expensive ones.

The Philadelphia Orchestra has not yet established its price scale at the new hall. A spokesman said yesterday he thought all the tickets would be "a little bit higher." He also spoke of the need to adjust to a hall with fine accommodations downstairs, but less upstairs.

Carnegie Hall's balcony holds 838 persons and its Dress Circle 414. This gives it an upstairs accommodation — as distinct from the 512 box seats—of 1,252. And this lower-priced accommodation considerably exceeds that offered by the 996 higher-priced seats in the parquet.

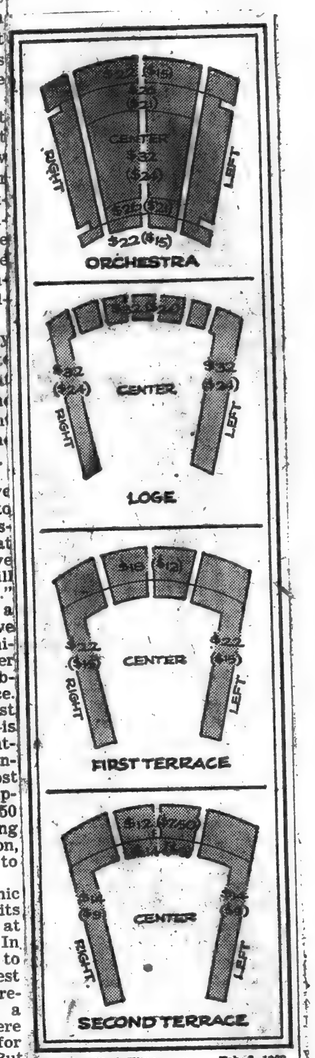
With Philharmonic Hall, the proportions are reversed. The upstairs accommodation — including the loges—comes to 800 seats, which is much smaller than is offered downstairs by the 1,378 seats in the orchestra.

Sol Hurok said yesterday that he did not intend to charge more for attractions he booked into Philharmonic Hall than for those he presented at Carnegie. He said he felt he could meet Philharmonic's higher rental costs because at the new hall he could sell more top-priced tickets and there would be more first-class seats to offer the public.

Other concert managers were not so hopeful of retaining old ticket scales at the new hall. They said they thought they would be forced to pass on to the public some of the extra costs of renting Philharmonic Hall. A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said that the Lincoln Center rent fees were a definite factor in the orchestra's move in raising its prices.

Fees are Listed

The basic fee for renting Philharmonic Hall for a night has been set at $1,185. Carnegie's basic rent is $825. Carnegie also offers a concert lease for $550 provided it can have a third of the profits above $1,650. Lincoln Center is offering no profit-sharing leases. Lincoln Center, too, is asking much higher fees for box-office service than Carnegie Hall. How much higher its fees for personnel will be has not yet been established.

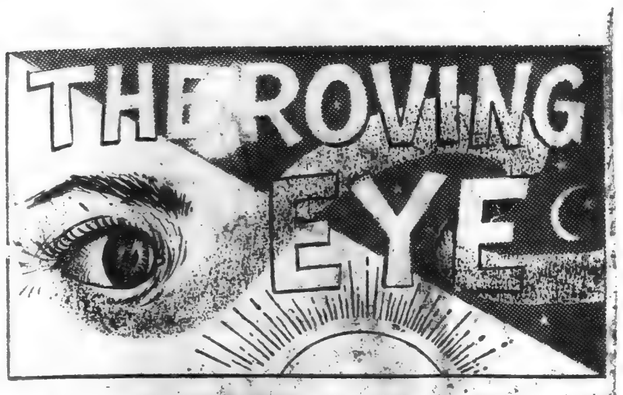


The New York Times Feb. 8, 1962

PRICES UP: Diagrams indicate prices of subscriptions to five concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra. First figure in each case is for subscriptions at Philharmonic Hall, second figure is for comparable series at Carnegie Hall.

261

Fiedler



Oh, That Crazy Boston

By ROBERT TAYLOR

LET'S SAY YOU'RE from Kansas or some other remote heartland, and you've never been to Boston, and you're trying to form a mental picture based on what you've heard and read. It might assume this shape.

Boston is "the most English of American cities," not unlike Samuel Johnson's London. The population, residing in red-brick Georgian mansions situated along Beacon street, which winds around a place called Louisburg square, consists of Brahmin aristocracy and Irish immigrants newly arrived in America. There are no other ethnic groups, strangely enough.

But these two manage to communicate through use of the magic phrase "Park the car in Harvard Yard." Going to Harvard is immensely important in Boston, because there are no other male colleges thereabouts save for MIT which is located in Massachusetts somewhere.

Anyhow, it doesn't make much difference, because everyone in Boston, including the poorest Brahmin, attended Harvard where they teach you how to speak with a broad "a" and be President of the United States.

★ ★ ★

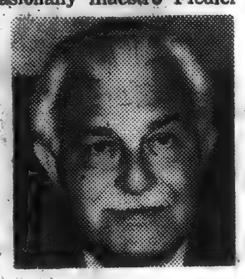
BOSTON HAS A TERRIBLE bookie problem, which is rather, odd, considering that the public lives in all those lovely brick houses and is steeped in culture and all. You can probably trace the bookies to the mayor, an engaging rogue named Frank Skeffington, who quotes Shakespeare and never lets down a pal. People quote Shakespeare in Boston, even the traffic cops, because everyone is so crazy about culture, including the bookmakers who must be in trade in order to make enough money to open an art gallery.

There is one hotel in Boston called The Ritz, and the elevators are sprayed with a squirt gun of Chanel No. 5 There are two restaurants. At Locke-Ober's, where all the market men sit around in their straw hats and aprons, the people eat from long trestle tables, American-style. At Durgin-Park's, the Harvard undergraduates arrange private parties with actresses in the upper dining rooms, and quaff champagne out of slippers.

★ ★ ★

A COW LAID OUT the Boston streets. She may still be seen grazing on The Common where Bostonians quarter their livestock. It is the hardest city in America to get lost in, what with the streets meandering every which way. Considering there are only two streets, Beacon and Louisburg square, it's a feat, but the Bostonians manage to do it.

Boston may well be proud of its Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Arthur Fiedler. Occasionally maestro Fiedler takes the orchestra on tour under the name of Boston "Pops." Other Boston institutions include a reverence for a distinguished past and the baked bean. Pots of baked beans are consumed at every meal around the clock. Respect for the past takes the form of dressing the way one's grandfather dressed and being frugal.



FIEDLER

Famous sons of Boston include Ted Williams, the late George Apley, Calvin Coolidge, Robert Frost, and the entire Kennedy family, Jacqueline especially. They have never gone west of Dedham.

★ ★ ★

YOU CAN ALWAYS get a laugh on Boston by quoting the old toast about the Cabots and Lodges. Another one that tickles the risibilities of the local gentry is the line about the women who "has her hats." Still another anecdote that Bostonians consider funny, and will make even the gruffest burgher explode into inordinate mirth, is the query: "Why should I go anywhere when I'm already here?"

The leader of Boston society is a woman called Mrs. Jack Gardner who promenades lions. She built a palace for herself in the Back Bay, which is in back of Louisburg square. The other things about Boston are trivial. The people tend to be cold, but warm up in summer, the codfish is authentic. In all, a quaint experience. It must be a swell place to visit; I'd think twice before I lived there.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

OCT 22 1961

Londoners Pack Hall For Fiedler's Debut

LONDON, Oct. 21 (UPI)—Boston Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler made his English debut tonight before a wildly enthusiastic audience in London's Royal Festival Hall.

He won the hearts of Englishmen with the first note.

Conducting the Philharmonic Orchestra, Fiedler began the program with the overture to Rossini's "La Gazza Ladra," which features a slow opening drum roll.

The audience instinctively stood up expecteing the national anthem "God Save the Queen," then laughed heartily and sat down with some embarrassment as Fiedler launched into the body of the work.

"I didn't know what all the fuss was about," Fiedler admitted later in his dressing room. "They told me they never played 'God Save the Queen' in a concert.

But the "error" struck a warm note with the audience, which filled every one of the over 3000 seats in the hall. Hundreds of concert-goers were turned away at the door.

"I only got one free ticket, and that was for my wife," Fiedler said. "I'm amazed at the reception. They can only have heard of me through the Boston Pops records!"

Fiedler dedicated the second half of the concert—which featured American pianist Julius Katchen—to the late Sir Thomas Beecham, the famed English conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor 4/11/62

Fiedler the Barnstormer

By Harold Rogers

Arthur Fiedler, wearing an enviable sun tan, has returned to his Symphony Hall office after completing his seventh transcontinental barnstorming tour with the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra. This time his travels took him 11,000 miles through 20 states to 58 cities where he played 59 concerts in 62 days.

During this tour Ozan Marsh, the featured soloist, played Kabalevsky's Piano Concerto No. 2 in 36 performances, each a première in the cities where it was heard. When he was not playing the Kabalevsky, he did the Liszt in E-flat, No. 1.

Mr. Fiedler recruited his 70 players through audition during the year preceding the tour, drawing his musicians from New York, Chicago, California, Bulgaria, South America, and Czechoslovakia. One violinist broke his leg while touring, spent four days in a hospital, and then rejoined the tour. The ensemble included four women — a second flute, two bassoons, a first violinist.

★ ★ ★

He played only one program with variations to full houses; and one of his audiences—at Raleigh, N.C.—included 13,000 listeners.

He attended 52 parties given in his honor after concerts.

The musicians traveled in two air-conditioned buses, while Mr. Fiedler rode in his own car with William Shisler at the wheel. His tours with his Boston Pops Tour Orchestra are probably the first major barnstorming journeys since the turn-of-the-century days when Theodore Thomas took his orchestra around the country by non-air-conditioned trains.

★ ★ ★

Mr. Fiedler is now hard at work preparing for the coming Boston Pops season, scheduled to open at Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, May 1. He will have two new medleys—"No Strings" and "State Fair." He plans something on "Moon River" and "West Side Story"; also something that twists.

His soloists will include at least one newcomer — Vera Tishoff Jagel—and some of his regulars like Ozan Marsh, Earl Wild, and Agustin Anievas.

Mr. Fiedler has now been connected with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 47 years.

Boris & Milton
Arthur Fiedler

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Circ. 3,416

FEB 3 1962

Seventh Tour Of Boston Pops To Start Tuesday

BOSTON (UPI) — Arthur Fiedler, famed Boston maestro, will put his show on the road again next week.

When the dapper, 67-year-old conductor lifts his baton in the Community Theater at Kingston, N.Y., Tuesday night, he will signal the start of the seventh annual tour of the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra.

In May, Fiedler will open his 33rd Boston Pops season, with a 97-piece orchestra composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians. The 71 members of the tour orchestra are not associated with the Boston Symphony.

This year's tour will cover nine weeks, 10,000 miles, 58 cities in 18 states and the District of Columbia—an unbroken sequence of one-night stands except for two concerts scheduled for East Lansing, Mich., Feb. 15-16.

"On these tours," said Fiedler, "we try to appeal to all musical tastes in one program—from the classics to very light stuff."

There will be selections, he said, from Saint-Saens, Rossini, Bach, Khatchaturian, Liszt, Dimitri Kabalevsky and Bernstein.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Lisbon Enterprise
LISBON FALLS, Me.
Weekly Circ. 5,000

FEB 15 1962

High-Lines of the Week

It Happened in Maine:

The richest municipality in the state is the pleasant hamlet of PLEASANT RIDGE PLANTATION with a population of 108 and a property valuation of $3.3 million-or $13,872 for every man, woman and child. . . . Arthur Fiedler, of Boston Pops Orchestra fame, recently conducted the PORTLAND Symphony Orchestra and was made honorary Chief of the Fire Department, nothing new to fire buff Fiedler; he holds the title with 88 other departments here and abroad . . . . William Fields, of HARDINGS, has built a new henhouse 100 feet by 20 feet. He has about 500 hens and chickens-big business forty years ago . . . . A racing fi[illegible]

262

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,409

NOV 2 1961

Fiedler On Tour Of Japan

BOSTON (UPI)—Conductor Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra left by plane Wednesday for Tokyo and a concert tour.

Before leaving he had praise for the lady concertmaster of Ireland's national symphony orchestra and the island nation's musical development.

Returning this week from appearances in Ireland, Fiedler said it was "a pleasure" to find the 'Treorai' of the Radio Eireann Symphony was "a very pretty colleen." He added that "her name was Geraldine O'Grady and she is an excellent violinist."

Fiedler said the orchestra played "very well" and that Ireland had begun to develop "her own symphonic composers," notably Dr. Archibald Potter.

"My program in Dublin included his ballet suite, 'Careless Love'. He was delighted with the performance."

Fiedler returned home with a gold seal from Lord Mayor Robert Briscoe of Dublin making him an honorary member of the Dublin fire brigade.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Brass Band of Tokyo Fire Department Picks Up Downbeat for Boston's Arthur Fiedler

Wearing a coat similar to the type worn by Japanese fire fighters in the 19th century, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, leads the Tokyo Fire Department's band after arriving in Japan recently for a series of performances in Tokyo and Osaka. Mr. Fiedler was made an honorary member of the band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JAN 19 1962

Pops Concerts Go Back to '85

Arthur Fiedler's tenure on the podium for the Boston Pops concert has been called the most successful, the most exciting, the most fun of any of the 17 conductors. Fiedler will conduct the Springfield Symphony in a concert Tuesday night at Municipal Auditorium.

The Boston Pops started in 1885, the brainchild of Wilhelm Gericke, Boston Symphony conductor, whose aim was to keep the orchestra at top performance level during the usually inactive summer months.

The series was labeled "Promenade Concerts" after a similar series in London in which the audience strolled about while listening to the music.

The tag later was changed to "Popular Concerts" and then simply to "Pops."

Feidler's program here will feature many of his favorite selections. Tickets are on sale at Forbes & Wallace.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

DEC 7 1961

IT'S ENOUGH TO MAKE YOU EAT YOUR HEART OUT

By LARRY CLAFLIN

Silverman, Cam Draw Knives in Food Feud

The loyalties of a boxing writer often undergo severe strain, but at noon Thursday the situation reaches the breaking point. Rival promoters in Boston have often batted their heads against a stone wall by running fights in opposition to each other. Thursday they reach new peaks by running fight luncheons at the same time four miles apart.

At Marie's Keyboard on Haviland st. in the Back Bay, Sam Silverman, one of Chelsea's leading citizens, will be host. Sam will introduce the press to Joey Giardello and Joe DeNucci who meet at the Garden Dec. 12 in a 10-round middleweight fight. At the same time, at the Lucerne in the North End, Nuno Cam, an East Boston resident, will be host to former welterweight champ Tony DeMarco who meets Don Jordan at the Garden Dec. 19.

Obviously, before Christmas arrives Boston is either going to be a ghost town as far as fights are concerned or is going to be roaring. First Peter Fuller mismanaged Tom McNeeley into a knockout at Toronto. Now DeNucci and DeMarco both face zero hour. DeMarco will be trying another comeback after an absence of almost two years and DeNucci will be meeting by far the toughest opponent he has ever faced.

The best match of all, however, may be the one for money between Cam and Silverman. One-time buddies who used to watch the TV fights together over a couple of rye and waters in the Silverman living room, Sam and Nuno now are enemies. Every time Sam runs a show Nuno slaps a lien on the dough and sues Sam for money he claims Silverman owes him. It reached the stage where everything but Sam's rent money was held in escrow.

Nuno is in for a tough match competing with Silverman when it comes to fight luncheons. One time Sam had Rory Calhoun fighting at Revere and he discovered that Calhoun—a music lover—was pals with Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra, a fight lover. Sam promptly invited Fiedler to a luncheon at Marie's Keyboard and Fiedler showed up. During the conversation, Sam turned to Fiedler in a friendly way and asked:

"Say, Arthur, is Charles Munch with your outfit?"

Mr. Fiedler's moustache twiched a little, before he politely replied:

"In a manner of speaking, yes. Mr. Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and I are with the same outfit, Sam."

Mr. Fiedler is not expected at either luncheon this time, possibly because not even the distinguished conductor possesses the wisdom to discern between luncheons and go to one without hurting the feelings of the people at the other. It would be sort of like if both Mr. Fiedler and Mr. Munch had invited Subway Sam to their homes for New Year's Eve and Sam couldn't make up his mind which place to go.

The luncheon which Fiedler attended nearly ended in the sudden, but not lamented, death of one of Boston's fight writers. Calhoun was late in arriving because of bad weather at the airport. To add to his temper, he had just been knocked down several times in a violent fight with Spider Webb at San Francisco.

As Calhoun, whose given name is Herman, arrived, the fight writer said to him:

"Say, Herman. What happened in the Webb fight? I lost five bucks betting on you."

"DON'T call me Herman. I hate that name. And if you lost five bucks what the h—— do you think I lost," said Herman with a deadly sound in his voice.

The interview ended immediately and I started a conversation about music with Arthur Fiedler who seemed like a much less violent person.

No matter which luncheon I attend Thursday, I will be certain not to argue with Joey Giardello. A gas station attendant in Philadelphia tried that once while Giardello was on crutches because of injuries suffered in an automobile accident. Joey promptly lambasted the guy with the crutch. Joey got six to 18 months for the rap.

Joey always was a big Dodgers fan. After he got out of the can on the crutch rap he attended a Dodgers-Phillies game at Shibe Park. He was pals with Duke Snider, so after the game he invited Spider out for Italian food.

"Have you got gas in your tank?" Snider asked Giardello.

"Yeah, a whole tankful. But what do you care?" Giardello replied.

"Okay, I'll go with you. But I just wanted to be damn sure we didn't have to stop at any gas stations," Snider said.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

DEC 17 1961

Globe Concert

Tonight, Sunday, Ch 4 viewers will have the pleasure of attending another Globe concert, number three in the series, from 8:30 to 9 o'clock, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Mr. Fiedler will conduct 55 members of the Boston Pops Orchestra in a program of contrasting moods and tempos, characteristic of his famous "Pops" concerts.

John Scott, host, will announce the following numbers:

Prelude to "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Excerpts from "The Nutcracker" ..... Tchaikowsky
Fantasia on "Greensleeves" ..... Vaughan Williams
Irish Washerwoman from "Irish Suite" ..... Anderson
Selections from "West Side Story" ..... Bernstein

Once a month, the Globe presents "The World of Arthur Fiedler" in prime evening time. The concerts are taped in the main ballroom of the Sheraton-Plaza. Ch 4 utilizes four TV cameras to give viewers intimate closeups of the concerts as seen both from the position of conductor Fiedler and various sections of the orchestra.

Here is another view of Arthur Fiedler as he conducts 55 members of the Boston Pops Orchestra in a Globe-sponsored music telecast. Note the TV camera atop the structure where it captures an over-all picture of the orchestra and conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,215

APR 3 1962

MUSIC

Pops Opening Night Admirable--as Usual

By ROBERT TAYLOR

They really should do something about lighting the "S" on the electric sign aboard Symphony Hall. Right now it looks like an advertisement for a product known in New England as "tonic." And, of course, the commodity dispensed by Arthur Fiedler is purest ambrosia.

As it was in the beginning, so the 77th season of the unique and admirable Boston Pops under the unique and admirable Mr. Fiedler opened last night. "Among those present" were the New England Conservatory Association, and, not unnaturally, the Music Lovers Club.

Same Fiedler

Mr. Fiedler made his appearance at precisely 8:30 and no micrometers of a second. He resembled the same punctual man I saw conduct the Pops of a quarter-century ago, rubicund and distinguished and eminently clubable—except that I, lackaday, have aged and he has stayed the same. He is the same fine musician, too.

The marquee outside was weighted with the same flowers, the hall was the same shade of green, the orchestral sound the same vibrant blend. Less traditional, perhaps, the balance of the Pops orchestra is almost the reverse of the Boston Symphony season, with Mr. Fiedler seating his violins, harp and double bass on stage right and the kettledrums and other percussion instruments at stage left. In any case, he attains wonders of richness, and if the volume occasionally seems loud, sound has to cut through the gossipy relaxed atmosphere of the boulevardiers present.

Once again Mr. Fiedler divided his program into a brisk opening section of delightful semi-classic numbers, a serious inner segment and the final swatch of specialties featuring the Pops brand of arrangement. Ralph Votapek was the young soloist in the tuneful Prokoieff Third Concerto, and if he made more of the rhythmic and digital element than the lyric side, it seemed proper enough and a remonstration of a talent not to be overlooked. Mr. Votapek has a many-colored tone when he wants to call upon the poetic rather than the brittle Prokofieff of this period.

First Encore

The first encore of the season was the Bach-Caillot "Little Fugue," and the Mason arrangement of "The Twist" won immense favor, though the Twist without the actual dancing, considered as music, may have been written with a corkscrew. My nomination for the most popular arrangement of the season is a medley of tunes from TV westerns, scheduled later this week, but one never knows. Lhude sing, Fiedler! Lhude sing Pops!

The Program

The Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting, opened its 77th season last night in Symphony Hall. Ralph Votapek, piano, was the soloist. The program:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Suite from "The Water Music" ..... Handel-Harty
Fantasia on "Greensleeves" ..... Vaughan Williams
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
Piano Concerto No. 3, in C major, Op. 26 ..... Prokofiev
Soloist: Ralph Votapek
Bacchanale, from "Samson and Delilah" ..... Saint-Saens
Suite from "No Strings" ..... Rodgers
Moon River, from "Breakfast at Tiffany's" ..... Mancini
Mack the Knife, from "The Three-Penny Opera" ..... Weill

Fenway Park Primed For April 10 Opener

Harvard University's famed band once again will feature the opening game of the American League season in Boston when the Red Sox greet Cleveland's Indians at Fenway Park a week from Tuesday, April 10.

Game time will be at 2 p.m. as it will be for all afternoon games. The band will start its concert at 1:30 to be concluded with the playing of the National Anthem at game time.

Arthur Fiedler, world-wide famed director of the Boston Pops orchestra, will direct the band in the playing of the Anthem which will be sung by John Holloway.

Gov. John Volpe will throw out the first ball for the game.

Mayor John Collins and a retinue of city officials will also be in attendance.

Aiding in the flag raising will be an eight man Color Guard made up of men from the four branches of service, the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force.

the opener. The excellent weather of the past couple of weeks following the snowy month of February gave Groundskeeper Connie Sullivan the opportunity he needed to get the grass fertilized, rolled and ready.

The entire park has been repainted. A change was made last year in the shade of green used on the walls and it is practically the same for this year. But the green which formerly covered the grandstand seats has been changed to a brownish shade.

A change also has been made in the scoreboard on the left field wall. Starting this year, the lineups and batting orders of the two teams will be posted by numbers on the scoreboard.

—...days argued that "it is

Page Eight

Boston Still Boston: 77th Pops Season On

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Full of fervor, Fiedler and flower girls, with a touch of the twist on stage and off, Symphony Hall put on its Summer look last night in spite of the chilly mercury, and light music, with wine to match, was served at small tables in the hallowed bailiwick of Beethoven and Brahms.

It was the 77th opening of that unfailing delight, Pops season, and it would be a surfeit of statistics anywhere but in Boston—Arthur Fiedler's 32d year behind the stage row of peach gladioli, the New England Grenfell Assn.'s 21st benefit night at Pops and, for many a Boston citizen, 20th or even 30th year of attendance.

In last night's big pleased audience, which included the Music Lovers Club as well as the Grenfell Assn., were students from many countries, fascinated with their first Boston Pops.

There was India's Tibs Tafel, here on a medical study fellowship, and China's pretty Soo Li Chin, studying to be a nurse.

POPS

Page Seventeen

264

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 12 196

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
APR 20 1962

MUSIC SWELLS

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Leader Fiedler Sizzles: Wants Pops Air-Cooled

Having led the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra across the country, from coast to coast and border to border, Arthur Fiedler is preparing for the regular Pops season, which begins Tuesday evening, May 1. Since he conducted 59 concerts in 58 cities on an 11,000 mile jaunt that lasted 62 days, you might expect to find him looking pale and peaked. Not leader Fiedler, who has some hidden inner source of energy. He looks wonderful. Come to think of it, he always looks wonderful, and he is, furthermore, one of the few leaders who looks as a maestro should.

HIS TOUR was an unqualified success. His upcoming Pops season will be, too; most of the scheduled concerts are already sold out. That's good news for Fiedler, bad for those who won't be able to buy tickets.

Elliot Norton

Everything is fine with Fiedler, or almost everything. The management of Symphony Hall still hasn't agreed to install air-conditioning, and that irks him. He resents the fact that Popsgoers, on hot nights, have to make fans of their programs to keep cool, and that his musicians appear coatless because of the heat. "The men should wear coats," he believes. "Without coats, they look like a lot of barbers!"

But Symphony Hall has never had air-conditioning, and the management seems to distrust these new-fangled notions such as making the summer audience comfortable. Did they do it in Major Higginson's day? No. Then let's not be radical.

If the hall were air-conditioned, it might even be possible to have a second Pops series in August, to accommodate thousands of Bostonians and enormous numbers of tourists.

That people would come to such a series of light pleasant concerts in a comfortable hall stands to reason. The notion that "everyone is away" in August is just so much poppycock: who are all those people in the streets?

Fiedler, who is not conducting any campaign for an August series, concedes that such a series might well attract a large audience. When he last guest-conducted the San Francisco Symphony, in August, they played to 9000 people.

In August, the Boston Symphony Orchestra would, of course, be in Tanglewood, and that would make it necessary to recruit players elsewhere. That could be done, however. The seventy members of the Boston Pops Tour Orchestra were recruited from all part of the country.

SEASONAL WORK

Most musicians don't have an opportunity to work in the summer, Arthur Fiedler points out. This is a weakness of the present musical situation in the United States, and a reason why too many talented young people who could make a career of it are turning elsewhere.

That there is a great interest in music all over the country is true, but Arthur Fiedler is witness to the fact that a good many of the symphony orchestras are manned by part time players, because their seasons are short and they can't pay a man a year's salary.

"Some of the orchestras I have conducted are composed for the most part of schoolteachers, doctors, professional men. Their work is not necessarily distinguished. When you conduct them, they just scramble through the music, and you just hope they'll make it."

In some cities, professional musicians work as cab drivers or in other comparable jobs during most of the year. "They can't support their families as musicians," says Fiedler.

WOMEN IN FIELD

In many places, women are taking over from the men. The San Francisco Symphony now has "about twenty-five women," the reason being that a woman can support herself on less than a man needs for a family.

"Young men who might have careers in music are going instead into such fields as missiles and electronics, because they know that these pay well. You can't persade them to stay in music. People are not fools! They have to earn enough money to support themselves and their families all year long."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is attractive to musicians not only because of its artistic quality, which is unmatched, but because it offers a full year's work, between the regular symphony season, the Pops, the Esplanade Concerts and Tanglewood, plus the income from recording. No other orchestra anywhere has such a long season.

Other cities could do something comparable, in Arthur Fiedler's opinion, to lengthen their orchestra's season. "What it takes," he says, "is somebody to go out and do the work—plan the season, raise the money. I punched doorbells in Boston for two years to get the Esplanade Concerts under way. That's the way it has to be done."

SOUNDS—Music lovers from across New England annually flock to the Esplanade concerts held at Hatch Shell by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Thousands daily sit under the stars or sun to hear the world's greatest conductors.

A Summer Evening's Relaxation

A KETTLEDRUM rumbles and the Boston Symphony to a man leans toward the music while thousands of classical addicts relax beside the Charles.

Such is the picture of a warm summer evening at Hatch Shell where the sounds drown out traffic and leap across the tiled roofs of Beacon Hill.

Those who have been call it the world's greatest bargain, for it is free but donations are gratefully accepted.

There is a certain kind of peace next to the river with Beethoven or Grieg to envelop the self with a warm bath of creativity.

If the chairs are a bit too hard, there is a blanket of grass with a tree for a backrest. Music in such a setting was meant to be enjoyed, not endured.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,530
DEC 6 1961

Cape Symphony Presents Young Pianist—

At 9, Lisa Has Played with Fiedler and the Pops

By JACKIE DARCY

Nine-year-old Lisa Goldman, who will be guest pianist with the Cape Ann Symphony this Thursday, is a fourth grader who loves Beethoven, skiing, Denmark and southern fried chicken.

A DOLL COLLECTOR and an ardent reader, she first played [illegible] her hobbies, and Haydn as just about her favorite composer.

Thursday's concert, highlighted by her playing of the Beethoven concerto, will include Mozart's "Haffner Symphony" No. 34, Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" and selections from "Camelot."

the piano at the age of three. According to her mother, Mrs. Joseph Goldman of Quincy, "Lisa started going to the piano and playing with all 10 fingers. She never banged—and she learned harmony before she learned to read."

She began taking lessons at the age of five. When she was seven, she made her orchestral debut with the Quincy Symphony Orchestra. Soon afterward she performed with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra at the Hatch Memorial Shell in Boston.

Under the guidance of her teacher, Boston's Leo Litwin, she has become one of New England's most sought-after soloists—at the age of nine.

AT THE FREE Christmas concert, to be given at Gloucester High School this Thursday at 8:15, she will play Beethoven's Concerto No. 2. Her family learned how strongly she liked this composer last summer, when the family, including the four children, took a hostel trip through 3,000 miles of Europe.

Lisa, who has more nicknames than fingers, insisted that they visit Bonn, Germany, the home of Beethoven.

Their nine-week tour included a month in Denmark, where a

See AT NINE Page 7

265

58 A THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, APRIL 29, 1962

Boston Pops Concerts Open 77th Season

Conductor Fiedler's 33rd Year

On May Day evening—Tuesday at 8:30—Arthur Fiedler, conductor, will open the 77th season of the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall. It will be Mr. Fiedler's 33rd season as conductor.

There will be concerts throughout May every night except Mondays with both matinee and evening performances on Sundays.

This week's programs will include perennial Pops favorites, hit tunes from "Breakfast at Tiffany's," "State Fair" and "No Strings" and this season's special piece, "Pops Roundup," in which Richard Hayman threads together the theme tunes of eight TV westerns.

Solists this week will be Ralph Votapek in Prokofieff's Third Piano Concerto, Denis Bacon in Schumann's Piano Concerto and Mildred Miller in arias from "Samson and Delilah" and "The Barber of Seville." The calendar:

Tuesday

ARTHUR FIEDLER AT REHEARSAL

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 29, 1962

Arthur Fiedler Begins 33d Year as Pops Conductor

The Spring Concerts Open Tuesday Night At Symphony Hall

Arthur Fiedler will begin his 33d year as conductor of the famed Boston Pops in Symphony Hall, Tuesday night. This will be the 77th season of the unique Spring concert series.

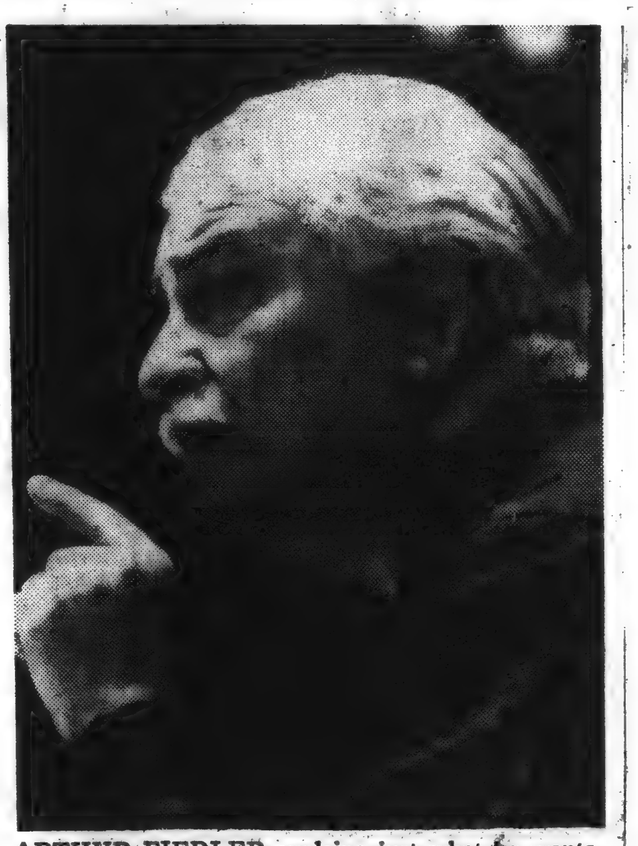
Symphony Hall will be somewhat re-decorated, as usual, for the series—the lower walls of the auditorium washed over in light green, and tables and chairs placed on the floor. There light refreshments and smoking may be enjoyed.

Concerts will be given every night except Mondays. During May there will also be Sunday matinees at 3, in addition to the Sunday evening programs.

Mr. Fiedler's additions to the lighter side of the musical repertory will represent tunes from the film "Breakfast at Tiffany's" and the recent Richard Rodgers musical, "No Strings." Melodies from "State Fair" will be included. The season's especial fun-piece will be "Pops Roundup," in which arranger Richard Hayman has strung together the theme tunes of eight TV horse operas.

Soloists the first week will be Ralph Votapek, in the Third Piano Concerto by Prokofiev; Denise Bacon in the Piano Concerto by Schumann, and mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller in arias from "Samson and Delilah" and "The Barber of Seville."

... will begin



ARTHUR FIEDLER explains just what he wants at a rehearsal of Boston Pops Orchestra. Pops season at Symphony Hall begins Tuesday night.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 1962

Pyrotechnics at the Pops

Prokofiev Shares Bill With 'Twist'

By Harold Rogers

"Big bands are coming back!"

Such was the sly observation of two Harvard boys last night when Arthur Fiedler concluded the opening program of the 77th season of the Boston Pops. Symphony Hall had just been loosened on its foundations by the big-band sound of "Mack the Knife." The joint rocked, twirled, twisted, and jumped.

But the Boston Pops is one big band that never left, and Mr. Fiedler has had the privilege of facing his own torrent of music for the past 32 years. Last night he began his 33d.

For his program Mr. Fiedler swung lightly to the left; his opening nights tend to the conservative, perhaps because the Music Lovers Club is always to be found in the audience. A rundown of the first two sections included music by Wagner, Handel, Vaughan Williams, Rossini, Prokofiev, Bach, and Saint-Saëns, an august company if there ever was one.

In the third and final section Mr. Feidler turned to Richard Rodgers' latest score, "No Strings," for a touch of novelty. He also gave us Mancini's "Moon River" from "Breakfast at Tiffany's," and Kurt Weill's aforementioned "Mack the Knife." This section was further enhanced by a new Mason arrangement called "The Twist," which doubtless caused many listeners to exercise the utmost in control to keep themselves from dancing in the aisles.

The highlight in an evening of pleasantries came when Ralph Votapek—a young, good looking, and studious pianist—came forward to dazzle us in Prokofiev's Concerto No. 3. He has a prodigious technique, and ability to send notes flying with astonishing speed and clarity.

This being essentially a display piece, the composer offers little by which one can judge a soloist's musical soul—except, perhaps, in some of the variations in the second movement. Perhaps Mr. Votapek can dig deeper into the heart of the music when he has such music to dig into. This concerto, however, is mainly contrived to display the coruscations of the piano, and to this end Mr. Votapek rose to magnificent heights.

(Globe Photo by Charles Carey)

OPENING NIGHT—Awaiting cue to begin Pops season are conductor Arthur Fiedler, daughters Johanna (left) and Debbie and son Peter.

Fiedler Begins The Pops With Twist Encore

By CYRUS DURGIN

It didn't come until just before the last number on the program, but there it was: "The Twist, arranged by Mason." And this at the Pops, whose 77th season Arthur Fiedler began at Symphony Hall last night!

Fiedler took it awfully fast—someone in the audience said "You couldn't twist to that!—but it was twist, simple if not pure, and pure if not simple. This reporter did his best to ascertain whether, according to the terms of Fiedler's published agreement, $10,000 had been paid to a charitable institution. No dice, no soap, no information. It seems that Fiedler did it free! Well, anyway, The Twist has made The Pops.

The evening began differently, like a symphony concert ,only louder—very, very much louder. First, the "Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg" from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser," and then Sir Hamilton Harty's Suite from Handel's "Water Music," Vaughan Williams' Fantasit on "Greensleeves," and Rossini's Overture to—well, I was going to say "Heigho Silver," but the opera is "William Tell." For his beautiful playing of the cello solo in this number, Martin Hoherman was bidden by conductor Fiedler to rise and take a merited bow.

Soloist of the evening was a very talented youhg pianist, with a large technic, who performed a notable Piano Concerto, the C Major, No. 3, by Sergei Krokofieff. This was Ralph Votapek, whom Arthur Fiedler first heard in Milwaukee, I soon.

Like the well-known beer that made Milwaukee famous, Votapek may rove the musician who brought fame to that city. His performance of a difficult and demanding work was admirable, and added to the stature he already has gained from earlier appearances at the Pops.

With a potpourri from Dick Rodgers' new musical, "No Strings," the Bacchanale from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah," "Moon River" from the film "Breakfast at Tiffany's," and the ever-popular "Mack the Knife" from "The Three-Penny Opera," the stated program was completed.

Now that The Pops have begun, Spring is here. Pay no attention to the weather! Perhaps you are freezing, but Spring is here, just the same!

POPS

Continued from the First Page

Renewing an acquaintance that began when the Fiedlers were in Uaris, M. and Mms. Jean Serville, here on their way to Washington, where they'll visit their son at Georgetown University, were at the Ritz for dinner before the opening.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, chairman of the Grenfell benefit night, had a table of guests, and she and Mr. Kennard had given a dinner party for them before the opening.

The Fiedler family, after a visit backstage to wish daddy luck, had two tables of guests for the Pops opening. Johanna and Deborah shared one table and their attractive mother and young Peter Fiedler, the other.

Others in the big audience that often interrupted with enthusiatic applause were Mr. and Mrs. Sam H. Wolcott and a group of Milton friends, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Donovan and North Shore friends, Gertrude Peabody, Mrs. Lloyd Allen and her daughter Melody and guests Mr. and Mrs. Paul Tarbell, the Winthrop Wallaces, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Thompson and many more.

Others of the Grenfell committee, carrying on a tradition that began with a visit by Sir Wilfred Grenfell in the interests of his life-saving Labrador mission, include Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. Joel Goldthwait, Mrs. Wyman Shaw, Mrs. Harold Keller, Mrs. Mortimer Pratt Jr., Ann Badger, Mr. and Mrs. Thorwald Ross, Mrs. William Bullard, Mrs. Edwin Maynard 3d, Mrs. Graham Ganger, Mrs. Robert Stone, and Mrs. Ludlow Griscom.

For the white-coated Symphony men on stage, who this week completed Symphony's 81st season since Henry Lee Higginson gave up his concert ambitions to found the world's finest symphony orchestra, Pops is th entr'acte between the Winter series and the Esplanade.

Then they go to the Berkshires for the wonderful green-lawned, tall-pined Tanglewood festival, founded by Boston's late, great Serge Koussevitzky.

Before they go, they will have played a 61-day season shared by 104 organizations, from the American Physical-Therapy Assn. to the Weymouth Teachers, including alumni from about every major college in the East.

Some Buy Out House

Harvard's 25 and 35th reunion classes will have separate nights at Pops, and so will the Harvard Business School. Many of the groups have taken the whole house (N.E. Conservatory of Music, M.I.T. Baton Society, John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.). Others will take all the 1186 floor seats, some only a few hundred balcony seats, but to each this special occasion will mean not only personal enjoyment, but also a sizable sum raised for scholarships, hospital equipment, music fellowships and civic projects.

Unique in the United States since it gas-lighted and gala beginnings in the old Boston Musci Hall in 1885, the Boston Pops more or less followed the pattern of the oLndon Promenade Concerts.

In Boston, however, the punctuating pop of the champagne cork has always been accompanied by the sedate tinkle of the Boston institu-claret lemonade.

Beer is anotner favorite, and most of the tables average at least one reorder on whatever they're having during the evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,000

APR 5 1962

"The World of Arthur Fiedler," the seventh in a series of monthly concerts by the famed conductor and 55 members of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will be televised by WBZ-TV Monday, April 16 from 8:30 to 9 p.m.

Radio and T.V.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 26 1962

Radio-TV Wrap-Up

Report on Resumption Of Nuclear Testing

By ELIZABETH L. SULLIVAN

CBS' "Eyewitness Report" tomorrow night will cover the resumption of nuclear testing by the United States. Charles Collingwood will be anchorman.

SULLIVAN

There will be interviews with Arthur Dean, our representative at the Geneva Disarmament talks, and his predecessor, James J. Wadsworth, now director of the Peace Research Institute in Washington, is opposed to the new tests. Mr. Collingwood will interview Mr. Wadsworth in Washington; Daniel Schorr will query Mr. Dean in Geneva, and again in Washington, Mr. Collingwood will interview Edward R. Murrow, director of the U.S. Information Agency.

Britain's reaction to the tests will be given by author J. B. Priestley, opposed; and Lord Boothby, in favor.

Marvin Kalb, CBS newsman in Moscow, will give the Soviets' reaction. Rep. Chet Holified (D-Calif.) chairman of the Joint Committee on atomic energy, will give his views on the resumption of the tests.

Another topic in the news will be explained for Ch. 2 viewers in a series of six hour-long programs, twice a week for three weeks—Tuesdays and Thursdays at 8 p.m. starting May 1.

In terms that the layman can understand, the pros and cons of the Common Market will be explained in the upcoming series, entitled "Background to ... Trade Policy."

"The most ambitious, clear and accurate broadcast coverage of the subject available to date," is the way Ch. 2 describes the lectures.

Educators from M.I.T., Harvard, Northeastern Univ. and Amherst will be the speakers.

★ ★ ★

The Manshoot: All radio and TV networks will give live coverage of the Mercury-Atlas 7 orbital man-shot at Cape Canaveral next month. The three-orbit flight of Navy Lt Cmdr M. Scott Carpenter is expected to take place in mid-May.

★ ★ ★

"Pleased? Delighted!!" Two NBC colorcasts will be devoted to the music of Irving Berlin—one on May 3; the second, May 10. Mitch Miller's Sing Along cast will do the honors. Berlin suggested the program but Mitch thought the subject worthy of a double salute.

Berlin is delighted.

WCRB Notes: Library problems will be examined in a special series of "Opinion" programs beginning this Sunday at 6:50 p.m. Gov. Volpe and Francis X. Maloney, assistant director of the Boston Public Library, will comment.

Waltham Public Library's new stereo listening center will be christened by WCRB with a special concert Tuesday, May 1, beginning at 8:05 p.m. The special stereo broadcast will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under guest conductor Carlo Maria Giulini. Robert Dillon Jr., president of the Mass. Junior Chamber of Commerce, will speak during the broadcast. The library's stereo center is the result of a project of the Waltham J.C.

On May 5, at 8:25 p.m. from Symphony Hall, live stereo broadcasts of the Boston Pops Orchestra will get under way with Arthur Fiedler conducting. Dave MacNeill will be the host for the programs.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
MAR 13 1962

WAMC to Air Symphony From Boston

ALBANY—Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc) Friday, at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

THE CONCERT will be broadcast "live" from Symphony hall, Boston, with a tape-recorded rebroadcast scheduled Monday, March 19, at 8:30 p.m. over WAMC.

The program for the concert consists of Anto Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" Suite by Albeniz, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

This will mark the first occasion that M. de Carvalho has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949. A native of Brazil, he works closely with the orchestra each summer at its Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, serving as head of the orchestra and conducting department at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH RETURNS from vacation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert which WAMC will carry Friday, March 23, at 2:10 p.m. Pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be guest soloist at this concert, which is comprised of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2, the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony 1962, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2.

WAMC is a non-commercial, educational station that is owned and operated by Albany Medical College. The station is a charter member of the Educational Radio Network.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
MAR 25 1962

Good Music

The winners of the 1961-1962 Metropolitan Opera auditions will perform in a special Editor's Choice program, this afternoon at 3:30 on WGBH-TV. In addition to the five finalists, Met Opera stars Rosalind Elias and Heidi Krall, both former audition winners, will also perform on the program. Kurt Adler, Metropolitan Opera conductor and chorus master, will conduct the ABC Symphony Orchestra.

Channel 2 will present a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Sanders Theater, Harvard, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. French pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer is guest soloist. Under the direction of Charles Munch she will perform Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Munch will also conduct the orchestra in Fine's Pieces for Orchestra and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Thursday, March 22, 1962

Boston Symphony, 7 Arts, Produce 13 TV Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in association with Seven Arts Associated Corp. of New York has produced 13 one-hour television concerts which will be released for national television distribution at the National Association of Broadcasters convention to be held in Chicago the first week in April.

The concerts in this special series will be conducted by Charles Munch and will include the works of Beethoven, Haydn, Schumann, Piston, Mozart, Bach, Copland, Handel, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Brahms and others.

Charles Munch, who conducts the concerts in the new television series, has been the orchestra's music director since 1949, when he succeeded the late Serge Koussevitzky.

The series of Boston Symphony orchestra concerts is Seven Arts Associated Corp. first property other than feature films and cartoons.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Full length concerts in stereo from Boston's Symphony Hall conducted by Charles Munch
Wednesdays, 8:00 to 10:00 p.m.
presented by* Japan Air Lines

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
..., January 10, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
FEB 25 1962

Good Music

The NBC Opera Company will present a new production of Montemezzi's opera, The Love of Three Kings, in English, to be broadcast in color on Channel 4, this afternoon at 3. Soprano Phyllis Curtin will sing the role of Fiora, basso Giorgio Tozzi as Archibaldo, baritone Richard Torigi as Manfredo and Frank Poretta, tenor, sings the role of Avito. Alfred Wallenstein conducts.

Cellist Andre Navarra will be guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2, from Sanders Theater, Harvard University. To open the concert Charles Munch has chosen Sir Hamilton Harty's arrangement of the Water Music Suite by Handel. This will be followed by Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and then Mr. Navarra comes on stage for the Dvorak Cello Concerto.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727
JAN 17 1962

B. Symphony Gets the Air

Hanover, N. H. — Dartmouth College's WDCR is broadcasting the weekly concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Winter and Spring, each Thursday evening. The programs are being made available on tape by the Boston Symphony and cost of the broadcasts is being paid by a private fund of Dartmouth College.

WAMC Having Erica Morini With Concert

Violinist Erica Morini will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc.) Friday at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH will be conductor for the concert, which will be broadcast direct from Symphony hall, Boston.

Miss Morini will be soloist in the Violin Concerto in D Major, Opus 61, by Beethoven. Also on the program are Dubussy's Suite Symphonique, "Primptemps," and the Symphony No. 7 by contemporary American composer Walter Piston.

WAMC is a non-commercial, educational station owned and operated by Albany Medical College. The station's 10,000-watt transmitting facilities are atop Mount Greylock, in the northwest corner of Massachusetts.

Radio and T.V.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660
APR 26 1962

Radio-TV Wrap-Up

Report on Resumption Of Nuclear Testing

By ELIZABETH L. SULLIVAN

CBS' "Eyewitness Report" tomorrow night will cover the resumption of nuclear testing by the United States. Charles Collingwood will be anchorman.

SULLIVAN

There will be interviews with Arthur Dean, our representative at the Geneva Disarmament talks, and his predecessor, James J. Wadsworth, now director of the Peace Research Institute in Washington, is opposed to the new tests. Mr. Collingwood will interview Mr. Wadsworth in Washington; Daniel Schorr will query Mr. Dean in Geneva, and again in Washington, Mr. Collingwood will interview Edward R. Murrow, director of the U.S. Information Agency.

Britain's reaction to the tests will be given by author J. B. Priestley, opposed; and Lord Boothby, in favor.

Marvin Kalb, CBS newsman in Moscow, will give the Soviets' reaction. Rep. Chet Holified (D-Calif.) chairman of the Joint Committee on atomic energy, will give his views on the resumption of the tests.

Another topic in the news will be explained for Ch. 2 viewers in a series of six hour-long programs, twice a week for three weeks—Tuesdays and Thursdays at 8 p.m. starting May 1.

In terms that the layman can understand, the pros and cons of the Common Market will be explained in the upcoming series, entitled "Background to Trade Policy."

"The most ambitious, clear and accurate broadcast coverage of the subject available to date," is the way Ch. 2 describes the lectures.

Educators from M.I.T., Harvard, Northeastern Univ. and Amherst will be the speakers.

★ ★ ★

The Manshoot: All radio and TV networks will give live coverage of the Mercury-Atlas 7 orbital man-shot at Cape Canaveral next month. The three-orbit flight of Navy Lt Cmdr M. Scott Carpenter is expected to take place in mid-May.

★ ★ ★

"Pleased? Delighted!!" Two NBC colorcasts will be devoted to the music of Irving Berlin—one on May 3; the second, May 10. Mitch Miller's Sing Along cast will do the honors. Berlin suggested the program but Mitch thought the subject worthy of a double salute.

Berlin is delighted.

WCRB Notes: Library problems will be examined in a special series of "Opinion" programs beginning this Sunday at 6:50 p.m. Gov. Volpe and Francis X. Maloney, assistant director of the Boston Public Library, will comment.

Waltham Public Library's new stereo listening center will be christened by WCRB with a special concert Tuesday, May 1, beginning at 8:05 p.m. The special stereo broadcast will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under guest conductor Carlo Maria Giulini. Robert Dillon Jr., president of the Mass. Junior Chamber of Commerce, will speak during the broadcast. The library's stereo center is the result of a project of the Waltham J.C.

On May 5, at 8:25 p.m. from Symphony Hall, live stereo broadcasts of the Boston Pops Orchestra will get under way with Arthur Fiedler conducting. Dave MacNeill will be the host for the programs.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
MAR 13 1962

WAMC to Air Symphony From Boston

ALBANY—Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc) Friday, at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

THE CONCERT will be broadcast "live" from Symphony hall, Boston, with a tape-recorded rebroadcast scheduled Monday, March 19, at 8:30 p.m. over WAMC.

The program for the concert consists of Anto Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" Suite by Albeniz, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

This will mark the first occasion that M. de Carvalho has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949. A native of Brazil, he works closely with the orchestra each summer at its Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, serving as head of the orchestra and conducting department at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH RETURNS from vacation to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert which WAMC will carry Friday, March 23, at 2:10 p.m. Pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be guest soloist at this concert, which is comprised of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2, the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony 1962, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2.

WAMC is a non-commercial educational station that is owned and operated by Albany Medical College. The station is a charter member of the Educational Radio Network.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
MAR 25 1962

Good Music

The winners of the 1961-1962 Metropolitan Opera auditions will perform in a special Editor's Choice program, this afternoon at 3:30 on WGBH-TV. In addition to the five finalists, Met Opera stars Rosalind Elias and Heidi Krall, both former audition winners, will also perform on the program. Kurt Adler, Metropolitan Opera conductor and chorus master, will conduct the ABC Symphony Orchestra.

Channel 2 will present a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Sanders Theater, Harvard, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. French pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer is guest soloist. Under the direction of Charles Munch she will perform Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Munch will also conduct the orchestra in Fine's Pieces for Orchestra and Strauss's Death and Transfiguration.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Thursday, March 22, 1962

047

Boston Symphony, 7 Arts, Produce 13 TV Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in association with Seven Arts Associated Corp. of New York has produced 13 one-hour television concerts which will be released for national television distribution at the National Association of Broadcasters convention to be held in Chicago the first week in April.

The concerts in this special series will be conducted by Charles Munch and will include the works of Beethoven, Haydn, Schumann, Piston, Mozart, Bach, Copland, Handel, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Brahms and others.

Charles Munch, who conducts the concerts in the new television series, has been the orchestra's music director since 1949, when he succeeded the late Serge Koussevitsky.

The series of Boston Symphony orchestra concerts is Seven Arts Associated Corp. first property other than feature films and cartoons.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Full length concerts in stereo from Boston's Symphony Hall conducted by Charles Munch
Wednesdays, 8:00 to 10:00 p.m.
presented by Japan Air Lines

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,353
FEB 25 1962

Good Music

The NBC Opera Company will present a new production of Montemezzi's opera, The Love of Three Kings, in English, to be broadcast in color on Channel 4, this afternoon at 3. Soprano Phyllis Curtin will sing the role of Fiora, basso Giorgio Tozzi as Archibaldo, baritone Richard Torigi as Manfredo and Frank Poretta, tenor, sings the role of Avito. Alfred Wallenstein conducts.

Cellist Andre Navarra will be guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2, from Sanders Theater, Harvard University. To open the concert Charles Munch has chosen Sir Hamilton Harty's arrangement of the Water Music Suite by Handel. This will be followed by Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and then Mr. Navarra comes on stage for the Dvorak Cello Concerto.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727
JAN 17 1962

B. Symphony Gets the Air

Hanover, N. H. — Dartmouth College's WDCR is broadcasting the weekly concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Winter and Spring, each Thursday evening. The programs are being made available on tape by the Boston Symphony and cost of the broadcasts is being paid by a private fund of Dartmouth College.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Wednesday, January 10, 1962

047

WAMC Having Erica Morini With Concert

Violinist Erica Morini will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc.) Friday at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH will be conductor for the concert, which will be broadcast direct from Symphony hall, Boston.

Miss Morini will be soloist in the Violin Concerto in D Major Opus 61, by Beethoven. Also on the program are Dubussy's Suite Symphonique, "Primptemps," and the Symphony No. 7 by contemporary American composer Walter Piston.

WAMC is a non-commercial educational station owned and operated by Albany Medical College. The station's 10,000-watt transmitting facilities are atop Mount Greylock, in the northwest corner of Massachusetts.

28

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4206
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
MAR 9 1962

"The 21-Inch Classroom"

May Ask Govt. OK Educational TV Extension To Western Mass.

Favored At Educators' Meeting

By IRENE R. MICHALEK

Leaders in the arts and sciences such as Margaret Mead, the anthropologist, and Charles Munch, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, may come into the classrooms of Western Massachusetts public and private schools next September.

Their medium would be "The 21 Inch Classroom," the educational TV program supported by 165 school systems in Eastern Massachusetts.

Thirty - seven representatives of public schools and eight from private schools from an area as far north as Shelburne Falls and as far south as Suffield, Conn., discussed the possibility Thursday afternoon.

They gathered at the South Hadley Intermediate School for an informal luncheon meeting of the Hampden - Hampshire County school superintendents group.

Most expressed a hope that their school systems would approve bringing educational TV into the classroom. Only one definite "no" was written in a poll.

May See FCC Approval

Alan R. Stephenson, director of "The 21 Inch Classroom" broadcast over WGBH-TV, Channel 2, in Boston, said that he would bring the written opinions of the school superintendents before a meeting of the Massachusetts Executive Committee for Educational TV this afternoon in Boston and they would decide whether to apply to the FCC for extension of the station here.

Such approval from FCC would take about 60 days and the committee would require firm commitment that at least 20,000 students out of the 100,000 in Western Massachusetts would take part. The committee would want the commitment for its April 6 meeting.

The cost to the school systems will be 25 cents for each pupil per year regardless of how many enroll. That is the charge made in the Eastern Massachusetts schools, Stephenson said, adding that the extension of the TV signal from WGBH would be made by setting up one or two translators in this area.

Each 100 watt translator costs about $20,000 to install and $2500 a year to operate. It gives excellent reception in a 25 mile area and possibly good reception in a 30 mile area.

WMB Council Offers Aid

Horace W. Hewlett, secretary of Amherst College, and president of the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, said his council which has facilities for broadcasting at its educational radio station WFCR-FM would make its transmitter and tower building available for installation of the translator.

The council is operated by Mt. Holyoke, Smith, and Amherst Colleges, and the Univ. of Massachusetts.

Stephenson said that if a translator is set up on Mount Lincoln, educational TV coverage would be brought to the Amherst-Northampton area. Another translator could be set up at three possible points to extend coverage to this area. They are Mount Holyoke, Mount Tom, Provin Mountain.

South Hadley, Holyoke, Springfield, Longmeadow, Ludlow and perhaps Palmer and Williamsburg would be covered by the latter translator.

Stevenson said that other translators could be added later to extend coverage to North Adams.

Please Turn To Page 12

WILL STUDENTS WATCH TELEVISION IN SCHOOL? Helping to bring a "yes" answer to this question for students in Western Massachusetts was Thursday's discussion at the Hampden-Hampshire County school superintendents group. Left to right: Walter J. Vorse, superintendent of the South Hadley public schools; Horace W. Hewlett, president of the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, secretary of Amherst College, and newly appointed member of the Massachusetts Executive Committee for Educational TV; Prof. John C. Osgood of Mount Holyoke College, a speaker; Alan R. Stephenson, director of "The 21 Inch Classroom," and William Barry, superintendent of the Northampton public schools and chairman of the superintendents' group.

The cost of setting up these translators will be taken from a contingency fund set up by "The 21 Inch Classroom" for this purpose since it went into operation in March 1958, he said.

Stephenson emphasized that the philosophy of the project is one of supplement and enrichment.

"It is planned as an adjunct to what the schools are doing, not repetition of what teachers do," he said.

By next fall, he expects 25 different series of programs to be on the air covering grades one through 12. Most elementary school programs last 15 minutes, secondary school programs from 20 to 30 minutes, and special progrmas, such as four performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one hour.

Some students view the programs once weekly and others twice a month. In "Parlons Francais," a three year sequence in conversational French from grades five through six, the students meet twice a week for 15 minutes.

The TV classrooms which begin at 10 a.m. and end at 4 p.m. boast the best educators from the Boston area as teachers.

A syllabus is provided to the classroom teacher so that she can conduct the class, answer questions, supervise tests, and asign collateral reading in the individual classroom.

One hundred and sixty-five school systems in Eastern Massachusetts subscribe to the educational series which may also be viewed at home over ordinary TV sets.

Chicopee School Head See Need

Both Supt. John L. Fitzpatrick of the Chicopee public schools and Frederick Robinson, director of the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield, feel strongly the need for the extension of educational TV to this area.

Also on Thursday's speaking program was Prof. John C. Osgood, assistant professor of psychology and education at Mount Holyoke College who discussed aspects of cooperation between area colleges and the public schools in their communities.

The speakers were introduced by William Barry, superintendent of the Northampton public schools and chairman of the superintendents' group, and Walter J. Vorse host to the group.

Representing private schools at the meeting were:

George A. Flagg, assistant headmaster of the MacDuffie School for Girls; Mrs. John Stelika of the Mary A. Burnham School; Constant Watrons of the Eaglebrook School; A. W. Craig of Mount Hermon School; Howard Jones, president of the Northfield Schools; S. W. Randolph of Williaham Academy; E.E. Bradford, Jr., of Williston Academy; and Edward Emerson of the Stoneleigh-Prospect School.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 836,760 S. 1,195,553
MON MAR 19 1962

I See by TV

. . . JOHN DAVID GRIFFIN

Ready TV Concert Specials

SEVEN ARTS ASSOCIATED, the television distributor of Warner Bros. post-1950 motion pictures, as well as other feature films, in association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have readied 13 one-hour concert specials for TV release. This will be the first property, other than feature films and cartoons, to be distributed by Seven Arts and the series also marks the 81-year-old Symphony's first commercial affiliation other than its exclusive recording contract with RCA Victor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAR 4 1962

Koussevitzky's Voice Heard in BSO Report

WCOB listeners will hear a repeat of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of Mar. 31, 1945, next Thursday beginning at 9 a.m. The voices of Serge Koussevitzky, late conductor of the orchestra, will be heard discussing the role of music in the strife-torn world of the mid-'40s.

Among the numbers in the concert are Rachmaninoff's "The Isle of the Dead"; "The Enchanted Lake" by Liadov and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Russian Easter" overture.

These Thursday night concerts are drawn from a collection of broadcast recordings in the Library of Congress.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, December 29, 1961

Munch Leads Symphony on WAMC Today

Charles Munch, fresh from a mid-winter holiday in Paris, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc) today at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

THE CONCERT, carried direct from Symphony Hall in Boston, will include Dr. Munch's arrangement of Bach's Choral Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," the Bach Suite No. 3 for Orchestra, Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, and the Mozart Piano Concerto in B-flat, K. 482. Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the piano concerto.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

MAR 22 1962

BSO Concerts Are Available On TV Films

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra in association with Seven Arts Associated Corp. of New York has produced 13 one-hour television concerts which will be released for national distribution at the National Association of Broadcasters convention to be held in Chicago the first week in April.

The concerts in this special series will be conducted by Charles Munch, and will include the works of Beethoven, Haydn, Schumann, Piston, Mozart, Bach, Copland, Handel, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Brahms and others.

Seven Arts Associated Corp. is television distributor of the Warner Bros. post-1950 films and cartoons.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,493

MAR 27 1962

Petite Pianist To Appear

A petite blonde pianist from France will be on stage when Channel 2 and WGBH-FM will present a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Sanders Theatre tonight at 8:30 p.m.

The pianist is Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, an artist whose prodigious technique and sensitive interpretive ability have won bravos from audiences throughout the world.

Under the direction of Charles Munch she will perform Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto.

To open the concert Munch has chosen "Pieces for Orchestra" by Irving Fine. This will be followed by the Prokofiev Concerto, and then after intermission, Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.. NOT AVAIL.

JAN 1962

Television Service (ITV). The Agency's Television Service has put out several taped and filmed programs on music, ranging from American folk music to performances by our major orchestras. Examples are a film on American folk music from various regions; With Music Ring, a program by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir of Salt Lake City; and another called Symphony Road, covering the American tours of the Boston Symphony.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
... February 28, 1962

WAMC Plans Live Broadcast

A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Carlo Maria Giulini as guest conductor, will be broadcast live at 2:10 p.m. Friday by WAMC, 90.3 mc, the educational FM radio station at Albany Medical College. A tape recording will be repeated at 8:30 p.m. Monday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Minute Man
LEXINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,979

MAR 15 1962

Boston Symphony on WXHR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Muench is featured on SERENTA NOTTURNA was 10:00 March 16 on WXHR. The program will include Barber's Adagio for Strings, Op. 11; Tchaikowsky's Serenade in C, Op. 48; and Elgar's Serenade, Op. 20.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

FEB 22 1962

BSO On TV

A full length Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be simulcast on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM next Tuesday, Feb. 27 at 8:30 p.m., from Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Program will include Handel's "Walter Music Suite," Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the Dvorak Cello Concerto, with Andre Navarra as soloist. Charles Munch will conduct.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 11,677

BURRELLE'S PAGE ONE CLIPPINGS

MAR 19 1962

Boston Ork Signed For Hour Specials

Seven Arts Associated this morning proclaimed its entry into TV program production and syndication with 13 one-hour concert specials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its inspired hallmark of distinction.

This breakthrough into a commercial arrangement by the 81 year old Hub City Orchestra was revealed in a joint statement by SAA vice presidents Robert Rich, General sales manager and Donald Klauber, national sales manager.

First industry glimpse of the Boston Symphony series for TV is slated for next week's opening of the NAB convention. Meanwhile, Seven Arts' production crew has a healthy shooting schedule ahead of capturing the music and infinite variety of picture moods of the Orchestra in Boston's Symphony Hall under the batons of such distinguished conductors as Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf and Richard Burgin directing both classic and contemporary works.

Two unusual and contrasting aspects of the orchestral deal are: for Seven Arts, a switch from its continuing and successful distribution of Warner Brothers Post-50's and other feature films and 191 "Looney Tunes" cartoons; for the Boston Symphony, its full-fledged debut in TV and only commerical tie-in, other than an exclusive recording pact with RCA Victor.

Adding a refreshing extra dimension to long haired music over the video circuits, is the orchestra's world renown. It plays to over 700,000 in the United States annually and enjoys extraordinarily large turnouts abroad. Even the Kermlin's Pravda could not resist: "The tone quality of the whole orchestra is as splendid as that of the individual soloists."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAR 4 1962

Koussevitzky's Voice Heard in BSO Report

WCOB listeners will hear a repeat of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of Mar. 31, 1945, next Thursday beginning at 9 a.m. The voices of Serge Koussevitzky, late conductor of the orchestra, will be heard discussing the role of music in the strife-torn world of the mid-'40s.

Among the numbers in the concert are Rachmaninoff's "The Isle of the Dead"; "The Enchanted Lake" by Liadov and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Russian Easter" overture.

These Thursday night concerts are drawn from a collection of broadcast recordings in the Library of Congress.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, December 29, 1961

Munch Leads Symphony on WAMC Today

Charles Munch, fresh from a mid-winter holiday in Paris, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc) today at 2:10 p.m.

* * *

THE CONCERT, carried direct from Symphony Hall in Boston, will include Dr. Munch's arrangement of Bach's Choral Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," the Bach Suite No. 3 for Orchestra, Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, and the Mozart Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482. Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the piano concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

MAR 22 1962

BSO Concerts Are Available On TV Films

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra in association with Seven Arts Associated Corp. of New York has produced 13 one-hour television concerts which will be released for national distribution at the National Association of Broadcasters convention to be held in Chicago the first week in April.

The concerts in this special series will be conducted by Charles Munch, and will include the works of Beethoven, Haydn, Schumann, Piston, Mozart, Bach, Copland, Handel, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Brahms and others.

Seven Arts Associated Corp. is television distributor of the Warner Bros. post-1950 films and cartoons.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,493

MAR 27 1962

Petite Pianist To Appear

A petite blonde pianist from France will be on stage when Channel 2 and WGBH-FM will present a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Sanders Theatre tonight at 8:30 p.m.

The pianist is Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, an artist whose prodigious technique and sensitive interpretive ability have won bravos from audiences throughout the world.

Under the direction of Charles Munch she will perform Prokofiev's Second Piano Concerto.

To open the concert Munch has chosen "Pieces for Orchestra" by Irving Fine. This will be followed by the Prokofiev Concerto, and then after intermission, Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration."

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

JAN 1962

Television Service (ITV). The Agency's Television Service has put out several taped and filmed programs on music, ranging from American folk music to performances by our major orchestras. Examples are a film on American folk music from various regions; With Music Ring, a program by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir of Salt Lake City; and another called Symphony Road, covering the American tours of the Boston Symphony.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Wednesday, February 28, 1962

WAMC Plans Live Broadcast

A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Carlo Maria Giulini as guest conductor, will be broadcast live at 2:10 p.m. Friday by WAMC, 90.3 mc, the educational FM radio station at Albany Medical College. A tape recording will be repeated at 8:30 p.m. Monday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Minute Man
LEXINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,979

MAR 15 1962

Boston Symphony on WXHR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Muench is featured on SERENTA NOTTURNA was 10:00 March 16 on WXHR. The program will include Barber's Adagio for Strings, Op. 11; Tchaikowsky's Serenade in C, Op. 48; and Elgar's Serenade, Op. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

FEB 22 1962

BSO On TV

A full length Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be simulcast on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM next Tuesday, Feb. 27 at 8:30 p.m., from Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Program will include Handel's "Walter Music Suite," Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the Dvorak Cello Concerto, with Andre Navarra as soloist. Charles Munch will conduct.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 11,677

BURRELLE'S PAGE ONE CLIPPING SERVICE

MAR 19 1962

Boston Ork Signed For Hour Specials

Seven Arts Associated this morning proclaimed its entry into TV program production and syndication with 13 one-hour concert specials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its inspired hallmark of distinction.

This breakthrough into a commercial arrangement by the 81 year old Hub City Orchestra was revealed in a joint statement by SAA vice presidents Robert Rich, General sales manager and Donald Klauber, national sales manager.

First industry glimpse of the Boston Symphony series for TV is slated for next week's opening of the NAB convention. Meanwhile, Seven Arts' production crew has a healthy shooting schedule ahead of capturing the music and infinite variety of picture moods of the Orchestra in Boston's Symphony Hall under the batons of such distinguished conductors as Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, Erich Leinsdorf and Richard Burgin directing both classic and contemporary works.

Two unusual and contrasting aspects of the orchestral deal are: for Seven Arts, a switch from its continuing and successful distribution of Warner Brothers Post-50's and other feature films and 191 "Looney Tunes" cartoons; for the Boston Symphony, its full-fledged debut in TV and only commerical tie-in, other than an exclusive recording pact with RCA Victor.

Adding a refreshing extra dimension to long haired music over the video circuits, is the orchestra's world renown. It plays to over 700,000 in the United States annually and enjoys extraordinarily large turnouts abroad. Even the Kermlin's Pravda could not resist: "The tone quality of the whole orchestra is as splendid as that of the individual soloists."

270

Recordings

HI FI/STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
JUL 1961

Ⓢ Ⓜ MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3, in A Minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo from Octet in E-flat, Op. 20. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2520 $5.98, LM 2520 $4.98.

Interest: Felix in the Highlands
Performance: Big-scaled
Recording: Big hall sonics
Stereo Quality: Adequate

Because it juxtaposes so many elements of Mendelssohn's style, the "Scotch" Symphony has always been a tough nut for conductors to crack. In general, interpretations of the "Scotch" Symphony tend to fall into one of two categories—the atmospheric-transparent or the romantic-dramatic. Munch's is quite definitely of the latter persuasion. This gives us an impressive introduction and a splendidly turbulent storm episode in the first movement. The heady scherzo, however, has none of the electrifying excitement and nervous tension that it should have to make its full effect. The somber slow movement achieves impressive drama, but the finale seems a bit heavy-handed, and the processional epilogue (always a problem to interpret) sounds more pompous than solemnly exultant.

Some of the blame must be laid to the recording, which seems unduly affected by the highly colored reverberation characteristic of Symphony Hall. This is especially noticeable whenever the timpani are called upon to reinforce the bass line in the climaxes of the first and last movements.

As far as alternate stereo recordings of the "Scotch" Symphony go, there seems little doubt that Peter Maag's, with the London Symphony (London CS 6191), is the best available choice. The mono disc by the late Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic (Columbia ML 4864) is also very exciting. D. H.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
OCT 8 1961

Currently Classical

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Bellini's "Norma" will be the opening night attraction of the Connecticut Opera this season. And Angel has just provided an exciting preview of this durable score in a new recording of the opera with the volatile Maria Callas.

Not to be confused with the earlier version by this soprano on the same label, this is a brand new recording with Franco Corelli, Christa Ludwig, and Nicola Zaccaria in the principal roles. In the pit is the always dependable Tullio Serafin, conducting the La Scalla chorus and orchestra.

Callas remains a commanding interpreter of the Druid priestess, infusing the part with the passionate dignity that so aptly befits her character. And vocally, it is only in the topmost range that the singer is disappointing (in the high tessitura of the Casta Diva, for instance, she produces some downright ugly sound). Otherwise, Callas is wholly satisfying.

As Pollione, Corelli is responsible for some exciting moments, despite occasional vocal crudities. And I found Zaccaria much more gratifying than Rossi-Lemeni on the earlier version, mainly because he sings more securely on pitch. The Adalgisa of Miss Ludwig is excellent in every respect.

Serafin, who is the most authoritative conductor in the Italian repertory since the demise of Toscanini, is an ideal choice for this opera, for he knows how to draw the utmost from this continually exciting score. The Angel sound is excellent.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (Complete), with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch (Victor). There will undoubtedly be many who will prefer a less massive sound in Ravel than the Boston orchestra produces but there are certain advantages in having Munch, an acknowledged interpreter of the French repertory, in this music. In addition, this version uses a full chorus (in this case, the New England Conservatory Chorus under Lorna Cooke de Varon) to make it a complete version in every sense of the term. For those who like a more coloristic approach to Ravel I would recommend the Angel recording of the Daphnis Suite No. 2 with the late Guido Cantelli, which remains this conductor's finest phonographic achievement and a reminder of the great loss to music when this young conductor died so prematurely in 1956.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 16,710
SEP 15 1961

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 9 841
DEC 1961

MANOS, CONSTANTINE. Portrait of a symphony; texts & phot; foreword by Aaron Copland. $10 Basic bks.
785 Boston Symphony Orchestra. Musicians —Portraits
60-13144

"Photographs of scenes associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Includes group shots of the orchestra, individual shots of its musicians in action, and pictures of its conductor, Charles Munch, various guest conductors, and the audience." Publishers' Weekly

"With both text and 131 photographs by Mr. Manos, formerly the official photographer of the Boston Symphony, this stunning volume will rate as one of the handsomest of 1960. . . . The whole is intentionally impressionistic with no names or dates excepting for the identification of visiting conductors and soloists. There is a minimum of text, in fact. . . . For orchestra and photography enthusiasts." C. K. Miller
+ Library J 86:577 F 1 '61 150w

"It is the virtue of Portrait of a Symphony . . . that it gives us the symphony orchestra (in this case the famous Boston) as a many-sided organism. . . . There are set shots, of course. . . . But there is also the 'cellist adjusting the bridge on his 'cello, the empty cases waiting for their instruments . . . and the audience, both silent and aroused, reflecting in their faces what the music means to them." Thomas Lask
+ N Y Times Bk R p7 N 13 '60 230w

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

Music on Records

By Sherman Gottesman

The writer had the opportunity of hearing Poulenc's "Gloria" at Tanglewood, conducted by Charles Munch, and when he got home [illegible] was the Angel recording of it waiting for him. What a wonderful opportunity for a comparison of two performances! Amazingly enough, this writer found the recorded performance more satisfactory. It was more serious, the tempi were slower, and had much more depth than the live version heard in the Berkshires. (Angel 35953-stereo)

Recorded MUSIC

Edited by PHILIP L. MILLER

Guest Reviewer: James B. Coover
Music Librarian, Vassar College
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

All records reviewed are 12", 33.3 rpm, MONOphonic ($4.98) or STereophonic ($5.98), except as indicated: CAS—Camden (ST, $2.98); DGM—Deutsche Grammophon (MONO, $5.98); LSC—Victor (ST); MG—Mercury (MONO); MS—Columbia (ST); S—Angel (ST); SG—Capitol (ST); SR—Mercury (ST); West ST—Westminster (ST) ($4.98); XWN—Westminster (MONO).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—OUTSTANDING

HAYDN: Sym. no. 94, G maj., "Surprise." Sym no. 103, E-flat maj., "Drum Roll." Philharmonia Hungarica, Antal Dorati, cond. MG 50208 (MONO)

Muscular performances which will please those who like their Haydn full-blooded, rhythmic, and lively, but which may be too robust to suit those preferring Haydn cool and prim. Regardless of preference, these are first-rate performances, and the monophonic recording is just about perfect.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete). Boston Sym. Orch.; New England Conservatory Ch. and Alumni Ch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC 1893 (ST)

An unalloyed triumph for Munch and the BSO; this is certainly one of the finest recordings of the year. So far as the performers are concerned, this reading is surpassed interpretatively by nothing they have done recently, and sonically, only by their Berlioz "Requiem" issue of a few months ago. Getting the whole work onto one disc was something of a feat, too.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY '64 688
JAN 1962

STRAVINSKY: LE SACRE DU PRINTEMPS (March, 1960)

Columbia's new recording that has the composer as conductor (in a three-disc set that also includes Petrouchka: D3S 614, D3L 300) is a starkly terrifying account of the music, recorded with utmost transparency. Bernstein's (Columbia MS 6010, ML 5277) remains the most savage rendition, and the withdrawn Monteux recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor LM 1149) has the greatest feeling of architectural cohesion.

PROKOFIEV: SYMPHONY NO. 5 (May, 1961)

The last eight months have brought no new recordings of this masterpiece of our time. Ormandy's performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra (MS 6004, ML 5260) is by far the best of those currently available. But, because Erich Leinsdorf conducted superb performances of this score with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last season, perhaps it will be recorded this fall when Mr. Leinsdorf succeeds to the orchestra's musical directorship.

270

Recordings

HI FI/STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
JUL 1961

Ⓢ Ⓜ MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3, in A Minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo from Octet in E-flat. Op. 20. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2520 $5.98, LM 2520 $4.98.

Interest: Felix in the Highlands
Performance: Big-scaled
Recording: Big hall sonics
Stereo Quality: Adequate

Because it juxtaposes so many elements of Mendelssohn's style, the "Scotch" Symphony has always been a tough nut for conductors to crack. In general, interpretations of the "Scotch" Symphony tend to fall into one of two categories—the atmospheric-transparent or the romantic-dramatic. Munch's is quite definitely of the latter persuasion. This gives us an impressive introduction and a splendidly turbulent storm episode in the first movement. The heady scherzo, however, has none of the electrifying excitement and nervous tension that it should have to make its full effect. The somber slow movement achieves impressive drama, but the finale seems a bit heavy-handed, and the processional epilogue (always a problem to interpret) sounds more pompous than solemnly exultant.

Some of the blame must be laid to the recording, which seems unduly affected by the highly colored reverberation characteristic of Symphony Hall. This is especially noticeable whenever the timpani are called upon to reinforce the bass line in the climaxes of the first and last movements.

As far as alternate stereo recordings of the "Scotch" Symphony go, there seems little doubt that Peter Maag's, with the London Symphony (London CS 6191), is the best available choice. The mono disc by the late Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic (Columbia ML 4964) is also very exciting. D. H.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
OCT 8 1961

Currently Classical

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Bellini's "Norma" will be the opening night attraction of the Connecticut Opera this season. And Angel has just provided an exciting preview of this durable score in a new recording of the opera with the volatile Maria Callas.

Not to be confused with the earlier version by this soprano on the same label, this is a brand new recording with Franco Corelli, Christa Ludwig, and Nicola Zaccaria in the principal roles. In the pit is the always dependable Tullio Serafin, conducting the La Scalla chorus and orchestra.

Callas remains a commanding interpreter of the Druid priestess, infusing the part with the passionate dignity that so aptly befits her character. And vocally, it is only in the topmost range that the singer is disappointing (in the high tessitura of the Casta Diva, for instance, she produces some downright ugly sound). Otherwise, Callas is wholly satisfying.

As Pollione, Corelli is responsible for some exciting moments, despite occasional vocal crudities. And I found Zaccaria much more gratifying than Rossi-Lemeni on the earlier version, mainly because he sings more securely on pitch. The Adalgisa of Miss Ludwig is excellent in every respect.

Serafin, who is the most authoritative conductor in the Italian repertory since the demise of Toscanini, is an ideal choice for this opera, for he knows how to draw the utmost from this continually exciting score. The Angel sound is excellent.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (Complete), with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch (Victor). There will undoubtedly be many who will prefer a less massive sound in Ravel than the Boston orchestra produces but there are certain advantages in having Munch, an acknowledged interpreter of the French repertory, in this music. In addition, this version uses a full chorus (in this case, the New England Conservatory Chorus under Lorna Cooke de Varon) to make it a complete version in every sense of the term. For those who like a more coloristic approach to Ravel I would recommend the Angel recording of the Daphnis Suite No. 2 with the late Guido Cantelli, which remains this conductor's finest phonographic achievement and a reminder of the great loss to music when this young conductor died so prematurely in 1956.

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 9,841
DEC 1961

MANOS, CONSTANTINE. Portrait of a symphony; texts & phot; foreword by Aaron Copland. $10 Basic bks.
785 Boston Symphony Orchestra. Musicians —Portraits
60-13144

"Photographs of scenes associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Includes group shots of the orchestra, individual shots of its musicians in action, and pictures of its conductor, Charles Munch, various guest conductors, and the audience." Publishers' Weekly

"With both text and 131 photographs by Mr. Manos, formerly the official photographer of the Boston Symphony, this stunning volume will rate as one of the handsomest of 1960. The whole is intentionally impressionistic with no names or dates excepting for the identification of visiting conductors and soloists. There is a minimum of text, in fact, for orchestra and photography enthusiasts." C. K. Miller

+ Library J 86:577 F 1 '61 150w

"It is the virtue of Portrait of a Symphony . . . that it gives us the symphony orchestra (in this case the famous Boston) as a many-sided organism. . . . There are set shots, of course. . . . But there is also the 'cellist adjusting the bridge on his 'cello, the empty cases waiting for their instruments . . . and the audience, both silent and aroused, reflecting in their faces what the music means to them." Thomas Lask

+ N Y Times Bk R p7 N 13 '60 230w

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 16,710
SEP 15 1961

Recorded MUSIC

Edited by PHILIP L. MILLER

Guest Reviewer: James B. Coover
Music Librarian, Vassar College
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

All records reviewed are 12" 33⅓ rpm. MONOphonic ($4.98) or STereophonic ($5.98), except as indicated. CAS—Camden (ST, $2.98); DGM—Deutsche Grammophon (MONO, $3.98); LSC—Victor (ST); MG—Mercury (MONO); MS—Columbia (ST); S—Angel (ST); SC—Capitol (ST); SR—Mercury (ST); WST—Westminster (ST) ($4.98); XWN—Westminster (MONO).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC—OUTSTANDING

HAYDN: Sym. no. 94, G maj., "Surprise." Sym. no. 103, E-flat maj., "Drum Roll." Philharmonia Hungarica; Antal Dorati, cond. MG 50208 (MONO).

Muscular performances which will please those who like their Haydn full-blooded, rhythmic, and lively, but which may be too robust to suit those who prefer Haydn cool and prim. Regardless of preference, these are first-rate performances, and the monophonic recording is just about perfect.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete). Boston Sym. Orch.; New England Conservatory Ch. and Alumni Ch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC 1893 (ST).

An unalloyed triumph for Munch and the BSO; this is certainly one of the finest recordings of the year. So far as the performers are concerned, this reading is surpassed interpretatively by nothing they have done recently, and sonically, only by their Berlioz "Requiem" issue of a few months ago. Getting the whole work onto one disc was something of a feat, too.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
JAN 1962

STRAVINSKY: LE SACRE DU PRINTEMPS (March, 1960)

Columbia's new recording that has the composer as conductor (in a three-disc set that also includes Petrouchka: D3S 614, D3L 300) is a starkly terrifying account of the music, recorded with utmost transparency. Bernstein's (Columbia MS 6010, ML 5277) remains the most savage rendition, and the withdrawn Monteux recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor LM 1149) has the greatest feeling of architectural cohesion.

[illegible] SYMPHONY NO. 5 (May, 1961)

The last eight months have brought no new recordings of this masterpiece of our time. Ormandy's performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra (MS 6004, ML 5260) is by far the best of those currently available. But, because Erich Leinsdorf conducted superb performances of this score with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last season, perhaps it will be recorded this fall when Mr. Leinsdorf succeeds to the orchestra's musical directorship.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

Music on Records

By Sherman Gottesman

The writer had the opportunity of hearing Poulenc's "Gloria" at Tanglewood, conducted by Charles Munch, and when he got home, there was the Angel recording of it waiting for him. What a wonderful opportunity for a comparison of two performances! Amazingly enough, this writer found the recorded performance more satisfactory. It was more serious, the tempi were slower, and had much more depth than the live version heard in the Berkshires. (Angel 35953-stereo)

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 35,931

DEC 4 1961

RECORDS

Outstanding Records of 1961

Bach: Brandenburg Concertos; Menuhin and Bath Festival Orchestra (Capitol). Cantata No. 4; Wagner Chorale (Capitol).

Beethoven: Piano Sonatas Opp. 110 and 111; Richter-Haaser (Angel). Sonatas Opp. 26 and 57; Richter (Victor). Piano Concertos; Fleisher with Cleveland Orchestra under Szell (Epic). Concerto No. 5; Cliburn with Chicago Symphony under Reiner (Victor).

Berlioz: Overtures and Royal Hunt and Storm; Munch and Boston Symphony (Victor).

Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 1; Pollini with Philharmonia under Kletzki (Capitol).

Gabrieli: Sacrae Symphoniae and Canzone; Gabrieli Festival Choir under Gillesberger (Vanguard).

Handel: Ode for St. Cecilia's Day; Bernstein and Rutgers University Chorus, Addison, McCollum, New York Philharmonic (Columbia). L'Allegro ed Il Penseroso; Delman, Harwood, Morison, Pears, Alan, St. Anthony Singers and London Philomusica under Willcocks (London).

Mahler: Symphony No. 4; Solti and Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra (London).

Mozart: Piano Quartet K.478; Schnabel and Pro Arte Quartet (Angel). Piano Concerto K.467; Lipatti with Lucerne Festival Orchestra under von Karajan (Angel).

Musorgsky: Pictures at an Exhibition; Richter (Columbia).

Prokofiev: Piano Concerto No. 3; Cliburn with Chicago Symphony under Hendl (Victor).

Scarlatti: Sonatas; Landowska (Angel).

Schubert: Trio Op. 100; Busch-Serkin Trio (Angel). Trout Quintet; Schnabel, Pro Arte Quartet and Hobday (Angel). Die schoene Muellerin; Pears and Britten (London).

Schumann: Papillons and Symphonic Etudes; Casadesus (Columbia).

Stravinsky: Petrushka and Le Sacre du Printemps; Stravinsky and orchestra (Columbia).

Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4; von Karajan and Berlin Philharmonic (Angel). Violin Concerto; Grumiaux with Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra under Haitink (Epic).

Vivaldi: The Four Seasons: Virtuosi di Roma (Angel).

Wagner: Excerpts; Klemperer and Philharmonia (Angel). Scenes from Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung; Toscanini with NBC Symphony, Traubel and Melchior (Victor).

Collections: Arias by Handel, Mozart, Bellini, Rossini, Verdi and others, Joan Sutherland (London A-4241 and OSA-1214). Arias from L'Elisir d'Amore, L'Africaine, Rigoletto, Carmen and others; Bjoerling (Capitol G-7329). Arias from Faust, Aida, Il Trovatore, Rigoletto and others; Bjoerling (Capitol G-7248). Songs of Scarlatti, arias of Gluck, Bellini, Donizetti and others; Schipa (Angel). Arias from L'Africaine, Le Prophète, Don Carlo and others; Matzenauer (Collectors Guild). Arias from Eugene Onegin, Don Pasquale and others; Sobinoff (Collectors Guild).

Those who love Berlioz's music cherish his L'Enfance du Christ, but without accepting W. J. Turner's estimate of it as Berlioz's most beautiful score: it is in the earlier Les Nuits d'Été, Romeo and Juliet and The Damnation of Faust that Berlioz's powers operate incandescently to produce his most beautiful writing. In L'Enfance du Christ Part 1 is in the bland style of much of his late writing; but in the Overture of Part 2 one begins to hear the individual Berlioz mind in fascinating operation; and this is followed by the lovely Shepherds' Farewell and Rest of the Holy Family, and by moving and beautiful passages in Part 3: the Narrator's description of the journey to Sais, Joseph's appeals for refuge, and the conclusion. London OL-50201/2 (mono) and SOL-60032/3 (stereo) offer an excellent new performance conducted by Colin Davis, with Peter Pears and Elsie Morison among other soloists, the St. Anthony Singers and the Goldsborough Orchestra. On two machines my copy of the stereo version reproduced Pears' voice with distortion; on a third it did not.

As for The Damnation of Faust, I don't receive Deutsche Grammophon records for review, but having bought 138099/100 (stereo) I can report the outstanding excellence of Markevitch's performance of that work. Michel Roux hasn't the voice for an impressive Mephistopheles; but Richard Verreau, the Faust, and Consuelo Rubio, the Marguerite, are wholly satisfying; and the performance is raised to its high level of distinction by the conducting of Markevitch, with a control that is evident in the pacing of the work and in the superb playing that he gets from the Lamoureux Orchestra.

Mozart's Piano Concerto K.466, with its opening movement that is one of his most powerful utterances, and its incandescent perpetuum-mobile finale, and the Concerto K.491, with its magnificent opening movement, are played by Clara Haskil with the Lamoureux Orchestra under Markevitch on Epic LC-3798 and BC-1143. The combination of strength and sensitiveness in her enunciation of the piano's first statements in K.466 continues to make her playing in the two works highly satisfying, except in the finale of K.466, which calls for a driving momentum and energy that she doesn't provide (she omits the cadenza indicated in this movement). The piano, as recorded, obscures orchestral detail that should be heard.

B. H. HAGGIN

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

SEP 1961

"More Classical Music for People Who HATE Classical Music." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor LM 2470, $4.98 (LP); LSC 2470, $5.98 (SD).

This is Fiedler's second recorded effort to combat aversion to classical music. The first, which appeared in 1954 as RCA Victor LM 1752 and is still in the catalogue, offered a great number of short snippets of music. This new album strikes me as much more sensibly planned. Each item played is either a complete entity, or a complete section of a larger composition. Two old Fiedler favorites, the overtures to Hérold's Zampa and Suppé's Fatinitza, should certainly appeal to even the most unreceptive listener, and Tchaikovsky's Waltz from the Serenade for Strings and Grieg's The Last Spring should quickly break down any resistance that's left. I'm less enthusiastic about the inclusion of Liszt's bloated Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6.

The performances have all the usual Boston bustle, and they have been recorded in brilliant sound, the stereo edition in particular being a dazzler. And if you do like classical music, don't be put off by that title; this is a musical treat for you too.

J.F.I.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

OCT 1961

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë

New England Conservatory Choir, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LPM 2568. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2568. SD. $5.98.

Since by the time this appears in print visitors to fall high-fidelity shows will probably already have been bowled over by the scintillant power of Command's Ravelian spectacular, I need only say that it does indeed represent the latest ne plus ultra in sensational technology and add that it proves anew the phenomenal dynamic and frequency range, as well as signal-to-noise ratio, capabilities of 35-mm magnetic film medium for original masters (first explored, although the present notes neglect to mention this fact, by Everest several years ago). Furthermore this recording's boldly vibrant Alborado, cynically sensual Valse, and shatteringly brilliant Daphnis Suite No. 2 (admirably including the relatively brief but vital choral parts) delineate every detail of the scores in crystalline microscopic detail. What it does not do is to suggest the poetic sensibility which is as essential to this music as its kaleidoscopic coloring and stupefying dramatic impact, or to provide an experience that is at all akin to normal well-back-in-the-hall concert audition. Here we are thrown right into the heart of an orchestral blast furnace and consumed by its incandescence.

Music, rather than sensation, lovers will find a restorative in retiring from this blinding glare to the hidden recesses of a Mediterranean grotto, shimmering with cool wave-reflected radiance, only. Munch's earlier version of the complete Daphnis et Chloë ballet appeared in SD form only just over a year ago, but it was recorded at least as early as 1955 with more marked separation and solo-instrument spotlighting than is considered desirable today. The present seamlessly spun sonic fabric is no less brilliantly but more subtly interwoven; the sweeter color nuances of the voices—as well as of solo woodwinds—are better integrated into the over-all texture; and the dynamic range has been expanded (if not quite as fabulously as in the Command spectacular) to encompass some of the most ethereal pianissimos on record. (These unfortunately also come dangerously close to the surface-noise threshold, especially in the SD version, yet despite that occasional handicap, and lovely as the work is in monophony, it is only in stereo that its combined sonic delicacy and sumptuousness can be fully appreciated.) Munch's reading itself has similarly ripened. Some of its previously impassioned tension has been relaxed, to be sure, but the gain in refinement, restraint, and poignancy (as well as in sheerly aural polychromaticism and plasticity) enhances immeasurably the magic of Ravel's masterpieces—of which the concert suite's highlights disclose only a fraction.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D 280,307 S. 458,274

JUN 18 1961

Munch Makes Rich Sounds

NEW YORK (HTNS)—Charles Munch's latest recordings for Victor are of two romantic symphonies, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" (No. 3 in A minor) and Schumann's "Spring" (No. 1 in B-flat), both, of course, with the Boston Symphony.

Munch's enduring contribution to the record catalogue lies mostly in the music of Berlioz. But these new Schumann (LSC-2474) and Mendelssohn (LSC-2520) recordings are highly respectable jobs, with a romantic flair, rich sound and the superb execution of the Bostonians. The "Spring" Symphony record is filled out with Schumann's "Manfred" Overture, while the "Scotch" has the scherzo from Mendelssohn's Octet in E-flat, played with a suavity and lightness that is utterly dreamy.

—Herbert Kupferberg.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096

1961

MENDELSSOHN: Concerto in E minor, Op. 64; PROKOFIEFF: Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63; Jascha Heifetz (violin); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2046, $8.95.

[T]THE playing here is simply elegant. The Mendelssohn Concerto is carried off with swift-paced ease, while the Prokofieff is incisive and assured. Victor's sound—spacious, but well focused—leaves little to be desired. The stereo disc version is reviewed in the April 1960, ARG.

—P.C.P.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096

JUN 1961

less revealing in significant detail, though beautifully proportioned in the round. Comparative study of such fine but quite different recordings provides, above all, a keener awareness than ever of what a sheer and undiluted masterpiece the Fourth is, and I liberally recommend such study.

—J.D.

MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3 in A minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo from Octet in E flat, Op. 20; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC-2520, $5.98.

(Op. 56)
Maag, London Sym. . . . . London CS-6191

Ⓢ MUNCH'S interpretation of the Symphony is decidedly inconsistent. The opening Andante is moody and impressive, but the Allegro which follows is far too fast and nervous to make the movement hang together in logical fashion. The tripping second movement is likewise too jittery to preserve its delicacy. Munch is at his best in the final two movements. The Adagio is flowing and exquisitely lyrical,

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

JUL 1961

SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 1, in B flat, Op. 38 ("Spring"); Manfred Overture, Op. 115

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2474. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2474. SD. $5.98.

Munch gives a fairly straightforward account of the Spring Symphony, though he does not overlook its romantic qualities. He seems more conscious of these, however, in the Manfred Overture, which he invests with greater interpretative fire. The spacious acoustics of Symphony Hall occasionally intrude upon the clarity of sound in the LP; in stereo, the space appears to be better filled by the lateral sense of direction.

P.A.

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 35,931
DEC 4 1961

RECORDS

Outstanding Records of 1961

Bach: Brandenburg Concertos; Menuhin and Bath Festival Orchestra (Capitol). Cantata No. 4; Wagner Chorale (Capitol).

Beethoven: Piano Sonatas Opp. 110 and 111; Richter-Haaser (Angel). Sonatas Opp. 26 and 57; Richter (Victor). Piano Concertos; Fleisher with Cleveland Orchestra under Szell (Epic). Concerto No. 5; Cliburn with Chicago Symphony under Reiner (Victor).

Berlioz: Overtures and Royal Hunt and Storm; Munch and Boston Symphony (Victor).

Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 1; Pollini with Philharmonia under Kletzki (Capitol).

Gabrieli: Sacrae Symphoniae and Canzone; Gabrieli Festival Choir under Gillesberger (Vanguard).

Handel: Ode for St. Cecilia's Day; Bernstein and Rutgers University Chorus, Addison, McCollum, New York Philharmonic (Columbia). L'Allegro ed Il Penseroso; Delman, Harwood, Morison, Pears, Alan, St. Anthony Singers and London Philomusica under Willcocks (London).

Mahler: Symphony No. 4; Solti and Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra (London).

Mozart: Piano Quartet K.478; Schnabel and Pro Arte Quartet (Angel). Piano Concerto K.467; Lipatti with Lucerne Festival Orchestra under von Karajan (Angel).

Musorgsky: Pictures at an Exhibition; Richter (Columbia).

Prokofiev: Piano Concerto No. 3; Cliburn with Chicago Symphony under Hendl (Victor).

Scarlatti: Sonatas; Landowska (Angel).

Schubert: Trio Op. 100; Busch-Serkin Trio (Angel). Trout Quintet; Schnabel, Pro Arte Quartet and Hobday (Angel). Die schoene Muellerin; Pears and Britten (London).

Schumann: Papillons and Symphonic Etudes; Casadesus (Columbia).

Stravinsky: Petrushka and Le Sacre du Printemps; Stravinsky and orchestra (Columbia).

Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4; von Karajan and Berlin Philharmonic (Angel). Violin Concerto; Grumiaux with Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra under Haitink (Epic).

Vivaldi: The Four Seasons: Virtuosi di Roma (Angel).

Wagner: Excerpts; Klemperer and Philharmonia (Angel). Scenes from Walkuere and Goetterdaemmerung; Toscanini with NBC Symphony, Traubel and Melchior (Victor).

Collections: Arias by Handel, Mozart, Bellini, Rossini, Verdi and others, Joan Sutherland (London A-4241 and OSA-1214). Arias from L'Elisir d'Amore, L'Africaine, Rigoletto, Carmen and others; Bjoerling (Capitol G-7329). Arias from Faust, Aida, Il Trovatore, Rigoletto and others; Bjoerling (Capitol G-7248). Songs of Scarlatti, arias of Gluck, Bellini, Donizetti and others; Schipa (Angel). Arias from L'Africaine, Le Prophète, Don Carlo and others; Matzenauer (Collectors Guild). Arias from Eugene Onegin, Don Pasquale and others; Sobinoff (Collectors Guild).

Those who love Berlioz's music cherish his L'Enfance du Christ, but without accepting W. J. Turner's estimate of it as Berlioz's most beautiful score: it is in the earlier Les Nuits d'Été, Romeo and Juliet and The Damnation of Faust that Berlioz's powers operate incandescently to produce his most beautiful writing. In L'Enfance du Christ Part 1 is in the bland style of much of his late writing; but in the Overture of Part 2 one begins to hear the individual Berlioz mind in fascinating operation; and this is followed by the lovely Shepherds' Farewell and Rest of the Holy Family, and by moving and beautiful passages in Part 3: the Narrator's description of the journey to Sais, Joseph's appeals for refuge, and the conclusion. London OL-50201/2 (mono) and SOL-60032/3 (stereo) offer an excellent new performance conducted by Colin Davis, with Peter Pears and Elsie Morison among other soloists, the St. Anthony Singers and the Goldsborough Orchestra. On two machines my copy of the stereo version reproduced Pears' voice with distortion; on a third it did not.

As for The Damnation of Faust, I don't receive Deutsche Grammophon records for review, but having bought 138099/100 (stereo) I can report the outstanding excellence of Markevitch's performance of that work. Michel Roux hasn't the voice for an impressive Mephistopheles; but Richard Verreau, the Faust, and Consuelo Rubio, the Marguerite, are wholly satisfying; and the performance is raised to its high level of distinction by the conducting of Markevitch, with a control that is evident in the pacing of the work and in the superb playing that he gets from the Lamoureux Orchestra.

Mozart's Piano Concerto K.466, with its opening movement that is one of his most powerful utterances, and its incandescent perpetuum-mobile finale, and the Concerto K.491, with its magnificent opening movement, are played by Clara Haskil with the Lamoureux Orchestra under Markevitch on Epic LC-3798 and BC-1143. The combination of strength and sensitiveness in her enunciation of the piano's first statements in K.466 continues to make her playing in the two works highly satisfying, except in the finale of K.466, which calls for a driving momentum and energy that she doesn't provide (she omits the cadenza indicated in this movement). The piano, as recorded, obscures orchestral detail that should be heard.

B. H. HAGGIN

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
SEP 1961

"More Classical Music for People Who HATE Classical Music." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor LM 2470, $4.98 (LP); LSC 2470, $5.98 (SD).

This is Fiedler's second recorded effort to combat aversion to classical music. The first, which appeared in 1954 as RCA Victor LM 1752 and is still in the catalogue, offered a great number of short snippets of music. This new album strikes me as much more sensibly planned. Each item played is either a complete entity, or a complete section of a larger composition. Two old Fiedler favorites, the overtures to Hérold's Zampa and Suppé's Festnitza, should certainly appeal to even the most unreceptive listener, and Tchaikovsky's Waltz from the Serenade for Strings and Grieg's The Last Spring should quickly break down any resistance that's left. I'm less enthusiastic about the inclusion of Liszt's bloated Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6.

The performances have all the usual Boston bustle, and they have been recorded in brilliant sound, the stereo edition in particular being a dazzler. And if you do like classical music, don't be put off by that title; this is a musical treat for you too.

D.F.L.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
OCT 1961

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë

New England Conservatory Chorus, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LPM 2568. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2568. SD. $5.98.

Since by the time this appears in print visitors to fall high-fidelity shows will probably already have been bowled over by the scintillant power of Command's Ravelian spectacular, I need only say that it does indeed represent the latest ne plus ultra in sensational technology and add that it proves anew the phenomenal dynamic and frequency range, as well as signal-to-noise ratio, capabilities of 35-mm magnetic film medium for original masters (first explored, although the present notes neglect to mention this fact, by Everest several years ago). Furthermore, this recording's boldly vibrant Alborado, lyrically sensual Valse, and shatteringly brilliant Daphnis Suite No. 2 (admirable in its choral parts) delineate every detail of the scores in crystalline microscopic detail. What it does not do is to suggest the poetic sensibility which is as essential to this music as its kaleidoscopic coloring and stupefying dramatic impact, or to provide an experience that is at all akin to normal well-back-in-the-hall concert audition. Here we are thrown right into the heart of an orchestral blast furnace and consumed by its incandescence.

Music rather than sensation lovers will find a restorative in retiring from this blinding glare to the hidden recesses of a Mediterranean grotto, shimmering with cool wave-reflected radiance only. Munch's earlier version of the complete Daphnis et Chloë ballet appeared in SD form only just over a year ago, but it was recorded at least as early as 1955 with more marked separation and solo-instrument spotlighting than is considered desirable today. The present seamlessly spun sonic fabric is no less brilliantly but more subtly interwoven, the sweeter color nuances of the voices—as well as of solo woodwinds—are better integrated into the overall texture, and the dynamic range has been expanded (if not quite as fabulously as in the Command spectacular) to encompass some of the most ethereal pianissimos on record. (These unfortunately also come dangerously close to the surface-noise threshold, especially in the SD version, yet despite that occasional handicap, and lovely as the work is in monophony, it is only in stereo that its combined sonic delicacy and sumptuousness can be fully appreciated.) Munch's reading itself has similarly ripened. Some of its previously impassioned tension has been relaxed, to be sure, but the gain in refinement, restraint, and poignancy (as well as in sheerly aural polychromaticism and plasticity) enhances immeasurably the magic of Ravel's masterpieces—of which the concert suite's highlights disclose only a fraction.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D 280,307 S. 458,274
JUN 18 1961

Munch Makes Rich Sounds

NEW YORK (HTNS)—Charles Munch's latest recordings for Victor are of two romantic symphonies, Mendelssohn's "Scotch" (No. 3 in A minor) and Schumann's "Spring" (No. 1 in B-flat), both, of course, with the Boston Symphony.

Munch's enduring contribution to the record catalogue lies mostly in the music of Berlioz. But these new Schumann (LSC-2474) and Mendelssohn (LSC-2520) recordings are highly respectable jobs, with a romantic flair, rich sound and the superb execution of the Bostonians. The "Spring" Symphony record is filled out with Schumann's "Manfred" Overture, while the "Scotch" has the scherzo from Mendelssohn's Octet in E-flat, played with a suavity and lightness that is utterly dreamy.

—Herbert Kupferberg

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,098
JUN 1961

MENDELSSOHN: Concerto in E minor, Op. 64; PROKOFIEFF: Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 63; Jascha Heifetz (violin); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2046, $8.95.

THE playing here is simply elegant. The Mendelssohn Concerto is carried off with swift-paced ease, while the Prokofieff is decisive and assured. Victor's sound—spacious, but well focused—leaves little to be desired. The stereo disc version is reviewed in the April 1960, ARG.

—P.C.P.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,098
JUN 1961

less revealing in significant detail, though beautifully proportioned in the round. Comparative study of such fine but quite different recordings provides, above all, a keener awareness than ever of what a sheer and undiluted masterpiece the Fourth is, and I liberally recommend such study.

—J. D.

MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3 in A minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo from Octet in E flat, Op. 20; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC-2520, $5.98.

(Op. 56)
Maag, London Sym. . . . . London CS-6191

SMUNCH'S interpretation of the Symphony is decidedly inconsistent. The opening Andante is moody and impressive, but the Allegro which follows is far too fast and nervous to make the movement hang together in logical fashion. The tripping second movement is likewise too jittery to preserve its delicacy. Munch is at his best in the final two movements. The Adagio is flowing and exquisitely lyrical,

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

SCHUMANN: Symphony No. 1, in B flat, Op. 38 ("Spring"); Manfred Overture, Op. 115

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2474. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2474. SD. $5.98.

Munch gives a fairly straightforward account of the Spring Symphony, though he does not overlook its romantic qualities. He seems more conscious of these, however, in the Manfred Overture, which he invests with greater interpretative fire. The spacious acoustics of Symphony Hall occasionally intrude upon the clarity of sound in the LP; in stereo, the space appears to be better filled by the lateral sense of direction.

P.A.

272

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 273,405 S. 310,373
AUG 27 1961

RECORD REVIEW

Schoenberg Can Be Easy on the Ears

By HERMAN SCHADEN
Star Record Critic

It takes a pianist who knows what he is doing, such as Charles Rosen, to make a dubious or reluctant music lover begin to comprehend and enjoy Arnold Schoenberg.

Even a neophyte gets the feeling that Rosen is an incomparable interpreter of both Schoenberg and Igor Stravinsky on a new Epic release.

Of Stravinsky he plays the Serenade in A for Piano and Sonata for Piano (1924). The Schoenberg selections are Two Piano Pieces, opus 33a and 33b and Suite for Piano, opus 25.

Schoenberg has been dead a decade but many still shudder at his 12-tone classics as something forbidding and jarring to ears attuned to conventional modes.

But so perhaps was Stravinsky once jarring to some. Listen to Rosen play his now almost romantic-sounding pieces in beautifully-controlled, exquisitely-phrased, richly-textured fashion.

Then turn the record to the Schoenberg side and learn to your surprise that this Twentieth century pioneer is not so hard to take, after all. Again it is Rosen, obviously mentally as well as physically equipped for this assignment, who gently leads us by the hand to unsuspected, if somewhat cerebral, delights.

This is a record of great performance, sound and merit—filling a void in the current catalog.

* * * *

Daphnis and Chloe

Maurice Ravel's sumptuous ballet score, Daphnis and Chloe, rates with the finest orchestral works. By Ravel's own admission it is more symphony than ballet, but under any name whatever, it is worthy of RCA Victor's new complete version by the Boston Symphony and New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch conducting.

From Munch it gets lush, warm-colored treatment, and the kind of playing one expects from this orchestra (hear the flute work of Doriot Anthony Dwyer).

Those who recall Ernest Ansermet's London record may feel it hung together better, and there is Pierre Monteux's later London record to consider. But Munch knows his French music, too.

* * * *

Les Preludes, etc:

A Mercury record brings Antal Dorati and the London Symphony in Liszt's Les Preludes, Mussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, Smetana's The Moldau and Sibelius' Valse Triste.

War horses all. But Dorati gets inside the music, breathes fresh life into it, lets lyricism have its day and permits no brashly sensational effects. The end product is a remarkably fine disk, proving again Dorati's superb way with orchestral detail, and the London's growing prowess.

* * * *

St. Paul Oratorio

Felix Mendelssohn is almost everybody's second favorite. And most of us never knew much about such items as the St. Paul Oratorio. We have heard it twice now, via Vox's splendid two-record album, and Mendelssohn's stature grows with every note.

Vox has a habit of doing well with such things, and this is no exception. It has four good soloists to work with the Vienna Pro Musica Symphony and Akademie Kammerchor under Ferdinand Grossmann. Mendelssohn could write part-music for chorus, he could write spiritual music of the highest quality, yet as melodic and unweighted as his more familiar work. You'll love Felix more for hearing this.

ROGER VOISIN
In Trumpet Classics

* * * *

Ye Olde Trumpet

Kapp Records has another in its excellent Trumpet Music series featuring Roger Voisin, the Boston Symphony's first desk man. There is nothing but joy and uplifted spirit emanating from this baroque program of Fantini, Purcell, Stradella, Lully, Monteverdi, Fischer and Petzold.

Emanuel Vardi's capable direction and the Kapp Sinfonietta give these gems complete realization. Purcell's Symphony from "The Fairy Queen" alone is worth the price of the record. From the first of three rousing fanfares, the beautifully diversified program of strings and horns is one to cherish.

* * * *

Image of America

Leopold Stokowski gets another gold star from this corner for his Vanguard record of Virgil Thomson's The Plow That Broke the Plains and Suite from The River. Conducting the Symphony of the Air, Stokey has never been more impressive.

The playing is simply beautiful. Stokey must have a genuine feeling for his adopted land, for all the good old tunes like A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight, We Won't Get Home Until Morning, and touches of many others bits of Americana flow with a smoothness that makes this a tremendously desirable record.

* * * *

More Americana, Etc

Something fresh and rewarding from Mercury: Charles Loeffler's rhapsodies for piano, oboe and viola (The Pool and The Bagpipe); William McCauley's Five Miniatures for Flute and Strings; Wayne Barlow's Night Song.

These are all easy-going, quiet, unpretentious pieces that are just nice to listen to. Howard Hanson and the Eastman-Rochester Orchestra help to make them so. They'll help you relax.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
FEB 1962

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de cartes
†Poulenc: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani

Berj Zamkochian, organ (in the Poulenc); Everett Firth, timpani (in the Poulenc); Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA Victor LM-2567. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA Victor LSC 2567. SD. $5.98.

Jeu de cartes—The Card Game, or The Poker Game, as Stravinsky was likely to call it when it was new—is one of that master's wittiest, most effervescent, tuneful, and learnedly allusive scores. It clicks its heels, marches column left and column right in the most spirited, spic-and-span manner, and is in general a major contribution to the joy of living in a troubled time. Munch's performance underlines its colorful good humor superbly, although it is not as strong, rhythmically speaking, as it might be. The recording, in both versions, is excellent.

There has been a bit of a run in recent record lists on the Poulenc Concerto, doubtless because the combination of organ, timpani, and orchestra lends itself well to stereo. The works starts out well, but before long it reveals itself as Saint-Saëns brought up-to-date—which is to say it is pompous, empty, and, in the last analysis, a windy bore. A.F.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
NOV 1961

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete). Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus conducted by Charles Munch; RCA Victor Stereo LSC-2568, $5.98. Same; New York Philharmonic and Schola Cantorum Chorus conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Columbia Stereo MS-6260, $5.98.

Ⓢ THERE is no clear-cut choice between these two new issues. Both of the performances have over-all merit despite some shortcomings. Munch's contribution is stylish, atmospheric, neatly played, but sometimes, for want of more rhythmic vigor, a bit lifeless. Bernstein's is animated, colorful, but occasionally coarse in expression and in surface finish.

Selection based on recording so important is conveying the demi-tints of this score—is not easy to make, either. Although Columbia cannot begin to match Victor's sonics, which are superb in range of frequency and dynamics and in impressive stereo spread, its sound nevertheless is somewhat better balanced (the Boston violins are often hard to hear in passages where they should be clearly audible). Then, too, the Victor pickup is too distant for this taste, whereas the Columbia sound reaches the listener from a point that is not only pleasing to the ear but consistent with clarity of texture.

One of the landmarks of LP was Munch's earlier recording of the complete Daphnis. In its stereo version (Victor LSC-1893), it still strikes me as the supreme version of Ravel's masterwork. Because it is now apt to be withdrawn, it should be acquired at once. —C.J.L.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI MONTHLY 19,155
MAR 15 1962

find in these performances. Technically, they are spotless but they require more than that and certainly deserve more. The sound is very good.

CONCERTOS—RECOMMENDED

MUSIC FOR TRUMPET AND ORCHESTRA, v. 3. STANLEY: Trumpet tune; PURCELL: Yorkshire Feast song, Symphony; Duke of Gloucester Birthday Ode, Overture; Indian Queen, Trumpet overture; Trumpet tune and air "The Cebell"; C.P.E. BACH: March 3 trumpets & tympani; LEGRENZI: Sonata, "La Buscha"; TELEMANN: Concerto, D. DAQUIN: Noël Suisse; ALTENBURG: Concerto, 7 trumpets & tympani. Roger Voisin, John Rhea, trumpets; Kapp Sinfonietta, Emanuel Vardi, cond. KCL9050.
Of the 10 works performed on this record, seven are transcriptions of keyboard works, and some, such as the Daquin, would have sounded better if left in the original form. The Stanley and Purcell numbers and the Bach March (a real find) are especially fine. Voisin, first trumpet of the Boston Orchestra, and his colleagues do a rousing job on these pieces.

WITH RESERVATIONS

BACH: Concerto, D minor. Joerg Demus, pf.; Concerto, E. Paul Badura-Skoda, pf.; Vienna State Opera Orch.; Kurt Redel, cond. WST-14109 (vol. I)
Great performances of Bach are the result of a thoroughgoing knowledge and understanding of his music and its style rather than a mere interest in performing it. I suspect the latter to be true in the case of these two pianists whose forte to date has been mainly in the keyboard music of the Romantic Era. The music is played cleanly enough and with spirit but lacks that certain something that easily points out its great interpreters. Sound is not of the very best.

BEETHOVEN: Concerto no. 3, op. 37, C minor. Clara Haskil, pf.; Orchestre des Concerts Lamoreux; Igor Markevitch, cond. BC-1097.
The late Clara Haskil has left as one of her memorials a neatly designed but small-scaled concept of this masterwork. It is a poetic and delicate reading but at a tempo slower than standard, and also of greatly reduced power. This is no heaven-storming performance but one of nuance and a highly individualistic interpretation. The sound is not always what it should be.

BRAHMS: Concerto no. 2, op. 83, B-flat. Rudolf Serkin, pf.; Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond. MS6156.
This is the third collaboration of Serkin and Ormandy on this concerto in the last 15 years and it is a heroic, dramatic conception. It is Serkin's usual "play it big" method which has great power and little or no subtlety. It is an improvement over the second recording in the last three movements but the beginning lacks the thrust and feeling of continuity that the music demands. Instead, it is filled with little phrases and sharp accents. The piano is recorded close up and the cover carries a most unflattering pencil sketch of Serkin.

CHOPIN: Concerto no. 1, op. 11, E minor. Mendelssohn: Capriccio brillante, op. 22. Gary Graffman, pf.; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2468.
Graffman's performance on this record is one of his better efforts. It is technically assured and cleanly played but, unfortunately, it is played at a feverish pitch from beginning to end, and even though Graffman has the technique to carry it through, the music cries out for a gracious, more relaxed approach. This type of playing is much better suited to the little Mendelssohn opus which needs this style and in which he shines. As in most recordings of the Chopin, the orchestral introduction is cut.

CHOPIN: Concerto no. 2, op. 21, F minor; Eugene Istomin, pf.; Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond.; SCHUMANN: Concerto, op. 54, A minor. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Bruno Walter, cond. MS6159.
Of these two pieces, the Schumann comes off the better due, in great part, to the masterful conducting of Walter. It is poetic and graceful, and the tempos, except for the exceedingly fast last movement, are right. Istomin's Chopin is fussy and detailed, and designed to exhibit his virtuosity. The sound in both is excellent but Ormandy's direction is not on the same level as Walter's.

DVORAK: Concerto, op. 104, B minor. Gregor Piatigorsky, cello; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2490.
Piatigorsky pours his heart out in this performance and completely neglects the charm and flow of the musical line. There is a great deal of sentimental smearing and his intonation is not always what it should be. The stereo version gives much too much prominence to the solo instrument and places the orchestra far back. Other than that, sound is good.

(continued on p. 1154)

Now Available
INDEX TO
RECORD AND TAPE REVIEWS
New valuable aid for librarians and patrons indexes all recordings reviewed in fourteen periodicals. 1961 edition now ready.
$1.50 postpaid.
POLART INDEX
20115 Goulburn Road Detroit 5, Michigan

272

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 273,405 S. 310,373
AUG 27 1961

RECORD REVIEW

Schoenberg Can Be Easy on the Ears

By HERMAN SCHADEN
Star Record Critic

It takes a pianist who knows what he is doing, such as Charles Rosen, to make a dubious or reluctant music lover begin to comprehend and enjoy Arnold Schoenberg.

Even a neophyte gets the feeling that Rosen is an incomparable interpreter of both Schoenberg and Igor Stravinsky on a new Epic release.

Of Stravinsky he plays the Serenade in A for Piano and Sonata for Piano (1924). The Schoenberg selections are Two Piano Pieces, opus 33a and 33b and Suite for Piano, opus 25.

Schoenberg has been dead a decade but many still shudder at his 12-tone classics as something forbidding and jarring to ears attuned to conventional modes.

But so perhaps was Stravinsky once jarring to some. Listen to Rosen play his new almost "romantic"-sounding pieces in beautifully-controlled, exquisitely phrased, richly textured fashion.

Then turn the record over to the Schoenberg side and learn to your surprise that this Twentieth century pioneer is not so hard to take, after all. Again it is Rosen, obviously mentally as well as physically equipped for this assignment, who gently leads us by the hand to unsuspected and somewhat cerebral delights.

This is a record of great performances, of originality and merit, filling a void in the current catalog.

Daphnis and Chloe

Maurice Ravel's sumptuous ballet score, Daphnis and Chloe, rates with the finest orchestral works. By Ravel's own admission it is more symphony than ballet, but under any name whatever, it is worthy of RCA Victor's new complete version by the Boston Symphony and New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch conducting.

From Munch it gets lush, warm-colored treatment, and the kind of playing one expects from this orchestra (hear the flute work of Doriot Anthony Dwyer).

Those who recall Ernest Ansermet's London record may feel it hung together better, and there is Pierre Monteux's later London record to consider. But Munch knows his French music, too.

* * * *

Les Preludes, etc.

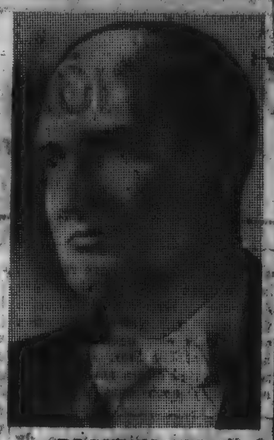
A Mercury record brings Antal Dorati and the London Symphony in Liszt's Les Preludes, Mussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, Smetana's The Moldau and Sibelius' Valse Triste.

War-horses all. But Dorati gets inside the music, breathes fresh life into it, lets lyricism have its day and permits no brashly sensational effects. The end product is a remarkably fine disk, proving again Dorati's superb ways with orchestral detail, and the London's growing prowess.

St. Paul Oratorio

Felix Mendelssohn is almost everybody's second favorite. And most of us never knew much about such items as the St. Paul Oratorio. We have heard it twice now, via Vox's splendid two-record album, and Mendelssohn's pleasure flows with every note.

Vox has a habit of doing well with such things, and this is no exception. It has four good soloists to work with the Vienna Pro Musica Symphony and Akademie Kammerchor under Oberdorfer.



ROGER VOISIN
In Trumpet Classics

tures, the beautifully diversified program of strings and horns is one to cherish.

* * * *

Image of America

Leopold Stokowski gets another gold star from this corner for his Vanguard record of Virgil Thomson's The Plow That Broke the Plains and Suite from The River. Conducting the Symphony of the Air, Stokey has never been more impressive.

The playing is simply beautiful. Stokey must have a genuine feeling for his adopted land, for all the good old tunes like A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight, We Won't Get Home Until Morning, and touches of many others bits of Americana flow with a smoothness that makes this a tremendously desirable record.

* * * *

More Americana, Etc.

Something fresh and rewarding, from Mercury: Charles Loeffler's rhapsodies for piano, oboe and viola (The Pool and The Bagpipe); William McCauley's Five Miniatures for Flute and Strings; Wayne Barlow's Night Song.

These are all easy-going, quiet, unpretentious pieces that are just nice to listen to. Howard Hanson and the Eastman-Rochester Orchestra help to make them so. They'll help you relax.

* * * *

Ye Olde Trumpet

Kapp Records has another in the excellent Trumpet Music series featuring Roger Voisin, the Boston Symphony's first desk man. There is nothing but joy and uplifted spirit emanating from this baroque program of Fantini, Purcell, Stradella, Lully, Monteverdi, Fischer and Petzold.

Emanuel Vardi's capable direction and the Kapp Sinfonietta give these gems complete realization. Purcell's Symphony from "The Fairy Queen" alone is worth the price of the record. From the first of three rousing fan-

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 19,155
MAR 15 1962

find in these performances. Technically, they are spotless but they require more than that and certainly deserve more. The sound is very good.

CONCERTOS—RECOMMENDED

MUSIC FOR TRUMPET AND ORCHESTRA. v. 3. STANLEY: Trumpet tune; PURCELL: Yorkshire Feast song, Symphony; Duke of Gloucester Birthday Ode, Overture; Indian Queen, Trumpet overture; Trumpet tune and air "The Cebell"; C.P.E. BACH: March 3 trumpets & tympani; LEGRENZI: Sonata, "La Buscha"; TELEMANN: Concerto, D. DAQUIN: Noël Suisse; ALTENBURG: Concerto, 7 trumpets & tympani. Roger Voisin, John Rhea, trumpets; Kapp Sinfonietta, Emanuel Vardi, cond. KCL9050.

Of the 10 works performed on this record, seven are transcriptions of keyboard works, and some, such as the Daquin, would have sounded better if left in the original form. The Stanley and Purcell numbers and the Bach March (a real find) are especially fine. Voisin, first trumpet of the Boston Orchestra, and his colleagues do a fine job on these pieces.

WITH RESERVATIONS

BACH: Concerto, D minor. Joerg Demus, pf.; Concerto, E. Paul Badura-Skoda, pf.; Vienna Suite Opera Orch.; Kurt Redel, cond. WST-14109 (vol. I)

Great performances of Bach are the result of a thoroughgoing knowledge and understanding of his music and its style rather than a mere interest in performing it. I suspect the latter to be true in the case of these two pianists whose forte to date has been mainly in the keyboard music of the Romantic Era. The music is played cleanly enough and with spirit but lacks that certain something that easily points out its great interpreters. Sound is not of the very best.

BEETHOVEN: Concerto no. 3, op. 37, C minor. Clara Haskil, pf.; Orchestre des Concerts Lamoreux; Igor Markevitch, cond. BC-1097.

The late Clara Haskil has left as one of her memorials a neatly designed but small-scaled concept of this masterwork. It is a poetic and delicate reading but at a tempo slower than standard, and also of greatly reduced power. This is no heaven-storming performance but one of nuance and a highly individualistic interpretation. The sound is not always what it should be.

BRAHMS: Concerto no. 2, op. 83, B-flat. Rudolf Serkin, pf.; Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond. MS6156.

This is the third collaboration of Serkin and Ormandy on this concerto in the last 15 years and it is a heroic, dramatic conception. It is Serkin's usual "play it big" method which has great power and little or no subtlety. It is an improvement over the second recording in the last three movements but the beginning lacks the thrust and feeling of continuity that the music demands. Instead, it is filled with little phrases and sharp accents. The piano is recorded close up and the cover carries a most unflattering pencil sketch of Serkin.

CHOPIN: Concerto no. 2, op. 11, E minor. Mendelssohn: Capriccio brillante, op. 22. Gary Graffman, pf.; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2468.

Graffman's performance on this record is one of his better efforts. It is technically assured and cleanly played but unfortunately, it is played at a feverish pitch from beginning to end, and even though Graffman has the technique to carry it through, the music cries out for a gracious, more relaxed approach. This type of playing is much better suited to the little Mendelssohn opus which needs this style and in which he shines. It is in most recordings of the Chopin, the orchestral introduction is cut.

CHOPIN: Concerto no. 2, op. 21, F minor; Eugene Istomin, pf.; Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond.; SCHUMANN: Concerto, op. 54, A minor. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Bruno Walter, cond. MS6159.

Of these two pieces, the Schumann comes off the better due, in great part, to the masterful conducting of Walter. It is poetic and graceful, and the tempos, except for the exceedingly fast last movement, are right. Istomin's Chopin is fussy and detailed, and designed to exhibit his virtuosity. The sound in both is excellent but Ormandy's direction is not on the same level as Walter's.

DVORAK: Concerto, op. 104, B minor. Gregor Piatigorsky, cello; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2490.

Piatigorsky pours his heart out in this performance and completely neglects the charm and flow of the musical line. There is a great deal of sentimental smearing, and his intonation is not always what it should be. The stereo version gives much too much prominence to the solo instrument and places the orchestra far back. Other than that, sound is good.

(continued on p. 1154)

Now Available
INDEX TO
RECORD AND TAPE REVIEWS
Most valuable aid for librarians and patrons. Indexes all recordings reviewed in fourteen periodicals. 1961 edition, now ready.
$15.50 postpaid.
POLART INDEX
20115 Goulburn Road Detroit 5, Michigan

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
FEB 1962

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de cartes
†Poulenc: Concerto for O... Strings, and Timpani

Berj Zamkochian, ... (in the Poulenc); ... (in the Poulenc); ... Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA Victor ... LP. $4.98.
•• RCA ... SD. $5.98.

Jeu de cartes—The ..., or The Poker Game, as ... was likely to call it when it ... new—is one of that master's wittiest, most effervescent, tuneful, and ... ballet-ously allusive scores. It clicks its ... marches column left and column right in the most spirited, spic-and-span manner, and is in general a major contribution to the joy of living in a troubled ... Munch's performance underlines its colorful good humor ... it is not as strong, rhythmically, ... as it might be. The ... both versions, is excellent.

There has been ... of organ in recent record listings. ... Concerto, doubtless because the combination of organ, timpani, and orchestra lends itself well to stereo. The ... works starts out well, but before ... reveals itself as Saint-Saëns brou... late—which is to say it is pom... pty, and, in the last analysis, a wh... A.F.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
NOV 1961

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete). Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus conducted by Charles Munch; RCA Victor Stereo LSC-2568, $5.98. Same; New York Philharmonic and Schola Cantorum Chorus conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Columbia Stereo MS-6260, $5.98.

Ⓢ THERE is no clear-cut choice between these two new issues. Both of the performances have over-all merit despite some shortcomings. Munch's contribution is stylish, atmospheric, neatly played, but sometimes, for want of more rhythmic vigor, a bit lifeless. Bernstein's is animated, colorful, but occasionally coarse in expression and in surface finish.

Selection based on recording—so important is conveying the demi-tints of this score—is not easy to make, either. Although Columbia cannot begin to match Victor's sonics, which are superb in range of frequency and dynamics and in impressive stereo spread, its sound nevertheless is somewhat better balanced (the Boston violins are often hard to hear in passages where they should be clearly audible). Then, too, the Victor pickup is too distant for this taste, whereas the Columbia sound reaches the listener from a point that is not only pleasing to the ear but consistent with clarity of texture.

One of the landmarks of LP was Munch's earlier recording of the complete Daphnis. In its stereo version (Victor LSC-1893), it still strikes me as the supreme version of Ravel's masterwork. Because it is now apt to be withdrawn, it should be acquired at once.—C.J.L.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164 688
APR 1962

HIFI/STEREO REVIEW'S THE TOP RECORDINGS

BEST OF THE MONTH

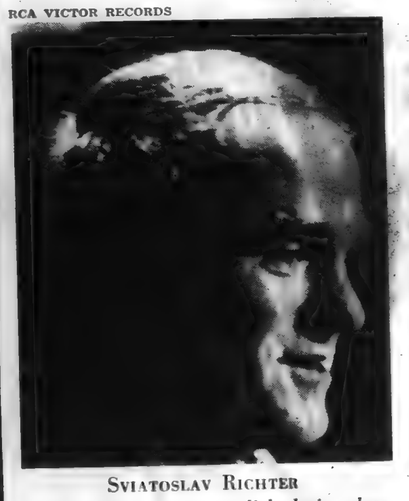
CLASSICAL

RICHTER ON BEETHOVEN—THE SHINING LIGHT, OF TRUTH

The great Russian pianist provides some revelatory readings

FEW PERFORMANCES present astonishing revelations of the authentic nature of a composition, and in view of the wealth of cataloged recordings of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto, one might have thought that new light could not be thrown upon the work. Yet the new RCA Victor recording with the redoubtable Sviatoslav Richter and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch's baton, shows it in all its pristine beauty.

RCA VICTOR RECORDS



SVIATOSLAV RICHTER
Tone as translucent as a polished wine glass

It is not that Richter departs from the tradition or attempts some dramatic coup to give the work a novel interest, but that he has superbly presented every detail with just relation to the whole with a virtuosity that is everywhere relevant to this joyful score. His tempos and dynamics are wonderfully adjusted, his tone translucent as a polished wine glass, the articulation of each phrase precise and vital, the dialogue of the two hands alert and vivacious. The character of each movement is admirably defined; the ceremonial stateliness, the objectiveness of the opening Allegro con brio, with its touch of martial pomp; the reflective lyricism of the Largo, never burdened with alien pathos; and the sparkling wit and rhythmic bite of the Rondo. Surely the last movement was never performed with such natural delight. And the excellence is not only that of the soloist. Charles Munch has fashioned the orchestral part so that it emerges as vital as the music that shines from the piano.

The recording, too, is very good in both stereo and monophonic versions, in that it presents a Beethoven score as it should sound, with solidity and impact but with no post-classical tonal emphases. The hand-maiden clarinet in

(continued overleaf)

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E..O.WEEK 37,960
APR 12 1962

Beethoven/Richter

BEETHOVEN — RCA Victor LM/LSC-2544: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C Major; Piano Sonata No. 22 in F Major, Op. 54.
Personnel: Sviatoslav Richter, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor.
Rating: ★ ★ ★

It may come as a surprise to some that Richter, the indubitably first-rate Russian pianist, does not storm through Beethoven and chase all competition from the field. Sometimes, indeed, he sounds like a surprisingly finicky pianist.

There is evidence to support the belief that Munch expected a more full-bodied interpretation in the concerto, for he presents the opening tutti with characteristic bravado only to have Richter take over and firmly scale down the entire performance to more modest conception.

Theoretically, Richter is right, for the C Major is a Mozartian work and can stand simplicity and restraint. But somehow the effect is less than stunning. Richter, of course, plays with dazzling thrusts and with spirit, but there are too many swooping phrases and other distracting mannerisms to permit continuity to develop. Richter plays Beethoven's long cadenza to the first movement, but cuts the last 27 bars.

The F Major Sonata, a Richter favorite, receives the best performance here that he has given it on records, far cleaner than the Carnegie Hall live performance on Columbia. (D.H.)

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110 268
APR 1962

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de cartes
†Poulenc: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani

Berj Zamkochian, organ; Everett Firth, timpani (in the Poulenc); Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. ●● RCA VICTOR FTC 2077. 44 min. $8.95.

Munch's lucid, unexpectedly humorous reading of Card Game reminds us how unjustified is the neglect of this ballet. Surely Stravinsky has never been more gleeful and infectiously sparkling, and his bubbling, small orchestra score is a delight throughout, in this spicily piquant Bostonian performance.

The Poulenc Concerto (anticipated by Capitol last December as a reel "first," coupled with his Gloria) is particularly valuable for its proof that Zamkochian's fine organ playing in the Saint-Saëns Symphony No. 3 was no flash in the pan. His is a more incisively forceful reading than that by the expansive Duruflé, but one feels no necessity here to judge one performance superior to the other. There is fascination enough in comparing the distinctive tonal qualities of the instruments of Symphony Hall and St. Etienne du Mont, and in noting the difference in the acoustical ambiences of the Boston concert hall and the Paris church—markedly unalike, but each ideal of its kind. I give an edge of superiority in recording and processing to the Victor reel, but a choice between the performances must depend on individual taste.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
MAR 31 1962

Schubert Mass and Quartets By Mozart Lead Hi-Fi Listing

By DELOS SMITH

Discoveries still are possible among the works of the old masters. Have a listen to the recording of Franz Schubert's E flat Mass made by the Berlin Philharmonic and the St. Hedwig's Choir of Berlin, Erich Leinsdorf conducting (Capitol-8579).

Schubert here worshipped God with melodious simpleness. He was not profound but he was engrossed, characteristically, with sheer beauty. Leinsdorf conducted exquisitely.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

"Vienna Night." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor LM 2548, $4.98 (LP); LSC 2548, $5.98 (SD).

These are certainly the finest performances of light Viennese music that Fiedler and his Bostonians have ever presented on records. Throughout the whole program the orchestral work is sheer delight—brilliant and crisp in the four short polkas by the Strauss Brothers, warm and soothing in the waltzes of Lehár, Waldteufel, and Vollstedt. The Lehár waltzes are virtually potpourris of music from The Merry Widow and The Count of Luxemburg, the latter one of the composer's most melodious scores; Waldteufel is represented by The Skater's Waltz; and Fiedler rounds out his quartet with a superb performance, complete with whistling chorus, of Vollstedt's Jolly Fellows Waltz, long a Boston favorite. The stereo edition eclipses the mono at all points, but nowhere more effectively than in the reverberant rumblings of Thunder and Lightning Polka, a real sonic dazzler. J.F.I.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
APR 1962

HI-FI/STEREO REVIEW'S

THE TOP RECORDINGS

BEST OF THE MONTH

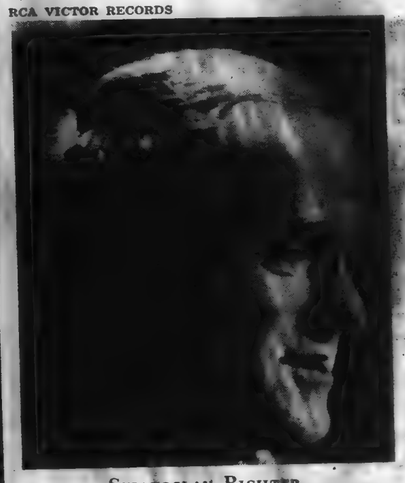
CLASSICAL

RICHTER ON BEETHOVEN—THE SHINING LIGHT OF TRUTH

The great Russian pianist provides some revelatory readings

FEW PERFORMANCES present astonishing revelations of the authentic nature of a composition, and in view of the wealth of cataloged recordings of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto, one might have thought that new light could not be thrown upon the work. Yet the new RCA Victor recording with the redoubtable Sviatoslav Richter and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch's baton, shows it in all its pristine beauty.

RCA VICTOR RECORDS



SVIATOSLAV RICHTER
Tone as translucent as a polished wine glass

It is not that Richter departs from the tradition or attempts some dramatic coup to give the work a novel interest, but that he has superbly presented every detail with just relation to the whole with a virtuosity that is everywhere relevant to this joyful score. His tempos and dynamics are wonderfully adjusted, his tone translucent as a polished wine glass, the articulation of each phrase precise and vital, the dialogue of the two hands alert and vivacious. The character of each movement is admirably defined; the ceremonial stateliness, the objectiveness of the opening Allegro con brio, with its touch of martial pomp; the reflective lyricism of the Largo, never burdened with alien pathos; and the sparkling wit and rhythmic bite of the Rondo. Surely the last movement was never performed with such natural delight. And the excellence is not only that of the soloist. Charles Munch has fashioned the orchestral part so that it emerges as vital as the music that shines from the piano.

The recording, too, is very good in both stereo and monophonic versions, in that it presents a Beethoven score as it should sound, with solidity and impact but with no post-classical tonal emphases. The hand-maiden clarinet in

(continued overleaf)

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
MAR 31 1962

Schubert Mass and Quartets By Mozart Lead Hi-Fi Listing

By DELOS SMITH

Discoveries still are possible among the works of the old masters. Have a listen to the recording of Franz Schubert's E flat Mass made by the Berlin Philharmonic and the St. Hedwig's Choir of Berlin, Erich Leinsdorf conducting (Capitol-8579).

Schubert here worshipped God with melodious simpleness. He was not profound but he was engrossed, characteristically, with sheer beauty. Leinsdorf conducted exquisitely.

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK 37,960
APR 12 1962

Beethoven/Richter

BEETHOVEN — RCA Victor LM/LSC-2544: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C Major; Piano Sonata No. 22 in F Major, Op. 54.

Personnel: Sviatoslav Richter, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor.

Rating: ★ ★ ★

It may come as a surprise to some that Richter, the indubitably first-rate Russian pianist, does not storm through Beethoven and chase all competition from the field. Sometimes, indeed, he sounds like a surprisingly finicky pianist.

There is evidence to support the belief that Munch expected a more full-bodied interpretation in the concerto, for he presents the opening tutti with characteristic bravado only to have Richter take over and firmly scale down the entire performance to more modest conception.

Theoretically, Richter is right, for the C Major is a Mozartian work and can stand simplicity and restraint. But somehow the effect is less than stunning. Richter, of course, plays with dazzling thrusts and with spirit, but there are too many swooping phrases and other distracting mannerisms to permit continuity to develop. Richter plays Beethoven's long cadenza to the first movement, but cuts the last 27 bars.

The F Major Sonata, a Richter favorite, receives the best performance here that he has given it on records, far cleaner than the Carnegie Hall live performance on Columbia. (D.H.)

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
APR 1962

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de cartes
†Poulenc: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani

Berj Zamkochian, organ; Everett Firth, timpani (in the Poulenc); Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2077. 44 min. $8.95.

Munch's lucid, unexpectedly humorous reading of Card Game reminds us how unjustified is the neglect of this ballet. Surely Stravinsky has never been more gleeful and infectiously sparkling, and his bubbling, small orchestra score is a delight throughout, in this spicily piquant Bostonian performance.

The Poulenc Concerto (anticipated by Capitol last December as a reel "first," coupled with his Gloria) is particularly valuable for its proof that Zamkochian's fine organ playing in the Saint-Saëns Symphony No. 3 was no flash in the pan. His is a more incisively forceful reading than that by the expansive Duruflé, but one feels no necessity here to judge one performance superior to the other. There is fascination enough in comparing the distinctive tonal qualities of the instruments of Symphony Hall and St. Etienne du Mont, and in noting the difference in the acoustical ambiences of the Boston concert hall and the Paris church—markedly unalike, but each ideal of its kind. I give an edge of superiority in recording and processing to the Victor reel, but a choice between the performances must depend on individual taste.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

"Vienna Night." Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, cond. RCA Victor LM 2548, $4.98 (LP); LSC 2548, $5.98 (SD).

These are certainly the finest performances of light Viennese music that Fiedler and his Bostonians have ever presented on records. Throughout the whole program the orchestral work is sheer delight—brilliant and crisp in the four short polkas by the Strauss Brothers, warm and soothing in the waltzes of Lehár, Waldteufel, and Vollstedt. The Lehár waltzes are virtually potpourris of music from The Merry Widow and The Count of Luxemburg, the latter one of the composer's most melodious scores; Waldteufel is represented by The Skater's Waltz; and Fiedler rounds out his quartet with a superb performance, complete with whistling chorus, of Vollstedt's Jolly Fellows Waltz, long a Boston favorite. The stereo edition eclipses the [illegible] at all points, but nowhere more [illegible]ly than in the reverberant rumbles of Thunder and Lightning Polka, a real [illegible]-dazzler. J.F.I.

SHOWTHROUGH

274

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
73 050
FEB 24 1962

disc data

A WELCOME POLICY: THE BANTAM BONANZA

LESS QUANTITY, MORE QUALITY — Word reached this desk a few weeks ago that so far as its Red Seal output was concerned, RCA Victor was cutting back to a bimonthly release schedule—that the company would be sending along its January release of some half dozen classical recordings but that reviewers should not expect another shipment until March. I remember my reaction to this news was one of surprised disappointment, despite the usual assurances that the new product would be better than ever.

But Victor's initial 1962 release did live up to this promise, at least as well as anyone could reasonably expect, and gave rise, besides, to some reassuring second thoughts. The new batch included not one, not two, but six single LPs devoted to cornerstones of the piano literature, each representing artists of the very highest calibre—three of them at the top of their profession.

To begin with there was a new Van Cliburn recording . . . ►of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto (LM-2581 mono, LSC-2581 stereo), a strong and exceedingly eloquent statement supported in kind by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. Some might object to the larger-than-life-size piano, which, in terms of normal concert-hall balances, takes precedence throughout. But the sound is otherwise stunning. Cliburn stakes here yet another claim to musical maturity, really succeeding this time, and his orchestral backing is wondrously compelling.

Second to this was a re-recording by Artur Rubinstein . . . ►of the Grieg Concerto (LM-2566 mono, LSC-2566 stereo), a work he chose for his first American recording, with orchestra, back in 1942. The new A-minor is his fourth, a repeat collaboration, as well, with conductor Alfred Wallenstein. Unlike the earlier versions, which it obviously surpasses technically, this one combines the Grieg not with another concerto but with a solo recital of short pieces the veteran pianist often plays as encores—Schumann's "Romance" in F Sharp, Liszt's "Valse Oubliée" No. 1, and Falla's "Ritual Fire Dance" among them . . . ►Beethoven's First Piano Concerto by Sviatoslav Richter was the third new Victor release (LM-2544 mono, LSC-2544 stereo). He plays this work, and the sonata with which it is coupled (Op. 54), with truly remarkable finesse. Unfortunately the accompaniment provided by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch tends to be pretty bland. The Russian pianist nevertheless finds in this concerto "the finest relationship of material, form and length," and his performance here confirms that view. The recording is absolutely first rate in sound and stereo separation.

REPORTER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
E.O.WEEK 142,583
MAR 1 1962

RECORD NOTES

"MARIA CALLAS SINGS GREAT ARIAS FROM FRENCH OPERAS." Maria Callas, soprano; Orchestre National de la RDF, Georges Prêtre, cond. (Angel 35882, mono and stereo.)

Noting the progressive deterioration of her vocal prowess in the upper coloratura reaches, admirers of Maria Callas have recently been throwing out hints that she abandon Donizetti and Bellini and turn her attention to the long-dormant French lyric repertoire. Callas has often been called the greatest singing actress since Mary Garden. What could be more appropriate, then, than for her to make a new career in the old Garden roles? Herewith a first step in that direction—a collection of French arias ranging from Gluck to Charpentier by way of Bizet, Saint-Saëns, Gounod, Thomas, and Massenet. It is an impressive performance, particularly in the selections that lie comfortably within the mezzo-soprano range. The familiar Callas traits are well in evidence—her sense of timing and rhetorical accent, her ability to evoke a wealth of meaning from the enunciation of a single word, her careful yet imaginative musicianship—and they work as well for Orpheus and Delilah and Chimène (the indecisive heroine of Massenet's Le Cid) as for Medea and Norma and Violetta. Unfortunately, the change of repertoire has done nothing to change this singer's strident, tremolo-ridden top notes, and these still nullify her efforts to convey the clipped excitement of Juliette (in the "Waltz Song" from Gounod's opera) or the romantic outpourings of Louise (in the aria "Depuis le jour"). But there is more than enough good singing here to offset the bad. And how often these days can you hear French opera performed with this kind of conviction and artistry?

DEBUSSY: IMAGES POUR ORCHESTRE. Suisse Romande Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet, cond. (London CS 6225, stereo; CM-9293, mono.)

The pointillist orchestral technique of Debussy's middle years, in which instrumental sonorities are juxtaposed rather than blended, makes a stunning effect in stereo. It is as if a large canvas were stretched from one speaker to the other, with myriad daubs of color carefully pinpointed for depth and breadth. With its brilliant engineering Ansermet's new recording of the three orchestral Images (Gigues, Ibéria, Rondes de printemps) takes precedence over other versions. Never has this music been captured on microgroove with such startling and seductive clarity. Of course all this splendor in sound would count for little were it not allied to Ansermet's keen sense of orchestral harmony and the precise articulation of the well-indoctrinated Suisse Romande players. As a bonus, London has coupled Stravinsky's austere Symphonies for Wind Instruments, which sounds better the more one hears it and Ravel's saccharine Pavane for a Dead Infanta, which sounds

DE MENASCE: SONATA FOR VIOLA AND PIANO. Lillian Fuchs, viola; Artur Balsam, piano. (Composers Recordings CRI-154, mono only.)

Jacques de Menasce was a suave, witty, original and generous man who contributed stimulatingly to the New York musical scene during the last two decades of his life; he died in 1960 at the age of fifty-four, and it is good to have this memorial recording devoted to four of his compositions. De Menasce was not a composer of overwhelming importance, but he wrote with great style and craftsmanship, and his music has an honesty and warmth that are immediately ingratiating. The Sonata for Viola and Piano, a virile, rhapsodic piece in one movement, is the most distinguished work in this collection. It is performed with loving fervor by two of the composer's many friends.

"SVIATOSLAV RICHTER AT CARNEGIE HALL" (Volume II). Sviatoslav Richter, piano. (Columbia M2L-274, two records; mono only.)

Although he did not know it at the time, Sviatoslav Richter was playing for a hidden microphone as well as for a capacity audience when he gave his long-awaited series of Carnegie Hall recitals in the fall of 1960. The documentation provided by that microphone is now being published by Columbia Records in a series of two-disc albums. They carry the imprimatur of Mezhdunarodnaya Kniga, an agency which speaks for the Soviet Union in matters gramophonic. Whether they also have the full blessing of Sviatoslav Richter is a moot point. No pianist relishes having his mistakes immortalized, and there are plenty of finger slips on these records. But his errors of execution are of minor account when balanced against the overwhelming communicative force of these concert performances. And although the microphone was not ideally placed, so that the recorded sound is at times fuzzy, at times jangling, Richter must recognize the artistic validity of an undertaking that provides posterity with an unglamorized documentation of a great event. Volume II in the series brings us the recital of October 25, 1960, when Richter addressed himself almost entirely to the music of Haydn, Schumann and Debussy. He starts off rather fumblingly with Haydn's Sonata No. 50 in C (he later averred that he played it badly), but thereafter his program is consistently wonderful. Richter's combination of reckless gusto and songful ardor in the Three Novelette, Op. 21, of Schumann, the way in which he shepherds us through their changes of pace and mood, defies description. This is as close to ideal Schumann as it is possible to get. The Debussy Suite Bergamasque, the first book of Images, and the Prokofiev Sonata No. 7 (perhaps because it was the most unfamiliar) are projected. (Richter had already established his credentials as a superb interpreter of Schumann, but there had been no hint of his affinity for French music.) The Debussy seems just as incredible on this delayed rehearing—an amalgam of warmly vibrant tone and delicately sculptured expression.

Another memento of Richter's visit in 1960 is furnished by RCA Victor—in the form of a studio recording of the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symphony under Munch (LM/LSC 2544, mono or stereo). This is a masterfully controlled, intelligently conceived interpretation, and it is recorded with great clarity and presence, but it does not fully capture the dynamic excitement of the artist's concert perfor[illegible]. —ROLAND GELATT

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 50,000
JAN 20 1962

Classical

BEETHOVEN: CONCERTO NO. 1; SONATA OP. 54

Sviatoslav Richter; Boston Symphony (Munch). RCA Victor LM 2544—Here's a natural giant of a package, and one of six current specials with which Victor is including a free bonus copy of the album "Keyboard Giants of the Past" (LM 2585), which should also have strong appeal to any piano fan. The Richter packaging speaks for itself—a brilliant performance of a popular Beethoven concerto along with one of the composer's relatively obscure works. It matters not, it's the performance that counts here.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
JUL 1 1961

'Duphonic' Process Improves Old Recordings

By DELOS SMITH.

"Duophonic" is the name Capitol has given to a technical processing which makes any old monaural recording sound somewhat like a stereophonic recording when reproduced with stereophonic equipment. But just "somewhat," you understand; it is not difficult to detect the differences between "Duophonic" and stereophonic.

But it greatly improves recordings which were made before there was stereophonic recording, and many of these are well worthy of being transformed into two-channel records that can exploit stereo reproducers. The process involves duplicating the original monaural tape and then feeding multiple tapes into stereo channels with discreet alterations of one tape or another to avoid a mere doubling effect.

Successes Revamped.

Capitol has inaugurated "Duophonic" by reprocessing some of its most successful monaural recordings such as Haydn's Solomon symphonies performed by the late Thomas Beecham and the Philharmonic Orchestra, songs of Stephen Foster sung by the Roger Wagner Chorale and a host of others in both the long-hair and "popular" categories.

"Duophonic" reminds you of RCA Victor's re-processing of the old Toscanini monaural masters to get a synthetic stereo effect, mainly of a broadened sound spectrum and the illusion of the sound originating from more than just one source. And the same aesthetic objections can be made to it. Beecham, like Toscanini, is aesthetically misrepresented; like Toscanini he would blow a fuse at what synthetic stereo does to orchestral balances and timbres.

Romantic Munch.

From Charles Munch and his wonderously responsive Boston Symphony come two recordings. One is of Schumann's 1st symphony, "Spring," and his Manfred Overture (RCA Victor-LSC-2474); the other is of Mendelssohn's 3rd symphony, "Scotch," and the Scherzo of his boyish E-flat octet (RCA Victor-LSC2520).

Munch has the magical sensibilities for this naively romantic music, meaning that it can be made to sound dated by all the harsh realities which have become foremost in men's minds since romanticism was in flower. Munch can project romantic sensibilities without any suggestion of strain or of make-believe.

SHOWTHROUGH

275

MOUNT KISCO TRADER
..., March 4, 1962

Let's Look At The Record

Day For Strings

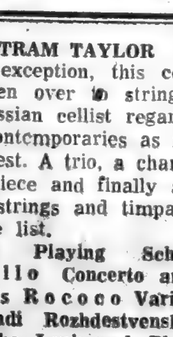
By BERTRAM TAYLOR

With one exception, this column is given over to strings. First, a Russian cellist regarded by his contemporaries as rivaling the best. A trio, a chamber music piece and finally an organ with strings and timpani complete the list.

Rostropovich Playing Schumann's Cello Concerto and Tchaikowsky's Rococo Variations. Gennadi Rozhdestvensky Conducting the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra.

Two Russian cellists have recently claimed attention from American audiences — Shafran, reviewed in this column recently, and now Rostropovich, who is regarded by a cellist friend as unrivaled, except for Casals. There will be no attempt here to compare the two, for that would be futile.

It is not easy to judge Rostropovich from his playing of the Schumann concerto, for he seems deliberately to underplay it, to hold his part down, and give the orchestra more prominence. It is a sad work, and in his hands it becomes a dirge.



TAYLOR

At first I thought the mechanics might be at fault, but the cellist friend said "No, that is Rostropovich's conception of the work." The cello tone is always beautiful without being lush.

It is in the Rococo Variations that the cellist throws off his self-imposed restraint and shows that he is a brilliant as well as a sensitive instrumentalist. The lovely, warm tone is still there with flashes of fire and nimble fingering.

The cello has been frequently played as though it were only a channel for emotion and nothing else. So it is doubly fascinating to hear it played as the fine instrument it is, with smooth violin tones in its upper register and velvety notes in its middle and lower sections—never too velvety to be accurate.

The conductor and the Leningrad Orchestra metaphorically bow to a superb soloist, not subserviently but with sympathetic understanding.

Stereo (Deutsche Grammophon SLPM 138674)

Schubert's Trio No. 2 in E flat major. The Ahna Trio.

This piano, violin and cello trio is a mature work of Schubert's, but that word is unnecessary, for one feels that Schubert was born musically mature—certainly as far as melody is concerned. Schubert's early works are not beneath his later ones in this respect.

There are all kinds of haunting strains and rhythms in this trio — the kind that can suggest no other composer. There is beauty in these phrases, and one feels a certain sadness in conflict with a naturally cheerful disposition. This is especially so in the andante.

The three players are Adolph Baller, piano, Maurie Wilk, violin, and Gabor Resto, cellist — all of them with distinguished musical histories. Each has been a solo artist, but whatever brilliance they showed as soloists, they play together as though their experience had lain in the trio or quartet field.

Where a piano is concerned, the melting together of tones that are struck with those under a bow is always noteworthy. And that is what is noticeable here. There are one or two times when Mr. Baller might be thought to be playing the harp.

Altogether this is a masterly performance of a work well nigh perfect.

Mono (Decca Gold Label DL 10033)

Vivaldi's Four Seasons. Virtuosi di Roma conducted by Renato Fasano.

If, as has been said, Vivaldi's biography is in his music, he must be estimated as an outgiving person. His music is always definite, musically healthy.

For all this, there is ample room for interpretation, except in the matter of rhythm. Those strong supporting columns must never be tilted. A great deal of the vitality of Vivaldi's music rests on those propulsive rhythms.

This chamber group plays not only as virtuosi in the technical sense, but as men who feel close to the composer and know what they are about. All the color is in the formal pattern — color that depends on variety of total color and phrasing.

There are wonderful passages in the four movements, especially for the violins. The two soloists, Luigi Ferro, and Guido Mozzato deserve the limelight so briefly played upon them. Taken as a whole, the players have a sure touch upon the music.

There is no explanation for, and probably scant agreement with, a feeling in this quarter that there is humor in Vivaldi. His peasants who fill the four scenes are lusty fellows and wenches, and many a rustic joke must have been exchanged among them.

Be that as it may, the music lives and breathes in every performance that I have heard — certainly in that of the Virtuosi di Roma.

Stereo (Angel 535877)

Poulenc's Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani, and Stravinsky's Jeu de Cartos. Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Poulenc is not an atonal composer as the word is usually interpreted today. He has a feeling for melody, and his dissonances seem always to be resolved. In this concerto he makes free use of tuneful threads from both organ and strings.

In fact there is more than a hint of the 19th century in the concerto — its romanticism and joy in sound for its own sake. This organ does roll out some sumptuous chords and clear melody.

Poulenc is a versatile composer, one of the best of this century, a slave to no contemporary fashion. He is also decidedly Franch and knows how to apply the light touch.

The Boston Symphony under Munch, as under Koussevitzky, is hospitable to new composers and new ideas. It gives a luminous interpretation to the concerto and to Stravinsky's ballet.

In "Jeu de Cartes" Stravinsky is not the abstractionist that he has been in his later years, but rather the master of ballet, the one who wrote "Petrouchka" and the other colorful works of half a century ago. It is the Stravinsky, or an approxifation of him, that many of us like best.

Mono (RCA Victor 2567)

Kreisler's Classics and Other Souvenirs reviewed last week is a stereo record (Westinster WST 17005).

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
D. 98,179
JUN 30 1961

Hi-Fi

2 Modern Numbers Have Classic Appeal

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items—one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on an RCA Victor record, by the Julliard String Quartet, with another prize winner, William Schuman's Third Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

THE CHORAL WORK is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre.

On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Durufle. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

AN AMERICAN - TAPED RCA Victor release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on discs and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc along with his earlier disc of Brahams Second Piano Concerto as one of the season's better piano recordnigs. The "Funeral March" sonata is on the other side.

Capitol has recorded two young European pianists in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award.

The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonia Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

THE OTHER Capitol disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra.

TEENAGERS INGENUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 351 927
FEB 1962

CLASSICAL RECORDS WORTH OWNING

BY JAY HARRISON

Can you imagine the world dissolving beautifully in a rainbow of sound? That's what impressionistic music seems to do for you. Its aim is to suggest objects and places rather than to define them precisely.

Take Claude Debussy's "La Mer," in which the composer, the greatest impressionist, sums up his impressions of the mystery of the surf. There is no sea equal to the one Debussy dreams, but the music captures the essence of pounding water. The work is done perfectly by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, on Victor.

Now let's turn to Debussy's "Nocturnes," a series of mood pictures. The first, "Nuages," conjures up the silent movement of clouds. The second, "Fêtes," is a tingling drama of an imaginary festival. Finally, there is "Sirènes," a study of those legendary sirens of the sea who lured men to their death. Hear the work done by Ansermet and the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande on a London LP.

You have an experience in store if you don't yet know Debussy's "Iberia," a superb musical sketch of the composer's impression of Spain, especially if you hear the work conducted by Stokowski on Capitol.

The other great impressionist is Maurice Ravel. Your collection should certainly contain his ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." The score is best served by Munch on a Victor disc. Then for a taste of impressionistic piano music, I wholly recommend Ravel's "Gaspard de la Nuit." Hearing this difficult work played by Walter Gieseking on Columbia is an experience you will cherish forever.

As a last thought, I'd like to include Ravel's "La Valse," in which the composer writes his impression of a waltz to end all waltzes. Listening to Munch conduct it on a Victor disc is a treat no one should miss.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

FEB 25 1962

RECORD ROUNDUP

Classical

"Un Ballo in Maschera" (Verdi). Carlo Bergonzi, Cornell MacNeil and Giulietta Simionato are well matched in this new version of Verdi's uneven but often exceptional score, but Birgit Nilsson's voice is oversized for its requirements, Georg Solti's conducting strenuous. (London.)

Symphony No. 9 (Beethoven). George Szell and the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra reach and sustain a high average of quality in the three instrumental movements of this work, but the choral finale is inadequately organized. Adele Addison, Jane Hobson, Richard Lewis, and Donald Bell make a variable vocal quartet. Excellent sound. (Epic.)

Concerto No. 1 (Beethoven). Sviatoslav Richter makes a smooth-sounding experience of this work in collaboration with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch, but the totality is rather bland. The F Major (Op. 54) Sonata completes the disc. (RCA-Victor.)

SHOW BUSINESS ILLUSTRATED
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 28 1961

CONCERTS

Berlin Philharmonic. Memorial Auditorium, Burlington, Vt. (Nov. 15); Greene Hall, Northhampton, Mass. (Nov. 17); Mosque Theater, Newark, N.J. (Nov. 18); Constitution Hall, Washington (Nov. 19); Davis Gym, Lewisburg, Pa. (Nov. 20); Lyric Theater, Baltimore (Nov. 21); Carnegie Hall, New York City (Nov. 22) — Wrapping up the U.S. tour with a solid repertoire of classics classically played.

Boston Symphony. Carnegie Hall, New York City (Nov. 15 and 18); Constitution Hall, Washington (Nov. 16); Academy of Music, Brooklyn (Nov. 17); Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass. (Nov. 21); Symphony Hall, Boston (Nov. 24-25); Memorial Auditorium, Worcester, Mass. (Nov. 26); Veterans Auditorium, Providence, R.I. (Nov. 28)—Symphonies by Haieff and Brahms (Nov. 15-16), works by Debussy and Tchaikovsky (Nov. 17-18) and pianist Gary Graffman (Nov. 24-26) are among the high points.

Budapest String Quartet. Washington Irving

COSMOPOLITAN
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 848,624
MAR 1962

NEW RECORDINGS

Somebody at RCA-Victor is a piano buff. Recent Red Seal releases include four piano lps that every lover of the instrument will want: the Grieg Concerto in A Minor, Opus 16, by the mighty Artur Rubinstein, with Alfred Wallenstein conducting; Brahms Concerto No. 2, with Van Cliburn backed by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony; Beethoven Concerto No. 1, Sonata, Opus 54, with Sviatoslav Richter and the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch, and several selections by Carmen Cavallaro. Concerto in F, Cuban Overture, El Dorado Rhythm Variations, by the Boston Pops, with Arthur Fiedler on the podium and Earl Wild performing. Attached to each of the last three albums is a gift album, Keyboard Giants of the Past, with selections (some never heard on the hi-fi before) played by Paderewski, Bauer, Gabrilowitsch and others. If bought separately, these albums cost

SHOWTHROUGH

275

MOUNT KISCO TRADER
Sunday, March 4, 1962

047

Let's Look At The Record

Day For Strings

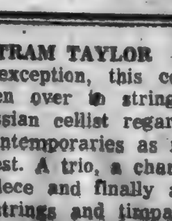
By BERTRAM TAYLOR

With one exception, this column is given over to strings. First, a Russian cellist regarded by his contemporaries as rivaling the best. A trio, a chamber music piece and finally an organ with strings and timpani complete the list.

Rostropovich Playing Schumann's Cello Concerto and Tchaikowsky's Rococo Variations. Gennadi Rozhdestvensky Conducting the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra.

Two Russian cellists have recently claimed attention from American audiences — Shafran, reviewed in this column recently, and now Rostropovich, who is regarded by a cellist friend as unrivaled, except for Casals. There will be no attempt here to compare the two, for that would be futile.

It is not easy to judge Rostropovich from his playing of the Schumann concerto, for he seems deliberately to underplay it, to hold his part down, and give the orchestra more prominence. It is a sad work, and in his hands it becomes a dirge. At first I thought the mechanism might be at fault, but the cellist friend said "No, that is Rostropovich's conception of the work." The cello tone is always beautiful without being lush.



TAYLOR

It is in the Rococo Variations that the cellist throws off his self-imposed restraint and shows that he is a brilliant as well as a sensitive instrumentalist. The lovely, warm tone is still there with flashes of fire and nimble fingering.

The cello has been frequently played as though it were only a channel for emotion and nothing else. So it is doubly fascinating to hear it played as the fine instrument it is, with smooth violin tones in its upper register and velvety notes in its middle and lower sections—never too velvety to be accurate.

The conductor and the Leningrad Orchestra metaphorically bow to a superb soloist, not subserviently but with sympathetic understanding.

Stereo (Deutsche Grammophon SLPM 138674)

Schubert's Trio No. 2 in E flat major. The Alma Trio.

This piano, violin and cello trio is a mature work of Schubert's, but that word is unnecessary, for one feels that Schubert was born musically mature—certainly as far as melody is concerned. Schubert's early works are not beneath his later ones in this respect.

There are all kinds of haunting strains and rhythms in this trio — the kind that can suggest no other composer. There is beauty in these phrases, and one feels a certain sadness in conflict with a naturally cheerful disposition. This is especially so in the andante.

The three players are Adolph Baller, piano, Mauric Wilk, violin, and Gabor Resto, cellist — all of them with distinguished musical histories. Each has been a solo artist, but whatever brilliance they showed as soloists, they play together as though their experience had lain in the trio or quartet field.

Where a piano is concerned, the melting together of tones that are struck with those under a bow is always noteworthy. And that is what is noticeable here. There are one or two times when Mr. Baller might be thought to be playing the harp.

Altogether this is a masterly performance of a work well nigh perfect.

Mono (Decca Gold Label DL 10033)

Vivaldi's Four Seasons. Virtuosi di Roma conducted by Renato Fasano.

If, as has been said, Vivaldi's biography is in his music, he must be estimated as an outgiving person. His music is always definite, musically healthy.

For all this, there is ample room for interpretation, except in the matter of rhythm. Those strong supporting columns must never be tilted. A great deal of the vitality of Vivaldi's music rests on those propulsive rhythms.

This chamber group plays not only as virtuosi in the technical sense, but as men who feel close to the composer and know what they are about. All the color is in the formal pattern — color that depends on variety of total color and phrasing.

There are wonderful passages in the four movements, especially for the violins. The two soloists, Luigi Ferro and Guido Mozzato deserve the limelight so briefly played upon them. Taken as a whole, the players have a sure touch upon the music.

There is no explanation for, and probably scant agreement with, a feeling in this quarter that there is humor in Vivaldi. His peasants who fill the four scenes are lusty fellows and wenches, and many a rustic joke must have been exchanged among them.

Be that as it may, the music lives and breathes in every performance that I have heard — certainly in that of the Virtuosi di Roma.

Stereo (Angel 35877)

Poulenc's Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani, and Stravinsky's Jeu de Cartes. Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Poulenc is not an atonal composer as the word is usually interpreted today. He has a feeling for melody, and his dissonances seem always to be resolved. In this concerto he makes free use of tuneful threads from both organ and strings.

In fact there is more than a hint of the 19th century in the concerto — its romanticism and joy in sound for its own sake. This organ does roll out some sumptuous chords and clear melody.

Poulenc is a versatile composer, one of the best of this century, a slave to no contemporary fashion. He is also decidedly French and knows how to apply the light touch.

The Boston Symphony under Munch, as under Koussevitzky, is hospitable to new composers and new ideas. It gives a luminous interpretation to the concerto and to Stravinsky's ballet.

In "Jeu de Cartes" Stravinsky is not the abstractionist that he has been in his later years, but rather the master of ballet, the one who wrote "Petrouchka" and the other colorful works of half a century ago. It is the Stravinsky, or an approximation of him, that many of us like best.

Mono (RCA Victor 2507)

Kreisler's Classics and Other Souvenirs reviewed last week is a stereo record (Westminster WST 17005).

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
D. 98,179
JUN 30 1961

Hi-Fi

2 Modern Numbers Have Classic Appeal

Two prize winners by modern composers have become available on records which deserve notice from classical listeners who want more than Mozart. Too often such initiative by record makers is not adequately rewarded in sales volume.

The Music Critics Circle of New York awarded prizes in April to both items—one for the best chamber music of 1960 and the other for the best choral work.

The chamber music, Elliot Carter's Second Quartet, also won the 1960 Pulitzer prize in music. The score was finished in 1959 and played first in New York in March, 1960. It now is on an RCA Victor record, by the Juilliard String Quartet, with another prize winner, William Schuman's Third Quartet, which won a Town Hall award in 1950. Whether the appeal of Carter's work will endure remains to be seen, but as a recorded performance it is brilliant and fascinating.

THE CHORAL WORK is Francis Poulenc's "Gloria in G Major for Soprano, Chorus and Orchestra." The premiere recording by Angel was made in Paris in February under Poulenc's supervision, with soprano Rosanna Carteri and the French National Radio-Television Orchestra and Chorus under Georges Pretre.

On the other side is Poulenc's "Concerto in G Minor for Organ," with organist Maurice Durufle. The stereo effects of the score and the recordings will attract audio enthusiasts.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won critical praise when performed in New York by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch. Its melodies are fresh and joyful and the work should gain in favor as this fine recording makes it better known.

AN AMERICAN-TAPED RCA Victor release of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, both on discs and in four-track tape, by the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, is one of the top versions now available. This is a tremendous performance that stands along with his earlier disc along with his earlier disc of Brahams Second Piano Concerto as one of the season's better piano recordnigs. The "Funeral March" sonata is on the other side.

Capitol has recorded two young European pianists in distinguished fashion. Maurizio Pollini, 18, performs excitingly Chopin's First Piano Concerto with which he won a 1960 Warsaw award.

The young Italian shows great promise in this disc with the Philharmonia Orchestra under Paul Kletzki. He has won acclaim in Milan since he was 14. The recording has great sound appeal.

THE OTHER Capitol disc is by Eric Heidsieck, 24, a Frenchman playing Mozart's Concertos No. 20 and 23 with Andre Vandernoot and the Conservatory Concert Orchestra.

TEENAGERS INGENUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 351,927
FEB 1962

CLASSICAL RECORDS WORTH OWNING

JAY HARRISON

Can you imagine the world [illegible] you dissolving beautifully in a [illegible] of sound? That's what impressionistic music seems to do for you. Its aim is to suggest objects and places rather than to define them precisely.

Take Claude Debussy's "La Mer," in which the composer, the greatest impressionist, sums up his impresions of the mystery of the surf. There is no sea equal to the one Debussy dreams, but the music captures the essence of pounding water. The work is done perfectly by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, on Victor.

Now let's turn to Debussy's "Nocturnes," a series of mood pictures. The first, "Nuages," conjures up the silent movements of clouds. The second, "Fêtes," is a dinging drama of an imaginary festival. Finally, there is "Sirènes," a study of those legendary sirens of the sea who lured men to their death. Hear the work done by Ansermet and the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande on a London LP.

You have an experience in store if you don't yet know Debussy's "Iberia," a superb musical sketch of the composer's impression of Spain, especially if you hear the work conducted by Stokowski on Capitol.

The other great impressionist is Maurice Ravel. Your collection should certainly contain his ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." The score is best served by Munch on a Victor disc. Then for a taste of impressionistic piano music, I wholly recommend Ravel's "Gaspard de la Nuit." Hearing this difficult work played by Walter Gieseking on Columbia is an experience you will cherish forever.

As a last thought, I'd like to include Ravel's "La Valse," in which the composer writes his impression of a waltz to end all waltzes. Listening to Munch conduct it on a Victor disc is a treat no one should miss.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

FEB 25 1962

RECORD ROUNDUP

Classical

"Un Ballo in Maschera" (Verdi). Carlo Bergonzi, Cornell MacNeil and Giulietta Simionato are well matched in this new version of Verdi's uneven but often exceptional score, but Birgit Nilsson's voice is oversized for its requirements, Georg Solti's conducting strenuous. (London.)

Symphony No. 9 (Beethoven). George Szell and the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra reach and sustain a high average of quality in the three ihstrumental movements of this work, but the choral finale is inadequately organized. Adele Addison, Jane Hobson, Richard Lewis, and Donald Bell make a variable vocal quartet. Excellent sound. (Epic.)

Concerto No. 1 (Beethoven). Sviatoslav Richter makes a smooth-sounding experience of this work in collaboration with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch, but the totality is rather bland. The F Major (Op. 54) Sonata completes the disc. (RCA-Victor.)

SHOW BUSINESS ILLUSTRATED
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 28 1961

CONCERTS

Berlin Philharmonic. Memorial Auditorium, Burlington, Vt. (Nov. 15); Greene Hall, Northampton, Mass. (Nov. 17); Mosque Theater, Newark, N.J. (Nov. 18); Constitution Hall, Washington (Nov. 19); Davis Gym, Lewisburg, Pa. (Nov. 20); [illegible] (Nov. 21); Carnegie Hall, New York City (Nov. 22) — Wrapping up the U.S. tour with a solid repertoire of classics [illegible]

Boston Symphony. Carnegie Hall, New York City (Nov. 23 and 25); Constitution Hall, Washington (Nov. [illegible]); Academy of Music, Brooklyn (Nov. 17); Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass. (Nov. 21); Symphony Hall, Boston (Nov. 24-25); Memorial Auditorium, Worcester, Mass. (Nov. 26); Veterans Auditorium, Providence, R.I. (Nov. 28)—Symphonies by Haydn and Brahms (Nov. 15-16), works by Debussy and Tchaikovsky (Nov. 17-18) and pianist Gary Graffman (Nov. 24-26) are among the high points.

Budapest String Quartet. Washington Irving

COSMOPOLITAN
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 848,624
MAR 1962

NEW RECORDINGS

Somebody at RCA-Victor is a piano buff. Recent Red Seal releases include four piano lps that every lover of the instrument will want: the Grieg Concerto in A Minor, Op. 16, by the mighty Artur Rubinstein, with Alfred Wallenstein conducting; Brahms Concerto No. 2 with Van Cliburn backed by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony; Beethoven Concerto No. 1, Sonata, Opus 54, with [illegible] Richter and the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch; several selections by [illegible] certo in [illegible] Rhythm" Variations [illegible] Boston Pops, with Arthur Fiedler on the podium and Earl Wild performing. Attached to each of the last two albums is a gift album, Keyboard Giants of the Past, with selections (some never heard on the hi-fi before) played by Paderewski, Bauer, Gabrilowitsch and others. If bought separately, [illegible]

276

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

JAN 28 1962

Richter, Munch in Beethoven Score

By RUTH TRIPP

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch played one of its most historic concerts when Sviatoslav Richter was the soloist at the Pension Fund concert in November of 1960. RCA has recently released the recording of the Beethoven Concerto No. 1 which was the first half of that memorable event. The recording was made the following day and it captures the melodic expression and the rhythmic pulse of this great work in an extraordinary fashion. Perfection of form and color made the live performance which I heard, one to cherish. Intellectualism with warmth of feeling gives Beethoven's music the desirable balance to bring it into true focus. Richter and Munch apparently felt the drive and pulse of this score with complete unanimity. This is indeed a prize performance. For good measure, Richter plays the Beethoven Sonata in F, Op. 54 with his inimitable perfection of style and technique.

Another RCA release, of interest to the front rank of contemporary music lovers, is called "Studies in Improvisation" by Lukas Foss and the Improvisation Chamber Ensemble. Members of the group are, in addition to Foss: Richard Dufallo, clarinet; Charles Delancy, percussion; Howard Colf, cello; and David Duke, French horn.

This record documents music of this type for the first time. Lukas Foss became interested in ensemble improvisation in 1957 and his colleagues in this venture, with the exception of the horn player, have toured nationally and have made appearances with the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Last summer at Tanglewood, we heard a Foss score which was new but which was read from scores by the ensemble which performed. It seemed incredibly difficult.

A booklet which is included with this recording of improvisation, reproduces the graph which serves as a guide to the listening. To quote from the program notes for the Fantasy: "The massive chords sounded by the clarinet and cello are played on cue from the leader (the piano) who indicates with his hand or head where he wants the chords, whether they are to be played loud or soft, long or short, high or low, struck once or several times." Other notes are equally informative. The average listener would infer that it might very profitably be the experienced hand or head of a musician like Lukas Foss which would give the cues. The music sounds as orderly as much of the written contemporary scores. One sentence states that "the two fugue-themes are the result of improvisation remembered, adopted." Musicianship of a high order is the first requisite for attempting to fathom the intricacies of this recording. Nevertheless, there has been a program set up at the University of California, Los Angeles, which is working under a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. It is to recruit other improvisation ensembles and to prepare a text-book on ensemble improvisation. It would seem that this might be learning "togetherness" the hard way.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN JAN 28 1962

RECORDS: PIANISTS

Quality of Artistry High In New Issues

Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND ERICSON

IN its most recent set of releases, R.C.A. Victor has unleashed for public consumption six disks on which the quality of piano playing is staggeringly high. The artists involved are Artur Rubinstein, Sviatoslav Richter, Van Cliburn, Earl Wild, and two from the past, the late William Kapell and Sergei Rachmaninoff.

Mr. Rubinstein's vehicle is Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, which he plays with the R.C.A. Victor Symphony under the direction of Alfred Wallenstein (LM 2566; stereo LSC 2566). This was the first concerto that the pianist recorded in this country, in 1942, and the new version represents his fourth on disks. This last one, according to the pianist, "is the most perfect recording I have made."

The performance has sustained power and is virtuosic with the virtuosity concealed. Because of the orthodoxy of Mr. Rubinstein's interpretation, and because the Grieg concerto is shopworn these days, the recording is not so welcome as the one released just previously, on which Mr. Rubinstein plays Chopin's Piano Concerto in E minor (LM 2575; stereo LSC 2575).

Unsurpassable

The latter is a recording that it will be impossible to better. Other versions on disks, such as Novaes', may hold the affections just as strongly for their special character, but they cannot surpass Mr. Rubinstein's for its superb balance of vitality and mellowness, of passion and wisdom. The long aria for piano that makes up the Romanza moves almost in an intangible world, it is so lovely.

Supporting the pianist are Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and the New Symphony Orchestra of London.

To return to the Grieg recording, Mr. Rubinstein fills out the disk with five short works that he frequently plays as encores. These are Schumann's Romance in F sharp, Villa-Lobos' Polichinelle, Liszt's Valse Oubliée No. 1, Prokofieff's March from The Love for Three Oranges and Falla's Ritual Fire Dance. All are played to perfection.

Sviatoslav Richter is said to prefer Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C to all other works in this form, and this is what he plays in his latest release (LM 2544; stereo LSC 2544). Beethoven's Piano Sonata in F, Op. 54, is also on the recording. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform in the concerto.

Mr. Richter prefers Beethoven's First Concerto because it "represents to him the finest relationship of material, form and length." His performance bristles with excitement and energy. The tempos are fast, but the finger action is so clean and even that nothing sounds rushed or driven. The command of technical resources makes it possible for the pianist to illuminate the work's smallest detail without slowing down the momentum. Beside this version others seem fussy and pale. Mr. Munch and the Bostonians keep up with Mr. Richter, but they would have sounded better using a more crisp style.

The little Sonata in F is given a sharp, forceful, fascinatingly colored performance.

Nothing less than Brahms' Piano Concerto in B flat occupies Van Cliburn in his recording (LM 2581; stereo LSC 2581). The Chicago Symphony, which has recorded the work with two other pianists already, and Fritz Reiner, who conducted one of those performances, are Mr. Cliburn's colleagues here.

The young pianist strides through the work with long, easy steps, as is his wont with a work of such large proportions. His technique is complete and effortless, and he uses it to keep lengthy phrases or sections flowing along in great spanning arches. The orchestral portion of the score is clearly delineated by Mr. Reiner and his orchestra.

The Khatchaturian Piano Concerto propelled William Kapell into a phenomenal, if tragically brief, career, and he recorded it in 1946 with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 35,931

JUL 10 1961

RECORDS

An Orchestral Potpourri

As against those who have wanted from the reproduction of a record the closest approximation to the blended sound of an orchestra in the concert hall, Stravinsky values instead the clear definition and the accurately proportioned dynamic values in texture that the record can give and the concert hall cannot – his example being the recording of a Bach arioso that enabled him to hear for the first time "the lute, the violas d'amore and the continuo distinguished proportionally with the bass voice." This "balanced acoustical reproduction" that is made possible by microphones is one of the things – the others presumably being tempo and phrasing – that a recording can establish for the composer as "a 'record', a document of his wishes respecting his own music"; and so "for the contemporary composer a phonograph record is as real a value as the score it interprets." The recordings Stravinsky has been making of his works have been such documents of his wishes; but their value is not merely that the performances they offer are authoritative but that they are effective, and in fact more effective than any others. Each time that Monteux has recorded Le Sacre du Printemps, reviewers have cited the fact that he conducted the first performances of the work as establishing the unique authority and effectiveness of his recorded performance; and as it happens Stravinsky has written his approval of those first Monteux performances; but if one plays Monteux's recorded performance and then Stravinsky's one is struck by the tension and power in Stravinsky's that are not in Monteux's (however one performance comparable with Stravinsky's in this respect is Markevitch's on Angel 35549 – but not the stereo version, which is unclear). And the fact that Ansermet conducted the early performances of Petrushka doesn't keep his recorded performance from being stolid in comparison with Stravinsky's.

Until now we have had the performances of Le Sacre and excerpts from Petrushka that Stravinsky recorded with the New York Philharmonic years ago; now two records of Columbia D3L-300 (mono) and D3S-614) give us Le Sacre and all of Petrushka recorded with a good studio orchestra – superbly clear, energetic and powerful performances excellently reproduced (but one of the two copies I heard of the stereo version of Le Sacre had a whistle on part of the second side). One side of a third record has Stravinsky, who is fascinating to listen to, reading his recollections of the composition and the first performances of Le Sacre; and one wishes the second side had him reading the similar material about Petrushka that is given in the accompanying notes. Also one wishes the records, notes and superb Avedon photograph of Stravinsky had not been put into a plastic case that is in every way a nuisance to handle.

The Royal Hunt and Storm from Berlioz's The Trojans, with its lovely opening section that is repeated with marvelous alterations at the end, is performed by Munch with the Boston Symphony on RCA Victor LM and LSC-2438, in addition to several Berlioz overtures: Benvenuto Cellini, Beatrice and Benedict, The Corsair and the more frequently heard Roman Carnival. I have liked very few of Munch's performances, and not all his performances of Berlioz, with whose music he operates best; but he does well with the pieces on these records.

276

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN JAN 28 1962

RECORDS: PIANISTS

Quality of Artistry High In New Issues

By RAYMOND ERICSON

IN its most recent set of releases, R.C.A. Victor has unleashed for public consumption six disks on which the quality of piano playing is staggeringly high. The artists involved are Artur Rubinstein, Sviatoslav Richter, Van Cliburn, Earl Wild, and two from the past, the late William Kapell and Sergei Rachmaninoff.

Mr. Rubinstein's vehicle is Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor, which he plays with the R.C.A. Victor Symphony under the direction of Alfred Wallenstein (LM 2566; stereo LSC 2566). This was the first concerto that the pianist recorded in this country, in 1942, and the new version represents his fourth on disks. This last one, according to the pianist, "is the most perfect recording I have made."

The performance has sustained power and is virtuosic with the virtuosity concealed. Because of the orthodoxy of Mr. Rubinstein's interpretation, and because the Grieg concerto is shopworn these days, the recording is not so welcome as the one released just previously on which Mr. Rubinstein plays Chopin's Piano Concerto in E minor (LM 2575; stereo LSC 2575).

Unsurpassable

The latter is a recording that it will be impossible to better. Other versions on disks, such as Novaes', may hold the affections just as strongly for their special character, but they cannot surpass Mr. Rubinstein's for its superb balance of vitality and mellowness, of passion and wisdom. The long aria for piano that makes up the Romanza moves almost in an intangible world, it is so lovely.

Supporting the pianist are Stanislaw Skrowaczewski and the New Symphony Orchestra of London.

To return to the Grieg recording, Mr. Rubinstein fills out the disk with five short works that he frequently plays as encores. These are Schumann's Romance in F sharp, Villa-Lobos' Polichinelle, Liszt's Valse Oubliée No. 1, Prokofieff's March from The Love for Three Oranges and Falla's Ritual Fire Dance. All are played to perfection.

Sviatoslav Richter is said to prefer Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 in C to all other works in this form, and this is what he plays in his latest release (LM 2544; stereo LSC 2544). Beethoven's Piano Sonata in F, Op. 54, is also on the recording. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform in the concerto.

Mr. Richter prefers Beethoven's First Concerto because it "represents to him the finest relationship of material, form and length." His performance bristles with excitement and energy. The tempos are fast, but the finger action is so clean and even that nothing sounds rushed or driven. The command of technical resources makes it possible for the pianist to illuminate the work's smallest detail without slowing down the momentum. Beside this version others seem fussy and pale. Mr. Munch and the Bostonians keep up with Mr. Richter, but they would have sounded better using a more crisp style.

The little Sonata in F is given a sharp, forceful, fascinatingly colored performance.

Nothing less than Brahms' Piano Concerto in B flat occupies Van Cliburn in his recording (LM 2581; stereo LSC 2581). The Chicago Symphony, which has recorded the work with two other pianists already, and Fritz Reiner, who conducted one of those performances, are Mr. Cliburn's colleagues here.

The young pianist strides through the work with long, easy steps, as is his wont with a work of such large proportions. His technique is complete and effortless, and he uses it to keep lengthy phrases or sections flowing along in great spanning arches. The orchestral portion of the score is clearly delineated by Mr. Reiner and his orchestra.

The Khatchaturian Piano Concerto propelled William Kapell into a phenomenal, if tragically brief, career, and he recorded it in 1946 with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
JAN 28 1962

Richter, Munch in Beethoven Score

By RUTH TRIPP

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch played one of its most historic concerts when Sviatoslav Richter was the soloist at the Pension Fund concert in November of 1960. RCA has recently released the recording of the Beethoven Concerto No. 1 which was the first half of that memorable event. The recording was made the following day and it captures the melodic expression and the rhythmic pulse of this great work in an extraordinary fashion. Perfection of form and color made the live performance which I heard, one to cherish. Intellectualism with warmth of feeling gives Beethoven's music the desirable balance to bring it into true focus. Richter and Munch apparently felt the drive and pulse of this score with complete unanimity. This is indeed a prize performance. For good measure, Richter plays the Beethoven Sonata in F, Op. 54 with his inimitable perfection of style and technique.

Another RCA release, of interest to the front rank of contemporary music lovers, is called "Studies in Improvisation" by Lukas Foss and the Improvisation Chamber Ensemble. Members of the group are, in addition to Foss: Richard Dufallo, clarinet; Charles Delancy, percussion; Howard Colf, cello; and David Duke, French horn.

This record documents music of this type for the first time. Lukas Foss became interested in ensemble improvisation in 1957 and his colleagues in this venture, with the exception of the born player, have toured nationally and have made appearances with the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Last summer at Tanglewood, we heard a Foss score which was new but which was read from scores by the ensemble which performed. It seemed incredibly difficult.

A booklet which is included with this recording of improvisation, reproduces the graph which serves as a guide to the listening. To quote from the program notes for the Fantasy: "The massive chords sounded by the clarinet and cello are played on cue from the leader (the piano) who indicates with his hand or head where he wants the chords, whether they are to be played loud or soft, long or short, high or low, struck once or several times." Other notes are equally informative. The average listener would infer that it might very profitably be the experienced hand or head of a musician like Lukas Foss which would give the cues. The music sounds as orderly as much of the written contemporary scores. One sentence states that "the two fugue-themes are the result of improvisation remembered, adopted." Musicianship of a high order is the first requisite for attempting to fathom the intricacies of this recording. Nevertheless, there has been a program set up at the University of California, Los Angeles, which is working under a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. It is to recruit other improvisation ensembles and to prepare a text-book on ensemble improvisation. It would seem that this might be learning "togetherness" the hard way.

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 35,931
JUL 10 1961

RECORDS

An Orchestral Potpourri

As against those who have wanted from the reproduction of a record the closest approximation to the blended sound of an orchestra in the concert hall, Stravinsky values instead the clear definition and the accurately proportioned dynamic values in texture that the record can give and the concert hall cannot – his example being the recording of a Bach arioso that enabled him to hear for the first time "the lute, the violas d'amore and the continuo distinguished proportionally with the bass voice." This "balanced acoustical reproduction" that is made possible by microphones is one of the things – the others presumably being tempo and phrasing – that a recording can establish for the composer as "a 'record', a document of his wishes respecting his own music"; and so "for the contemporary composer a phonograph record is as real a value as the score it interprets." The recordings Stravinsky has been making of his works have been such documents of his wishes; but their value is not merely that the performances they offer are authoritative but that they are effective, and in fact more effective than any others. Each time that Monteux has recorded Le Sacre du Printemps, reviewers have cited the fact that he conducted the first performances of the work as establishing the unique authority and effectiveness of his recorded performance; and as it happens Stravinsky has written his approval of those first Monteux performances; but if one plays Monteux's recorded performance and then Stravinsky's one is struck by the tension and power in Stravinsky's that are not in Monteux's (however one performance comparable with Stravinsky's in this respect is Markevitch's on Angel 35549 – but not the stereo version, which is unclear). And the fact that Ansermet conducted the early performances of Petrushka doesn't keep his recorded performance from being stolid in comparison with Stravinsky's.

Until now we have had the performances of Le Sacre and excerpts from Petrushka that Stravinsky recorded with the New York Philharmonic years ago; now two records of Columbia D3L-300 (mono) and D3S-614) give us Le Sacre and all of Petrushka recorded with a good studio orchestra – superbly clear, energetic and powerful performances excellently reproduced (but one of the two copies I heard of the stereo version of Le Sacre had a whistle on part of the second side). One side of a third record has Stravinsky, who is fascinating to listen to, reading his recollections of the composition and the first performances of Le Sacre; and one wishes the second side had him reading the similar material about Petrushka that is given in the accompanying notes. Also one wishes the records, notes and superb Avedon photograph of Stravinsky had not been put into a plastic case that is in every way a nuisance to handle.

The Royal Hunt and Storm from Berlioz's The Trojans, with its lovely opening section that is repeated with marvelous alterations at the end, is performed by Munch with the Boston Symphony on RCA Victor LM and LSC-2438, in addition to several Berlioz overtures: Benvenuto Cellini, Beatrice and Benedict, The Corsair and the more frequently heard Roman Carnival. I have liked very few of Munch's performances, and not all his performances of Berlioz, with whose music he operates best; but he does well with the pieces on these records.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,219 S. 648,179
DEC 16 1961

STEREO AND HI-FI

Suggested For Christmas Giving

By Robert C. Marsh

If you're still undecided about what to give one or another person on your Christmas shopping list let me suggest that recordings can provide a lot of sustained satisfaction in relation to their relatively modest cost. As a sort of yearend summary and shopper's aid, here is a selection of items current and choice which I have not been able to review in detail but recommend.

For the person who rates a big, handsome gift, you can't go wrong to offer the Beethoven symphonies complete as performed by Otto Klemperer in Angel S 3619H. It's one of the most beautifully packaged albums ever released, and the performances are all those of a master.

IF THE GIFT is for an opera buff (and Chicago is full of them), I suggest the "Elektra" of Richard Strauss in its first truly satisfactory recording. It's a Deutsche Grammophon set, 138690-91, and it, too, is handsomely boxed. Those whose preference goes to Italian opera are sure to be pleased with Verdi's "Otello" with Del Monaco and Tebaldi singing under the baton of Herbert von Karajan. It is a London album, OSA 1324.

Should Tchaikovsky seem appropriate, we have all three of the most popular symphonies in performances by the top orchestra and conductor of the U.S.S.R., Eugen Mravinsky and the Leningrad Philharmonic. They're on Deutsche Grammophon 138 657-8-9, and if you wish they may be purchased separately.

PERHAPS your preference runs to something more modern. Igor Stravinsky has just rerecorded his dance pantomime "The Soldier's Tale" on Columbia MS 6272, and like all examples of Stravinsky playing Stravinsky, it's wonderfully done.

If you really want to go exploring, Mercury 90278 offers Alban Berg's suites from "Wozzeck" and "Lulu" in exceptional sound and strong performances by Antal Dorati.

"HOMMAGE to Liszt" is the title of a new collection of previously unreleased recordings by Vladimir Horowitz on RCA-Victor LM 2584. Legendary piano playing by Dinu Lipatti makes Angel 35931 welcome. RCA-Victor LM 2585 gives a sampler of keyboard masters from Paderewski to Kapell.

Interesting among recent vocal records are a collection by Graziella Sciutti on London OS 25244 and a group of songs from the Bolshoi's (and the Metropolitan's) Galina Vishnevskaya on RCA-Victor LSC 2497. You can sample the Bayreuth festivals of 1932 and 1936 on two fascinating Telefunken releases, TH 970003 and 97008. If lighter opera is your choice, the same series offers an attractive collection by Peter Anders on TH 97006 and some incredible coloratura from Erna Sack on 97004.

TAPE ENTHUSIASTS are always happy to get a new reel to spin on their machines. The Munch-Boston Symphony version of the complete score of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" is certain to please almost anybody. An RCA-Victor tape, its number is FTC 2089. Angel tape 35953, with the "Gloria" and organ concerto of Poulenc, has been widely praised for its sound.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3, in A minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo, in G minor, Op. 20

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2520. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2520. SD. $5.98.

Highly polished orchestral performance fails to save Munch's strange interpretation of the Scotch Symphony. His treatment of the introduction to the first movement is most expressive, and he handles the Scherzo and the scherzo-like opening of the finale with appropriate lightness, but his tempos in the main section of the first movement and in the closing portion of the finale waver erratically from too slow to too fast. Mendelssohn's own orchestration of the Scherzo from his Octet in E flat is delivered with delicacy and precision, however.

The resonant acoustics of Boston's Symphony Hall afford spacious sonics in both mono and stereo, with the latter offering a wider lateral spread and a moderate amount of separation. The best extant version of the Scotch Symphony remains that by Peter Maag on London. P.A.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 11 1962

COMMENT IN BRIEF ON NEW DISKS

CHOPIN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in E minor; Bela Davidovich pianist, U. S. S. R. Radio Symphony Orchestra, Alexander Yansons, conductor (Artia MK 1573). A satisfactory, if constrained, performance is given by another in the seemingly endless array of expert Soviet pianists. Unfortunately, it comes hard on the heels of the Rubinstein recording, which is virtually flawless.

MOZART: Piano Concertos in C (K. 503) and B flat (K. 595); Fou T'song, pianist, Vienna State Opera Orchestra, Victor Desarzens, conductor (Westminster XWN 18955; stereo WST 14136. MOZART: Piano Concerto in E flat (K. 482); Piano Sonata in E flat (K. 282); Philippe Entremont, pianist, Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor (Columbia ML 5678; stereo MS 6278). The Chinese and French pianists find the Mozart style more congenial to their talents than the music of the Romantic composers, but for different reasons. Fou T'song's clean, easy, balanced playing and innocent temperament make a lovely, if superficial, effect. M. Entremont's somewhat brittle pianism brings a liveliness and variety of touch to the music. More interesting than Fou T'song, M. Entremont gives weight to the scores without sounding weighty.

MOZART: Variations for piano from the years 1778-83; Gerhard Puchelt, pianist (Baerenreiter BM 30 L 1512). The sets of variations on the disk are on "Ah, vous dirai-je Maman" (K. 265), "Dieu d'amour" from Grétry's "Les Mariages samnites" (K. 352), "Salve tu, Domine" from Paisiello's "I filosofi immaginarii" (K. 398), "Lison dormait" from Dezède's "Julie" (K. 264) and "La belle Françoise" (K. 353). Mr. Puchelt's playing is tidy and self-effacing, on the whole, and it sometimes has increased appeal when it becomes delicately crisp. But it is the repertory [illegible] that matters, for these convenience to have so many of them grouped on a single record.

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de Cartes; POULENC: Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani; Berj Zamkochian, organist; Everett Firth, timpanist; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor (R. C. A. Victor LM 2567; stereo LSC 2567). The absence of Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes" from the LP catalogue until this disk appeared has been curious since it is one of the composer's most entertaining works. Originally written as a ballet score in 1936, it seems a little long for its material when heard apart from the stage action, but it is amusingly witty in its rhythmic complexity and playfulness and in its use of quotations from Johann Strauss, Ravel, Delibes and Rossini. The orchestra sounds brilliant tonally but the performance is not as dry as it should be. Clean engineering marks the recording of the difficult combination of organ and orchestra in the Poulenc concerto, and the performance accentuates the score's heavier aspects.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
D. 368,437 S. 557,235
OCT 15 1961

New Classical Records

Monteux And Dvorak Glow

Two new records this month are worth more than passing interest not only for their musical value but also because one is the work of a remarkable old man and the other is by a promising youngster.

For 87-year-old Pierre Monteux, life seems to be one happy event after another. The latest is his London Symphony Orchestra recording of Dvorak's Symphony No. 2 in D-Min. (RCA-Victor LM/LSC 2489).

Obviously not so well known as the famed "New World," the Dvorak Second bears the same trademarks — the flowing melodies, Slavic spirit and borrowing of themes from one movement for another. Monteux gives a glowing account of lovely music, well recorded.

Then there is young John Browning, one of the most talented of the younger pianists, playing the Prokofiev Third Concerto and the Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand (Capitol stereo SP 8545).

Browning is a cool technician, with keyboard brilliance holding sway over romanticism. The style is well suited to the 20th-Century works. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Philharmonia Orchestra.

* * *

Other recent releases:

Beethoven: Violin Concerto in D; Zino Francescatti, Columbia Symphony, Bruno Walter conducting (Columbia ML 5663, stereo MS 6263)—A most civilized and gentlemanly version of the great concerto. Francescatti plays with a suave, beautiful tone,

PIERRE MONTEUX
A glowing account.

though some might prefer the more dramatic attack of the Milstein/Steinberg version. Beautifully recorded. Cadenzas by Kreisler.

* * *

Verdi: Arias; Eileen Farrell, soprano; Columbia Symphony, Max Rudolf conducting (Columbia ML 5654, stereo MS 6254)—A fine collection of arias from Aida, Masked Ball, Othello, Simon Boccanegra, Il Trovatore and La Forza. Eileen Farrell is in magnificent voice, although there is some slight trouble with the highest notes. Good recording.

* * *

Hearts in Three-Quarter Time: Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting (RCA-Victor LM/LSC 2556)—Here's a collection of waltzes without a single Strauss among them! Fiedler gives the full lilting treatment to the title number, Danube Waves, Girls of Baden, Gold and Silver, the Waltz from Faust and some by Richard Rodgers. Excellent sound.

* * *

Bernstein: West Side Story, On The Waterfront; New York Philharmonic, Leonard Bernstein conducting (Columbia ML 5651, stereo MS 6251) — Bernstein directs symphonic dances from his broadway score and a symphonic suite from his movie soundtrack. The music retains its freshness in this larger form and style, naturally, is authentically Bernsteinan. Good recording, highlighting wind and percussion effects.

* * *

Brahms: Ten Intermezzi; Glenn Gould, piano (Columbia ML 5637, stereo MS 6237) — These are among Brahms' last works, calm, mature and devoid of rhetoric. Gould gives beautifully clean performances, with the emphasis on the counterpoint and the singing two-part line. The recording is well done, with pinpoint focus and control.

* * *

Mozart: Flute Works; Aurele Nicolet, flute; Munich Bach Orchestra, Karl Richter conducting (Telefunken TCS 18045)—This is a remarkable bargain on a $2.98 label. Soloist and orchestra perform gracefully three charming works, the Flute Concerto in D, the Flute and Harp Concerto in C and the Andante in C for Flute and Orchestra. Youthful music, excellently performed, elegantly conceived, and given first-class recording quality. One of the most attractive basement-priced records to appear in a long time.

—By Michael Holmberg

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090
NOV 1 1961

disc data

CURRENT AND CHOICE

"ELEKTRA"—A brilliant, hair-raising account of the Strauss opera, conducted by Karl Böhm (Deutsche Grammophon LPM-8690/91 mono, SLPM-138690/91 stereo, 2-12"). The vocal splendor and near hysteria Inge Borkh brings to the title role in the recording will be familiar to operagoers who witnessed this ritual of revenge at the Met last season. Magnificent in supporting roles: Jean Madeira as Clytemnestra, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau as Orestes.

"L'ENFANT ET LES SORTILEGES"—Ravel's "lyric fantasy" depicting, in one surrealist act, the wonderland of a child's dream world as seen through the eyes of Colette (Deutsche Grammophon LPM-18675 mono, SLPM-138675 stereo). Thirtyish conductor Lorin Maazel leads the French cast through a glowing performance.

"DAPHNIS AND CHLOE"—The complete ballet, re-recorded by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony (LM/LSC-2568 mono and stereo). Favored over the even more recent Bernstein recording for Columbia. For the Second Suite alone, track down Pierre Dervaux's for Command (CC-11005 mono and stereo), a bright new one and the only one on discs, to my knowledge, to employ a chorus.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,219 S. 648,179
DEC 16 1961

STEREO AND HI-FI

Suggested For Christmas Giving

By Robert C. Marsh

If you're still undecided about what to give one or another person on your Christmas shopping list let me suggest that recordings can provide a lot of sustained satisfaction in relation to their relatively modest cost. As a sort of yearend summary and shopper's aid, here is a selection of items current and choice which I have not been able to review in detail but recommend.

For the person who rates a big, handsome gift, you can't go wrong to offer the Beethoven symphonies complete as performed by Otto Klemperer in Angel S 3619H. It's one of the most beautifully packaged albums ever released, and the performances are all those of a master.

IF THE GIFT is for an opera buff (and Chicago is full of them), I suggest the "Elektra" of Richard Strauss in its first truly satisfactory recording. It's a Deutsche Grammophon set, 138690-91, and it, too, is handsomely boxed. Those whose preference goes to Italian opera are sure to be pleased with Verdi's "Otello" with Del Monaco and Tebaldi singing under the baton of Herbert von Karajan. It is a London album, OSA 1324.

Should Tchaikovsky seem appropriate, we have all three of the most popular symphonies in performances by the top orchestra and conductor of the U.S.S.R., Eugen Mravinsky and the Leningrad Philharmonic. They're on Deutsche Grammophon 138 657-8-9, and if you wish they may be purchased separately.

PERHAPS your preference runs to something more modern. Igor Stravinsky has just rerecorded his dance pantomime "The Soldier's Tale" on Columbia MS 6272, and like all examples of Stravinsky playing Stravinsky, it's wonderfully done.

If you really want to go exploring, Mercury 90278 offers Alban Berg's suites from "Wozzeck" and "Lulu" in exceptional sound and strong performances by Antal Dorati.

"HOMMAGE to Liszt" is the title of a new collection of previously unreleased recordings by Vladimir Horowitz on RCA-Victor LM 2584. Legendary piano playing by Dinu Lipatti makes Angel 35931 welcome. RCA-Victor LM 2585 gives a sampler of keyboard masters from Paderewski to Kapell.

Interesting among recent vocal records are a collection by Graziella Sciutti on London OS 25244 and a group of songs from the Bolshoi's (and the Metropolitan's) Galina Vishnevskaya on RCA-Victor LSC 2497. You can sample the Bayreuth festivals of 1932 and 1936 on two fascinating Telefunken releases, TH 970003 and 97008. If lighter opera is your choice, the same series offers an attractive collection by Peter Anders on TH 97006 and some incredible coloratura from Erna Sack on 97004.

TAPE ENTHUSIASTS are always happy to get a new reel to spin on their machines. The Munch-Boston Symphony version of the complete score of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" is certain to please almost anybody. An RCA-Victor tape, its number is FTC 2089. Angel tape 35953, with the "Gloria" and organ concerto of Poulenc, has been widely praised for its sound.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 3, in A minor, Op. 56 ("Scotch"); Scherzo, in G minor, Op. 20

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2520. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2520. SD. $5.98.

Highly polished orchestral performance fails to save Munch's strange interpretation of the Scotch Symphony. His treatment of the introduction to the first movement is most expressive, and he handles the Scherzo and the scherzo-like opening of the finale with appropriate lightness, but his tempos in the main section of the first movement and in the closing portion of the finale waver erratically from too slow to too fast. Mendelssohn's own orchestration of the Scherzo from his Octet in E flat is delivered with delicacy and precision, however.

The resonant acoustics of Boston's Symphony Hall afford spacious sonics in both mono and stereo, with the latter offering a wider lateral spread and a moderate amount of separation. The best extant version of the Scotch Symphony remains that by Peter Maag on London. P.A.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 11 1962

COMMENT IN BRIEF ON NEW DISKS

CHOPIN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in E minor; Bela Davidovich pianist, U. S. S. R. Radio Symphony Orchestra, Alexander Yansons, conductor (Artia MK 1573). A satisfactory, if constrained, performance is given by another in the seemingly endless array of expert Soviet pianists. Unfortunately, it comes hard on the heels of the Rubinstein recording, which is virtually flawless.

MOZART: Piano Concertos in C (K. 503) and B flat (K. 595); Fou T'song, pianist, Vienna State Opera Orchestra, Victor Desarzens, conductor (Westminster XWN 18955; stereo WST 14136. MOZART: Piano Concerto in E flat (K. 482); Piano Sonata in E flat (K. 282); Philippe Entremont, pianist, Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor (Columbia ML 5673; stereo MS 6278). The Chinese and French pianists find the Mozart style more congenial to their talents than the music of the Romantic composers, but for different reasons. Fou T'song's clean, easy, balanced playing and innocent temperament make a lovely, if superficial, effect. M. Entremont's somewhat brittle pianism brings a liveliness and variety of touch to the music. More interesting than Fou T'song, M. Entremont gives weight to the scores without sounding weighty.

MOZART: Variations for piano from the years 1778-83; Gerhard Puchelt, pianist (Baerenreiter BM 30 L 1512). The sets of variations on the disk are on "Ah, vous dirai-je Maman" (K. 265), "Dieu d'amour" from Grétry's "Les Mariages samnites" (K. 352), "Salve tu, Domine" from Paisiello's "I filosofi immaginarii" (K. 398), "Lison dormait" from Dezède's "Julie" (K. 264) and "La belle Françoise" (K. 353). Mr. Puchelt's playing is tidy and self-effacing, on the whole, and it sometimes has increased appeal when it becomes delicately crisp. But it is the repertory [illegible] matters, for these convenience to have so many of them grouped on a single record.

STRAVINSKY: Jeu de Cartes; POULENC: Concerto for Organ, Strings and Timpani; Berj Zamkochian, organist; Everett Firth, timpanist; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor (R. C. A. Victor LM 2567; stereo LSC 2567). The absence of Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes" from the LP catalogue until this disk appeared has been curious since it is one of the composer's most entertaining works. Originally written as a ballet score in 1936, it seems a little long for its material when heard apart from the stage action, but it is amusingly witty in its rhythmic complexity and playfulness, and in its use of quotations from Johann Strauss, Ravel, Delibes and Rossini. The orchestra sounds brilliant tonally but the performance is not as dry as it should be. Clean engineering marks the recording of the difficult combination of organ and orchestra in the Poulenc concerto, and the performance accentuates the score's heavier aspects.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
D. 368,437 S. 557,235
OCT 15 1961

New Classical Records

Monteux And Dvorak Glow

Two new records this month are worth more than passing interest not only for their musical value but also because one is the work of a remarkable old man and the other is by a promising youngster.

For 87-year-old Pierre Monteux, life seems to be one happy event after another. The latest is his London Symphony Orchestra recording of Dvorak's Symphony No. 2 in D-Min. (RCA-Victor LM/LSC 2489).

Obviously not so well known as the famed "New World," the Dvorak Second bears the same trademarks — the flowing melodies, Slavic spirit and borrowing of themes from one movement for another. Monteux gives a glowing account of lovely music, well recorded.

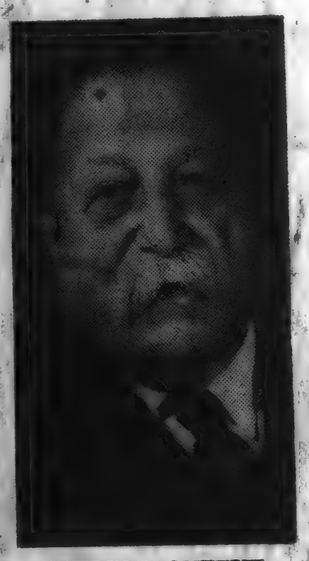
Then there is young John Browning, one of the most talented of the younger pianists, playing the Prokofiev Third Concerto and the Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand (Capitol stereo SP 8545).

Browning is a cool technician, with keyboard brilliance holding sway over romanticism. The style is well suited to the 20th-Century works. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Philharmonia Orchestra.

* * *

Other recent releases:

Beethoven: Violin Concerto in D; Zino Francescatti, Columbia Symphony, Bruno Walter conducting (Columbia ML 5663, stereo MS 6263)—A most civilized and gentlemanly version of the great concerto. Francescatti plays with a suave, beautiful tone, though some might prefer the more dramatic attack of the Milstein/Steinberg version. Beautifully recorded. Cadenzas by Kreisler.



PIERRE MONTEUX
A glowing account.

* * *

Verdi: Arias; Eileen Farrell, soprano; Columbia Symphony, Max Rudolf conducting (Columbia ML 5654, stereo MS 6254)—A fine collection of arias from Aida, Masked Ball, Othello, Simon Boccanegra, Il Trovatore and La Forza. Eileen Farrell is in magnificent voice, although there is some slight trouble with the highest notes. Good recording.

* * *

Hearts in Three-Quarter Time: Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting (RCA-Victor LM/LSC 2556)—Here's a collection of waltzes without a single Strauss among them! Fiedler gives the full lilting treatment to the title number, Danube Waves, Girls of Baden, Gold and Silver, the Waltz from Faust and some by Richard Rodgers. Excellent sound.

* * *

Bernstein: West Side Story, On The Waterfront; New York Philharmonic, Leonard Bernstein conducting (Columbia ML 5651, stereo MS 6251) — Bernstein directs symphonic dances from his broadway score and a symphonic suite from his movie soundtrack. The music retains its freshness in this larger form and style, naturally, is authentically Bernsteinan. Good recording, highlighting wind and percussion effects.

* * *

Brahms: Ten Intermezzi; Glenn Gould, piano (Columbia ML 5637, stereo MS 6237) — These are among Brahms' last works, calm, mature and devoid of rhetoric. Gould gives beautifully clean performances, with the emphasis on the counterpoint and the singing two-part line. The recording is well done, with pinpoint focus and control.

* * *

Mozart: Flute Works; Aurele Nicolet, flute; Munich Bach Orchestra, Karl Richter conducting (Telefunken TCS 18045)—This is a remarkable bargain on a $2.98 label. Soloist and orchestra perform gracefully three charming works, the Flute Concerto in D, the Flute and Harp Concerto in C and the Andante in C for Flute and Orchestra. Youthful music, excellently performed, elegantly conceived, and given first-class recording quality. One of the most attractive basement-priced records to appear in a long time.

—By Michael Holmberg

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090
NOV 18 1961

disc data

CURRENT AND CHOICE

"ELEKTRA"—A brilliant, hair-raising account of the Strauss opera, conducted by Karl Böhm (Deutsche Grammophon LPM-8690/91 mono, SLPM-138690/91 stereo, 2-12"). The vocal splendor and near hysteria Inge Borkh brings to the title role in the recording will be familiar to operagoers who witnessed this ritual of revenge at the Met last season. Magnificent in supporting roles: Jean Maddira as Clytemnestra, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau as Orestes.

"L'ENFANT ET LES SORTILEGES"—Ravel's "lyric fantasy" depicting, in one surrealist act, the wonderland of a child's dream world as seen through the eyes of Colette (Deutsche Grammophon LPM-18675 mono, SLPM-138675 stereo). Thirtyish conductor Lorin Maazel leads the French cast through a glowing performance.

"DAPHNIS AND CHLOE"—The complete ballet, re-recorded by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony (LM/LSC-2568 mono and stereo). Favored over the even more recent Bernstein recording for Columbia. For the Second Suite alone, track down Pierre Dervaux's for Command (CC-11005 mono and stereo), a bright new one and the only one on discs, to my knowledge, to employ a chorus.

278

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-8200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 26 1961

Lovely Reading of Bach

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Of Bach's four orchestral overtures, or suites," writes Tovey, "the first, in C major, is perhaps the most witty. Comparisons in respect of absolute beauty are impertinent. Masterpieces of art should never be compared, except as to technicalities and historical matters.

"When a work of art has attained perfection, it is a form of infinity; and with infinities no process of addition, subtraction, or other arithmetical operation has the slightest relevance."

As a boundary on infinity, however, the listener might well begin with Capitol's new release of The Four Suites for Orchestra, with Yehudi Menuhin and The Bath Festival Chamber Orchestra—which, in the static form of the disc, leads back to the infinity of the music again. But this superb offering can be compared to others available.

New 'Otello'

Bach's Four Suites have formidable competition in terms of the album, ranging from Klemperer to Van Beinum; but one would be hard put to single out a lovelier version than this reading. Mr. Menuhin and his colleagues display a devotion to the score that informs the majestic writing with life; while the sound captures with fidelity the pomp and formality of period style.

In the Third Suite, in D Major, The Bach Orchestra definitely outshines all other competitors. The quality of the strings in the celebrated air which Wilhelmj transposed to C, writing the violin part a major ninth lower than the original for G string and transcribing for violin and piano, reveals a lustrous glow. Throughout the same level is maintained, I'd say, making this noble Menuhin treatment of the Suites a cherishable document.

Other new albums I've enjoyed recently include Victor's sumptuously-packaged "Otello," with Tullio Serafin conducting The Rome Opera Orchestra (Jon Vickers, Otello; Rysanek, Desdemona; Gebbi, Iago; Florinda Andreolli, Cassio; Mario Carlin, Roderigo.)

Again the competition is formidable, particularly from London's Von Karajan-Tebaldi Version; but it's safe to say that Miss Rysanek easily outdistances Herva Nelli on the Toscannini long-playing Victor version. Vickers Otello is robustly sung, and he and Leonie Rysanek make a tempestuous couple, capturing every nuance of rage and impugned virtue. Now that Leonard Warren is, alas, departed, Tito Gobbi's Iago is clearly the best of the day and the malign intensity with which Mr. Gobbi enunciates the role is enough to frighten the most gelid. The stereo effects, singularly the handkerchief scene, add depth to this excellent traversal.

The latest Boston Symphony Orchestra release, also from Victor, pairs Poulenc's Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings and Timpani (Barj Zamochian, organist, Everett Firth, timpanist), with Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Both are works of immense urbanity and elegant decoration.

While I've never considered the Symphony Hall organ the lightest in the world, Mr. Zamkochian's registrations and the rhythmic deftness of his playing disclose the capabilities of the instrument, which is fully capable of encompassing the modern rococo. Dr. Munch's "Jeau de Cartes" is a color-drenched affair as it rightly should be, and the balance of sound is suavely handsome.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
JUL 1961

Stereotape Reviews

Peter C. Pfunke / Robert Jones

BERLIOZ: Requiem, Op. 5; Leopold Simoneau (tenor); New England Conservatory Chorus directed by Lorna Cooke de Varon; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-7000, $14.95.

MUNCH'S grandly-conceived performance was the subject of a feature review in the May, 1960, ARG. There's a sense of firmness and fervent intensity to the quieter sections and an explosive excitement to the more ponderous moments, while the myriad tonal forces are kept well balanced throughout. Simoneau's singing in the Sanctus is appropriately sublime in expression, though somewhat more strained than serene in a few top notes. Victor meets a formidable sonic challenge superbly: there's a wonderful spaciousness evident as well as an absolutely fearful dynamic range (the Tuba mirum portion is simply spine-chilling). I would have preferred a less pretty, more truly brassy, brass sound than Victor seems to be able to master (here and elsewhere), but this is only quibbling. In all, a glorious tape. —P.C.P.

•

BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a; Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80; Tragic Overture, Op. 81; The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Hans Knappertsbusch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, London LCL 80060, $7.95.

THERE'S not much good one can say about this playing. It is rather wooden and lethargic. London's stereo sound is excellent, though. See also page 301 in the March, 1958, ARG. —P.C.P.

•

LALO: Symphonie espagnole; Henryk Szeryng (violin); Chicago Symphony Orchestra conducted by Walter Hendl. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2051, $8.95.

ONE cannot escape a shortage in color and sparkle that is particularly noticeable in the final movement. Victor provides sonics which are quite good except for a few slight but surprising rough-sounding spots. —P.C.P.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN DEC 17 1961

LIBRARY WILL PLAY BERLIOZ RECORDINGS

Sacred music by Berlioz will be played in a recorded concert on Tuesday from noon to 2 P. M. at the Donnell Library Center, 20 West Fifty-third Street. It is one of several Christmas programs scheduled in branches of the New York Public Library.

Two works will be played in their entirety—"Te Deum," produced by the London Philharmonic Choir and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, and "L'Enfance du Christ," by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Books reflecting the spirit of the season will be discussed on Tuesday at 8 P. M. at the Kingsbridge Branch, 280 West 231st Street. The talk on "Christmas and Your Library," an annual event at the branch, will be by Miss Eileen Riols, librarian in charge.

In a world affairs discussion on Tuesday at 8 P. M. at the Riverside Branch, 190 Amsterdam Avenue, the question, "Is the Organization of American States Working for Unity?" will be debated.

An exhibition honoring marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Composers Forum, is at the Music Division of the Central Building on Fifth Avenue.

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106
NOV 1961

Music ★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★★
Stereo Effect ★★★

CHOPIN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 11
MENDELSSOHN: Capriccio Brillant, Op. 22
Gary Graffman, pianist; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
CA FTC 2050
4 track, 7½ ips
$8.95 . . . 47 min.

A remarkably successful venture. Gary Graffman is one of the most gifted of the younger set of American pianists, and he presents an individual, convincing interpretation of the Chopin Concerto, displaying a solid technique and musicianship. The result is an appealing entity, rarely heard in performances of this concerto. The attractive Mendelssohn Capriccio Brillant is an added bonus.

Sound is of the best Victor has achieved with the Boston Symphony, although woodwinds are somewhat subdued. There is a delicate interplay of string sound in the accompaniment signifying meticulous engineering. Unfortunately, there is a slight pre and post echo to mar the technical perfection of the tape.

OLEAN TIMES HERALD
Thursday, February 15, 1962

Music For Listening

By DELOS SMITH
United Press International

NEW YORK — No one can now whisper Van Cliburn is so artistically youthful he doesn't dare deal with the imponderables of the piano literature. It can't be whispered about any more because he has recorded Brahms' 2nd piano concerto, an imponderable which hardly could be more imponderable.

His musical wrestling partner in this bold undertaking was the Chicago Symphony, Fritz Reiner conducting. The result is all to the credit of pianist and conductor. There is no pianistic deference to the weight of the orchestral score but no conductorial tendency to subordinate the piano into just another orchestral instrument.

Brahms' 2nd is no light lunch either for pianist or conductor, which is not news to musicians nor their patrons. Cliburn's playing reflects long concentration on this musical sphinx. It is straightforward as usual, and enlightened with intuition. It is not disparaging to say he does not reveal the answere. Who has? (RCA Victor-LM2581).

Ths fashion is for young pianists to attack the musical imponderables. Now comes youthful Julius Katchen with a recording of Beethoven's 33 variations on a waltz theme by Diabelli. The problem is not the technical one of playing them. It is to make a whole fabric of them and then make something of the fabric.

Perhaps only one pianist in a generation succeeds. Rudolph Serkin did, in his recording of several years ago. The late Artur Schnabel could hold an audience entranced from the first variation to the last. Katchen's effort is admirable but it is spotty. He doesn't sweep you along. He'll tingle your spire with an occasional revelation and then cloud your mind with puzzlement (London-CS6203).

Reverting to Brahms' 2nd: the first American recording of the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, was of that piece and with the same orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Cliburn's recording does not supersede that one. Rather many listeners will feel that one makes his superfluous.

You remember that one because Richter's recording of Beethoven's 1st concerto, with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting, is newly issued. It is anything but imponderable which makes it all the more difficult to project tellingly. Richter does, and with no sign of strain, without apparent effort (RCA Victor-LM2544).

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
MAR 1962

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Sonata in F, Op. 54; Sviatoslav Richter (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2544, $5.98.

Gould.....Col. ML-5298; MS-6017
Rubinstein.....Vic. LM/LSC-2120

THOSE familiar with Richter's Deutsche Grammophon recording of Mozart's D minor Piano Concerto, K. 466, will have a good idea of how the Russian pianist performs this Beethoven concerto. Richter's approach is lyrical, a miracle of articulation, and somewhat lacking in gusto. The first movement cannot quite be said to achieve Beethoven's Allegro con brio. The mood, indeed, is often almost reflective, when it might with profit be more enthusiastic. Both the last two movements begin with little tension, but by the time the second subjects of each have arrived Richter is at this best. Munch and the Bostonians make a brave sound, but more pointing of phrase and dynamic nuance is required to give Richter model support. Richter's way with the Op. 54 Sonata has much to recommend it in terms of detail and tonal loveliness, but it needs more energy, more expressive contrast, to realize all the values latent in this delightful miniature. The recording is superb, quite the best likeness of Richter's sound I have yet heard. —C.J.L.

278

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 26 1961

Lovely Reading of Bach

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Of Bach's four orchestral overtures, or suites," writes Tovey, "the first, in C major, is perhaps the most witty. Comparisons in respect of absolute beauty are impertinent. Masterpieces of art should never be compared, except as to technicalities and historical matters.

"When a work of art has attained perfection, it is a form of infinity; and with infinities no process of addition, subtraction, or other arithmetical operation has the slightest relevance."

As a boundary on infinity, however, the listener might well begin with Capitol's new release of The Four Suites for Orchestra, with Yehudi Menuhin and The Bath Festival Chamber Orchestra—which, in the static form of the disc, leads back to the infinity of the music again. But this superb offering can be compared to others available.

New 'Otello'

Bach's Four Suites have formidable competition in terms of the album, ranging from Klemperer to Van Beinum; but one would be hard put to single out a lovelier version than this reading. Mr. Menuhin and his colleagues display a devotion to the score that informs the majestic writing with life; while the sound captures with fidelity the pomp and formality of period style.

In the Third Suite, in D Major, The Bach Orchestra definitely outshines all other competitors. The quality of the strings in the celebrated air which Wilhelmj transposed to C, writing the violin part a major ninth lower than the original for G string and transcribing for violin and piano, reveals a lustrous glow. Throughout the same level is maintained, I'd say, making this noble Menuhin treatment of the Suites a cherishable document.

Other new albums I've enjoyed recently include Victor's sumptuously-packaged "Otello," with Tullio Serafin conducting The Rome Opera Orchestra (Jon Vickers, Otello; Rysanek, Desdemona; Gebbi, Iago; Florinda Andreolli, Cassio; Mario Carlin, Roderigo.)

Again the competition is formidable, particularly from London's Von Karajan-Tebaldi Version; but it's safe to say that Miss Rysanek easily outdistances Herva Nelli on the Toscannini long-playing Victor version. Vickers Otello is robustly sung, and he and Leonie Rysanek make a tempestuous couple, capturing every nuance of rage and impugned virtue. Now that Leonard Warren is, alas, departed, Tito Gobbi's Iago is clearly the best of the day and the malign intensity with which Mr. Gobbi enunciates the role is enough to frighten the most gelid. The stereo effects, singularly the handkerchief scene, add depth to this excellent traversal.

The latest Boston Symphony Orchestra release, also from Victor, pairs Poulenc's Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings and Timpani (Barj Zamochian, organist, Everett Firth, timpanist), with Stravinsky's "Jeu de Cartes." Both are works of immense urbanity and elegant decoration.

While I've never considered the Symphony Hall organ the lightest in the world, Mr. Zamkochian's registrations and the rhythmic deftness of his playing disclose the capabilities of the instrument, which is fully capable of encompassing the modern rococo. Dr. Munch's "Jeau de Cartes" is a color-drenched affair as it rightly should be, and the balance of sound is suavely handsome.

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106
NOV 1961

Music ★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★★
Stereo Effect ★★★

CHOPIN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 11
MENDELSSOHN: Capriccio Brillant, Op. 22
Gary Graffman, pianist; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
CA FTC 2050
4 track, 7½ ips
$8.95 . . . 47 min.

A remarkably successful venture. Gary Graffman is one of the most gifted of the younger set of American pianists, and he presents an individual, convincing interpretation of the Chopin Concerto, displaying a solid technique and musicianship. The result is an appealing entity, rarely heard in performances of this concerto. The attractive Mendelssohn Capriccio Brillant is an added bonus.

Sound is of the best Victor has achieved with the Boston Symphony, although woodwinds are somewhat subdued. There is a delicate interplay of string sound in the accompaniment signifying meticulous engineering. Unfortunately, there is a slight pre and post echo to mar the technical perfection of the tape.

OLEAN TIMES HERALD
Thursday, February 15, 1962

Music For Listening

By DELOS SMITH
United Press International

NEW YORK — No one can now whisper Van Cliburn is so artistically youthful he doesn't dare deal with the imponderables of the piano literature. It can't be whispered about any more because he has recorded Brahms' 2nd piano concerto, an imponderable which hardly could be more imponderable.

His musical wrestling partner in this bold undertaking was the Chicago Symphony, Fritz Reiner conducting. The result is all to the credit of pianist and conductor. There is no pianistic deference to the weight of the orchestral score but no conductorial tendency to subordinate the piano into just another orchestral instrument.

Brahms' 2nd is no light lunch either for pianist or conductor, which is not news to musicians nor their patrons. Cliburn's playing reflects long concentration on this musical sphinx. It is straightforward as usual, and enlightened with intuition. It is not disparaging to say he does not reveal the answers. Who has? (RCA Victor-LM2581).

This fashion is for young pianists to attack the musical imponderables. Now comes youthful Julius Katchen with a recording of Beethoven's 33 variations on a waltz theme by Diabelli. The problem is not the technical one of playing them. It is to make a whole fabric of them and then make something of the fabric.

Perhaps only one pianist in a generation succeeds. Rudolph Serkin did, in his recording of several years ago. The late Artur Schnabel could hold an audience entranced from the first variation to the last. Katchen's effort is admirable but it is spotty. He doesn't sweep you along. He'll tingle your spine with an occasional revelation and then cloud your mind with puzzlement (London-CS6203).

Reverting to Brahms' 2nd: the first American recording of the Russian pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, was of that piece and with the same orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Cliburn's recording does not supersede that one. Rather many listeners will feel that one makes his superfluous.

You remember that one because Richter's recording of Beethoven's first concerto, with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting, is newly issued. It is anything but imponderable which makes it all the more difficult to project tellingly. Richter does, and with no sign of strain, without apparent effort (RCA Victor-LM2544).

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
JUL 1961

Stereotape Reviews

Peter C. Pfunke / Robert Jones

BERLIOZ: Requiem, Op. 5; Leopold Simoneau (tenor); New England Conservatory Chorus directed by Lorna Cooke de Varon; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-7000, $14.95.

TMUNCH'S grandly-conceived performance was the subject of a feature review in the May, 1960, ARG. There's a sense of firmness and fervent intensity to the quieter sections and an explosive excitement to the more ponderous elements, while the myriad tonal forces are kept well balanced throughout. Simoneau's singing in the Sanctus is appropriately sublime in expression, though somewhat more strained than serene in a few top notes. Victor meets a formidable sonic challenge superbly; there's a wonderful spaciousness evident as well as an absolutely fearful dynamic range (the Tuba mirum portion is simply spine-chilling). I would have preferred a less pretty, more truly brassy, brass sound than Victor seems to be able to master (here and elsewhere), but this is only quibbling. In all, a glorious tape. —P.C.P.

•

BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a; Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80; Tragic Overture, Op. 81; The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Hans Knappertsbusch. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, London LCL 80060, $7.95.

TTHERE'S not much good one can say about this playing. It is rather wooden and lethargic. London's stereo sound is excellent, though. See also page 301 in the March, 1958, ARG. —P.C.P.

•

LALO: Symphonie espagnole; Henryk Szeryng (violin); Chicago Symphony Orchestra conducted by Walter Hendl. Four Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2051, $8.95.

TONE cannot escape a shortage in color and sparkle that is particularly noticeable in the final movement. Victor provides sonics which are quite good except for a few slight but surprising rough-sounding spots. —P.C.P.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN DEC 17 1961

LIBRARY WILL PLAY BERLIOZ RECORDINGS

Sacred music by Berlioz will be played in a recorded concert on Tuesday from noon to 2 P. M. at the Donnell Library Center, 20 West Fifty-third Street. It is one of several Christmas programs scheduled in branches of the New York Public Library.

Two works will be played in their entirety—"Te Deum," produced by the London Philharmonic Choir and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, and "L'Enfance du Christ," by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Books reflecting the spirit of the season will be discussed on Tuesday at 3 P. M. at the Kingsbridge Branch, 280 West 231st Street. The talk on "Christmas and Your Library," an annual event at the branch, will be by Miss Eileen Riols, librarian in charge.

In a world affairs discussion on Tuesday at 3 P. M. at the Riverside Branch, 190 Amsterdam Avenue, the question, "Is the Organization of American States Working for Unity?" will be debated.

An exhibition honoring marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Composers Forum is at the Music Division of the Central Building on Fifth Avenue.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
MAR 1962

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Sonata in F, Op. 54; Sviatoslav Richter (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2544, $5.98.

Gould.....Col. ML-5298; MS-6017
Rubinstein.....Vic. LM/LSC-2120

STHOSE familiar with Richter's Deutsche Grammophon recording of Mozart's D minor Piano Concerto, K. 466, will have a good idea of how the Russian pianist performs this Beethoven concerto. Richter's approach is lyrical, a miracle of articulation, and somewhat lacking in gusto. The first movement cannot quite be said to achieve Beethoven's Allegro con brio. The mood, indeed, is often almost reflective, when it might with profit be more enthusiastic. Both the last two movements begin with little tension, but by the time the second subjects of each have arrived Richter is at this best. Munch and the Bostonians make a brave sound, but more pointing of phrase and dynamic nuance is required to give Richter model support. Richter's way with the Op. 54 Sonata has much to recommend it in terms of detail and tonal loveliness, but it needs more energy, more expressive contrast, to realize all the values latent in this delightful miniature. The recording is superb, quite the best likeness of Richter's sound I have yet heard. —C.J.L.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
MAR 1962

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

Ⓢ Ⓜ POULENC: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani. STRAVINSKY: Jeux de Cartes. Berj Zamkochian (organ). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2567 $5.98, LM 2567 $4.98.

Interest: Gourmet modernism
Performance: Classy
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Ditto

This record is a triumph and a treasure, for it marks the return to discs of Stravinsky's delicious score for the 1936 ballet of Jeux de Cartes in a performance that is perfection in both execution and musical manner. The score, which represents Stravinsky in one of his moods of sheer prankishness and high good humor, is as readily listenable as any work of the composer's that comes to mind; and, on its own terms, the piece is flawlessly wrought.

The present recording of the Poulenc concerto seems to me manifestly superior to the version recently extended by Angel. For one thing, Zamkochian and RCA Victor's engineers have not seen fit to produce an organ sound so massive as to cover the handsome musical detail that Poulenc has invented for the string accompaniment, and the formal outlines of the piece are more clearly delineated in this version. The piece is less fulsomely dramatic, but I rather suspect that it is more itself in the Munch version. Taken in sum, the record is sheer delight. W. F.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
D. 319,662 S. 503,572

JAN 21 1962

OFF THE RECORDS

Victor Floods Market With Piano Concertos

By Emerson Batdorff

When Victor starts turning out piano records it seems to have the same sort of trouble that afflicted the fellow in the fairy tale who couldn't shut off the salt machine.

Victor apparently got to stamping out piano records the other day and it became a habit—but a good habit, unlike the salt machine that wound up making the sea salt.

EMERSON BATDORFF

The following are Victor's results:

Van Cliburn playing Brahms' Concerto No. 2 with Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. This mature but rambling work is given the virtuoso treatment by pianist and conductor.

Rubinstein's flawless artistry in performing Grieg's Concerto in A Minor with Alfred Wallenstein conducting the orchestra.

Richter putting his honesty of purpose and strength into Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony.

Rachmaninoff displaying his magnificent dexterity and technique on a record called "The Great Rachmaninoff," on which he plays Chopin, Bach and Rachmaninoff, notably the Prelude in C Sharp Minor. He died in 1943. This music is from Victor's vault.

William Kappel letting his fingers make delicate tracery of the music of Khachaturian, Liszt, Albeniz and others on a record called "The Unforgettable William Kappel." He died in 1953; again this is from the vault.

Earl Wild, a specialist in concert Gershwin, performing Gershwin's Concerto in F and other music that glints like a neon sign in the modern jungle with Fiedler and the Boston Pops.

With each of these records there is a piano record to boot. Victor has packaged each of the above with a copy of "Keyboard Giants of the Past," on a two-for price basis. "Keyboard Giants" was reviewed here previously with mild enthusiasm.

If out of the above pianism you don't find any you like, you may reasonably conclude you just don't like piano.

A listener would have to be pretty dedicated to either piano or modernism to get much of a boot out of Bartok's Concerto No. 1 and his Rhapsody for piano and orchestra. Both these are on a Deutsche Grammophon record as performed by Geza Anda and Ferenc Fricsay with the Berlin Radio Symphony.

Anda's artistry is strained unmercifully by the Bartok. As far as I can tell the concerto is supposed to be the story of a dedicated piano tuner who is sentenced by a wicked warlock to work on a diabolic keyboard.

The piano's curse is that of every three notes struck one will be flat. The piano tuner, of course, doesn't know this and he works diligently, first slowly and then as he loses patience more rapidly, striking notes at random in hopes of repairing the instrument.

Eventually he goes insane and beats the bejabers out of the piano which actually fights back as the record ends. Listeners who can make sense out of Bartok might, of course, carp at this analysis.

On another Deutsche Grammophon record there is more calming piano music, Margit Weber accompanied by the Radio Symphony of Berlin playing a Rachmaninoff-Paganini rhapsody and other works. The rhapsody, strongly romantic, has one phrase that may eventually commend itself to some sensible popular song writer. Miss Weber is notably eloquent.

Ives Takes It Easy

In an age in which singers are inclined to sweat and strain over their work it is a distinct pleasure to listen to the effortless voice of Burl Ives.

For Decca he sings "Songs of the West," such as "Cool Water," "Mexicali Rose," and the like. What's more he sings them all in English without rendering them into nasal twangs, as is the sin of many alleged folk singers.

He can even sing "Jingle Jangle Jingle" with grace and artistry.

Charlie McKenzie, who is extremely busy at the old ivories, now has recorded "Fabulous Songs of the 50's" for Dot. His arrangements are listenable — even danceable, although he is mistaken in his belief that "Blue Tango" is a song of the 50's. As one remembers the 50's there was a shortage of truly fabulous songs so Charlie may be forgiven for going back to the 40's.

The Budwood Prima Trio performs music from an avant garde saloon for Dot. The jazz is awfully cool for this sort of weather. Budwood, by the way, calls Louis Prima "Uncle."

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 381 987

AUG 19 1961

Recording the Classics

By LEW COLE

Beginning with the faintest shimmer of muted strings Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" progresses via lavish vocal and orchestral sonorities to a climax of enormous power. For a dazzling tonal show this ballet score is perhaps the supreme achievement of a composer who knew few equals as a creator of sumptuous musical color.

A superb grasp of this brilliant score was demonstrated by conductor Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony a few years ago in a record which attained the stature of a classic of the recording art. Now Munch and the Boston orchestra have recorded the entire work afresh, equaling or surpassing their previous accomplishment. The haunting wordless chorus that runs through the work is done in beautiful style by the New England Conservatory chorus. (Victor).

COLE

A tasteful assortment of short works is offered in The Voice of the Strings (Kapp) by conductor Emanuel Vardi and the strings of the Kapp Sinfonietta. Both playing and sound are highly commendable. The program includes such sturdy favorites as the Barber "Adagio for Strings" and the Vaughan Williams "Greensleeves" Fantasia as well as such relatively unknown works as Warlock's "Capriol" Suite.

The German Mass in F Major (Deutsche Grammophon) shows Franz Schubert in a mood of serenity. Simple and straightforward, the work makes an immediate melodic appeal. The choir of the Regensburg Cathedral and a boys' choir known as the Regensburg Songbirds display vocal quality of high order against organ and orchestral backgrounds.

There can be little quarrel with the quality of musicianship in Heifetz/Primrose/Piatigorsky (Victor). These virtuosos of violin, viola and cello give a new burnish to the Beethoven Trio in D and the Schubert Trio No. 2 in B Flat. Then just for kicks—very decorous kicks, mind you—they prove to their satisfaction and ours that Bach sinfonias or three-part inventions for keyboard instruments can be made to serve very well the interests of three string players.

INSTRUMENTALIST
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,100
FEB 1962

Audio-Visual Guide

Donald J. Shetler

Educational TV Brings Outstanding Music Into Classroom and Home

In place of dull situation comedy and repulsive violence, the 60(41 VHF-19 UHF) television stations affiliated with the National Educational Television and Radio Center will telecast several hundred hours of just what the (Music) doctor ordered during the coming months.

The Instrumentalist readers fortunate enough to live in an area covered by a station affiliated with NET already know of the rich musical fare available both during daytime and prime evening viewing hours. In past years NET stations offered the Fine Arts String Quartet, The Saturday Consort, Boston Symphony, Eugene Ormandy, Howard Hanson, Boris Goldovsky, Henri Temianka, and countless other musicians discussing and performing great music. Again this year NET is presenting a menu of musical fare that should satisfy the appetite of both students and parents. Following is program content description that should be of help in planning utilization for the music teacher.

Casals Master Class. This series of 25 thirty-minute programs featuring the master cellist-teacher is continued this year. Casal's classes at the University of California were filmed by Nathan Kroll in 1960. This is perhaps one of the finest "educations" for both student and teacher alike ever put on film. The series already has won several major awards in documentary and educational film festivals.

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch conducts this world-famous orchestra in his final season. Five full length concerts, each approximately two hours in length. Music performed includes Beethoven's Twelve Contradances, Symphonies No. 6, and No. 1, Brahms' Second Symphony, Milhaud's Creation of the World, Franck's D Minor Symphony, Mendelssohn's E♭ Octet for strings. Intermission interviews are features of all programs.

Boston Pops. Arthur Fiedler conducts the orchestra in a concert including Handel's Water Music, Weber's Overture to Oberon, Saint-Saens' Carnival of the Animals, Britten's Young Persons Guide to The Orchestra, and several popular arrangements of Broadway Hit Shows.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688
MAR 1962

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

POULENC: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani. STRAVINSKY: Jeux de Cartes. Berj Zamkochian (organ). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch cond. RCA Victor LSC 2567 $5.98, LM 2567 $4.98.

Interest: Gourmet modernism
Performance: Classy
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Ditto

This record is a triumph and a treasure, for it marks the return to discs of Stravinsky's delicious score for the 1936 ballet of Jeux de Cartes in a performance that is perfection in both execution and musical manner. The score, which represents Stravinsky in one of his moods of sheer prankishness and high good humor, is as readily listenable as any work of the composer's that comes to mind; and, on its own terms, the piece is flawlessly wrought.

The present recording of the Poulenc concerto seems to me manifestly superior to the version recently extended by Angel. For one thing, Zamkochian and RCA Victor's engineers have not seen fit to produce an organ sound so massive as to cover the handsome musical detail that Poulenc has invented for the string accompaniment, and the formal outlines of the piece are more clearly delineated in this version. The piece is less fulsomely dramatic, but I rather suspect that it is more itself in the Munch version. Taken in sum, the record is sheer delight. W. F.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
D. 319,662 S. 503,572
JAN 21 1962

OFF THE RECORDS

Victor Floods Market With Piano Concertos

By Emerson Batdorff

When Victor starts turning out piano records it seems to have the same sort of trouble that afflicted the fellow in the fairy tale who couldn't shut off the salt machine.

Victor apparently got to stamping out piano records the other day and it became a habit—but a good habit, unlike the salt machine that wound up making the sea salt.

EMERSON BATDORFF

The following are Victor's results:

Van Cliburn playing Brahms' Concerto No. 2 with Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. This mature but rambling work is given the virtuoso treatment by pianist and conductor.

Rubinstein's flawless artistry in performing Grieg's Concerto in A Minor with Alfred Wallenstein conducting the orchestra.

Richter putting his honesty of purpose and strength into Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony.

Rachmaninoff displaying his magnificent dexterity and technique on a record called "The Great Rachmaninoff," on which he plays Chopin, Bach and Rachmaninoff, notably the Prelude in C Sharp Minor. He died in 1943. This music is from Victor's vault.

William Kappel letting his fingers make delicate tapestry of the music of Khachaturian, Liszt, Albeniz and others on a record called "The Unforgettable William Kappel." He died in 1953; again this is from the vault.

Earl Wild, a specialist in concert Gershwin, performing Gershwin's Concerto in F and other music that glints like a neon sign in the modern jungle with Fiedler and the Boston Pops.

With each of these records there is a piano record to boot. Victor has packaged each of the above with a copy of "Keyboard Giants of the Past," on a two-for price basis. "Keyboard Giants" was reviewed here previously with mild enthusiasm.

If out of the above pianism you don't find any you like, you may reasonably conclude you just don't like piano.

A listener would have to be pretty dedicated to either piano or modernism to get much of a boot out of Bartok's Concerto No. 1 and his Rhapsody for piano and orchestra. Both these are on a Deutsche Grammophon record as performed by Geza Anda and Ferenc Fricsay with the Berlin Radio Symphony.

Anda's artistry is strained unmercifully by the Bartok. As far as I can tell the concerto is supposed to be the story of a dedicated piano tuner who is sentenced by a wicked warlock to work on a diabolic keyboard.

The piano's curse is that of every three notes struck one will be flat. The piano tuner, of course, doesn't know this and he works diligently, first slowly and then as he loses patience more rapidly, striking notes at random in hopes of repairing the instrument.

Eventually he goes insane and beats the bejabers out of the piano which actually fights back as the record ends. Listeners who can make sense out of Bartok might, of course, carp at this analysis.

On another Deutsche Grammophon record there is more calming piano music, Margit Weber accompanied by the Radio Symphony of Berlin playing a Rachmaninoff-Paganini rhapsody and other works. The rhapsody, strongly romantic, has one phrase that may eventually commend itself to some sensible popular song writer. Miss Weber is notably eloquent.

Ives Takes It Easy

In an age in which singers are inclined to sweat and strain over their work it is a distinct pleasure to listen to the effortless voice of Burl Ives.

For Decca he sings "Songs of the West," such as "Cool Water," "Mexicali Rose," and the like. What's more, he [illegible] them all in English without rendering them into nasal twangs, as is the sin of many alleged folk singers.

He can even sing "Jingle Jangle Jingle" with grace and artistry.

Charlie McKenzie, who is extremely busy at the old ivories, now has recorded "Fabulous Songs of the 50's" for Dot. His arrangements are listenable — even danceable, although he is mistaken in his belief that "Blue Tango" is a song of the 50's. As one remembers the 50's there was a shortage of truly fabulous songs so Charlie may be forgiven for going back to the 40's.

The Budwood Prima Trio performs music from an avant garde saloon for Dot. The jazz is awfully cool for this sort of weather. Budwood, by the way, calls Louis Prima "Uncle."

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 381,987
AUG 19 1961

Recording the Classics

By LEW COLE

Beginning with the faintest shimmer of muted strings Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" progresses via lavish vocal and orchestral sonorities to a climax of enormous power. For a dazzling tonal show this ballet score is perhaps the supreme achievement of a composer who knew few equals as a creator of sumptuous musical color.

A superb grasp of this brilliant score was demonstrated by conductor Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony a few years ago in a record which attained the stature of a classic of the recording art. Now Munch and the Boston orchestra have recorded the entire work afresh, equaling or surpassing their previous accomplishment. The haunting wordless chorus that runs through the work is done in beautiful style by the New England Conservatory chorus. (Victor).

COLE

A tasteful assortment of short works is offered in The Voice of the Strings (Kapp) by conductor Emanuel Vardi and the strings of the Kapp Sinfonietta. Both playing and sound are highly commendable. The program includes such sturdy favorites as the Barber "Adagio for Strings" and the Vaughan Williams "Greensleeves" Fantasia as well as such relatively unknown works as Warlock's "Capriol" Suite.

The German Mass in F Major (Deutsche Grammophon) shows Franz Schubert in a mood of serenity. Simple and straightforward, the work makes an immediate melodic appeal. The choir of the Regensburg Cathedral and a boys' choir known as the Regensburg Songbirds display vocal quality of high order against organ and orchestral backgrounds.

There can be little quarrel with the quality of musicianship in Heifetz/Primrose/Piatigorsky (Victor). These virtuosos of violin, viola and cello give a new burnish to the Beethoven Trio in D and the Schubert Trio No. 2 in B Flat. Then just for kicks—very decorous kicks, mind you—they prove to their satisfaction and ours that Bach sinfonias or three-part inventions for keyboard instruments can be made to serve very well the interests of three [illegible]

INSTRUMENTALIST
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,100
FEB 1962

Audio-Visual Guide

Donald J. Shetler

Educational TV Brings Outstanding Music Into Classroom and Home

In place of dull situation comedy and repulsive violence, the 60(41 VHF-19 UHF) television stations affiliated with the National Educational Television and Radio Center will telecast several hundred hours of just what the (Music) doctor ordered during the coming months.

The Instrumentalist readers fortunate enough to live in an area covered by a station affiliated with NET already know of the rich musical fare available both during daytime and prime evening viewing hours. In past years NET stations offered the Fine Arts String Quartet, The Saturday Consort, Boston Symphony, Eugene Ormandy, Howard Hanson, Boris Goldovsky, Henri Temianka, and countless other musicians discussing and performing great music. Again this year NET is presenting a menu of musical fare that should satisfy the appetite of both students and parents. Following is program content description that should be of help in planning utilization for the music teacher.

Casals Master Class. This series of 25 thirty-minute programs featuring the master cellist-teacher is continued this year. Casal's classes at the University of California were filmed by Nathan Kroll in 1960. This is perhaps one of the finest "educations" for both student and teacher alike ever put on film. The series already has won several major awards in documentary and educational film festivals.

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch conducts this world-famous orchestra in his final season. Five full length concerts, each approximately two hours in length. Music performed includes Beethoven's Twelve Contradances, Symphonies No. 6, and No. 1, Brahms' Second Symphony, Milhaud's Creation of the World, Franck's D Minor Symphony, Mendelssohn's E♭ Octet for strings. Intermission interviews are features of all programs.

Boston Pops. Arthur Fiedler conducts the orchestra in a concert including Handel's Water Music, Weber's Overture to Oberon, Saint-Saens' Carnival of the Animals, Britten's Young Persons Guide to The Orchestra, and several popular arrangements of Broadway Hit Shows.

180 NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

MAR 4 1962

Richter's Record Recalls Triumph With Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Boston Symphony Pension Fund concerts often turn out to be exciting affairs, and this year's, with Isaac Stern, was no exception. The Pension Fund concert involving the Soviet pianist, Sviateslav Richter, making his Boston debut Nov. 1, 1960, proved memorable, too.

The day after that red-letter occasion — which transcended the other recitals Richter was to offer here in the winter of 1960-61— Victor recorded the Soviet artist doing the Beethoven Concerto No. 1, in C, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The disc (with the Sonata in F, Op. 54) has recently been issued.

In a way it carries on back to the old Gieseking 78 version, especially in terms of the singing voice of the piano. The performance is smooth, adroit, polished; the projection delicately articulated; the tonal background neatly balanced. It is an altogether fetching account.

'Spring' Sonata

Another statement that seems to me splendidly and gracefully uttered is the one made by Erica Morini, violin, and Rudolf Firkusny, piano, doing the "Spring" Sonata, No. 5, in F major, and the Sonata No. 7, in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2, on a Decca stereo release.

Again we have first-rate Beethoven playing, subtly integrated warmly expressive. While it seemed to me that Miss Morini's recent performance in the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the Symphony was disappointing, there is no thinness of tone here.

Rather, a glorious rapport pervades the performance; and teamwork is raised to an extraordinarily intense pitch. Of the two sonatas, it seemed to me that the "Spring" attains an easeful lyricism that seems virtually without effort.

Another violin performance — and again from Decca in stereo— involves Ruggiero Ricci performing the volatile and bravura pieces of the flamboyant Sarasate, with Brooks Smith, piano, as accompanist. The Spanish dances get underway in somewhat detached and heavy fashion, but the fourth Jota Navarra finds Mr. Ricci hitting his stride, and the rest is a fiery exposition of a colorful, rococo idiom.

The first recording of the rarely performed "Serenade Andoulouse," Op. 28, is on this disc, too. Mr. Ricci's tempered fustian captures the flavor of these showy Iberian works without becoming a series of superficial encores.

Victor has reissued a number of compositions associated with the brilliant William Kapell, who was killed at the age of 31 in a tragic 1953 airplane crash.

On the unfortunately-titled "The Unforgettable William Kapell," has been gathered the Khatchaturian Concerto, which Mr. Kapell recorded with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzsky, in 1946; Rachmaninoff's 18th Variation from the "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini," with the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra of 1951, Fritz Reiner conducting, and also Albeniz's "Evocacion," and Liszt's "Mephisto Waltz."

The performances are admirable, containing that distilled passion Mr. Kapell was able to convey unlike any other artist of his generation.

Baroque Rarities

From Vanguard emerges an intriguing rarity, the "Messo di Santa Cecilia," of Alessandro Scarlatti, conducted by Maurice Abravanel, and employing the services of the University of Utah Chorus and Orchestra. The first American performance of this work occurred only last year, and it is undoubtedly one of the summits of the baroque. The choral sound is occasionally thick-textured, but on the whole, commendable.

Finally, for some stylish concert guitar playing the Wiener Solisten, also with Vanguard, in "The Virtuoso Guitar," display a refined background. Karl Scheit is the soloist, and his program consists of works by Vivaldi, Dowland, Torelli and Carulli. The Solisten is, of course, an ensemble chosen from the outstanding members of te Vienna Academy.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TELEGRAPH
D, 69 835
JUL 5 1961

RECORDS

POPULAR by William D. Laffler (United Press International)

Folk songs have been popular through the years because they tell a story. But many can stand up on their melody.

This is eloquently proven on "Folk Songs" (Command RS 823 SD) by Tony Mottola, the veteran guitarist whose musical backdrops have been heard on many television dramas.

Mottola approaches a number of standard folk tunes with an imaginative arrangement that brings in guitars, banjos, recorders and flutes.

After gliding through "Wayfaring Stranger," Mottola and his group assault "Skip to My Lou" in a manner that will delight the stereophile.

And the "Oh Susannah" section of the Stephen Foster melody is almost as lively.

Among the other tunes that make this an exceptionally good record are "Careless Love," "Buffalo Gals" and "Good Night Irene."

String plunkers also will get a lot of enjoyment from "The Most Popular Guitar" by Chet Atkins (RCA Victor LPM-2346). Atkins does not need words to put over a song and on this LP he seems more enthusiastic than ever, even though his selection includes such "soft" songs as "Intermezzo" and "Goin' Home."

Burl Ives

For folk song fans who want words, "The Versatile Burl Ives!" (Decca DL-74152) is recommended. Ives doesn't need any help but he gets it from the Anita Kerr singers a good combination. Songs include "Mockin' Bird Hill," "Shanghaied" and "The Almighty Dollar Bill."

Selected Singles: "The Jackie Look" by Jack Barkley and the Jackies (Kenco 5016), "One Summer Night" by The Diamonds (Mercury 71831), Star Bright" by the Four Cal-Quettes (Capital 4574), "Dream" by the Spinners (Liberty F-55339).

LP's of the Week:—(Mono) "Pink Shoe Laces" by Dodie Stevens (Dot DLP 3371) and "The Johnny Hamlin Quintet featuring March Miller" (ARGO LP 4001) . . . (Stereo) "Over the Waves" by Carmen Dragon (Capital SP8547).

Griffith Cast

HOLLYWOOD, July 4.— Hugh Griffith will have an important role in "The Inspector," the picturization of Jan de Hartog's novel now before the cameras in Holland.

CONCERT by Delos Smith

"Duo-phonic" is the name Capitol has given to a technical processing which makes any old monaural recording sound somewhat like a stenographic recording when reproduced with stereophonic equipment. But just "somewhat," you understand; it is not difficult to detect the difference between "Duophonic" and stereophonic.

But it greatly improves recordings which were made before there was stereophonic recording, and many of these are well worthy of being transformed into two-channel records that can exploit stereo reproducers. The process involves duplicating the original monaural tape and then feeding multiple tapes into stereo channels with discreet alterations of one tape or another to avoid a mere doubling effect.

Capitol has inaugurated "Duophonic" by reprocessing some of its most successful monaural recordings such as Haydn's Solomon symphonies performed by the late Thomas Beecham and the Philharmonic Orchestra, songs of Stephen Foster sung by the Roger Wagner Chorale and a host of others in both the longhair and "popular" categories.

'Duophonic' Disc

"Duophonic" reminds you of RCA Victor's re-processing of the old Toscanini monaural masters to get a synthetic stereo effect, mainly of a broadened sound spectrum and the illusion of the sound originating from more than just one source. And the same aesthetic objections can be made to it. Beecham, like Toscanini, is aesthetically misrepresented; like Toscanini, he would blow a fuse at what synthetic stereo does to orchestral balances and timbres.

From Charles Munch and his wondrously responsive Boston Symphony came two recordings. One is of Schumann's first symphony, "Spring," and his Manfred Overture (RCA Victor-LSC2474); the other is of Mendelssohn's third symphony, "Scotch," and the Scherzo of his boyish E-flat octet (RCA Victor-LSC2520).

Munch has the magical sensibilities for this naively romantic music, meaning that it can be made to sound dated by all the harsh realities which have become foremost in men's minds since romanticism was in flower. Munch can project romantic sensibilities without any suggestion of strain or of make-believe.

165 Church Street — New York
LIFE MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,726 S. 796
FEB 9 1962

Records

PIANO FORTE. Midwinter classical releases are giving the piano a solid workout. Heading the younger contingent is Van Cliburn. He has a first-rate version of Brahms' Second Concerto with the Chicago Symphony under Fritz Reiner (RCA Victor). A fellow Texan, 30-year-old Ivan Davis, shows technical mastery in a batch of 18th Century sonatas by Scarlatti, Haydn and Mozart (Columbia). French-born Philippe Entremont, 28, does two by Mozart—the Concerto No. 22 and the Sonata in E flat Major with polished know-how (Columbia). Mixing Oriental delicacy with the solid craftsmanship that he learned in Europe, Yehudi Menuhin's son-in-law Fou Ts'Ong, 27, gives graceful, studied readings of Beethoven's great Sonatas Opus 109, 110 (Westminster).

Among reigning piano kingpins, Artur Rubinstein has a new version of Grieg's Piano Concerto. This is the 23rd available recording, yet Rubinstein sets off fresh fireworks (RCA Victor). The veteran Czech pianist, Rudolf Firkusny, joins Violinist Erica Morini in glowing duets of Beethoven's Fifth and Seventh Sonatas (Decca). Alternating fire and finesse, José Iturbi has a field day in selections by his Spanish compatriots, Albéniz and Granados (Angel).

A pair of great masters of the past are heard in top-flight reissues. William Kapell plays a mixed bag from

From flying fingers, fine recordings

Liszt to Khachaturian. Sergei Rachmaninoff lends his luster to a variety of familiar short pieces, including his own famous Prelude in C-Sharp Minor (RCA Victor).

For sheer brilliance, the year's grand champion is Sviatoslav Richter. The Russian giant performs Beethoven's First Concerto with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch (RCA Victor). Before this year is over Columbia and Victor will have released at least a dozen new Richters, mostly recorded at live performances during his bang-up pianoforte tour ing all over the U.S.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096

SEP 1961

1961

BERLIOZ: Overtures—The Roman Carnival, "Beatrice and Benedict", "The Corsair", "Benvenuto Cellini"; Royal Hunt and Storm from "The Trojans at Carthage"; Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch. RCA-Victor LM-2438, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2438, $5.98. (44 mins.)

Martinon, Paris Con.....London CS-6101

⑤THE four overtures contained in this record exactly parallel those recorded earlier by Jean Martinon (available in London stereo only). Together they constitute the only current records devoted entirely or almost entirely to Berlioz overtures, and only one other overture is available at all: the Leningrad Waverley, in a mixed bag on Liberty mono 15002.

Munch is a staunch adherent of superdrive Berlioz, which works out variably here. He gives quite the most exciting performance of "Beatrice and Benedict" you are likely to hear—if you can excuse his heavy-footed phrasing of the capricious main scherzando theme, which suggests a stumbling rather than a deft sparring. But the Allegro as a whole is vastly preferable to Martinon's too lethargic one. In "The Corsair", on the other hand, both Munch and Martinon fall prey to a high-speed rhythmic scramble not unlike that which frequently afflicts the "Dream of a Witches' Sabbath", annihilating Berlioz' galloping syncopations, and much else. The "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, and the Roman Carnival which is based on the same opera, are pushed to their extremity by Munch and the Boston players, though not beyond, and this may or may not be preferred to the occasionally more considered delivery of Martinon and the Conservatoire, who are certainly not lacking in fire. Where Munch really shines is in filling out his record with an exquisite performance of the Royal Hunt and Storm —the hunting horns first dreamy and impressionistic, then livelier and more realistic against the bacchanale—a real contrast to the overtures, instead of the shopworn Rákóczy March superfluously inserted by Martinon.

The stereophonic depth realized in the RCA is more evocative in this Hunt and Storm (otherwise available only in Volume 1 of Beecham's "Lollipops"!), but very impressive throughout, combined as it is with an even greater immediacy of detail than the splendid-sounding London. Note, in RCA, the emergence of the soft but important plucked bass statement in the Larghetto of "Benvenuto Cellini", of the tremolando muted violin figure (pp) that accompanies the subsequent restatement in the lower woodwind (mf), and similar points of clarification. Some of RCA's string tutti are a little coarse-grained, and the percussion sound is variable. The cymbals employed so liberally in the two Roman overtures are better on RCA, but the timpani are more effective on London. And when, at the climax of "Cellini", a thunderous bass drum is to add its punctuation marks to the timpani pounding out the entire G major chord, it is London that gets "to the bottom" of it: all you hear on RCA is more of those crashing cymbals heard already.

—J.D.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAR 4 1962

Richter's Record Recalls Triumph With Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Boston Symphony Pension Fund concerts often turn out to be exciting affairs, and this year's, with Isaac Stern, was no exception. The Pension Fund concert involving the Soviet pianist, Sviateslav Richter, making his Boston debut Nov. 1, 1960, proved memorable, too.

The day after that red-letter occasion — which transcended the other recitals Richter was to offer here in the winter of 1960-61— Victor recorded the Soviet artist doing the Beethoven Concerto No. 1, in C, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The disc (with the Sonata in F, Op. 54) has recently been issued.

In a way it carries on back to the old Gieseking 78 version, especially in terms of the singing voice of the piano. The performance is smooth, adroit, polished; the projection delicately articulated; the tonal background neatly balanced. It is an altogether fetching account.

'Spring' Sonata

Another statement that seems to me splendidly and gracefully uttered is the one made by Erica Morini, violin, and Rudolf Firkusny, piano, doing the "Spring" Sonata, No. 5, in F major, and the Sonata No. 7, in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2, on a Decca stereo release.

Again we have first-rate Beethoven playing, subtly integrated warmly expressive. While it seemed to me that Miss Morini's recent performance in the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the Symphony was disappointing, there is no thinness of tone here.

Rather, a glorious rapport pervades the performance; and teamwork is raised to an extraordinarily intense pitch. Of the two sonatas, it seemed to me that the "Spring" attains an easeful lyricism that seems virtually without effort.

Another violin performance — and again from Decca in stereo — involves Ruggiero Ricci performing the volatile and bravura pieces of the flamboyant Sarasate, with Brooks Smith, piano, as accompanist. The Spanish dances get underway in somewhat detached and heavy fashion, but the fourth Jota Navarra finds Mr. Ricci hitting his stride, and the rest is a fiery exposition of a colorful, rococo idiom.

The first recording of the rarely performed "Serenade Andalouse," Op. 28, is on this disc, too. Mr. Ricci's tempered fustian captures the flavor of these showy Iberian works without becoming a series of superficial encores.

Victor has reissued a number of compositions associated with the brilliant William Kapell, who was killed at the age of 31 in a tragic 1953 airplane crash.

On the unfortunately-titled "The Unforgettable William Kapell," has been gathered the Khatchaturian Concerto, which Mr. Kapell recorded with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzsky, in 1946; Rachmaninoff's 18th Variation from the "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini," with the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra of 1951, Fritz Reiner conducting, and also Albeniz's "Evocacion," and Liszt's "Mephisto Waltz."

The performances are admirable, containing that distilled passion Mr. Kapell was able to convey unlike any other artist of his generation.

Baroque Rarities

From Vanguard emerges an intriguing rarity, the "Messo di Santa Cecilia," of Alessandro Scarlatti, conducted by Maurice Abravanel, and employing the services of the University of Utah Chorus and Orchestra. The first American performance of this work occurred only last year, and it is undoubtedly one of the summits of the baroque. The choral sound is occasionally thick-textured, but on the whole, commendable.

Finally, for some stylish concert guitar playing the Wiener Solisten, also with Vanguard, in "The Virtuoso Guitar," display a refined background. Karl Scheit is the soloist, and his program consists of works by Vivaldi, Dowland, Torelli and Carulli. The Solisten is, of course, an ensemble chosen from the outstanding members of the Vienna Academy.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TELEGRAPH
D. 69,833
JUL 5 1961

RECORDS

POPULAR

by William D. Laffler

(United Press International)

Folk songs have been popular through the years because they tell a story. But many can stand up on their melody.

This is eloquently proven on "Folk Songs" (Command RS 823 SD) by Tony Mottola, the veteran guitarist whose musical backdrops have been heard on many television dramas.

Mottola approaches a number of standard folk tunes with an imaginative arrangement that brings in guitars, banjos, recorders and flutes.

After gliding through "Wayfaring Stranger," Mottola and his group assault "Skip to My Lou" in a manner that will delight the stereophile.

And the "Oh Susannah" section of the Stephen Foster melody is almost as lively.

Among the other tunes that make this an exceptionally good record are "Careless Love," "Buffalo Gals" and "Good Night Irene."

String plunkers also will get a lot of enjoyment from "The Most Popular Guitar" by Chet Atkins (RCA Victor LPM-2346). Atkins does not need words to put over a song and on this LP he seems more enthusiastic than ever, even though his selection includes such "soft" songs as "Intermezzo" and "Goin' Home."

Burl Ives

For folk song fans who want words, "The Versatile Burl Ives!" (Decca DL-74152) is recommended. Ives doesn't need any help but he gets it from the Anita Kerr singers a good combination. Songs include "Mockin' Bird Hill," "Shanghaied" and "The Almighty Dollar Bill."

Selected Singles: "The Jackie Look" by Jack Barkley and the Jackies (Kenco 5016), "One Summer Night" by The Diamonds (Mercury 71831), Star Bright" by the Four Cal-Quettes (Capital 4574), "Dream" by the Spinners (Liberty F-55339).

LP's of the Week:—(Mono) "Pink Shoe Laces" by Dodie Stevens (Dot DLP 3371) and "The Johnny Hamlin Quintet featuring March Miller" (ARGO LP 4001) . . . (Stereo) "Over the Waves" by Carmen Dragon (Capital SP8547).

Griffith Cast

HOLLYWOOD, July 4.—Hugh Griffith will have an important role in "The Inspector," the picturization of Jan de Hartog's novel now before the cameras in Holland.

CONCERT

by Delos Smith

"Duo-phonic" is the name Capitol has given to a technical processing which makes any old monaural recording sound somewhat like a stenographic recording when reproduced with stereophonic equipment. But just "somewhat," you understand; it is not diffcult to detect the difference between "Duophonic" and stereophonic.

But it greatly improves recordings which were made before there was stereophonic recording, and many of these are well worthy of being transformed into two-channel records that can exploit stereo reproducers. The process involves duplicating the original monaural tape and then feeding multiple tapes into stereo channels with discreet alterations of one tape or another to avoid a mere doubling effect.

Capitol has inaugurated "Duophonic" by reprocessing some of its most successful monaural recordings such as Haydn's Solomon symphonies performed by the late Thomas Beecham and the Philharmonic Orchestra, songs of Stephen Foster sung by the Roger Wagner Chorale and a host of others in both the long-hair and "popular" categories.

'Duophonic' Disc

"Duophonic" reminds you of RCA Victor's re-processing of the old Toscanini monaural masters to get a synthetic stereo effect, mainly of a broadened sound spectrum and the illusion of the sound originating from more than just one source. And the same aesthetic objections can be made to it. Beecham, like Toscanini, is aesthetically misrepresented; like Toscanini, he would blow a fuse at what synthetic stereo does to orchestral balances and timbres.

From Charles Munch and his wondrously responsive Boston Symphony came two recordings. One is of Schumann's first symphony, "Spring," and his Manfred Overture (RCA Victor LSC2474); the other is of Mendelssohn's third symphony, "Scotch," and the Scherzo of his boyish E-flat octet (RCA Victor LSC2520).

Munch has the magical sensibilities for this naively romantic music, meaning that it can be made to sound dated by all the harsh realities which have become foremost in men's minds since romanticism was in flower. Munch can project romantic sensibilities without any suggestion of strain or of make-believe.

165 Charles Street — New York
LIFE MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,726 S. 796
FEB 9 1962

Records

PIANO FORTE. Midwinter classical releases are giving the piano a solid workout. Heading the younger contingent is Van Cliburn. He has a first-rate version of Brahms' Second Concerto with the Chicago Symphony under Fritz Reiner (RCA Victor). A fellow Texan, 30-year-old Ivan Davis, shows technical mastery in a batch of 18th Century sonatas by Scarlatti, Haydn and Mozart (Columbia). French-born Philippe Entremont, 28, does two by Mozart—the Concerto No. 22 and the Sonata in B flat Major with polished know-how (Columbia). Mixing Oriental delicacy with the solid craftsmanship that he learned in Europe, Yehudi Menuhin's son-in-law Fou Ts'Ong, 27, gives graceful, studied readings of Beethoven's great Sonatas Opus 109, 110 (Westminster).

Among reigning piano kingpins, Artur Rubinstein has a new version of Grieg's Piano Concerto. This is the 23rd available recording, yet Rubinstein sets off fresh fireworks (RCA Victor). The veteran Czech pianist, Rudolf Firkusny, joins Violinist Erica Morini in glowing duets of Beethoven's Fifth and Seventh Sonatas (Decca). Alternating fire and finesse, José Iturbi has a field day in selections by his Spanish compatriots, Albéniz and Granados (Angel).

A pair of great masters of the past are heard in top-flight reissues. William Kapell plays a mixed bag from

From flying fingers, fine recordings

Liszt to Khachaturian. Sergei Rachmaninoff lends his luster to a variety of familiar short pieces, including his own famous Prelude in C-Sharp Minor (RCA Victor).

For sheer brilliance, the year's grand champion is Sviatoslav Richter. The Russian giant performs Beethoven's First Concerto with the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch (RCA Victor). Before this year is over Columbia and Victor will have released at least a dozen new Richters, mostly recorded at live performances during his bang-up piano-playing all over the U.S.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,098
SEP 1961
1961

BERLIOZ: Overtures—The Roman Carnival, "Beatrice and Benedict", "The Corsair", "Benvenuto Cellini"; Royal Hunt and Storm from "The Trojans at Carthage"; Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch. RCA-Victor LM-2438, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2438, $5.98. (44 mins.)

Martinon, Paris Con.....London CS-6101

⑧THE four overtures contained in this record exactly parallel those recorded earlier by Jean Martinon (available in London stereo only). Together they constitute the only current records devoted entirely or almost entirely to Berlioz overtures, and only one other overture is available at all: the Leningrad Waverley, in a mixed bag on Liberty mono 15002.

Munch is a staunch adherent of super-drive Berlioz, which works out variably here. He gives quite the most exciting performance of "Beatrice and Benedict" you are likely to hear—if you can excuse his heavy-footed phrasing of the capricious main scherzando theme, which suggests a stumbling rather than a deft sparring. But the Allegro as a whole is vastly preferable to Martinon's too lethargic one. In "The Corsair", on the other hand, both Munch and Martinon fall prey to a high-speed rhythmic scramble not unlike that which frequently afflicts the "Dream of a Witches' Sabbath", annihilating Berlioz' galloping syncopations, and much else. The "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, and the Roman Carnival which is based on the same opera, are pushed to their extremity by Munch and the Boston players, though not beyond, and this may or may not be preferred to the occasionally more considered delivery of Martinon and the Conservatoire, who are certainly not lacking in fire. Where Munch really shines is in filling out his record with an exquisite performance of the Royal Hunt and Storm —the hunting horns first dreamy and impressionistic, then livelier and more realistic against the bacchanale—a real contrast to the overtures, instead of the shopworn Rákóczy March superfluously inserted by Martinon.

The stereophonic depth realized in the RCA is more evocative in this Hunt and Storm (otherwise available only in Volume 1 of Beecham's "Lollipops"!), but very impressive throughout, combined as it is with an even greater immediacy of detail than the splendid-sounding London. Note, in RCA, the emergence of the soft but important plucked bass statement in the Larghetto of "Benvenuto Cellini", of the tremolando muted violin figure (pp) that accompanies the subsequent restatement in the lower woodwind (mf), and similar points of clarification. Some of RCA's string tutti are a little coarse-grained, and the percussion sound is variable. The cymbals employed so liberally in the two Roman overtures are better on RCA, but the timpani are more effective on London. And when, at the climax of "Cellini", a thunderous bass drum is to add its punctuation marks to the timpani pounding out the entire G major chord, it is London that gets "to the bottom" of it; all you hear on RCA is more of those crashing cymbals heard already.

—J.D.

PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR-NEWS
D. 40,379
FEB 18 1962

Classical Records

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Sonata in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, piano, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor LM-2544.

This recording has been eagerly awaited by all Richter fans, and indeed by most lovers of piano music. It is a pleasure to report that the wait has not been in vain, and that even the most demanding must admire this superb record.

Richter's playing throughout is at once delicate and powerful, always beautiful, sure, and fitting, and with a marvelous sense of unbroken line; he forgets neither where he is going nor where he has been. Munch's sympathetic and brilliant collaboration reminds us once again that conductors who are self-effacingly polite to visiting soloists are in reality very poor hosts.

The Sonata in F is more than a filler. As played here, it demonstrates that many "minor" works lose that ridiculous tag when great artists go to work with them. Victor's engineers have done better than usual in both works. Everything about this record both satisfies greatly and whets the appetite for still unreleased Richter American recordings.

—Blain Hightower

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

Music on the Air

By Walter H. Stern

Mid-Summer Memo

The following report of a recent discussion casts an interesting, though somewhat gloomy light, on the status of the professional musician:

WALTER H. STERN

Six of the nation's most distinguished musical personalities—Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman—participated in a specially produced seminar, which was broadcast on the CBS Radio Network Friday, Aug. 18.

Their conversation was taped in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., with Mr. Copland the moderator. The general topic was "The Direction of Music in America."

On the subject of the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, the panel expressed some gloom. Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year-round position."

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, added: "I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain small middle class or upper middle class of people. In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music. Then, the surroundings must be right. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up. Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

Leonard Bernstein, conductor-composer, stated: "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government. We are not by nature pre-disposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me. But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is injust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies ... support the arts to an extraordinary extent including ... Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . . "

Speaking of the aspirations of young symphonic composers, Mr. Copland said: "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras, and the cure is simple. All that has to happen is that our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers. Contemporary works of a more advanced kind are becoming less and less played on symphony programs. The young composer who writes a score and has very little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

Mr. Leinsdorf added: "I feel very sad for the young composer of today who does not know for whom he is writing. Haydn . . . knew he was writing for Prince Esterhazy for many years. In fact, when somebody asked the old master, 'why have you written so many quartets, so many symphonies, so many sonatas, so many baritone trios? Why have you never written a quintet?', Haydn thought a bit and replied, 'because nobody ever asked me to write any.' Haydn ... then was writing for an audience whom he knew. I feel very keenly for the loneliness of today's young composer who is writing for an unknown audience."

On the question of "what constitutes originality in composition," Mr. Bernstein stated: "The good scores are the ones that are original without trying, without the composer necessarily saying: 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

Discussing the problem of public acceptance of a new, unorthodox classical composition, Mr. Leinsdorf insisted: "The performer cannot exist unless he gets a supply of new, vital, and interesting music. This is really the vital concern of all of us."

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 16,710
DEC 15 1961

Recorded MUSIC

Edited by PHILIP L. MILLER

Guest Reviewer: James B. Coover,

Music Librarian, Vassar College,

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

All records reviewed are 12", 33.3 rpm, Monophonic ($4.98) or Stereophonic ($5.98) except as indicated: BC—Epic (ST); BSC—Epic (ST, $5.98 each); LSC—Victor (ST); MG—Mercury (MON); MS—Columbia (ST); Music Guild (ST, members $4.88; nonmembers $6.50); S—Angel (ST); SG—Capitol (ST); SLPM—Deutsche Grammophon (ST, $6.98); SRV—Vanguard (ST. Demo, $2.98); WEST—Westminster (MON).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC — OUTSTANDING

BERG: 3 Pieces for Orchestra, op. 6. WEBERN: 6 Pieces for Orchestra, op. 6. SCHOENBERG: Begleitungsmusik, op. 34. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Robert Craft, cond. MS 6216 (ST)

To set things in time: The Webern piece (here in its original version) dates from 1909, the Mahler-like Berg from 1914-15, and the Schoenberg from 1929-30. The earliest seems the most radical, but only the most determined reactionary could deny that all three are impressive and likeable works. Rosbaud's performance of the Webern op. 6 (on West. 18807—MON) is the 1928 version with smaller orchestra, and he also performs the Berg, but Craft's readings defy competition for their clarity and orchestral precision. Schoenberg's work appears for the first time on record here. All in all, practically essential for any library.

BRAHMS: Symphonies; Tragic Overture; Academic Festival Overture. Philharmonia Orch.; Otto Klemperer, cond. S-3614-D (4-12 ST)

With Klemperer, there are no anomalous or noncontributing notes in Brahms' symphonies; they all make sense. Not since Toscanini recreated these works with the ultimate instrument, the NBC orchestra, have such profoundly moving versions been heard. Klemperer views Brahms somberly, expansively, allowing the drama to accumulate rather than explode. If purposefulness is the earmark of his interpretation, clarity is certainly a distinguishing aural characteristic. It will be a long time before these performances are surpassed. Fine stereo sound.

BRUCKNER: Symphony no. 9., D minor. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Bruno Walter, cond. MS 6171 (ST)

By predilection and past experience hardly anyone is better prepared to interpret Bruckner's fervently religious 9th than Mr. Walter, and while there are tauter versions available—in monaural only—none is more moving and cohesive. Columbia's stereo recording adds the final excellence to a highly recommended record.

HANDEL: Concertos for Organ and Orch., op. 4 nos. 1, 2 and 4, and op. 7, no. 1. Ralph Downes, organ; London Chamber Orch.; Anthony Bernard, dir. Music Guild S-3 (ST)

This superb disc serves to introduce libraries who have not heard the Guild's offerings to a record club in which they all should be vitally interested. It promises them not only excellent records such as this (of hitherto unrecorded works), but also—and its catalog already lists these—recordings of Purcell's "Indian Queen," Josquin's "Missa Hercule d'Este," and other needed items. Members are given a chance to recommend works which they think should be, but which are not at present, recorded. A club for the customer, not the record manufacturer! Whether they join or not, libraries should purchase this wonderful disc.

MOZART: Piano concerto, C major, K.415; Piano Sonata, F major, K.280; Variations on "Ah vous dirais-je, Maman," K.265. Clara Haskil, piano; Festival Strings, Lucerne; Rudolf Baumgartner, cond. SLPM 138670 (ST)

Like her contemporary Erica Morini, the violinist, Miss Haskil forces the listener to concentrate on each and every note. Such concentration is effortless, and the rewards enormous. With restraint and subtlety these artists make each note a vital entity serving its own unique function. Performances like these are impossible to describe, lending themselves only to ecstatic commendation. Inspired, sublime musik-making! Warm, complementary stereo sound.

SCHULLER: 7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. FETLER: Contrasts for Orchestra. Minneapolis Sym. Orch.; Antal Dorati, cond. MG 50282 (MON)

A fine recording, excellently engineered, of difficult pieces, thoroughly rehearsed, in peerless performances. Schuller's pieces have their genesis in well-known paintings of Klee, including the "Twittering Machine!" (which David Diamond has also set), "Abstrakte Trio," and "Arabische Stadt," and they are eminently engaging. Fetler, whose work is less progammatic, and Schuller both skillfully exploit a wide range of instruments for a vast number of sonorous effects—Fetler in large masses, Schuller in thinner textures. Important works which most libraries will want.

SCHUMANN: The Four Symphonies and the Piano Concerto, Leon Fleisher, piano; Cleveland Orch.; George Szell, cond. BSC 110 (4-12" ST)

By following his admonition to other conductors to think and use common sense about

*Mr. Miller is Chief of the Music Division, New York Public Library, N.Y.C.

AUDIO
MINEOLA, N.Y.
MONTHLY 26,305
JUL 1961

Mendelssohn: Scotch Symphony; Scherzo from the Octet, Op. 20. Boston Symphony, Munch.

RCA Victor LSC 2520 stereo

It's getting so I really don't know what to say about the many Boston Symphony recordings with Munch that keep coming along. I had expected, confidently, that this would be something special; the companion recording of the "Reformation" Symphony was absolutely superb, to my great delight. (But the "Italian" on its reverse side struck me as dull as dishwater.) Instead, though there are flashes of the marvelous music-making of the "Reformation" recording, this one mainly settles on the usual Munch-Boston type of performing; expert and impeccably tailored but somehow listless, dull, surprisingly tasteless. It happens again and again and it must be Munch. He evokes our enthusiasm mainly in French works and notably in Berlioz, whom he champions as Walter champions Mahler.

To mix metaphors, the current BSO playing is to me like tasteless velvet. It looks good, it's polished, beautiful to behold, in the best of taste, yet minus musical flavor. The difference is in a million details and, if I'm right, in a single pair of musical ears, that somehow do not require the BSO to play musically in the deepest sense. Munch's ears. Who else?

P.S. And why that tired old orchestral arrangement of the sparkling Mendelssohn "Octet," the Scherzo, that gets used for every recording, every performance that needs a quick few minutes of "fill," to time! The BSO doesn't need to show off its playing skill; imaginative programming would have found something better.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY C RC NOT AVAIL
MAR 1962

The Last Word

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1; Piano Sonata, Op. 54. Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Sviatoslav Richter, piano. (RCA Victor LM 2544* $4.98) (LSC 2544 $5.98)

Reviewers frequently hedge when it comes to naming the best recording of a standard work. I am willing to crawl out on a limb, though, and state that Richter has the last word on the Beethoven First Concerto.

From the opening piano entrance it is obvious that something special is afoot. Phrases arch and flow together with complete naturalness and beauty. There is a superb balance between gentleness and power, repose and majesty. Mr. Richter's command of color and control of rhythm recasts this familiar work in the most meaningful form it has yet achieved on records.

It is enough to say that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony are completely equal to the task and that Victor has done a marvelous job of engineering.

The Op. 54 Sonata is beautifully played but I prefer his performance of it on Columbia, recorded live in Carnegie Hall. —John Ardoin

PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR-NEWS
D. 40,379
FEB 18 1962

Classical Records

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Sonata in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, piano, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor LM-2544.

This recording has been eagerly awaited by all Richter fans, and indeed by most lovers of piano music. It is a pleasure to report that the wait has not been in vain, and that even the most demanding must admire this superb record.

Richter's playing throughout is at once delicate and powerful, always beautiful, sure, and fitting, and with a marvelous sense of unbroken line; he forgets neither where he is going nor where he has been. Munch's sympathetic and brilliant collaboration reminds us once again that conductors who are self-effacingly polite to visiting soloists are in reality very poor hosts.

The Sonata in F is more than a filler. As played here, it demonstrates that many "minor" works lose that ridiculous tag when great artists go to work with them. Victor's engineers have done better than usual in both works. Everything about this record both satisfies greatly and whets the appetite for still unreleased Richter American recordings.

—Blain Hightower

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
SEP 1961

Music on the Air

By Walter H. Stern

Mid-Summer Memo

The following report of a recent discussion casts an interesting, though somewhat gloomy light, on the status of the professional musician:

WALTER H. STERN

Six of the nation's most distinguished musical personalities—Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Richard Burgin and Gary Graffman—participated in a specially produced seminar, which was broadcast on the CBS Radio Network Friday, Aug. 18.

Their conversation was taped in the Music Shed of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., with Mr. Copland the moderator. The general topic was "The Direction of Music in America."

On the subject of the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians, the panel expressed some gloom. Said Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops: "I think we have much to worry about with regard to the young musician seeking to make a career in the symphonic field. I believe the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man. The future is too insecure for him. He is particularly fortunate if he can get into the San Francisco Orchestra where he may work for 23 weeks. What does he do the rest of the time? If he went into electronics or something like that and he's an intelligent young man as we expect all musicians to be, he is pretty well assured of a year-round position."

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, added: "I think the problem goes deeper. I think a symphony orchestra depends upon the audience. I believe as things stand now, we have a limited audience. We appeal to a certain small middle class or upper middle class of people. In order to secure the future of symphony, we must make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with our music. Then, the surroundings must be right. A white collar worker or laborer may not want to go to a hall where he would have to dress up. Perhaps we should have special concerts where these audiences would feel more at ease, could participate, in a way, with the orchestra."

Leonard Bernstein, conductor-composer, stated: "Almost any problem you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously, the money has to come from the government. We are not by nature pre-disposed to such support for private institutions, although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me. But we still persist in calling them private and any mention of government support on a state, municipal or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism.

"I think this is injust. Some of our favorite capitalist allies ... support the arts to an extraordinary extent including ... Italy, France, the Scandinavian countries and so on. Obviously nothing is going to improve until we get some national subsidy . . . "

Speaking of the aspirations of young symphonic composers, Mr. Copland said: "Young composers are not thinking in terms of symphony orchestras, and the cure is simple. All that has to happen is that our orchestras must start thinking of our young composers. Contemporary works of a more advanced kind are becoming less and less played on symphony programs. The young composer who writes a score and has very little hope of having it performed by a major orchestra would normally turn to other forms of musical expression."

Mr. Leinsdorf added: "I feel very sad for the young composer of today who does not know for whom he is writing. Haydn . . . knew he was writing for Prince Esterhazy for many years. In fact, when somebody asked the old master, 'why have you written so many quartets, so many symphonies, so many sonatas, so many baritone trios? Why have you never written a quintet?', Haydn thought a bit and replied, 'because nobody ever asked me to write any.' Haydn ... thus was writing for an audience whom he knew. I feel very keenly for the loneliness of today's young composer who is writing for an unknown audience."

On the question of "what constitutes originality in composition," Mr. Bernstein stated: "The good scores are the ones that are original without trying, without the composer necessarily saying: 'I am going to write this series of notes precisely because they have never been written before, not because they express something.' That attitude immediately shows up on the paper when you look at a new score."

Discussing the problem of public acceptance of a new, unorthodox classical composition, Mr. Leinsdorf insisted: "The performer cannot exist unless he gets a supply of new, vital, and interesting music. This is really the vital concern of all of us."

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 16,710
DEC 15 1961

Recorded MUSIC

Edited by PHILIP L. MILLER*

Guest Reviewer: James B. Coover,
Music Librarian, Vassar College,
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

All records reviewed are 12", 33.3 rpm, Monophonic ($4.98) or Stereophonic ($5.98) except as indicated: BC—Epic (ST); BSC—Epic (ST, $5.98 each); LSC—Victor (ST); MG—Mercury (MON); MS—Columbia (ST); Music Guild (ST, members $4.88; nonmembers $6.50); S—Angel (ST); SG—Capitol (ST); SLPM—Deutsche Grammophon (ST, $6.98); SRV—Vanguard (ST. Demo, $2.98); WEST—Westminster (MON).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC — OUTSTANDING

BERG: 3 Pieces for Orchestra, op. 6. WEBERN: 6 Pieces for Orchestra, op. 6. SCHOENBERG: Begleitungsmusik, op. 34. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Robert Craft, cond. MS 6216 (ST)

To set things in time: The Webern piece (here in its original version) dates from 1909, the Mahler-like Berg from 1914-15, and the Schoenberg from 1929-30. The earliest seems the most radical, but only the most determined reactionary could deny that all three are impressive and likeable works. Rosbaud's performance of the Webern op. 6 (on West. 18807—MON) is the 1928 version with smaller orchestra, and he also performs the Berg, but Craft's readings defy competition for their clarity and orchestral precision. Schoenberg's work appears for the first time on record here. All in all, practically essential for any library.

BRAHMS: Symphonies; Tragic Overture; Academic Festival Overture. Philharmonia Orch.; Otto Klemperer, cond. S-3614-D (4-12 ST)

With Klemperer, there are no anomalous or noncontributing notes in Brahms' symphonies; they all make sense. Not since Toscanini recreated these works with the ultimate instrument, the NBC orchestra, have such profoundly moving versions been heard. Klemperer views Brahms somberly, expansively, allowing the drama to accumulate rather than explode. If purposefulness is the earmark of his interpretation, clarity is certainly a distinguishing aural characteristic. It will be a long time before these performances are surpassed. Fine stereo sound.

BRUCKNER: Symphony no. 9., D minor. Columbia Sym. Orch.; Bruno Walter, cond. MS 6171 (ST).

By predilection and past experience hardly anyone is better prepared to interpret Bruckner's fervently religious 9th than Mr. Walter, and while there are tauter versions available—in monaural only—none is more moving and cohesive. Columbia's stereo recording adds the final excellence to a highly recommended record.

HANDEL: Concertos for Organ and Orch., op. 4 nos. 1, 2 and 4, and op. 7, no. 1. Ralph Downes, organ; London Chamber Orch.; Anthony Bernard, dir. Music Guild S-3 (ST)

This superb disc serves to introduce libraries who have not heard the Guild's offerings to a record club in which they all should be vitally interested. It promises them not only excellent records such as this (of hitherto unrecorded works), but also—and its catalog already lists these—recordings of Purcell's "Indian Queen," Josquin's "Missa Hercule d'Este," and other needed items. Members are given a chance to recommend works which they think should be, but which are not at present, recorded. A club for the customer, not the record manufacturer! Whether they join or not, libraries should purchase this wonderful disc.

MOZART: Piano concerto, C major, K.415; Piano Sonata, F major, K.280; Variations on "Ah vous dirais-je, Maman," K.265. Clara Haskil, piano; Festival Strings, Lucerne; Rudolf Baumgartner, cond. SLPM 138670 (ST)

Like her contemporary Erica Morini, the violinist, Miss Haskil forces the listener to concentrate on each and every note. Such concentration is effortless, and the rewards enormous. With restraint and subtlety these artists make each note a vital entity serving its own unique function. Performances like these are impossible to describe, lending themselves only to ecstatic commendation. Inspired, sublime musik-making! Warm, complementary stereo sound.

SCHULLER: 7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. FETLER: Contrasts for Orchestra. Minneapolis Sym. Orch.; Antal Dorati, cond. MG 50282 (MON)

A fine recording, excellently engineered, of difficult pieces, thoroughly rehearsed, in peerless performances. Schuller's pieces have their genesis in well-known paintings of Klee, including the "Twittering Machine!" (which David Diamond has also set), "Abstrakte Trio," and "Arabische Stadt," and they are eminently engaging. Fetler, whose work is less progammatic, and Schuller both skillfully exploit a wide range of instruments for a vast number of sonorous effects—Fetler in large masses, Schuller in thinner textures. Important works which most libraries will want.

SCHUMANN: The Four Symphonies and the Piano Concerto, Leon Fleisher, piano; Cleveland Orch.; George Szell, cond. BSC 110 (4-12" ST)

By following his admonition to other conductors to think and use common sense about

*Mr. Miller is Chief of the Music Division, New York Public Library, N.Y.C.

AUDIO
MINEOLA, N.Y.
MONTHLY 26,305
JUL 1961

Mendelssohn: Scotch Symphony; Scherzo from the Octet, Op. 20. Boston Symphony, Munch.

RCA Victor LSC 2520 stereo

It's getting so I really don't know what to say about the many Boston Symphony recordings with Munch that keep coming along. I had expected, confidently, that this would be something special; the companion recording of the "Reformation" Symphony was absolutely superb, to my great delight. (But the "Italian" on its reverse side struck me as dull as dishwater.) Instead, though there are flashes of the marvelous music-making of the "Reformation" recording, this one mainly settles on the usual Munch-Boston type of performing; expert and impeccably tailored but somehow listless, dull, surprisingly tasteless. It happens again and again and it must be Munch. He evokes our enthusiasm mainly in French works and notably in Berlioz, whom he champions as Walter champions Mahler.

To mix metaphors, the current BSO playing is to me like tasteless velvet. It looks good, it's polished, beautiful to behold, in the best of taste, yet minus musical flavor. The difference is in a million details and, if I'm right, in a single pair of musical ears, that somehow do not require the BSO to play musically in the deepest sense. Munch's ears. Who else?

P.S. And why that tired old orchestral arrangement of the sparkling Mendelssohn "Octet," the Scherzo, that gets used for every recording, every performance that needs a quick few minutes of "fill," to time! The BSO doesn't need to show off its playing skill; imaginative programming would have found something better.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

The Last Word

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1; Piano Sonata, Op. 54. Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. Sviatoslav Richter, piano. (RCA Victor LM 2544* $4.98) (LSC 2544 $5.98)

Reviewers frequently hedge when it comes to naming the best recording of a standard work. I am willing to crawl out on a limb, though, and state that Richter has the last word on the Beethoven First Concerto.

From the opening piano entrance it is obvious that something special is afoot. Phrases arch and flow together with complete naturalness and beauty. There is a superb balance between gentleness and power, repose and majesty. Mr. Richter's command of color and control of rhythm recasts this familiar work in the most meaningful form it has yet achieved on records.

It is enough to say that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony are completely equal to the task and that Victor has done a marvelous job of engineering.

The Op. 54 Sonata is beautifully played but I prefer his performance of it on Columbia, recorded live in Carnegie Hall.

—John Ardoin

282

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695

DEC 1 0 1961

HI-FI

By PRESTON McGRAW

Americans are spending more for music—and that includes high fidelity equipment, records and tapes—than they are for sports. A major part of the expenditure is for classical music.

Last year, Americans spent $1.5 billion on music—one-third more than they spent on all sports combined.

These figures were given in New York recently by H. T. Harwood of Shure Brothers, Inc., Evanston, Ill. Shure, which makes high fidelity pickup arms, cartridges and microphones, held its second annual symposium in New York and Harwood introduced the panel.

VARIED PANELISTS

The panelists whom Harwood, director of public relations for Shure, introduced, were Opera Star Rise Stevens; George R. Marek, vice president, general manager RCA Victor Record Co.; Dr. Raymond Kendall, dean of the school of music of the University of Southern California, and Congressman Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Select Subcommittee on Education.

Harwood set the stage for speeches by the panelists with these facts:

—Americans supported nearly 1,200 symphony orchestras in 1960, more than the rest of the world combined. The American Symphony Orchestra League in 1960 reported more sold-out houses and high ticket sales than ever before, about $150 million.

—More than 35 million Americans owned phonographs or more sophisticated music reproducing equipment and spent $100 million on classical records. This contrasted with $50 million for baseball.

—More than 32 million Americans were amateur musicians. This compared with 19 million a decade before.

—Citizens across the country performed in more than 1,100 amateur symphony orchestras. A third of these were in cities of 50,000 population or less, and 10 per cent in cities of less than 10,000 people.

And yet, the speakers warned, music in the United States is in trouble.

"Only three orchestras in Europe equal symphony orchestras in Boston, New York, Chicago and Philadelphia," Miss Stevens said. "We have approximately 30 of the world's great living pianists —more than ever in history. We have facilities such as television that could provide the widest exposure for the arts ever conceived."

But unless something is done, Miss Stevens said:

—"Orchestras will continue to play at the mercy of charity."

—"Only 10 of these 30 pianists will make a living at it and only three or four will make a living they deserve."

—"Television may continue to worship . . . only ratings."

—"Our global image will tail to reflect our true cultural growth."

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D 61 644 S. 74 228

NOV 5 1961

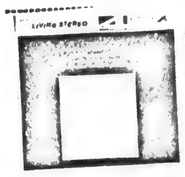
Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given us a complete recording of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" on RCA-Victor's LM 2568. This rich and colorful work is magnificently performed by the Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch's direction.

Originally written at the request of Sergei Diaghileff for one of his ballet productions, it is the second and third parts of the ballet music that are most familiar to the concert audiences. In playing the entire work, Mr. Munch restores Daphnis and Chloe to a single rounded work. Mr. John Burk in writing the notes on the cover of the album says this is a restitution long overdue in America.

I heartily agree with Mr. Burk, the work deserves a complete hearing for it is indeed beautiful music — sensitive and poetic. This is highly recommended for quality and performance.

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106

JAN 1962



Music ★★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★
Stereo Effect ★★

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete ballet)
New England Conservatory Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
RCA FTC 2089
4-track, 7½ ips
$8.95....56 mins.

It's interesting to note that this is Munch's second stereo recording of this music; his earlier one, also with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is available only on a 3¾ ips cartridge. This new performance is, of course, superb, but if I had to make a choice between the two versions, I would chose the earlier one, because it has better sound.

Perhaps some listeners will like the kind of reproduction on this new tape. It is remarkably transparent, and of wide dynamic range. However, the Boston Symphony sounds colorless as recorded here, with a distant pickup, and tympani that sound all out of proportion to the rest of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony surely deserves better than this.

Tape hiss is very low, but there is some print-through of the overly-prominent tympani. The Monteux-London Symphony version on London L 80034, $7.95, is preferable to this, but we must still wait for a truly great recording of this music

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688

OCT 1961

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

FEB 1962

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë

New England Conservatory Choir, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
●● RCA VICTOR FTC 2089. 55 min. $8.95.

My earlier review (October 1961) of this performance in its disc edition was necessarily so preoccupied with comparisons between it and Munch's earlier version of 1955 that there was no opportunity to extend the discussion to include the long-famous Monteux version for London. But, as the latter is available—and widely esteemed—on 4-track tape. I can no longer dodge the problem of comparison.

The result of that comparison isn't difficult, except perhaps for Monteux devotees like myself to accept. Monteux's more leisurely reading retains, of course, all its distinctive attractions—above all, the unique insights of the masterpiece's first interpreter. But in enchantment and dramatic passion Munch outdoes the Old Master, while in orchestral and tonal opulence and in executant finesse the Bostonians are clearly superior to Monteux's Londoners; and—beautiful as the London recording remains—it is surpassed in dynamic range, spaciousness, and impact by the superb RCA Victor engineering.

I regret that the present taping doesn't follow London's example of locating the side "break" at a natural score pause, but at least the immaculate tape processing has effectively reduced the surface noise which seriously detracted from the stereo disc's ability to convey the atmospheric magic of the softest passages. This tape must rank as a triumphant representation of the 4-track medium at the peak of its current capabilities.

HIFI/STEREO REVIEW'S THE TOP RECORDINGS

BEST OF THE MONTH

CLASSICAL

A NEW STANDARD FOR DAPHNIS AND CHLOE

An impassioned performance by Munch and his Bostonians

WITH THE new RCA Victor stereo recording of Ravel's complete Daphnis and Chloe the Boston Symphony Orchestra reasserts the almost proprietary claim it has had to the score since the days in the early 1930's when the Suite No. 2 had become established as one of Serge Koussevitzky's favorite showpieces. And the claim is a strong one, for the performance conducted by Charles Munch is a wonderfully impassioned one, and the RCA engineers have captured it in brilliant sound.

Ravel spoke of his Daphnis and Chloe dance score as a choreographic symphony, and although he made two separate concert suites that had their premieres even before Diaghilev staged the full ballet in 1912, the grandeur of Ravel's truly symphonic conception can be appreciated only in terms of a complete performance of the music—including the offstage chorus in vocalise, and, for that matter, including the highly evocative wind-machine in Part 2. Full-scale performances of Daphnis and Chloe were rare indeed before the Second World War, but since then it has begun to enjoy a vogue of sorts as a gala concert piece, and, since the 1953 London release of a performance in which Ernest Ansermet conducted the Suisse Romande Orchestra, there have been more than half a dozen recordings of the whole score. Among these, the new Munch reading is one of three now available that can be called truly distinguished. Certainly, in terms of theatrical excitement, orchestral virtuosity, and gorgeously high-powered recorded sound, it is decisively the best, for it has a dramatic power that is lacking in Pierre Monteux's recent London recording, and in execution and engineering it far surpasses the well-paced monophonic Mercury recording conducted by Antal Dorati. All the instruments, from Ravel's antique cymbals to bass drum and wind machine, are audible in precisely right measure; the elegance of the flute in the Pan and Syrinx episode has never

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

CHARLES MUNCH
A superb reading of Daphnis

(continued overleaf)

282

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695

DEC 10 1961

HI-FI

By PRESTON McGRAW

Americans are spending more for music—and that includes high fidelity equipment, records and tapes—than they are for sports. A major part of the expenditure is for classical music.

Last year, Americans spent $1.5 billion on music—one-third more than they spent on all sports combined.

These figures were given in New York recently by H. T. Harwood of Shure Brothers, Inc., Evanston, Ill. Shure, which makes high fidelity pickup arms, cartridges and microphones, held its second annual symposium in New York and Harwood introduced the panel.

VARIED PANELISTS

The panelists whom Harwood, director of public relations for Shure, introduced, were Opera Star Rise Stevens; George R. Marek, vice president, general manager RCA Victor Record Co.; Dr. Raymond Kendall, dean of the school of music of the University of Southern California, and Congressman Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Select Subcommittee on Education.

Harwood set the stage for speeches by the panelists with these facts:

—Americans supported nearly 1,200 symphony orchestras in 1960, more than the rest of the world combined. The American Symphony Orchestra League in 1960 reported more sold-out houses and high ticket sales than ever before, about $150 million.

—More than 35 million Americans owned phonographs or more sophisticated music reproducing equipment and spent $100 million on classical records. This contrasted with $50 million for baseball.

—More than 32 million Americans were amateur musicians. This compared with 19 million a decade before.

—Citizens across the country performed in more than 1,100 amateur symphony orchestras. A third of these were in cities of 50,000 population or less, and 10 per cent in cities of less than 10,000 people.

And yet, the speakers warned, music in the United States is in trouble.

"Only three orchestras in Europe equal symphony orchestras in Boston, New York, Chicago and Philadelphia," Miss Stevens said. "We have approximately 30 of the world's great living pianists —more than ever in history. We have facilities such as television that could provide the widest exposure for the arts ever conceived."

But unless something is done, Miss Stevens said:

—"Orchestras will continue to play at the mercy of charity."

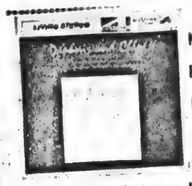
—"Only 10 of these 30 pianists will make a living at it and only three or four will make a living they deserve."

—"Television may continue to worship . . . only ratings."

—"Our global image will fail to reflect our true cultural growth."

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 16,106

JAN 1962



Music ★★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★
Stereo Effect ★★

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete ballet)
New England Conservatory Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
RCA FTC 2089
4-track, 7½ ips
$8.95....56 mins.

It's interesting to note that this is Munch's second stereo recording of this music; his earlier one, also with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is available only on a 3¾ ips cartridge. This new performance is, of course, superb, but if I had to make a choice between the two versions, I would chose the earlier one, because it has better sound.

Perhaps some listeners will like the kind of reproduction on this new tape. It is remarkably transparent, and of wide dynamic range. However, the Boston Symphony sounds colorless as recorded here, with a distant pickup, and tympani that sound all out of proportion to the rest of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony surely deserves better than this.

Tape hiss is very low, but there is some print-through of the overly-prominent tympani. The Monteux-London Symphony version on London L 80034, $7.95, is preferable to this, but we must still wait for a truly great recording of this music.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

FEB 1962

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë

New England Conservatory Choir, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.

• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2089. 55 min. $8.95.

My earlier review (October 1961) of this performance in its disc edition was necessarily so preoccupied with comparisons between it and Munch's earlier version of 1955 that there was no opportunity to extend the discussion to include the long-famous Monteux version for London. But, as the latter is available—and widely esteemed—on 4-track tape, I can no longer dodge the problem of comparison.

The result of that comparison isn't difficult, except perhaps for Monteux devotees like myself to accept. Monteux's more leisurely reading retains, of course, all its distinctive attractions—above all, the unique insights of the masterpiece's first interpreter. But in enchantment and dramatic passion Munch outdoes the Old Master, while in orchestral and tonal opulence and in executant finesse the Bostonians are clearly superior to Monteux's Londoners; and—beautiful as the London recording remains—it is surpassed in dynamic range, spaciousness, and impact by the superb RCA Victor engineering.

I regret that the present taping doesn't follow London's example of locating the side "break" at a natural score pause, but at least the immaculate tape processing has effectively reduced the surface noise which seriously detracted from the stereo disc's ability to convey the atmospheric magic of the softest passages. This tape must rank as a triumphant representation of the 4-track medium at the peak of its current capabilities.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 164,688

OCT 1961

HIFI/STEREO REVIEW

THE TOP RECORDINGS

BEST OF THE MONTH

CLASSICAL

A NEW STANDARD FOR DAPHNIS AND CHLOE

An impassioned performance by Munch and his Bostonians

WITH THE new RCA Victor stereo recording of Ravel's complete Daphnis and Chloe the Boston Symphony Orchestra reasserts the almost proprietary claim it has had to the score since the days in the early 1930's when the Suite No. 2 had become established as one of Serge Koussevitzky's favorite showpieces. And the claim is a strong one, for the performance conducted by Charles Munch is a wonderfully impassioned one, and the RCA engineers have captured it in brilliant sound.

Ravel spoke of his Daphnis and Chloe dance score as a choreographic symphony, and although he made two separate concert suites that had their premieres even before Diaghilev staged the full ballet in 1912, the grandeur of Ravel's truly symphonic conception can be appreciated only in terms of a complete performance of the music—including the offstage chorus in vocalise, and, for that matter, including the highly evocative wind-machine in Part 2. Full-scale performances of Daphnis and Chloe were rare indeed before the Second World War, but since then it has begun to enjoy a vogue of sorts as a gala concert piece, and, since the 1953 London release of a performance in which Ernest Ansermet conducted the Suisse Romande Orchestra, there have been more than half a dozen recordings of the whole score. Among these, the new Munch reading is one of three now available that can be called truly distinguished. Certainly, in terms of theatrical excitement, orchestral virtuosity, and gorgeously high-powered recorded sound, it is decisively the best, for it has a dramatic power that is lacking in Pierre Monteux's recent London recording, and in execution and engineering it far surpasses the well-paced monophonic Mercury recording conducted by Antal Dorati. All the instruments, from Ravel's antique cymbals to bass drum and wind machine, are audible in precisely right measure; the elegance of the flute in the Pan and Syrinx episode has never

(continued overleaf)

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

CHARLES MUNCH
A superb reading of Daphnis

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D 61,644 S. 74,228

NOV 5 1961

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given us a complete recording of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" on RCA-Victor's LM 2368. This rich and colorful work is magnificently performed by the Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch's direction.

Originally written at the request of Sergei Diaghileff for one of his ballet productions, it is the second and third parts of the ballet music that are most familiar to the concert audiences. In playing the entire work, Mr. Munch restores Daphnis and Chloe to a single rounded work. Mr. John Burk in writing the notes on the cover of the album says this is a restitution long overdue in America.

I heartily agree with Mr. Burk, the work deserves a complete hearing for it is indeed beautiful music — sensitive and poetic. This is highly recommended for quality and performance.

282

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
DEC 10 1961

HI-FI

By PRESTON McGRAW

Americans are spending more for music—and that includes high fidelity equipment, records and tapes—than they are for sports. A major part of the expenditure is for classical music.

Last year, Americans spent $1.5 billion on music—one-third more than they spent on all sports combined.

These figures were given in New York recently by H. T. Harwood of Shure Brothers, Inc., Evanston, Ill. Shure, which makes high fidelity pickup arms, cartridges and microphones, held its second annual symposium in New York and Harwood introduced the panel.

VARIED PANELISTS

The panelists whom Harwood, director of public relations for Shure, introduced, were Opera Star Rise Stevens; George R. Marek, vice president, general manager RCA Victor Record Co.; Dr. Raymond Kendall, dean of the school of music of the University of Southern California, and Congressman Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Select Subcommittee on Education.

Harwood set the stage for speeches by the panelists with these facts:

—Americans supported nearly 1,200 symphony orchestras in 1960, more than the rest of the world combined. The American Symphony Orchestra League in 1960 reported more sold-out houses and high ticket sales than ever before, about $150 million.

—More than 35 million Americans owned phonographs or more sophisticated music reproducing equipment and spent $100 million on classical records. This contrasted with $50 million for baseball.

—More than 32 million Americans were amateur musicians. This compared with 19 million a decade before.

—Citizens across the country performed in more than 1,100 amateur symphony orchestras. A third of these were in cities of 50,000 population or less, and 10 per cent in cities of less than 10,000 people.

And yet, the speakers warned, music in the United States is in trouble.

"Only three orchestras in Europe equal symphony orchestras in Boston, New York, Chicago and Philadelphia," Miss Stevens said. "We have approximately 30 of the world's great living pianists —more than ever in history. We have facilities such as television that could provide the widest exposure for the arts ever conceived."

But unless something is done, Miss Stevens said:

—"Orchestras will continue to play at the mercy of charity."

—"Only 10 of these 30 pianists will make a living at it and only three or four will make a living they deserve."

—"Television may continue to worship . . . only ratings."

—"Our global image will tail to reflect our true cultural growth."

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D 61 644 S. 74 228
NOV 5 1961

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given us a complete recording of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" on RCA-Victor's LM 2568. This rich and colorful work is magnificently performed by the Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch's direction.

Originally written at the request of Sergei Diaghileff for one of his ballet productions, it is the second and third parts of the ballet music that are most familiar to the concert audiences. In playing the entire work, Mr. Munch restores Daphnis and Chloe to a single rounded work. Mr. John Burk in writing the notes on the cover of the album says this is a restitution long overdue in America.

I heartily agree with Mr. Burk, the work deserves a complete hearing for it is indeed beautiful music — sensitive and poetic. This is highly recommended for quality and performance.

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106
JAN 1962

Music ★★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★
Stereo Effect ★★

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe (complete ballet)
New England Conservatory Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
RCA FTC 2089
4-track, 7½ ips
$8.95....56 mins.

It's interesting to note that this is Munch's second stereo recording of this music; his earlier one, also with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is available only on a 3¾ ips cartridge. This new performance is, of course, superb, but if I had to make a choice between the two versions, I would chose the earlier one, because it has better sound.

Perhaps some listeners will like the kind of reproduction on this new tape. It is remarkably transparent, and of wide dynamic range. However, the Boston Symphony sounds colorless as recorded here, with a distant pickup, and tympani that sound all out of proportion to the rest of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony surely deserves better than this.

Tape hiss is very low, but there is some print-through of the overly-prominent tympani. The Monteux-London Symphony version on London L 80034, $7.95, is preferable to this, but we must still wait for a truly great recording of this music.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
FEB 1962

RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë

New England Conservatory Choir, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
●● RCA VICTOR FTC 2089. 55 min. $8.95.

My earlier review (October 1961) of this performance in its disc edition was necessarily so preoccupied with comparisons between it and Munch's earlier version of 1955 that there was no opportunity to extend the discussion to include the long-famous Monteux version for London. But, as the latter is available—and widely esteemed—on 4-track tape, I can no longer dodge the problem of comparison.

The result of that comparison isn't difficult, except perhaps for Monteux devotees like myself to accept. Monteux's more leisurely reading retains, of course, all its distinctive attractions—above all, the unique insights of the masterpiece's first interpreter. But in enchantment and dramatic passion Munch outdoes the Old Master, while in orchestral and tonal opulence and in executant finesse the Bostonians are clearly superior to Monteux's Londoners; and—beautiful as the London recording remains—it is surpassed in dynamic range, spaciousness, and impact by the superb RCA Victor engineering.

I regret that the present taping doesn't follow London's example of locating the side "break" at a natural score pause, but at least the immaculate tape processing has effectively reduced the surface noise which seriously detracted from the stereo disc's abili... atmospheric magic of t... must rank... tion of th... of its cur...

been heard to better advantage; and the strings at the climax of the Daybreak music emerge from the stereo speakers with all the lyrical conviction one could ask. Similarly, the choral placement and balances have been well managed.

One might have hoped for a somewhat more colorful treatment of the dance contest between Daphnis and Dorcon in Part I and a somewhat less hectic pacing of the final Danse générale, but these are minor strictures when ganged against the magnificence of the recorded performance as a whole. The Danse guerrière of Bryaxis and the pirates is wonderfully ferocious, and the earthquake music accompanying the intervention of Pan has just the right sense of uncanny menace; and in the Daybreak music Munch and the orchestra manage a beautifully controlled gradual crescendo to a magnificently satisfying climax.

While we have by no means heard the end of major stereo recordings of the complete Daphnis and Chloe—Columbia is said to have one on the way from Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic—there is no question that Munch and the Boston Symphony, and the able RCA Victor engineers, have given us a recording that will hold a place of distinction in the disc literature for a long time to come. David Hall

● ● RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe. Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2568 $5.98, LM 2586 $4.98.

THE MOST GLORIOUS HELDENLEBEN IN YEARS

Ormandy turns out the finest reading since Mengelberg

WHEN IT IS not a pompous bore, Richard Strauss's self-glorifying tone poem Ein Heldenleben can be tremendously exciting music to hear, and so it surely is in the fine new Columbia recording by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Not since the legendary versions (Camden 337, Capitol P 8015, both collectors items) by Willem Mengelberg, to whom Strauss dedicated the score, has there been on records a performance of such thrust, such expansive lyricism, such orchestral virtuosity.

Strauss's music no longer has the revolutionary impact it had in 1899, and a wholly convincing performance of Ein Heldenleben nowadays requires of a conductor what Virgil Thomson used to call the "wow technique" if the audience is to be won to wholehearted acceptance of Strauss-as-hero on his own terms. Beyond this, the conductor and the orchestral players must be virtuosi enough and musicians enough to make the score interesting even to those listeners who refuse to be taken in by its theatrics. Fortunately, Strauss gives them more than enough to work with. The top-notch characterization of the hero can still be impressive, and the ... can still be delightful a... portraiture; even the co... off if played with a certain element of humor. The din of the battle scene is liable to seem a bore, but in the self-quotations and brilliant thematic transformations of material from earlier pages the music becomes thoroughly interesting. The score may be in questionably narcissistic taste, but in a first-class performance one can only marvel at the cunning with which Strauss has woven its fabric.

And here Mr. Ormandy and his men give a superb performance, implemented by recording that is fully on a par with the execution—full-bodied in sound and brilliantly clear in texture. It will, of course, be interesting to hear the forthcoming Capitol Ein Heldenleben conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham—the last major recording he made before his death—and the Deutsche Grammophon recording with Herbert von Karajan conducting the Berlin Philharmonic. These versions may offer different and perhaps more refined insights, but they will be remarkable indeed if they surpass the new Ormandy performance in passion, brilliance, and theatrical effectiveness. David Hall

● STRAUSS: Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40. Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy cond. COLUMBIA MS 6249 $5.98.

JAZZ

CHARLIE PARKER AS COMPOSER

Cecil Payne and combo bring new life to six of Bird's compositions

UNDER THE TITLE "Cecil Payne Performing Charlie Parker Music," the first newly recorded issue by the Charlie Parker Record Corporation—a company set up by the late alto saxophonist's widow for the proper dissemination on discs of her husband's strikingly original music—is

CECIL PAYNE
Agile with a baritone, tops with Charlie Parker

ESQUIRE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 858,790

FEB 1962

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston: for some years his nostalgia will be dormant

RECORDINGS

MARTIN MAYER

THE problem with teaching conducting," said Erich Leinsdorf recently over a very simple lunch (he diets, more for the sake of the self-discipline than for the weight), "is that the student cannot practise on it. The piano is so much easier—it doesn't say No; it won't bite you; it won't go on strike."

Also, though Leinsdorf didn't mention the matter, it won't disappear, as the Cleveland Orchestra disappeared on him twenty years ago through no fault of his own. Leinsdorf at that time was the Wunderkind of American music, Toscanini's most startling protégé, a transplanted Viennese still in his early thirties with several years of experience at the Metropolitan Opera already behind him. Then he went off to be a soldier, and Cleveland finis Musicae, found another conductor; and after the war there was no post open for Leinsdorf. He filled in here and there, spent some seasons with the Rochester, took over the New York City Opera for a disastrously overimaginative season of contemporary works, made records, then proved the mettle of his personality by becoming the only first-rank conductor with whom Rudolf Bing of the Metropolitan Opera has ever been able to work for any length of time.

Now Leinsdorf has reaped his reward: the best job in America, the leadership of the Boston Symphony, where loyalties run deep and in both directions. The BSO really counts, in all senses of the word. At New York and Philadelphia last year, the orchestra struck when the contract ran out; in Boston in 1960-61, the men played half the season without a contract. Leinsdorf, shortly after his appointment had been announced, ran into a member of the BSO Board at a European watering place. The man came over to him and said, "My name is X, and I am one of your trustees. I want," he said, waving his hand through the air of Beaulieu, "I want to welcome you to Boston." Leinsdorf told the story and shook his head happily. "Where else but Boston?"

He is a middle-sized ramrod of a man, aggressively bald between ear flaps of black hair; long face, large ears, huge hands. Notoriously tough and intelligent, he has the sharpest wit since Beecham, and employs it with just a touch of English accent. Like Toscanini, he specializes in tightly controlled power; he has never in my hearing been guilty of a gemütlich (or a sloppy) performance. When it comes off, which is not every time, the results are magniloquent and exciting. Leinsdorf has made literally hundreds of LP's, for Columbia (his Mendelssohn Italian on the low-price Harmony is still my favorite of the work, and I thought his Eroica the best on the market until Walter Toscanini got the Maestro's in shape to release); for Westminster (including a complete set of Mozart Symphonies particularly impressive in the wonderful, hard-to-do, hard-to-find group around K. 200); for Capitol (most recently, a dazzling Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks) and for RCA Victor (several operas, among them an incomparable Barber of Seville, Verdi's Macbeth, and the forthcoming complete Walküre, plus a Marriage of Figaro and a Don Giovanni which are probably the most widely admired in the field, though not by me). As conductor of the Boston, Leinsdorf will record exclusively for Victor.

Leinsdorf will have to give up opera for the BSO, which most conductors would consider rather sad—Reiner and Szell, for example, deeply regret their restriction to orchestral repertory. Leinsdorf brushed this problem vigorously away. "For several years," he said, "my nostalgia will be dormant."

If you were hanging around audio shops last year, you probably heard the argument that disc recording is now better than tape, that new cutting heads, new pickups and such have refined stereo grooves to the point where they clearly out-fi 7½-ips 4-track tape, with its signal-to-noise problems, its high-speed duplication difficulties, its "second generation" quality. The story seemed plausible. I put part of the last month into investigating it and can confidently report that it is balderdash. Improvements in tape itself and in duplicating equipment—plus the elimination of the last traces of the former treble overemphasis—have kept tape that connoisseur's fraction in the lead.

The disc version of Joan Sutherland's Art of the Prima Donna (London) failed to convert me; the tape came closer, by revealing in still greater splendor the incredible cleanliness of the lady's voice. Also stunning from London are Solti's Mahler Fourth, the Strauss Fledermaus, and excerpts from Wagner's Rheingold. From Vanguard comes a delightful group of Bonbons aus Wien, a small group of strolling players handling Mozart and Schubert in addition to the usual mid-century waltzes. All these are via United Stereo Tapes.

Mercury discs come onto tapes courtesy of Bel Canto; note especially, here as on disc, Dorati's Stravinsky. Victor, Columbia and Capitol all have their own; and the range elsewhere runs from Paul Maynard's rhythmically exact, nonjangling harpsichord on Ferro Dynamics (tape only; and you may have a bit of trouble in locating it, since the word is that the company is no longer making tapes) to the crash and clatter of John Cage's and Paul Price's Concert Percussion for Orchestra tape for Time.

Pre-recorded tape is silly, of course, unless you have superior equipment associated with it—$750 minimum, let's say, for amplifiers and speakers alone. Nobody ever needs tape. But if you're looking for the ultimate, you'll still find it here. ⊞

ESQUIRE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 858,790

DEC 1961

1961

162

Sabata conducting (Angel). And, finally, a very personal choice (69), Wolf-Ferrari's Quattro Rusteghi, set to a Goldoni play, a miraculous evocation of life among the bourgeoisie of eighteenth-century Venice, lovingly performed under the direction of the composer's disciple, Alfredo Simonetto, on Cetra.

French Music

France and Flanders dominated the music of Renaissance Europe until the middle of the sixteenth century; and then French music became pretty French. We ought to start with Lully and Rameau and Gluck; but there are no really good recordings of the first two—and, though in certain quarters it shall not be forgiven me, I think Gluck is very minor-league stuff. Let us pick up the French tradition with Berlioz, who remade it in the Romantic mold. All the "big machines," have been on LP and except for The Trojans, where Scherchen's rather unidiomatic recording has been withdrawn, all of them still are, under the admirable direction of Charles Munch. For our purposes, however, let us take a chestnut symphony and a perfect smaller choral work: (70*) the Symphonie Fantastique, where, despite the beauties of the Munch and Monteux performances, my preference is the Argenta on London; and (71) L'Enfance du Christ, under Munch's direction on Victor.

It is considerable of a step down from here to (72*) Bizet's Carmen, but for all the things notoriously wrong with this piece, its vigor and the expressiveness of its tunes keep it roaringly alive. The recording, of course, is that of Beecham, de los Angeles and Gedda on Capitol. Offenbach was older than Bizet, but his masterpiece (73*), Tales of Hoffman, came some years after Carmen. Like Carmen (indeed, like most major French operas) it has a first-rate libretto; like Carmen, too, it has overpopular tunes that can blind the sophisticate to the musical power of the work. The best recording—a very good one, too—features Dobbs and Simoneau under the direction of Le Conte on Epic. Offenbach made his living on operetta, a good deal of which is still completely viable today. To my taste the best of them all is (74) La Belle Hélène, quite wonderfully recorded under Liebowitz on Renaissance.

Passing regretfully over Chausson and Louise, and quite willingly over Gounod, Massenet, Franck and Saint-Saëns, we come to Fauré, whose songs, chamber works and tone poems are among the great joys of the late nineteenth-century; let us take his best-known work (75), the gentle Requiem, as performed by Danco and Souzay under Ansermet on London. Fauré is a minor master; his successor, Debussy, is one of the great figures in music. There is a good deal of well-recorded Debussy; from a long list, let us take (76) the piano Preludes as played by Robert Casadesus on Columbia and (77*) the startling Jeux, for orchestra, played by Ansermet on London. And there must be room here for Debussy's contemporary, Erik Satie, particularly for (78) the curiously moving Socrate, lovingly performed under the direction of Leibowitz on Esoteric. And for Ravel, whose (79) l'Enfant et les Sortilèges has provoked two great recordings, one of which, with Danco and Ansermet, is still available (London).

The French moderns have had an influence far beyond national borders, and for a decade or so the "international style" was French in origin, as it had been in the Renaissance. Today they seem more than a little special. Of the famous group of Six, Poulenc and Milhaud have held up into the postwar world. Milhaud is the most prolific of composers, and has worked in every form and every mood, but through his best pieces runs a gentle, lyrical, Satie-esque vein, beautifully exemplified by (80) the Suite for Violin, Clarinet and Piano, well performed both on Period and Decca. Poulenc started off as a satirist (a specialty of the French moderns: Ibert's Divertissement is the best musical joke ever written, and brilliantly performed under Desormière on a disc now available at bargain price on Richmond). Recently he has been exploring deeper matters, relying in large part on a phenomenal gift for writing for women's voices. One from each period (81), the satirical Bal Masqué and the Stabat Mater, come together on a fine Westminster disc, the composer himself participating.

This Century

In all the arts, we are still living with the hangover from the great binge of the years just before the First War, years historians will probably regard as the Golden Age of Western Civilization. Much of what we still take as "modern music" was written then or in the years just after the war by men who had marked out their direction before 1914.

Leos Janáček was a decade older than Richard Strauss; he was forty-six at the turn of the century, and an experienced if relatively unknown Czech composer. Almost everything in the recorded catalogue, however, was written in this century, and the feeling is often "modern." From a large body of directly expressive music, we take (82) the opera Cunning Little Vixen, recorded by the Prague National Theatre (Artia). Another who was unknown in his time but is now recognized as among the most important of his generation is the American Charles Ives, whose (83*) Second Symphony will make you wave the flag all over the living room: a potpourri of imagination, skilled musical risk-taking, and native tunes miraculously performed by Leonard Bernstein (Columbia).

Historians of the last half-century will probably see it divided musically between the empires of Schönberg and of Stravinsky, as the late nineteenth century divided

284 165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

NOV 19 1961

YOUNG AT FIFTY

'Daphnis et Chloe' Is Still a Major Adornment of Modern French Music

Boston Symphony

By ALLEN HUGHES

MAURICE RAVEL'S Daphnis et Chloe, one of the major adornments of modern French music, is fifty years old now, but—in the way art masterpieces do—it seems to grow younger every day. Its colors are vivid and bright, its exoticism fresh and its propulsive rhythms are more compelling than ever.

Composed in 1911 for Serge Diaghilev and his Ballets Russes, which gave the world première in Paris in 1912, the music did not turn out to be ideal for the ballet. Fortunately, however, one portion of it in particular, the Suite No. 2 soon found its way into the concert hall and has thrived there ever since.

The complete score is too long to be played frequently, but last spring, in one of those unexpected feasts that sometimes follow fast, two American orchestras gave complete performances within a few weeks of each other. Both interpretations were recorded at the time, and both are now available for home listening.

One is by the New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein (Columbia ML 5660; stereo MS 6260), the other by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch (R. C. A. Victor LM 2568; stereo LSC 2568). The celebrated wordless choral parts are sung for the Philharmonic by Hugh Ross' Schola Cantorum and for the Bostonians by the New England Conservatory Chorus, which is directed by Lorna Cooke de Varon.

Transparency

Both performances and both recordings are admirable, but this listener is inclined to prefer Mr. Bernstein's interpretation. In Carnegie Hall last spring, the conductor was especially successful in achieving a transparent delineation of much of the music, avoiding the blurred fuzziness that often passes—wrongly—for the effect intended by French impressionist composers. That same transparency is splendidly maintained in the recording, and, as a result, the marvelous colors of Ravel's superb instrumentation remain clear and functional.

Mr. Munch is less concerned with detail than the surge and sweep of the total product. The ultimate effect is certainly impressive, however, and forceful enough in its own right to justify the approach.

Two noteworthy recorded versions of the Suite No. 2 have arrived recently from Europe. One, by L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under the direction of Ernest Ansermet, is combined with performances of three more works by Ravel —Alborada del Gracioso, Le Tombeau de Couperin, and Valses Nobles et Sentimentales (London CM 9279; stereo CS 6210).

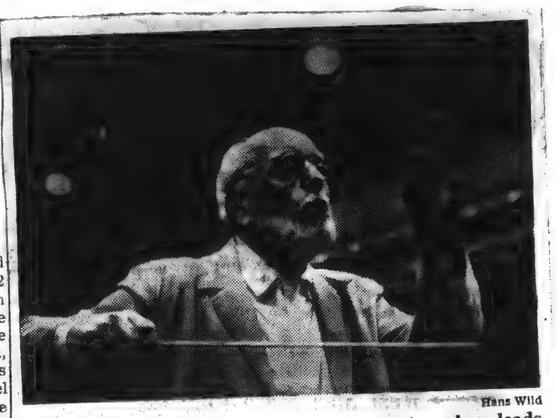
Mr. Ansermet is an old hand, and an expert one, with music of this sort, remembering—apparently—that it went slower and less tumultuously when it was new than it sometimes does these days. Thus, he takes his time with it and ends up with interpretations that are relatively relaxed and leisurely, but vital all the same.

Pierre Dervaux, a youngish French conductor as yet little known in this country, combines the Suite No. 2 with "Alborada del Gracioso" and La Valse on his recording with L'Orchestre des Concerts Colonne of Paris. (Command 33-11005; stereo 11005 SD).

Controlled Excitement

Mr. Dervaux does well in his work, and so does the orchestra, which has been little heard of outside Paris for quite a long time. Once again, clarity and discreetly controlled excitement are much in evidence,

The glory of this disk is the brilliantly played and magnificently recorded flute solo in the "Daphnis et Chloe" suite. This solo passage could never be projected so prominently in any normal concert performance, but so long as the use of microphone hocus-pocus is the rule rather than the exception in current recording procedures, there is probably little reason why it should not be brought into play here to underscore one of the most sensuous musical passages our century has produced.



Hans Wild

SWISS CONDUCTOR—Ernest Ansermet, who leads four symphonic works of Ravel on a stereo disk.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN JAN 21 1962

COMMENT ON DISKS

Boston Symphony

BARTOK: Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste; HINDEMITH: Mathis der Maler; Berlin Philharmonic, Herbert von Karajan, conductor (Angel 35949, stereo S 35949). Two classics of this century are paired in rich-sounding, beautifully polished, musically intelligent and perfectly engineered performances. Highly recommended.

GRAZIELLA SCIUTTI RECITAL; Graziella Sciutti, soprano, Vienna Philharmonic, Argeo Quadri, conductor (London 5617; stereo OS 25244). The Italian soprano sings arias by Donizetti, Bellini, Rossini and Mozart with a delightful fine-spun voice and impeccable taste and style. She is equally enchanting as the amusing Norina in "Don Pasquale," the tragic Juliet in "I Capuletti ed i Montecchi" and the artful Susanna in "Le Nozze di Figaro."

KABALEVSKY: Twenty-four Preludes, Op. 38; Yakov Flier, pianist (Artia MK 1530). The playing is technically distinguished, for these pleasant works allow room for virtuosic display and the celebrated Soviet pianist makes the most of his opportunities. A much more lyrical performance of the preludes by Nadia Reisenberg used to exist on a Westminster disk, and the music responds equally well to the two kinds of interpretations—to its credit.

MUSIC FROM THE FILMS; Cleveland Pops Orchestra, Louis Lane, conductor (Epic LC 3809; stereo BC 1147). There would be no need to single out this disk from among the rash of current recordings devoted to film scores and "Themes from . . ." if it did not include two charming excerpts from William Walton's music for "Henry V" and Virgil Thomson's Acadian Songs and Dances from "Louisiana Story." The Walton pieces are the Passacaglia that accompanies the death of Falstaff and "Touch her soft lips and part." Also on the disk are Robert Russell Bennett's arrangements of music from "Gigi," "State Fair" and "Exodus" and the title song of "Fanny."

NEAPOLITAN SONGS; Franco Corelli, tenor, orchestra conducted by Franco Ferraris (Angel 35852; stereo S 35852); Fernando de Lucia, tenor (ASCO A-105). With the advantage of a beautiful natural voice and up-to-date engineering, the youthful Mr. Corelli is effective enough in this popular genre. He practically tears his heart out in the singing. How much more sensitive and refined are Mr. de Lucia's performances, which still do not lose the popular touch. Born in 1860 in Naples, this tenor was famous for his interpretations of the songs of his native city, which he sang into the early Nineteen Twenties. His recording shows its age, with an accompanying piano or mandolin plinking along, but Mr. de Lucia is a stylist whereas Mr. Corelli is not.

NEW AND ORIGINAL FOLK SONGS WRITTEN IN COMMEMORATION OF THE CENTENNIAL OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR, THE WAR BETWEEN THE STATES, AND SUNG BY RENO & SMILEY (King 756). Don Reno, virtuoso banjo-picker, and Red Smiley, guitarist, are leaders of an ebullient Bluegrass group called the Tennessee Cut-Ups. For this disk they took a series of poems on the war written by Dr. Albert J. Russo, a physician from Salem, Va. It is not high poetry, but one Southerner's re-creations of the "First Shot," "Antietam," "Virginia's Heritage," "Battle of Atlanta," and so on, set to many familiar Bluegrass arrangements yield a curious document, indeed.

THE VOICE OF ERNA SACK; Erna Sack, soprano, with various Berlin orchestras led by Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt, Hugo Diez and Willy Czernick (Telefunken TH 97004). This disk, one of the inexpensive Collectors' Series—Historic Reissues, is well-named since Miss Sack's voice is what is important. There is little genuine music. The popular German coloratura soprano has a pretty voice, well produced, which could go higher than that of almost any singer except Ellen Beach Yaw and earned her the nickname "Whistling Teakettle." Here she sings Viennese waltzes and sentimental songs with no style and a coloratura technique that is absurd and sometimes funny.

TREASURES OF VIENNA; Vienna Philharmonic, Rudolf Kempe, conductor (Angel 35851; stereo S 35851). Recorded collections of Strauss waltzes are a dime a dozen, but this one merits attention for the quiet beauty of Mr. Kempe's style and the serenely warm sound of the Viennese ensemble. "Tales from the Vienna Woods" and "Emperor Waltz" are the standard items. Two polkas, "Leichtes Blut" and "Im Krapfenwald'l," and the Intermezzo from "A Thousand and One Nights" are other irresistible items by Johann Strauss II. "Dynamiden," a waltz by his brother Josef, is a surprisingly imaginative and charming work.

TRUMPET MUSIC; Roger Voisin, trumpeter, Kapp Sinfonietta, Emanuel Vardi, conductor (Kapp 9062; stereo 9062-S). THE VIRTUOSO TRUMPET; Helmut Wobisch, trumpeter, Solisti di Zagreb, Antonio Janigro, conductor (Vanguard stereo BGS 5041). Mr. Voisin, first trumpeter of the Boston Symphony, and Mr. Wobisch, his opposite number with the Vienna Philharmonic, are equally adept on their instruments, and they bring to the fore music that is not heard as often as it should be. The disks do not overlap in repertory. Mr. Voisin plays works by Fantini, Purcell, Stradella, Lully, Monteverdi, J. K. F. Fischer and Petzold. Mr. Wobisch's contributions are by Jeremiah Clarke, Vivaldi, Perti, Torelli, Domenico Gabrieli, Corelli and John Stanley.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

JAN 18 1962

I

POULENC: Concerto for organ strings and tympani; STRAVINSKY: Jeu de Cartes (Ballet) Berj Zamkochian, organ; Everett Firth, tympani; Boston Symphony Orch., Charles Munch (Victor stereo and mono 2567).

The long-awaited Zamkochian-Munch recording of the Poulenc Organ Concerto is more than well worth all the waiting. Though it faces the cruelest competition in the redoutable Angel recording by Maurice Durufle, it has charms and persuasiveness of such quality that even those who own the Angel will wish to add this disc to their collections.

Where Durufle-Pretre are vivacity, elan and fire, Munch-Zamkochian are stateliness, breadth and grandeur. Details, in the RCA version, frequently emerge with more clarity, and room is given for certain phrases to expand and breathe more freely. Zamkochian takes advantage of numerous opportunities to turn a melodic line with lovely freedom, and the and result is pleasurable indeed. Both organs sound stunning in excellent stereo recording; the Angel profits by a somewhat larger and more varied instrument.

On the reverse sides, the Angel disc contains the Poulenc Gloria, while RCA offers a stimulating and diverting ballet work by Stravinsky. Those who cannot feel free to purchase both discs may decide on the basis of the coupling. Either choice is certainly a good one.

Paul St. George.

...TY TIMES RECORD
... January 13, 1962

Big Month For Piano Discs

Nine Keyboard Masters Of The Past Are Brought Together On One Record

By TOMMY THOMAS

January, 1962, can be pegged as piano month in the recording industry, for three reasons, all from RCA Victor:

1. Six compelling volumes top the label's big release—Rubenstein, Cliburn, Richter, Wild, Rachmaninoff and Kapell. 2. A seventh album, Keyboard Giants of the Past, is one of the finest piano records ever produced. 3. It is offered at no extra cost with any of the six other LPs.

Keyboard Giants of the Past (SP 33-143, Mono) is a dream come true for devotees of the piano masters. It includes:

Minuet in G has Ignace Jan Paderewski playing his lovely composition (recorded in 1923). Chopin's Impromptu in F Sharp is given a magical reading by Vladimir de Pachmann (1923). Liszt's Etude in D-Flat is interpreted by Britain's Harold Bauer (1942). Schumann's Carnaval, Op. 9; Valse allemande, Paganini, Replique, Aveu, Promenade, brings to the keyboard Sergei Rachmaninoff (1929). And the final band of Side One has Mr. Bauer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch teamed with Arensky's two-piano suite, Waltz (1929).

Side Two offers Johann Strauss' Blue Danube Waltz by Josef Lhevinne (1928); Liszt's Chant Polonais No. 5 by Moriz Rosenthal (1942), Levitzki's Arabesque Valsante as read by the composer (1938), and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 11 in A Minor by William Kapell (1951).

The six releases are superb, quality in themselves, and, of course, quantity when you add the bonus disc. Here they are:

Beethoven: Concerto No. 1; Sonata in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, with Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2544.

It almost defies description, Richter's playing is that inspired and Munch's conducting is that intense. Richter seems to get better with his every recording.

Grieg: Piano Concerto. Artur Rubenstein, with orchestra conducted by Alfred Wallenstein. Five encores featuring works by Schumann, Villa-Lobos, Liszt, Prokofieff, Falla are by Mr. Rubenstein unaccompanied. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2566.

Cliburn and Richter are having their day, but Rubenstein for many is the epitome of all one wants in a pianist. His reading of Grieg's A Minor Concerto glistens with eloquence.

Brahms: Concerto No. 2. Van Cliburn with Chicago Symphony, Fritz Reiner conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2581.

America's foremost pianist and America's top-ranking conductor? Well, you'll get agreement on all sides if you insist this is so. Surely they are a tremendous team here. That overworked word, fabulous, has to be the descriptive adjective for this disc.

Gershwin: Concerto in F; Cuban Overture; Variations on I Got Rhythm. Earl Wild, with the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2586.

We're glad George Gershwin is included in this group of illustrious composers—and we're glad Mr. Wild and Mr. Fiedler are on hand to do him justice. The pianist is most at ease with Gershwin, and the conductor rarely lets one down.

* * *

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106
SEP 1961

Music ★★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★★
Stereo Effect ★★★

SAINT-SAENS: Symphony No. 3 in C Minor, Op. 78 (with Organ)
Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
RCA FTC 2029
4 track, 7½ ips
$8.95 . . . 34 min.

This Symphony is one of Charles Munch's specialties, and this is his second recording of it.

Munch possesses just the right temperament to bring out the best in this rather pretentious orchestral showpiece, and he guides the Boston Symphony in a glowing performance, superb in all respects, with bigger sound than the competing four-track version (Mercury STC 90012, $7.95) with Paul Paray conducting the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. The Urania two-track tape with Hans Swarowsky conducting remains my choice for this music, but this tape is now difficult to find.

The present tape is the best recording of the Boston Symphony I've ever heard, and it's guaranteed to put any hi-fi rig through its paces, although there is occasionally a fuzzy quality to the sound. According to the liner notes, when this peformance was recorded the Orchestra was placed on the floor of Symphony Hall, away from the stage, with a resultant open quality that is very pleasing, and a good, ponderous organ sound. I might add that this tape is a revelation when compared to its stereodisc counterpart, which was overcut and distorted in most loud passages.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JAN 16 1962

Sviatoslav Richter, Charles Munch, and some of the Boston Symphony Orchestra members during a Symphony Hall rehearsal. The photograph appears in color on the jacket of LSC-2544, an RCA Victor Red Seal recording of two Beethoven works for the piano, Concerto No. 1 and Sonata Op. 54.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 26 1961

WGBH-FM Listeners Offer Tape Recordings

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

WGBH-FM listeners have found constructive ways of proving their loyalty to the station.

Prompted by the news of WGBH's loss of program tapes in a fire Oct. 14, radio listeners of the Boston area have been offering their own tape recordings of WGBH programs for station use.

Among the contributors is Dr. Gerald Winkler of Brookline, who offered his tape of "Tonight's Symphony," the weekly preview program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. The program, musical excerpts and explanations by G. Wallace Woodworth, James Edward Ditson, professor of music at Harvard, was taped off the air by Dr. Winkler the Thursday evening before the fire and was broadcast at its usual time the following Saturday evening.

Recordings of Aldous Huxley lectures were offered to the station by Andrew Kazdin, Cambridge.

WGBH also has been given the complete Music I series, a course of Archibald Davison's at Harvard University, and a series of lectures give by Otto Struve at MIT.

WGBH-FM is not only using these recordings but is on the lookout for more.

"Our tape library was 100 per cent destroyed—representing the best of 10 years of programing," said Donald Quayle, FM assistant general manager. "We hardly dare hope to recover more than a small percentage, but we'll keep trying."

Mr. Quayle explained that his station is particularly interested in locating "Russian Intellectual History" by the late Michael Karpovich, Harvard, and George F. Kennen's lectures on the Soviet Union, Harvard, 1960.

Fund Drive Set

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A goal of $50.000 has been set by Boston's Mayor John F. Collins for a fund-raising campaign to benefit WGBH-TV, the station whose equipment was largely destroyed in a recent fire.

The Mayor has announced the formation of a committee of 16 leading citizens to assist WGBH-TV in reaching this goal.

The entire proceeds of the première showing of Samuel Bronstein's "El Cid," due to open at the Astor Theater on Dec. 21, will be donated to the educational TV channel to help it rebuild. Tickets for the benefit which stars Sophia Loren and Charlton Heston may be obtained through James Roberts at the chamber of commerce office in the Traveler Insurance building.

The members of the Mayor's committee are:

Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor; Davis Taylor, publisher of the Boston Globe; Harold Kern, publisher of the Boston Record-American; Robert Choate, publisher of the Herald Traveler Corporation; Wilmer Swartley, vice-president of WBZ-TV.

William McCormick, president and general manager of WNAC-TV; William McGrath, vice - president and general manager of WHDH; Thomas Gorman, general manager of WEEI and vice-president of the CBS Network; Arthur Haley, vice - president and general manager of WEZE; Ted Jones, president of WCRB; George Gray, executive vice-president and general manager of WORL.

Hartford Gunn, general manager of WGBH-TV; David Ives, assistant general manager of finance and public relations of WGBH-TV; Daniel Finn, general manager of the Astor Theater.

The publicity chairman of the committee is Richard J. Sinnott, press secretary to the Mayor. The promotion chairman is Mel Basel, New England group sales director of Allied Artists.

TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, January 13, 1962

0-47

Big Month For Piano Discs

Nine Keyboard Masters Of The Past Are Brought Together On One Record

By TOMMY THOMAS

January, 1962, can be pegged as piano month in the recording industry, for three reasons, all from RCA Victor: 1. Six compelling volumes top the label's big release—Rubenstein, Cliburn, Richter, Wild, Rachmaninoff and Kapell. 2. A seventh album, Keyboard Giants of the Past, is one of the finest piano records ever produced. 3. It is offered at no extra cost with any of the six other LPs.

Keyboard Giants of the Past (SP-33-143, Mono) is a dream come true for devotees of the piano masters. It includes: Minuet in G has Ignace Jan Paderewski playing his lovely composition (recorded in 1923). Chopin's Impromptu in F Sharp is given a magical reading by Vladimir de Pachmann (1923). Liszt's Etude in D-Flat is interpreted by Britain's Harold Bauer (1942). Schumann's Carnaval, Op. 9; Valse allemande, Paganini, Replique, Avéu, Promenade, brings to the keyboard Sergei Rachmaninoff (1929). And the final band of Side One has Mr. Bauer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch teamed with Arensky's two-piano suite, Waltz (1929).

Side Two offers Johann Strauss' Blue Danube Waltz by Josef Lhevinne (1926); Liszt's Chant Polonais No. 5 by Moriz Rosenthal (1942), Levitzki's Arebesque Valsante as read by the composer (1933), and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 11 in A Minor by William Kapell (1951).

The six releases are superb, quality in themselves, and, of course, quantity when you add the bonus disc. Here they are:

Beethoven: Concerto No. 1; Sonata in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, with Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2544.

It almost defies description, Richter's playing is that inspired and Munch's conducting is that intense. Richter seems to get better with his every recording.

Grieg: Piano Concerto. Artur Rubenstein, with orchestra conducted by Alfred Wallenstein. Five encores featuring works by Schumann, Villa-Lobos, Liszt, Prokofieff, Falla are by Mr. Rubenstein unaccompanied. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2566.

Cliburn and Richter are having their day, but Rubenstein for many is the epitome of all one wants in a pianist. His reading of Grieg's A Minor Concerto glistens with eloquence.

Brahms: Concerto No. 2. Van Cliburn with Chicago Symphony, Fritz Reiner conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2581.

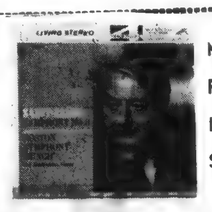
America's foremost pianist and America's top-ranking conductor? Well, you'll get agreement on all sides if you insist this is so. Surely they are a tremendous team here. That overworked word, fabulous, has to be the descriptive adjective for this disc.

Gershwin: Concerto in F; Cuban Overture; Variations on I Got Rhythm. Earl Wild, with the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting. RCA Victor LM/LSC-2586.

We're glad George Gershwin is included in this group of illustrious composers—and we're glad Mr. Wild and Mr. Fieldler are on hand to do him justice. The pianist is most at ease with Gershwin, and the conductor rarely lets one down.

* * *

TAPE RECORDING
SEVERNA PARK, MD.
MONTHLY 18,106
SEP 1961



Music ★★★★
Performance ★★★★
Fidelity ★★★
Stereo Effect ★★★

SAINT-SAENS: Symphony No. 3 in C Minor, Op. 78 (with Organ)
Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch
RCA FTC 2029
4 track, 7½ ips
$8.95 . . . 34 min.

This Symphony is one of Charles Munch's specialties, and this is his second recording of it.

Munch possesses just the right temperament to bring out the best in this rather pretentious orchestral showpiece, and he guides the Boston Symphony in a glowing performance, superb in all respects, with bigger sound than the competing four-track version (Mercury STC 90012, $7.95) with Paul Paray conducting the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. The Urania two-track tape with Hans Swarowsky conducting remains my choice for this music, but this tape is now difficult to find.

The present tape is the best recording of the Boston Symphony I've ever heard, and it's guaranteed to put any hi-fi rig through its paces, although there is occasionally a fuzzy quality to the sound. According to the liner notes, when this peformance was recorded the Orchestra was placed on the floor of Symphony Hall, away from the stage, with a resultant open quality that is very pleasing, and a good, ponderous organ sound. I might add that this tape is a revelation when compared to its stereodisc counterpart, which was overcut and distorted in most loud passages.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JAN 16 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 26 1961

WGBH-FM Listeners Offer Tape Recordings

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

WGBH-FM listeners have found constructive ways of proving their loyalty to the station.

Prompted by the news of WGBH's loss of program tapes in a fire Oct. 14, radio listeners of the Boston area have been offering their own tape recordings of WGBH programs for station use.

Among the contributors is Dr. Gerald Winkler of Brookline, who offered his tape of "Tonight's Symphony," the weekly preview program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. The program, musical excerpts and explanations by G. Wallace Woodworth, James Edward Ditson, professor of music at Harvard, was taped off the air by Dr. Winkler the Thursday evening before the fire and was broadcast at its usual time the following Saturday evening.

Recordings of Aldous Huxley lectures were offered to the station by Andrew Kazdin, Cambridge.

WGBH also has been given the complete Music I series, a course of Archibald Davison's at Harvard University, and a series of lectures give by Otto Struve at MIT.

WGBH-FM is not only using these recordings but is on the lookout for more.

"Our tape library was 100 per cent destroyed—representing the best of 10 years of programing," said Donald Quayle, FM assistant general manager. "We hardly dare hope to recover more than a small percentage, but we'll keep trying."

Mr. Quayle explained that his station is particularly interested in locating "Russian Intellectual History" by the late Michael Karpovich, Harvard, and George F. Kennen's lectures on the Soviet Union, Harvard, 1960.

Fund Drive Set

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A goal of $50,000 has been set by Boston's Mayor John F. Collins for a fund-raising campaign to benefit WGBH-TV, the station whose equipment was largely destroyed in a recent fire.

The Mayor has announced the formation of a committee of 16 leading citizens to assist WGBH-TV in reaching this goal.

The entire proceeds of the première showing of Samuel Bronstein's "El Cid," due to open at the Astor Theater on Dec. 21, will be donated to the educational TV channel to help it rebuild. Tickets for the benefit which stars Sophia Loren and Charlton Heston may be obtained through James Roberts at the chamber of commerce office in the Traveler Insurance building.

The members of the Mayor's committee are:

Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor; Davis Taylor, publisher of the Boston Globe; Harold Kern, publisher of the Boston Record-American; Robert Choate, publisher of the Herald Traveler Corporation; Wilmer Swartley, vice-president of WBZ-TV.

William McCormick, president and general manager of WNAC-TV; William McGrath, vice-president and general manager of WHDH; Thomas Gorman, general manager of WEEI and vice-president of the CBS Network; Arthur Haley, vice-president and general manager of WEZE; Ted Jones, president of WCRB; George Gray, executive vice-president and general manager of WORL.

Hartford Gunn, general manager of WGBH-TV; David Ives, assistant general manager of finance and public relations of WGBH-TV; Daniel Finn, general manager of the Astor Theater.

The publicity chairman of the committee is Richard J. Sinnott, press secretary to the Mayor. The promotion chairman is Mel Basel, New England group sales director of Allied Artists.

Sviatoslav Richter, Charles Munch, and some of the Boston Symphony Orchestra members during a Symphony Hall rehearsal. The photograph appears in color on the jacket of LSC-2544, an RCA Victor Red Seal recording of two Beethoven works for the piano, Concerto No. 1 and Sonata Op. 54.

286

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

OCT 7 1961

RECORDS in REVIEW

SIBELIUS: Symphony No. 5, E flat, Op. 82; Finlandia. Philharmonia Orchestra, Herbert von Karajan (Angel stereo and mono 35922).

I have never heard a more exciting record of "Finlandia," which is, I suspect, the thing that most people will be looking for on this disc. Von Karajan draws sounds of an amazing richness and delicacy from his perfectly disciplined orchestra, and Angel's engineers etch them into the stereo groove with magnificent color and precise balance. The same virtues are present in the symphony, where von Karajan has an even greater depth and variety of textures to display, but here his interpretation is very much his own and in some passages a bit unorthodox. Stimulating, however, and beautifully played.

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 8 in b ('Unfinished'); Symphony No. 5 in B flat. Chicago S.O., Fritz Reiner (Victor stereo and mono 2516).

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 8 in b ('Unfinished'); Incidental Music to Rosamunde. Minneapolis S.O., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski (Mercury stereo 90218, mono 50218).

At times, you might wonder whether both orchestras are playing the same symphony, though both are clearly doing a first-class job. Reiner is taut, driving, dramatic and a bit antiseptic in his treatment. Skrowaczewski, in his first recording since his appointment to Minneapolis, presents the symphony in glowing colors, seeking to soften the edges of its structure which Reiner etches with perceptive clarity, and probing its emotional depths with obvious empathy. The difference is between warmth and brilliance; each is excellent in its own way.

The conductors' characteristics in the Unfinished are also shown in the companion pieces. Each gets excellent playing from his orchestra and well-defined sound from the engineers.

CHOPIN: Piano Sonata No. 2 in b flat, Op. 35 ('Funeral March'); No. 3 in b, Op. 58. Arthur Rubinstein, piano (Victor-Soria stereo and mono 2554, with illustrated booklet).

While the two conductors above demonstrate that there is more than one way to play a Schubert symphony, Rubinstein's performance argues persuasively that there is only one way to play a Chopin sonata and that Rubinstein alone holds the secret. He finds a logic and coherence in these works that other pianists and even musicologist have sought in vain. He shows the music's true value as it has rarely been shown before and, even more, by his phrasing he relates it uniquely to Chopin's other work. On the purely technical level, as might be expected, the performance is impeccable, but its true value lies in the realm of interpretation.

Added to these values, RCA's elaborate packaging, the illustrated booklet enclosed with the record and the luminous recorded sound combine to make an outstanding production.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe, Complete Ballet. Charles Munch, Boston S.O.; New England Conservatory Chorus (Victor stereo and mono 2568).

Munch is his own closest competitor in this case, and on virtues both of sound and of finesse his newest recording clearly takes the lead over his earlier performance. Here, he is totally in his element and the magnificent Boston Symphony puts its best foot decisively forward. Even the Symphony Hall acoustics, which did not register kindly in some parts of his recent recording of the Mendelssohn "Scotch" Symphony, return to their usual tasteful brilliance for Ravel's magic-tinted love story.

'Daphnis' is heard frequently in excerpted suites, a practice hard to explain in view of the score's relative brevity and its excellent structure. This is Ravel's finest orchestral composition, abounding in delicate shades of color and displaying both emotional and intellectual power in its form. To be fully appreciated, it must be heard complete, and preferably in this luminous, beautifully proportioned performance.

REPORTER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
BI-WEEKLY 142,583

DEC 21 1961

this role, negotiates the roulades and cadenzas with spectacular aplomb, and the assurance and agility of the Sutherland pyrotechnics serve to offset any dramatic lapses. Renato Gioni is a pleasant-sounding new tenor, freer than most of his kind from vulgar mannerisms, and Cesare Siepi is his usual dependable self. The real star of the occasion, however, is Robert Merrill, whose powerfully conceived characterization of the blackguardly, unscrupulous Enrico manages to turn attention away from the warbling tormentee and onto the complex tormentor. John Pritchard, a youngish British opera conductor, gives a well-paced, nonsense account of the score, and London's engineers provide expectably gratifying sound.

BACH: VERGNUBGTE RUH' (Cantata No. 170). Aafje Heynis, contralto; Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, Szymon Goldberg, cond. (Epic; mono, LC 3805; stereo, BC 1146.)

Put to the blindfold test, I would be tempted to identify the voice on this record as belonging to the late Kathleen Ferrier. But the singer is Aafje Heynis, a Dutch contralto in her twenties who is just now on the threshold of an international career. The resemblance to Ferrier is not merely one of vocal timbre but also of musical character. Miss Heynis is able to convey the impression of direct honesty and tender simplicity in her singing, and—like Ferrier—she can persuade us that she believes in every word and note that she utters. In addition to the whole of Vergnügte Ruh' (not out of Bach's top cantata drawer but full of sober beauties nevertheless), the disc contains a collection of alto arias from the Christmas Oratorio and Cantatas Nos. 34 and 108.

DEBUSSY: SONGS. Gérard Souzay, baritone; Dalton Baldwin, piano. (Deutsche Grammophon; mono, 18758; stereo, 138758.)

Leave it to the Germans to title a record jacket "Gérard Souzay sings Lieder by Claude Debussy"! But don't let semantics put you off. The performances themselves are sparklingly French and altogether admirable. Souzay has progressed far since he first burst upon the scene as a soulful young baritone ten or more years ago. He seemed then a suave but rather spiritless crooner who found himself in his element only when spinning out slow, lugubrious songs of the "Au cimitière" type. Souzay is still an impressive spinner-outer, as witness "Clair de lune" in this collection, but he can now also summon forth the requisite snap and brio for "Chevaux de bois," the frothy humor for "Fantoches," the muted drama for "Colloque sentimental." In short, this is to acknowledge that the "new" Souzay is a performer of greatly enriched interpretative powers and that he can be considered at last the true successor (as well as the most accomplished pupil) of his celebrated mentor, Pierre Bernac. Souzay's choice of Debussy "Lieder" advances chronologically from "Beau soir" of 1878 to the "Promenoir des deux amants" cycle of 1910 and manages to include a goodly assortment of the composer's most beautiful songs. The accompaniments of Dalton Baldwin could not be bettered, but the same can hardly be said for Deutsche Grammophon's presentation—which provides the French texts but no translations, no annotations, and no dates.

STRAVINSKY: JEU DE CARTES. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. (RCA Victor; mono, LM 2567; stereo, LSC 2567.)

Jeu de Cartes (1936), subtitled "A Ballet in Three Deals," is pure entertainment music in the neo-classic "start and stop" style which Stravinsky pioneered and which until recently was the lingua franca of all young American composers. Its bright and brassy instrumentation, its rhythmic ingenuities, its sly quotations from other composers are the work of a master on a carefree binge, and it is good to have it all re-exposed in an up-to-date recording by a virtuoso orchestra. The Poulenc Organ Concerto (1938) on the overside is also done to perfection. Munch is well attuned to its mood of ironic grandiloquence, and the RCA engineers have managed to put a startling amount of undistorted sound into the stereo grooves (nothing makes more noise than a large pipe organ and a full-scale orchestra blaring forth without inhibitions). A coupling highly recommended on all counts.

—ROLAND GELATT

CLASSICAL DISCS by N.W.

Brilliant Berlioz from Boston

THE Monteux, and Van Otterloo recordings of the Symphonie Fantastique and Munch's two-disc set of the Requiem have proved the enormous benefits of stereo in projecting the breadth, colour and brilliant scoring of Berlioz's orchestral canvases.

Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra make the point again this month in a recording for R.C.A. of the overtures "Roam Carnival", "Beatrice and Benedict", "The Corsair", "Benevento Cellini", and the Royal Hunt and Storm from "The Trojans", on SB 2125 (stereo) and RB 16254 (mono).

That Munch is one of the outstanding interpreters of Berlioz is made abundantly clear here. The performances are as musicianly as they are brilliant and exciting, and are executed in the Bostonians' familiar virtuoso manner. The engineers have gone to town on this one and produced a glittering kaleidoscope.

286

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000
OCT 7 1961

RECORDS in REVIEW

SIBELIUS: Symphony No. 5, E flat, Op. 82; Finlandia. Philharmonia Orchestra, Herbert von Karajan (Angel stereo and mono 35922).

I have never heard a more exciting record of "Finlandia," which is, I suspect, the thing that most people will be looking for on this disc. Von Karajan draws sounds of an amazing richness and delicacy from his perfectly disciplined orchestra, and Angel's engineers etch them into the stereo groove with magnificent color and precise balance. The same virtues are present in the symphony, where von Karajan has an even greater depth and variety of textures to display, but here his interpretation is very much his own and in some passages a bit unorthodox. Stimulating, however, and beautifully played.

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 8 in b ('Unfinished'); Symphony No. 5 in B flat. Chicago S.O., Fritz Reiner (Victor stereo and mono 2516).

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 8 in b ('Unfinished'); Incidental Music to Rosamunde. Minneapolis S.O., Stanislaw Skrowaczewski (Mercury stereo 90218, mono 50218).

At times, you might wonder whether both orchestras are playing the same symphony, though both are clearly doing a first-class job. Reiner is taut, driving, dramatic and a bit antiseptic in his treatment. Skrowaczewski, in his first recording since his appointment to Minneapolis, presents the symphony in glowing colors, seeking to soften the edges of its structure which Reiner etches with perceptive clarity, and probing its emotional depths with obvious empathy. The difference is between warmth and brilliance; each is excellent in its own way.

The conductors' characteristics in the Unfinished are also shown in the companion pieces. Each gets excellent playing from his orchestra and well-defined sound from the engineers.

CHOPIN: Piano Sonata No. 2 in b flat, Op. 35 ('Funeral March'); No. 3 in b, Op. 58. Arthur Rubinstein, piano (Victor-Soria stereo and mono 2554, with illustrated booklet).

While the two conductors above demonstrate that there is more than one way to play a Schubert symphony, Rubinstein's performance argues persuasively that there is only one way to play a Chopin sonata and that Rubinstein alone holds the secret. He finds a logic and coherence in these works that other pianists and even musicologist have sought in vain. He shows the music's true value as it has rarely been shown before and, even more, by his phrasing he relates it uniquely to Chopin's other work. On the purely technical level, as might be expected, the performance is impeccable, but its true value lies in the realm of interpretation.

Added to these values, RCA's elaborate packaging, the illustrated booklet enclosed with the record and the luminous recorded sound combine to make an outstanding production.

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloe, Complete Ballet. Charles Munch, Boston S.O.; New England Conservatory Chorus (Victor stereo and mono 2568).

Munch is his own closest competitor in this case, and on virtues both of sound and of finesse his newest recording clearly takes the lead over his earlier performance. Here, he is totally in his element and the magnificent Boston Symphony puts its best foot decisively forward. Even the Symphony Hall acoustics, which did not register kindly in some parts of his recent recording of the Mendelssohn "Scotch" Symphony, return to their usual tasteful brilliance for Ravel's magic-tinted love story.

'Daphnis' is heard frequently in excerpted suites, a practice hard to explain in view of the score's relative brevity and its excellent structure. This is Ravel's finest orchestral composition, abounding in delicate shades of color and displaying both emotional and intellectual power in its form. To be fully appreciated, it must be heard complete, and preferably in this luminous, beautifully proportioned performance.

REPORTER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
BI-WEEKLY 142,583
DEC 21 1961

CLASSICAL DISCS

Brilliant Berlioz from Boston

THE Monteux and Van Otterloo recordings of the Symphonie Fantastique and Munch's two-disc set of the Requiem have proved the enormous benefits of stereo in projecting the breadth, colour and brilliant scoring of Berlioz's orchestral canvases.

Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra make the point again this month in a recording for R.C.A. of the overtures "Roam Carnival", "Beatrice and Benedict", "The Corsair", "Benvenuto Cellini", and the Royal Hunt and Storm from "The Trojans", on SB 2125 (stereo) and RB 16254 (mono).

That Munch is one of the outstanding interpreters of Berlioz is made abundantly clear here. The performances are as musicianly as they are brilliant and exciting, and are executed in the Bostonians' familiar virtuoso manner. The engineers have gone to town on this one and produced a glittering kaleidoscope.

this role, negotiates the roulades and cadenzas with spectacular aplomb, and the assurance and agility of the Sutherland pyrotechnics serve to offset any dramatic lapses. Renato Cioni is a pleasant-sounding new tenor, freer than most of his kind from vulgar mannerisms, and Cesare Siepi is his usual dependable self. The real star of the occasion, however, is Robert Merrill, whose powerfully conceived characterization of the blackguardly, unscrupulous Enrico manages to turn attention away from the whirling tormentee and onto the complex tormentor. John Pritchard, a youngish British opera conductor, gives a well-paced, nonnonsense account of the score, and London's engineers provide expectably gratifying sound.

BACH: VERGNÜGTE RUH' (Cantata No. 170). Aafje Heynis, contralto; Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, Szymon Goldberg, cond. (Epic, mono, LC 3805; stereo, BC 1146.)

Put to the blindfold test, I would be tempted to identify the voice on this record as belonging to the late Kathleen Ferrier. But the singer is Aafje Heynis, a Dutch contralto in her twenties who is just now on the threshold of an international career. The resemblance to Ferrier is not merely one of vocal timbre but also of musical character. Miss Heynis is able to convey the impression of direct honesty and tender simplicity in her singing, and—like Ferrier—she can persuade us that she believes in every word and note that she utters. In addition to the whole of Vergnügte Ruh' (not out of Bach's top cantata drawer but full of sober beauties nevertheless), the disc contains a collection of alto arias from the Christmas Oratorio and Cantatas Nos. 34 and 108.

DEBUSSY: SONGS. Gérard Souzay, baritone; Dalton Baldwin, piano. (Deutsche Grammophon; mono, 18758; stereo, 138758.)

Leave it to the Germans to title a record jacket "Gérard Souzay sings Lieder by Claude Debussy"! But don't let semantics put you off. The performances themselves are sparklingly French and altogether admirable. Souzay has progressed far since he first burst upon the scene as a soulful young baritone ten or more years ago. He seemed then a suave but rather spiritless crooner who found himself in his element only when spinning out slow, lugubrious songs of the "Au cimitière" type. Souzay is still an impressive spinner-outer, as witness "Clair de lune" in this collection, but he can now also summon forth the requisite snap and brio for "Chevaux de bois," the frothy humor for "Fantoches," the muted drama for "Colloque sentimental." In short, this is to acknowledge that the "new" Souzay is a performer of greatly enriched interpretative powers and that he can be considered at last the true successor (as well as the most accomplished pupil) of his celebrated mentor, Pierre Bernac. Souzay's choice of Debussy "Lieder" advances chronologically from "Beau soir" of 1878 to the "Promenoir des deux amants" cycle of 1910 and manages to include a goodly assortment of the composer's most beautiful songs. The accompaniments of Dalton Baldwin could not be bettered, but the same can hardly be said for Deutsche Grammophon's presentation—which provides the French texts but no translations, no annotations, and no dates.

STRAVINSKY: JEU DE CARTES. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. (RCA Victor; mono, LM 2567; stereo, LSC 2567.)

Jeu de Cartes (1936), subtitled "A Ballet in Three Deals," is pure entertainment music in the neo-classic "start and stop" style which Stravinsky pioneered and which until recently was the lingua franca of all young American composers. Its bright and brassy instrumentation, its rhythmic ingenuities, its sly quotations from other composers are the work of a master on a carefree binge, and it is good to have it all re-exposed in an up-to-date recording by a virtuoso orchestra. The Poulenc Organ Concerto (1938) on the overside is also done to perfection. Munch is well attuned to its mood of ironic grandiloquence, and the RCA engineers have managed to put a startling amount of undistorted sound into the stereo grooves (nothing makes more noise than a large pipe organ and a full-scale orchestra blaring forth without inhibitions). A coupling highly recommended on all counts.

—ROLAND GELATT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4220
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
NOV 26 1961

RECORDS

Two recent Kapp LP issues signal the return to professional playing, at least in the recording field, of pianist Abram Chasins. A well known and respected concert artist before he left the concert hall to become the musical director of WQXR in New York, Chasins recently decided to make a limited number of recordings to perpetuate what he calls "a musical outlook." This concerns the interpretive conceptions and expressive ideas which the pianist absorbed from the great Josef Hofmann with whom Chasins studied for a number of years.

So in a sense Chasins "is speaking" for his ideal pianist in the first of these Kapp records, a collection of five Chopin works. Included are the following: Scherzo in C sharp minor (Op. 39); Impromptu in F sharp minor (Op. 36); Ballade in F sharp major (Op. 47); Polonaise in A flat major (Op. 53); Fantaise in F minor (Op. 49). If these performances are understandably only "reasonable facsimiles" of his teacher's superb technical accomplishments they are refreshing and provocative in their unique and ever logical approach to the music. And they represent a brand of pianism that is still pretty good by any standards. Chasins has not lost his "touch" and is happily still capable of some brilliant playing.

In the other record at hand, Chasins is joined by his pianist wife, Constance Keene, in performances of Bach's C major and C minor concertos, supported by the Kapp Sinfonietta under the baton of Emanual Vardi. Mrs. Chasins, a recognized artist in her own right, has performed these two concertos with her husband many times, including one with the Boston Symphony. Technically, there are no problems for either here; both integrate their playing beautifully, and the interpretive considerations beat "a stamp of authority" through Chasins' long interest and studies in Baroque music. The only criticism here, and it's of slight import, is that the Sinfonietta's minor role in the performances is perhaps too "minor" at times.

G.E.A.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

the Tape Deck

Reviewed by R. D. DARRELL

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,481
APR 1962

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in C, Op. 15; Sonata for Piano, No. 22, in F, Op. 54

Sviatoslav Richter, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. (in the Concerto).
• RCA VICTOR LM 2544. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2544. SD. $5.98.

Richter's muscular Beethoven and his apparent refusal to acknowledge different styles for the composer's early, middle, and late music can dull the listener's perception of what the pianist is actually doing.

It is obvious in this recording that the Sonata—a powerful, rocklike work in two movements which lies between the Appassionata and the Waldstein—has received an extraordinarily strong statement. Only after some comparison with other versions, however, does it become clear that Richter has given us the most potent account of this music since the Schnabel edition. That alone ought to be the making of the present album, but we have still the Concerto to deal with.

On first hearing this work, I was troubled by the sound and such aberrations as an opening C sharp in place of a C. I now have a copy of the tape edition and this stays on pitch. It also provides a superior quality of ensemble sonorities. Even the first impression of the Concerto, however, is that of an exceptional solo performance, but here too playing this recording against an alternate version serves to pinpoint misconceptions. For example, on the basis of the opening phrases one's natural assumption is that in the Largo movement the recent Fleisher set is much slower. Not so. Richter takes a faster tempo in the opening phrases (thereby giving them somewhat greater continuity), but the stop watch shows his performance to be only about forty-five seconds faster than Fleisher's over-all. Similarly in the finale, when Richter first seems to be playing in more of a "middle period" manner than the young American, it turns out that Richter's is actually the lighter and more playful account, the one more in keeping with the Allegro scherzando marking of the composer. Further, although Fleisher has a closer microphone pickup than Richter was given, it is the Russian pianist whose personality registers more forcefully in the end. It is a warm, outgoing personality that puts the necessary brio in the opening movement and makes one ask whether the Beethoven of Op. 15 should be less of a titan than that of Op. 73. (Young titans are titans too. They do not walk on tiptoe.)

In short, the more I hear of this record, the more I am convinced that it is one we are fortunate to possess. R.C.M.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

BERLIOZ: Overtures

Le Carnaval romain, Op. 9; Béatrice et Bénédict; Le Corsaire, Op. 21; Benvenuto Cellini, Op. 23; Les Troyens à Carthage: Royal Hunt and Storm.

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2059. 44 min. $8.95.

However one evaluates Munch in other repertories, it's generally agreed that his preëminence as a Berlioz interpreter has been challenged only by Beecham—and the latter's recordings of some of the present works date well back into the pre-stereo era. With the exception of the popular Roman Carnival, these selections are all tape firsts and in their idiomatic authenticity (to say nothing of their orchestral virtuosity, particularly in the breathtakingly fleet Corsaire and whimsically resilient Béatrice et Bénédict) they are not likely to be soon surpassed. The smooth stereo spread and transparency are extremely effective at their best here, although there may be some lack of the ultrabrilliance of the latest technology. (Released only a few months ago in disc form, the recordings apparently were made several years earlier.) And while the tape also discloses the differences in quality between the A and B sides which Paul Affelder noted in his disc review, the slightly less sharp tonal focusing in the second side is not as obvious in the tape processing.

Munch: preëminent in Berlioz.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
NOV 26 1961

RECORDS

Two recent Kapp LP issues signal the return to professional playing, at least in the recording field, of pianist Abram Chasins. A well known and respected concert artist before he left the concert hall to become the musical director of WQXR in New York, Chasins recently decided to make a limited number of recordings to perpetuate what he calls "a musical outlook." This concerns the interpretive conceptions and expressive ideas which the pianist absorbed from the great Josef Hofmann with whom Chasins studied for a number of years.

So in a sense Chasins "is speaking" for his ideal pianist in the first of these Kapp records, a collection of five Chopin works. Included are the following: Scherzo in C sharp minor (Op. 39); Impromptu in F sharp minor (Op. 36); Ballade in F sharp major (Op. 47); Polonaise in A flat major (Op. 53); Fantaise in F minor (Op. 49). If these performances are understandably only "reasonable facsimiles" of his teacher's superb technical accomplishments they are refreshing and provocative in their unique and ever logical approach to the music. And they represent a brand of pianism that is still pretty good by any standards. Chasins has not lost his "touch" and is happily still capable of some brilliant playing.

In the other record at hand, Chasins is joined by his pianist wife, Constance Keene, in performances of Bach's C major and C minor concertos, supported by the Kapp Sinfonietta under the baton of Emanual Vardi. Mrs. Chasins, a recognized artist in her own right, has performed these two concertos with her husband many times, including one with the Boston Symphony. Technically, there are no problems for either here; both integrate their playing beautifully, and the interpretive considerations beat "a stamp of authority" through Chasins' long interest and studies in Baroque music. The only criticism here, and it's of slight import, is that the Sinfonietta's minor role in the performances is perhaps too "minor" at times.

G.F.A.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268
JUL 1961

The Tape Deck

Reviewed by R. D. DARRELL

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in C, Op. 15; Sonata for Piano, No. 22, in F, Op. 54

Sviatoslav Richter, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. (in the Concerto)
• RCA VICTOR LM 2544. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2544. SD. $5.98.

Richter's muscular Beethoven and his apparent refusal to acknowledge different styles for the composer's early, middle, and late music can dull the listener's perception of what the pianist is actually doing.

It is obvious in this recording that the Sonata—a powerful, rocklike work in two movements which lies between the Appassionata and the Waldstein—has received an extraordinarily strong statement. Only after some comparison with other versions, however, does it become clear that Richter has given us the most potent account of this music since the Schnabel edition. That alone ought to be the making of the present album, but we have still the Concerto to deal with.

On first hearing this work, I was troubled by the sound and such aberrations as an opening C sharp in place of a C. I now have a copy of the tape edition and this stays on pitch. It also provides a superior quality of ensemble sonorities. Even the first impression of the Concerto, however, is that of an exceptional solo performance, but here too playing this recording against an alternate version serves to pinpoint misconceptions. For example, on the basis of the opening phrases one's natural assumption is that in the Largo movement the recent Fleisher set is much slower. Not so. Richter takes a faster tempo in the opening phrases (thereby giving them somewhat greater continuity), but the stop watch shows his performance to be only about forty-five seconds faster than Fleisher's over-all. Similarly in the finale, when Richter first seems to be playing in more of a "middle period" manner than the young American, it turns out that Richter's is actually the lighter and more playful account, the one more in keeping with the Allegro scherzando marking of the composer. Further, although Fleisher has a closer microphone pickup than Richter was given, it is the Russian pianist whose personality registers more forcefully in the end. It is a warm, outgoing personality that puts the necessary brio in the opening movement and makes one ask whether the Beethoven of Op. 15 should be less of a titan than that of Op. 73. (Young titans are titans too. They do not walk on tiptoe.)

In short, the more I hear of this record, the more I am convinced that it is one we are fortunate to possess. R.C.M.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,481
APR 1962

Munch: preëminent in Berlioz

BERLIOZ: Overtures

Le Carnaval romain, Op. 9; Béatrice et Bénédict; Le Corsaire, Op. 21; Benvenuto Cellini, Op. 23; Les Troyens à Carthage: Royal Hunt and Storm.

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2059, 44 min. $8.95.

However one evaluates Munch in other repertories, it's generally agreed that his preëminence as a Berlioz interpreter has been challenged only by Beecham—and the latter's recordings of some of the present works date well back into the pre-stereo era. With the exception of the popular Roman Carnival, these selections are all tape firsts and in their idiomatic authenticity (to say nothing of their orchestral virtuosity, particularly in the breathtakingly fleet Corsaire and whimsically resilient Béatrice et Bénédict) they are not likely to be soon surpassed. The smooth stereo spread and transparency are extremely effective at their best here, although there may be some lack of the ultrabrilliance of the latest technology. (Released only a few months ago in disc form, the recordings apparently were made several years earlier.) And while the tape also discloses the differences in quality between the A and B sides which Paul Affelder noted in his disc review, the slightly less sharp tonal focusing in the second side is not as obvious in the tape processing.

188

DANCE MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC NOT AVAIL
FEB 1962

RECORDS FOR DANCE

BY ROSALYN KROKOVER

1962 sets the half-century mark for one of the great ballet scores of all time. Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe had been originally scheduled by Diaghilev to be produced in 1911, but it finally received its premiere on June 8, 1912 — under the worst possible conditions.

The recent book of Fokine memoirs devotes a whole chapter to the choreographer's version of the shenanigans surrounding this production. There were obviously several basic problems. Ravel (the composer), Bakst (the artist), and Fokine (the choreographer) never did agree on the style in which the Greek legend was to be projected. And Diaghilev himself at that time decided that he was going to make Nijinsky a great choreographer, and was deeply involved in a staging of Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun. All of this led to Fokine's first and most serious break with the Ballets Russes.

In his book he sums up his feelings briefly: "What a happy time this could have been for me — a period of work with the wonderful music of Ravel! But it turned out to be the opposite; Daphnis and Chloe was destined to remain the most sorrowful work of my entire life."

It is highly improbable that the current anniversary will be celebrated by any American ballet company (the ballet, with choreography by Ashton, is in the Royal Ballet repertoire). First of all, the score is for full orchestra and chorus, which means that it is very expensive to perform; and, secondly, Fokine's choreography is too dated for our current taste.

But the record companies have not let us down. There are now three up-to-date stereo versions of the complete ballet score, in addition to numerous copies of the suites.

The two most recent releases of the score are played by two of America's great orchestras. Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the New England Conservatory Chorus (Victor LM 2568, mono; LSC 2568, stereo). Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic have the chorus of the Schola Cantorum (Columbia ML 5660, mono; MS 6260, stereo). Both of these discs have the advantage of good recording. Bernstein brings a youthful exuberance to his interpretation, while Munch leads with a mature, knowledgeable hand. But most mellow of all is the older Monteux version (London CM 9028, mono; CS 6147, stereo). Monteux, it will be remembered, conducted the premiere of this work.

English Ballets of the 20th Century (Angel 35889, mono; S 35889, stereo) is the title of another new disc. This contains the only modern versions of Holst's The Perfect Fool and Britten's Simple Symphony. The third work is William Walton's Façade, as used in the Royal Ballet's production.

Holst's score is the music that was originally composed as a ballet prelude to an opera, and Britten's is an orchestration of pieces he had written as a child. The Holst score has to do with a magician calling up the spirits of Earth, Water and Fire. The music is a little reminiscent of The Sorcerer's Apprentice. Britten's Simple Symphony is a little work in the style of a contemporary Bach, in four short movements: Boisterous Bourrée, Playful Pizzicato, Sentimental Saraband, and Frolicsome Finale. Neither score is particularly distinguished, but both are highly serviceable for choreography. All are well played and conducted by Sir Malcom Sargent and the Royal Philharmonic.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
DEC 23 1961

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL LP

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Bloch: Concerto Symphonique. Litolff: Scherzo (from Concerto Symphonique No. 4). Marjorie Mitchell, piano, with the Vienna State Opera Orchestra conducted by Vladimir Golschmann. Vanguard VSD 2101, $5.95.	A product of the late years (1947-48) of Bloch's life, this work fulfills the promise of the giving equal shares of prominence to orchestra and piano. It is a strong, straightforward p most solid craftsmanship. What I did not hear in a first playing was a flow of musical support the effort expended on their working out; and a second exposure did not add to for Bloch's rhetoric of composition, a strong attachment to the substance of his argument Mitchell provides the kind of solo impulse and Golschmann the order of assistance that should the most of what they are concerned with, but real interest remains elusive. The Litolff (who has ever heard the whole of this work?) is neatly, fleetly dispatched. Good reproducti
Falla: "Tricorne," "La Vida, breve," Interlude and Dance). Ernest Ansermet conducting L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande with Teresa Berganza, mezzo-soprano. London CS 6224, $5.98.	It would take a braver man than I to question Ansermet's knowledge of the ballet music he conducted at its first performances in 1919, but I do question the "Rheingold" techniques which Falla's genial score is turned into a thing of timpani concerto. And where feeling is concer rather than knowledge, I much prefer the expansively noninsistent treatment by Argenta of dances (rather than the total ballet score) on London CS 6050. Berganza sings well the mode amount of vocal music in this score, though her placement in terms of the instrumental background is not too advantageous.
Handel: "Water Music." Hermann Scherchen conducting the Vienna State Opera Orchestra. Westminster WST 14142, $5.98.	Were all the movements played as well as a minuet here, a bourrée there, this would be something to acclaim; were all played as perversely as some others, it would be something to denounce. The sum of it, then, is Scherchen's typically erratic Handel, the more erratic for conforming to no discernible pattern of antipathy or sympathy—though, in general, the slow sections are played better than the fast. Not much assistance is provided by the annotation in determining sequence or names, for it is devoted wholly to stylistic considerations without such practical information as the names of the movements. Furthermore, these are not enumerated on the record label. Otherwise all is order, clarity, coherence. No arranger is specified, but the instrumentation is not the conventional one of Sir Hamilton Harty, nor disposed to its kind of fulness.
Haydn: Symphony No. 83 in G minor. Mozart: Symphony No. 29 in A (K. 201). Szymon Goldberg conducting the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra. Epic BC 1148, $5.98.	Goldberg has considerable success in organizing his players into a single-minded, cohesive whole, faithful to his own high standards in musical detail cleanly articulated. However, this is but a beginning toward meaningful interpretation and he doesn't go much beyond it. Of the two symphonies, the Haydn ("La Poule") makes a stronger impression because it requires less in the way of supplementary insight beyond the clear indications of the written score. It is a well turned out, thoroughly listenable performance. However, the Mozart is very far off the mark for an Allegro moderato, the whole of it rather relentlessly pursued for a work of its geniality and equitable spirit. Very good reproduced sound.
Kurka: Symphony No. 2. Whitney: Concertino. Louisville Orchestra conducted by Robert Whitney. Louisville LOU 616, $7.95.	Here is more evidence to the point that December 12, 1957, when Kurka died at the age of twenty-six, was a dark day for American music, for it shows as much disposition to instrumental expression as his "Good Soldier Schweik" did to the operatic. A commission thoughtfully provided by the Koussevitzki Fund for the Encouragement of American Composers enabled Kurka to write this work in 1953, when he was twenty-two, and for all its derivations from the procedures of Prokofiev, it has exceptional fluency, organization, and order. And, of course, the high spirits that were singularly his. With it is a well-constructed score by Camposi-Whitney which explains some of conductor Whitney's access to a variety of contemporary musical dialects: he speaks one (basically French, with a trace of Stravinsky) fluently himself. Both works are skilfully performed, and very well reproduced.
Poulenc: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani. Stravinsky: "Jeu de Cartes." Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Berj Zamkochian, organ, and Everett Firth, timpani. RCA Victor LM 2567, $4.98.	For reasons of its own, RCA has arranged the contents of this album as noted at left, though the Poulenc is already available in two performances, of which one at least is superior to this, and the Stravinsky is offered in a version currently unique. This relates not merely to the lack of another version, stereo or mono, but also to the model clarity, strength, and animation of the Munch performance. He gets more from the score than any previous phonographic interpreter (especially its rarely remarked allusions to Ravel's "La Valse") including the composer himself on a no longer available Berlin Philharmonic issue. It rates high among the best recent RCA recordings technically.
Schumann: Symphony No. 4 in D minor, "Manfred" Overture. Leonard Bernstein conducting the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Columbia MS 6256, $5.98.	Schumann is a composer for whom Bernstein's feeling is sure, his models sound. The organic development of this work (well projected in the conductor's own comments printed on the liner) is given its due in this performance, which has force, point, and a suitable sense of style. There is, however, no more than a mention of Bernstein's "faith" in the "rightness of Schumann's own final revision (1851)" to illuminate the respects in which this "original orchestration" differs from those commonly used by others. The quality level is sustained through the strong playing of the "Manfred" Overture.
Tcherepnin: Bagatelles, Opus 5. Weber: Konzertstück. Rachmaninoff: Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini. Margit Weber, piano, with the Radio Symphony Orchestra of Berlin conducted by Ferenc Fricsay. Deutsche Grammophon DGS138710, $6.98.	At first glance it would appear that the Tcherepnin Bagatelles (originally for solo piano and rescored by the composer) plus the Weber "Concert Piece" might provide values to differentiate this version of the Rachmaninoff work from the multiple others (four in stereo) now available. The first hearing characterizes the Tcherepnin as only what the British call "fill up" matter—pleasant but hardly incentive toward buying the whole record. The Weber is strongly, rather harshly performed, but without much charm or persuasiveness. The Rachmaninoff is treated much the same way, with the polyphony turned inside out, and the melodic attractions in which the real feeling in this work inheres, outside in. Finally, Miss Weber's piano sound lacks the color and warmth to compare with other top performers of Rachmaninoff.
Thomson: "The River" (Suite), "The Plow that Broke the Plains" (Suite). Leopold Stokowski conducting the Symphony of the Air. Vanguard VSD 2095, $5.95.	For those who were not listening when these scores were new for the films to which they were made in 1936 and 1937, these recordings will be remarkable for the vital contribution of Thomson to the direction of American music since then. The elevation of mundane musical materials to the integers of an art expression is especially evident in "Plow," which recalls the droughts and the Okies and other migrators of the time in its mixture of melancholia and resolution. Stokowski makes much of the coloristic content of the two scores, providing a new high in interpretive values for "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," which has a conspicuous place in "The River." High-quality reproduction. —IRVING KOLODIN.

188

DANCE MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1962

RECORDS FOR DANCE

BY ROSALYN KROKOVER

1962 sets the half-century mark for one of the great ballet scores of all time. Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe had been originally scheduled by Diaghilev to be produced in 1911, but it finally received its premiere on June 8, 1912 — under the worst possible conditions.

The recent book of Fokine memoirs devotes a whole chapter to the choreographer's version of the shenanigans surrounding this production. There were obviously several basic problems. Ravel (the composer), Bakst (the artist), and Fokine (the choreographer) never did agree on the style in which the Greek legend was to be projected. And Diaghilev himself at that time decided that he was going to make Nijinsky a great choreographer, and was deeply involved in a staging of Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun. All of this led to Fokine's first and most serious break with the Ballets Russes.

In his book he sums up his feelings briefly: "What a happy time this could have been for me — a period of work with the wonderful music of Ravel! But it turned out to be the opposite; Daphnis and Chloe was destined to remain the most sorrowful work of my entire life."

It is highly improbable that the current anniversary will be celebrated by any American ballet company (the ballet, with choreography by Ashton, is in the Royal Ballet repertoire). First of all, the score is for full orchestra and chorus, which means that it is very expensive to perform; and, secondly, Fokine's choreography is too dated for our current taste.

But the record companies have not let us down. There are now three up-to-date stereo versions of the complete ballet score, in addition to numerous copies of the suites.

The two most recent releases of the score are played by two of America's great orchestras. Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the New England Conservatory Chorus (Victor LM 2568, mono; LSC 2568, stereo). Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic have the chorus of the Schola Cantorum (Columbia ML 5660, mono; MS 6260, stereo). Both of these discs have the advantage of good recording. Bernstein brings a youthful exuberance to his interpretation, while Munch leads with a mature, knowledgeable hand. But most mellow of all is the older Monteux version (London CM 9028, mono; CS 6147, stereo). Monteux, it will be remembered, conducted the premiere of this work.

English Ballets of the 20th Century (Angel 35889, mono; S 35889, stereo) is the title of another new disc. This contains the only modern versions of Holst's The Perfect Fool and Britten's Simple Symphony. The third work is William Walton's Façade, as used in the Royal Ballet's production.

Holst's score is the music that was originally composed as a ballet prelude to an opera, and Britten's is an orchestration of pieces he had written as a child. The Holst score has to do with a magician calling up the spirits of Earth, Water and Fire. The music is a little reminiscent of The Sorcerer's Apprentice. Britten's Simple Symphony is a little work in the style of a contemporary Bach, in four short movements: Boisterous Bourrée, Playful Pizzicato, Sentimental Saraband, and Frolicsome Finale. Neither score is particularly distinguished, but both are highly serviceable for choreography. All are well played and conducted by Sir Malcom Sargent and the Royal Philharmonic.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
DEC 23 1961

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Bloch: Concerto Symphonique. Litolff: Scherzo (from Concerto Symphonique No. 4). Marjorie Mitchell, piano, with the Vienna State Opera Orchestra conducted by Vladimir Golschmann. Vanguard VSD 2101, $5.95.	A product of the late years (1947-48) of Bloch's life, this work [illegible] the profile of the ti[illegible] giving equal shares of prominence to orchestra and pianol. It [illegible] strongly [illegible] of Bl[illegible] most solid craftsmanship. What I did not hear in a first playing [illegible] a flow of musical id[illegible] support the effort expended on their working out; and a second exposure did not add to r[illegible] for Bloch's rhetoric of composition, a strong attachment to the substance of his argument. Mitchell provides the kind of solo impulse [illegible] and Golschmann the order of assistance that should [illegible] the most of what they [illegible] concerned w[illegible] t real interest remains elusive. The Litolff s[illegible] (who has ever heard the whole of this work?) is neatly directly dispatched. Good reproduction
Falla: "Tricorne." "Vida breve," Interlude and Dance). Ernest Ansermet conducting L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande with [illegible] Sergeni. London CS 6224, $5.98.	It would take a braver man than I to question Ansermet's knowledge of the ballet music which he conducted at its first performances in 1919? but I do question the "Rheingold" techniques by which Falla's guital score is turned into a kind of tinpan concerto. And where feeling is concerned rather than knowledge, I much prefer the more sensitively restrained treatment by Argenta of dances (rather than the total ballet score) on London CS 6050. Benanza sings well the modest amount of vocal music in this score, though her placement in terms of the instrumental background is not too advantageous.
Handel: "Water Music" Suites (Harty arrangement) conducting the Vienna State Opera Orchestra. Westminster WST 14142, $5.98.	Were all the instruments played well in a product here, a bourrée there, this would be something to applaud; were all played perversely, as in some others, it would be something to denounce. The sum of it, then, is Scherchen's typically erratic Handel, the more erratic for conforming to no discernible pattern of antipathy or sympathy—though, in general, the slow sections are played better than the fast. Not much assistance is provided by the annotation in determining sequence or names, for it is devoted wholly to scholarly considerations without such practical information as the names of the movements. Furthermore, these are not enumerated on the record label. Otherwise all is order, clarity, coherence. No arranger is specified, but the instrumentation is not the conventional one of Sir Hamilton Harty, nor disposed to its kind of fulness.
Haydn: Symphony No. 83 in G (Hen) Mozart: Symphony No. 29 in A (K. 201). Szyman Goldberg conducting the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra. Epic BC 1149, $5.98.	Goldberg has considerable success in organizing his players into a single-minded, cohesive whole, faithful to his own high standards in musical detail cleanly articulated. However, this is but a beginning toward meaningful interpretation and he doesn't go much beyond it. Of the two symphonies, the Haydn ("La Poule") makes a stronger impression because it requires less in the way of supplementary insight beyond the clear indications of the written score. It is a well turned out, deliciously insinuable performance. However, the Mozart is very [illegible] of the mark for an Allegro moderato; the whole of [illegible] pursued for its own sake, its geniality and equitable tone. Very good, reproduced sound.
Kurka: Symphony No. 2. Whitney: Concertino. Louisville Orchestra conducted by Robert Whitney. Louisville LOU 1618, $5.95.	Here is more evidence to the point that December 12, 1957, which Kurka died at the age of twenty-six, was a dark day for American music, for it shows the disposition to instrumental expression as his "Good Soldier Schweik" did to the operatic. A commission thoughtfully provided by the Koussevitzki Fund for the Encouragement of American Composers enabled Kurka to write this work in 1953, when he was twenty-two, and for all its derivations from the procedures of Prokofiev, it has exceptional fluency, organization and order. And, of course, the high spirits that were singularly his. With it is a well-contrasted [illegible] by composer Whitney which explains some of conductor Whitney's access to [illegible] modal dialects, he speaks one (basically French, with a trace of Stravinsky), fluently himself. Both works are skilfully performed, and very well reproduced.
Poulenc: Concerto for Organ, Strings, and Timpani. Stravinsky: "Jeu de cartes." Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Berj Zamkochian, organ, and Everett Firth, timpani. RCA Victor LM 2567, $4.98.	For reasons of its own, RCA has arranged the contents of this album as noted at left, though the Poulenc is already available in two performances, of which one at least is superior to this, and the Stravinsky is offered on a version currently unique. This refutes not merely to the lack of another version, stereo or mono, but also to the model clarity, strength, and animation of the Munch performance. He gets more from the score than any previous phonographic interpreter (especially its rarely remarked allusions to Ravel's "La Valse") including the composer himself on a no longer available Berlin Philharmonic classic, dating high among the best recent RCA recordings technically.
Schumann: Symphony No. 4 in D minor, "Manfred" Overture. Leonard Bernstein conducting the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Columbia MS 6256, $5.98.	Schumann is a composer for whom Bernstein's feeling is sure, his models sound. The organic development of this work (well projected in the conductor's own comments printed on the liner) is given its due in this performance, which has force, point, and a suitable sense of style. There is, however, no more than a mention of Bernstein's "faith" in the "rightness of Schumann's own final revision (1851)" to illuminate the respects in which this "original orchestration" differs from those commonly used by others. The quality level is sustained through the strong playing of the "Manfred" Overture.
Tcherepnin: Bagatelles, Opus 5. Weber: Konzertstuck. Rachmaninoff: Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini. Margit Weber, piano, with the Radio Symphony Orchestra of Berlin conducted by Ferenc Fricsay. Deutsche Grammophon DGS 138710, $6.98.	At first glance it would appear that the Tcherepnin Bagatelles (originally for solo piano and rescored by the composer) plus the Weber "Concert Piece" might provide values to differentiate this version of the Rachmaninoff work from the multiple others (four in stereo) now available. The first hearing characterizes the Tcherepnin as only what the British call "fill up" matter—pleasant, but hardly incentive toward buying the whole record. The Weber is strongly, rather harshly performed, but without much charm or persuasiveness. The Rachmaninoff is treated much the same way, with the polyphony turned inside out, and the melodic attractions in which the real feeling in this work inheres, outside in. Finally, Miss Weber's piano sound lacks the color and warmth to compare with other top performers of Rachmaninoff.
Thomson: "The River" (Suite), "The Plow that Broke the Plains" (Suite). Leopold Stokowski conducting the Symphony of the Air. Vanguard VSD 2095, $5.95.	For those who were not listening when these scores were new for the films to which they were made in 1936 and 1937, this recording will be reminder of the vital contribution of Thomson to the direction of American music since then. The liberation of native musical materials to the integers of an art expression is especially evident in "River," which recalls the droughts and the Okies and other migrators of the time in its mixture of melancholia and resolution. Stokowski makes much of the colouristic content of the two scores, providing a new depth to interpretive values for "All Hid," title in the Old Town Tongue," which has a conspicuous place in "The River." High-quality reproduction. — DAVID KOLODIN

289

POTSDAM COURIER FREEMAN
Thursday, January 4, 1962

Most Uncharacteristic

Once in a while the gaping monster eye which occupies the days and nights of Americans in homes and bars throughout the land radiates a glow which is most uncharacteristic of its usual style. Such was the case on last Monday night's "Jack Paar Show" — minus Paar.

The emcee of the week was Sam Levinson (a very funny comic who laughs too much at his own jokes), and Sam decided to present a New Year's night program which turned out to be one of the finest hours of the television season thus far. It was true that the show had few sponsors and probably a low audience rating (due to New Year's night "drag") but those who did view the show both from the bed and in the studio saw something of rare beauty.

Levinson brought together just four acts for the entire evening, but this was enough to keep the audience in complete rapture for the production. He began by introducing Oscar Brand, well known folk singer, who treated the audience to a taste of humor and satire while getting them to participate in the act. Later in the show, Brand performed from the audience itself and brought the show that much closer to the viewer at home.

The next choice of the school teacher — turned comedian was a character known as "The Banana Man." This charming and skillful performer usually appears in the morning hours before child audiences, but Levinson decided to let the "night people" delight in his wizardry. They loved every minute of it.

Then came the main attraction of the "high-brow" evening, as the audience was introduced to The Boston Fine Arts String Quartette. These four remarkable gentlemen are members of the famed Boston Symphony. Levinson managed to inject something very rare into this portion of the proceedings, by not only presenting several excellent selections of classical music, but also by citing humorous anecdotes appropriate to the occasion.

The program ended on a half-serious, half-humorous note with the appearance of Ashley Montigue, famed anthropologist and author of "The Natural Superiority of Women." Mr. Montigue, who obviously doesn't agree with Kinsey, had some provocative comments, although they were sometimes blurred by his attempt at humor. About the only unfortunate part of this wonderful show was the fact that even in this hour of "high-brow" the conversation eventually got back to the only thing which seems worth discussing today — the "twist."

Levinson is to be congratulated on his bold venture with the Paar show. It was evident from the audience reaction that this type of entertainment was extremely well received by that particular group, and probably the same was true with the viewing public. Even though Levinson admitted himself that a nightly dose of this would make sponsors shudder and audiences roll over in the bed, just a once-a-week glimpse at this type of entertainment, handled the way Levinson did it, would cast our vote for him as Paar's successor.

165 Church Street

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE
D. 121,778
AUG 24 1961

CURTAIN CALL

- Recordings Give Easy Listening
- Piano Numbers by Rosen Please
- 'Flying Dutchman' Work Hailed

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES: Easy summertime listening by way of new phonograph records has come from Columbia and RCA-Victor. Both companies have issued a wide range of selections which are of excellent quality and repertoires which contribute more than usual to phonograph pleasure.

USSHER

Once more Columbia is putting its faith in the delightful artistry of "I Musici," the Roman virtueso chamber music group.

Their latest disc is devoted entirely to grand old Antonio Vivaldi, whose inventiveness finds full demonstration in the shape of eight concertos. These feature flute, oboe, and violin as well as mandoline in captivating solos. It would be difficult to find happier combinations than this brilliant, and graceful 17th Century master of contrapuntal music displays on this disc.

For the love of modern music, I recommend Columbia's newest choice of Stravinsky and Schoenberg in piano pieces played by Charles Rosen. These are compositions which combine romanticism and intellect in a manner typical of the composers. Rosen's playing fully manifests these elements. To repeat, these works reflect a highly individual yet hardly universal style.

Truly captivating music has been assembled also by RCA-Victor in its latest tribute to the music of Wagner. If one prefers opera, an elegant and dramatic three-disc album of "The Flying Dutchman" will be the answer. This comes in an eloquent cast of singers which includes George London, Leonie Rysanek and Georgio Tozzi.

It is a clear and yet duly romantic performance under the baton of Anfal Dorati who has the Covent Garden orchestra and chorus well under control. Interpretive authenticity is assured by the fact that the recording bears the stamp of approval of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Dramatic music in the broad sense makes a thrilling experience when Charles Munch directs the Boston Symphony and the New England Conservatory Chorus in a complete performance of "Daphnis and Chloe." This is a most desirable selection not only from the standpoint of beauty, but the Ravel score does not come often in its entirety.

I cannot grow enthusiastic about Victor's third volume of "Victory at Sea," although Richard Rogers has written the music and Robert Russell Bennett is the arranger-conductor. This album course is a carefully compiled documentary in which one hears the boom of big and small guns, the noise of combat planes and of underwater torpedo launching.

It is a combination of Rogers music which is fine enough in itself and of technical detail supervised by the Navy. The album gains also in collectors value by the inclusion of numerous historic photographs.

290

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK 37,960
OCT 1 2 1961

record reviews

Records are reviewed by Don DeMicheal, Gilbert M. Erskine, Leonard G. Feather, Ira Gitler, Barbara Gardner, Ralph J. Gleason, Don Henahan, Frank Kofsky, Bill Mathieu, John A. Tynan, Pete Welding, Martin Williams, and John S. Wilson. Reviews are initialed by the writers.

Ratings are: ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ excellent, ★ ★ ★ ★ very good, ★ ★ ★ good, ★ ★ fair, ★ poor.

CLASSICS

pupil to a master. What virtues are lost in such a case—spontaneity and personal touches—are compensated for by a further solidification of Cliburn's artistic position.

This one is not the biggest or the most individual Emperor Cliburn will ever play, but it is a good one, worth owning. (D.H.)

Ericourt/Debussy

DEBUSSY: Piano Music—Kapp KC-9061 and KC-9061-S: Images, Books I and II (Reflets dans l'eau, Hommage a Rameau, Mouvement; Cloches a travers les feuilles, Et la lune descend sur le temp ui fut, Poissons d'or); Estampes (Pagodes, Soiree dans Grenade, Jardins sou la pluie); D'un cahier d'esquisses; Berceuse Heroique.

Personnel: Daniel Ericourt, piano.

Rating: ★ ★ ★ ★

Pianist Ericourt takes a more detached and definite approach to Debussy than followers of the Gieseking school may like. And yet, the Ericourt way strikes me as more authentically French in its conception than Gieseking's. Ericourt does not pedal as artfully perhaps (certainly not as noticeably), nor does he have as variously colored a tone. His Reflections in the Water, for example, are as clear as a spring pond, whereas the more impressionistic approach clouds up and subtly hazes over the harmonies. The French pianist is excellent in the propulsive Movement and the evocative Night in Granada, and everywhere technically adroit. In general, his playing has the lucidity and dry refinement we have come to identify with good Ravel interpretation, but it works surprisingly well in Debussy, too.

The piano sound is admirably lifelike. This is Ericourt's second album in a series of the complete Debussy piano music (he has recorded the preludes, too). If the rest turn out this well, Ericourt's reputation is not in any danger. (D.H.)

Ravel/Munch

DAPHNIS AND CHLOE, by Maurice Ravel—RCA Victor LM-2568 and LSC-2568: Ballet in One Act for Chorus and Orchestra (complete).

Personnel: Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus, conducted by Charles Munch.

Rating: ★ ★ ★

The complete ballet version (for orchestra and chorus) of Ravel's Daphnis is a specialty of the house in Boston. Munch here re-records the score for stereo in his familiar excitable style, receiving rich help from the Boston Symphony and the choral forces. The most often heard concert version of Daphnis, the Suite No. 2, employs no choral vocalise, thereby robbing the score of some of its most exquisite effects. No concert version, either of Suite No. 1 or No. 2, includes the middle section of the ballet, describing Chloe's captivity.

For sonics and sensuousness, Munch's is a stunning job. Pierre Monteux's stereo version with the London Symphony Orchestra captures more orchestral detail and is better in the quieter moments. (D.H.)

Various Artists

60 YEARS OF MUSIC AMERICA LOVES BEST, VOL. III—RCA Victor LM-2574: Marian Anderson, Go Down, Moses; John Barrymore, soliloquy from Hamlet; Jussi Bjoerling, Che gelida manina from La Boheme; Enrico Caruso, La Donna e Mobile from Rigoletto; Arthur Fiedler and Boston Pops Orchestra in a song fest; Kirsten Flagstad, Ho-yo-to-ho! from Die Walkure; Vladimir Horowitz, first movement of Moonlight Sonata, by Beethoven; Serge Koussevitsky and Boston Symphony Orchestra, waltz from Serenade for Strings; Fritz Kreisler, Caprice Viennois; Ezio Pinza, serenade from Don Giovanni; Lily Pons, Caro nome from Rigoletto; Arturo Toscanini and NBC Symphony Orchestra, Dance of the Hours from La Gioconda.

Rating: ★ ★ ★

RCA Victor finally has decided to abandon the wildly confused mixture of popular, classical, and unclassifiable music that marked the first two releases in this series, bargain priced at $1.98.

Vol. III comes in both popular and classical versions, though there still seems to be some confusion as to what is to be classified as music at all (how Barrymore's Hamlet reading sneaked in is difficult to understand).

The most practical use for this disc is as a shopping guide to the albums from which they were extracted.

The Pinza, Bjoerling, and Caruso items are especially worth while, and the prize of the lot is Miss Pons' Caro nome with a full-voiced, unsqueaked E above high C to close. (D.H.)

Voisin/Vardi

ROGER VOISIN TRUMPET MUSIC—Kapp KC-9026 and KC-9026-S: Fanfare — Chiamata No. 3 by Fantini; Symphony from The Fairy Queen, by Purcell; Sonata for Trumpet and Two String Orchestras, by Stradella; Carousel Music (1686), by Lully; Fanfare—Chiamata No. 6, by Fantini; Fanfare—Sinfonia da Guerra, by Monteverdi; Le Journal de Printemps, Suite No. 6, by J. K. F. Fischer; Ten O'Clock, Sonata No. 30, by Petzold.

Personnel: Kapp Sinfonietta, conducted by Emanuel Vardi; Roger Voisin, trumpet.

Rating: ★ ★ ★ ★

Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, delves again into the vast literature for trumpet and orchestra, coming up this time with eight pieces from the pre-Bach Baroque period. The Purcell symphony from the Fairy Queen and the J. F. K. Fischer suite are the most substantial items, but everything on the record bears hearing. The Kapp Sinfonietta under Emanuel Vardi sounds like a bright, stylistically aware Baroque orchestra, and Voisin's solo performance is exemplary in every way, with a tone that is pure silver. An exciting disc, recorded with enough reverberation and stereo separation to suggest a large 17th century banquet hall. (D.H.)

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
JAN 27 1962

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Beethoven: Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica"). Eugene Ormandy conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra. Columbia MS 6266, $5.98.	As an orchestra, the Philadelphia has probably made fewer outstanding recordings of Beethoven symphonies than any other of its category. This is only in part due to Ormandy's direction, his respect for the letter of the text, and his considerable success in shaping it as he wants to hear it. What is lacking is a measure of personal poetry that will give the skilfully shaped body of sound an accent and definition of his own. Granted the style of treatment, that may be much to ask—but we ask it anyway. Good strong, reproductive sound. (C.)
Chabrier: "España," "Danse Slave," "Les Polonaises," "Suite Pastorale," "Gwendoline" Overture. Paul Paray conducting the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Mercury SR 90212, $5.98.	The titles are, of themselves, guarantees of listening pleasure for those who know them, and should be of even more allure for those to whom they are new. Two sides of a record seldom contain as many good tunes, well treated and handsomely dressed as these do. Paray, however, is a question, an enthusiastic Chabrierien, perhaps in some aspects (as in the "Suite Pastorale") overenthusiastic. Here, I think, a lighter touch, a more oblique attack is, by some tastes, more appropriate. But there is no question that he delivers his concept with verve and authority, and that the orchestra fulfills it to the letter. Not to be overlooked, either, is the superbly sonorous, precisely balanced reproduction, a product of a Detroit high school auditorium (Cass Technical) not previously dedicated for such purposes.
Chopin: Concerto No. 1 in E minor. Guiomar Novaes, piano, with Jonel Perlea conducting the Bamberg Symphony. Vox STPL 510710, $4.98.	Novaes's way of playing this music it as satisfactory as any, though some might ask more vivacity in the finale, which is marked "vivace" as well as "molto," however, it is altogether congruous with the manner and spirit of the previous two movements, which means that it is invariably outstanding. Novaes is, sometimes, a shade questionable. Chopin. Perlea's particular success with the orchestra score relates not so much to unity of impulse with the soloist (which is expectable with performers of this quality) but even more to the suave string sound, well-suited to Novaes's own.
Chopin: Concerto No. 1 in E minor. Artur Rubinstein, piano, with S. Skrowaczewski conducting the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LSC [illegible]	By the measure of the preceding, Rubinstein adds a dimension of power and emphasis not within the compass of Novaes, and, of course, all the vivacity that one could want in the finale. What the listener will find even more valuable is the clarity and fulness of the recording, in which the special depth and resonance of the concert hall is simply the word: magnificent. Skrowaczewski works well enough as "accompanist," but there are many aspects of the work that would be enhanced by a stronger, more personal [illegible]
Franck: Symphony in D minor. Pierre Monteux conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LSC 2514, $5.98.	By a rule-of-thumb application of reasoning that has affiliated Monteux with the Vienna Philharmonic, the Concerts du Conservatoire orchestra in Paris, and the Boston Symphony for specific repertory works, the Chicago Symphony is, perhaps, not a "Franck orchestra." But it is, unquestionably, to judge from this first joint product, a Monteux orchestra, which follows him implicitly as well as explicitly. The outcome, then, could hardly be other than it is—not only the third and the best Franck by Monteux himself, but the broadest in scope, the richest in musical values, of any now available. It does not have the interest of a new appraisal of orchestral values (with the valuable freshness thus conveyed) in the admired one of Carlo Maria Giulini, but it [illegible] the old ones in a singularly grand way. The recording leaves nothing to be desired [illegible] the exciting theatrical surroundings.

190

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E.O.WEEK 37,960
OCT 1 2 1961

record reviews

Records are reviewed by Don DeMicheal, Gilbert M. Ers[illegible], Leonard G. Feather, Ira Gitler, Barbara G[illegible], Ralph J. Gleason, Don Henahan, Frank Kofsky, Bill Mathieu, John A. Tynan, Pete Welding, [illegible] Williams, and John S. Wilson. Reviews are initialed by the writers.

Ratings are: ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ excellent, ★ ★ ★ ★ very good, ★ ★ ★ good, ★ ★ fair, ★ poor.

CLASSICS

Ericourt/Debussy

DEBUSSY: Piano Music—Kapp KC-9061 and KC-9061-S: Images, Books I and II (Reflets dans l'eau, Hommage a Rameau, Mouvement; Cloches a travers les feuilles, Et la lune descend sur le temp[illegible] ui fut, Poissons d'or); Estampes (Pagodes, Soiree dans Grenade, Jardins sou la pluie); D'un cahier d'esquisses; Berceuse Heroique.

Personnel: Daniel Ericourt, piano.

Rating: ★ ★ ★ ★

Pianist Ericourt takes a more detached and definite approach to Debussy than followers of the Gieseking school may like. And yet, the Ericourt way strikes me as more authentically French in its conception than Gieseking's. Ericourt does not pedal as artfully perhaps (certainly not as noticeably), nor does he have as variously colored a tone. His Reflections in the Water, for example, are as clear as a spring pond, whereas the more impressionistic approach clouds up and subtly hazes over the harmonies. The French pianist is excellent in the propulsive Movement and the evocative Night in Granada, and everywhere technically adroit. In general, his playing has the lucidity and dry refinement we have come to identify with good Ravel interpretation, but it works surprisingly well in Debussy, too.

The piano sound is admirably lifelike. This is Ericourt's second album in a series of the complete Debussy piano music (he has recorded the preludes, too). If the rest turn out this well, Ericourt's reputation is not in any danger. (D.H.)

Ravel/Munch

DAPHNIS AND CHLOE, by Maurice Ravel—RCA Victor LM-2568 and LSC-2568: Ballet in One Act for Chorus and Orchestra (complete).

Personnel: Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus, conducted by Charles Munch.

Rating: ★ ★ ★

The complete ballet version (for orchestra and chorus) of Ravel's Daphnis is a specialty of the house in Boston. Munch here re-records the score for stereo in his familiar excitable style, receiving rich help from the Boston Symphony and the choral forces. The most often heard concert version of Daphnis, the Suite No. 2, employs no choral vocalise, thereby robbing the score of some of its most exquisite effects. No concert version, either of Suite No. 1 or No. 2, includes the middle section of the ballet, describing Chloe's captivity.

For sonics and sensuousness, Munch's is a stunning job. Pierre Monteux's stereo version with the London Symphony Orchestra captures more orchestral detail and is better in the quieter moments. (D.H.)

Various Artists

60 YEARS OF MUSIC AMERICA LOVES BEST, VOL. III—RCA Victor LM-2574: Marian Anderson, Go Down, Moses; John Barrymore, soliloquy from Hamlet; Jussi Bjoerling, Che gelida manina from La Boheme; Enrico Caruso, La Donna e Mobile from Rigoletto; Arthur Fiedler and [illegible] Pops Orchestra in a song fest; Kirsten F[illegible], Hoyo-to-ho! from Die Walkure; Vladimir [illegible]witz, first movement of Moonlight Sonata, by Beethoven; Serge Koussevitsky and Boston [illegible] Orchestra, waltz from Serenade for Strings; Fritz Kreisler, Caprice Viennois; Ezio Pi[illegible] serenade from Don Giovanni; Lily Pons, Ca[illegible] aria from Rigoletto; Arturo Toscanini and [illegible]C Symphony Orchestra, Dance of the Hours from La Gioconda.

Rating: ★ ★ ★

RCA Victor finally has decided to abandon the wildly confused mixture of popular, classical, and unclassifiable music that marked the first two releases in this series, bargain priced at $1.98.

Vol. III comes in both popular and classical versions, though there still seems to be some confusion as to what is to be classified as music at all (how Barrymore's Hamlet reading sneaked in is difficult to understand).

The most practical use for this disc is as a shopping guide to the albums from which they were extracted.

The Pinza, Bjoerling, and Caruso items are especially worth while, and the prize of the lot is Miss Pons' Caro nome with a full-voiced, unsqueaked E above high C to close. (D.H.)

Voisin/Vardi

ROGER VOISIN TRUMPET MUSIC—Kapp KC-9026 and KC-9026-S: Fanfare — Chiamata No. 3 by Fantini; Symphony from The Fairy Queen, by Purcell; Sonata for Trumpet and Two String Orchestras, by Stradella; Carousel Music (1686), by Lully; Fanfare—Chiamata No. 6, by Fantini; Fanfare—Sinfonia da Guerra, by Monteverdi; Le Journal de Printemps, Suite No. 6, by J. K. F. Fischer; Ten O'Clock, Sonata No. [illegible] by [illegible]

Personnel: Kapp Sinfonietta, conducted by Emanuel Vardi; Roger Voisin, trumpet.

Rating: ★ ★ ★ ★

Voisin, solo trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, delves again into the vast literature for trumpet and orchestra, coming up this time with eight pieces from the pre-Bach Baroque period. The Purcell symphony from the Fairy Queen and the J. F. K. Fischer suite are the most substantial items, but everything on the record bears hearing. The Kapp Sinfonietta under Emanuel Vardi sounds like a bright, stylistically aware Baroque orchestra, and Voisin's solo performance is exemplary in every way, with a tone that is pure silver. An exciting disc, recorded with enough reverberation and stereo separation to suggest a large 17th century banquet hall. (D.H.)

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 238,477
JAN 27 1962

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Beethoven: Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica"). Eugene Ormandy conducting the Philadelphia [illegible] Columbia MS 6266, $5.98.	As an orchestra, the Philadelphia has probably made fewer outstanding recordings of Beethoven symphonies than any other of its category. This is one of the best, not necessarily in execution (which could be anticipated) but for the diagrammatic clairvoyance, assuredly, direction, his respect for the letter of the text, and his considerable success in shaping it as he wants to hear it. What is lacking is a measure of personal poetry that will give the beautifully shaped body of sound an accent and definition of his own. Given strong treatment, that may be much to ask—but we ask it anyway. Good strong reproduction. (C.T.)
Chabrier: "Espana," "Danse Slave." Prokofiev: Polonaise, "Suite Pastorale," "Gavotte and Overture." Paul Paray conducting the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. Mercury SR 90212, $5.98.	The titles are, of themselves, guarantees of listening pleasure for those who know them, and should be of even more allure for those who don't. Two sides of a record seldom contain as many good tunes, well treated and handsomely dressed as these do. Paray is, without question, an enthusiastic Chabrierien, perhaps in some aspects (as in the Suite Pastorale) an enthusiastic Prokofiev. I think a lighter touch, a more oblique attack is, by some tastes, more appropriate. But there is no question that he delivers his concept with verve and authority, and that the orchestra fulfills it to the letter. Not to be overlooked, either, is the superbly sonorous, precise, [illegible] reproduction, a product of a Detroit high school auditorium (Cass Technical) not previously utilized for such purposes.
Goldmark: Concerto No. 1 in E minor. Guiomar Novaes, piano, with Jonel Perlea conducting the Baltimore Symphony. Vox STPL 510710, $4.98.	Novaes's way of playing this music is as satisfactory as [illegible] though some might ask more vivacity in the finale, which is marked "vivace" as well as [illegible]. However, it is altogether congruous with the manner and spirit of the performance, which means that it is invariably outstanding. Novaes is, sometimes, a shade questionable in matters of [illegible], but this particular concerto's orchestra score relates not so much to terms of impulse with the soloist (which is expectable with performers of this quality) but even more to the suave string sound, well-suited to Novaes's own.
Chopin: Concerto No. 1 in E minor. Artur Rubinstein, pi[illegible] Skrowaczewski conducting the [illegible] Orchestra. RCA Victor LSC [illegible]	By the measure of the preceding, it [illegible] adds a dimension of power and emphasis not within the compass of Novaes and, [illegible] the vivacity that one could want in the finale. What the listener will find even more [illegible] is the clarity and fullness of the recording, in which the special depth and resonance of the stage is [illegible]. Magnificent Skrowaczewski works well enough as "accompanist," but there are [illegible] aspects of this work that could be enhanced by a stronger, more personal [illegible]
Franck: Symphony in D minor. Pierre Monteux conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LSC [illegible] $5.98.	By a rule-of-thumb application of reasoning that has affiliated Monteux with the Vienna Philharmonic, the Concerts du Conservatoire orchestra in Paris, and the Boston Symphony for specific repertory works, the Chicago Symphony is, perhaps, not a Franck orchestra. But it is, unquestionably, to judge from this first joint product, a Monteux orchestra, which follows him implicitly and well, if expressly. The outcome, then, could hardly be other than it is—not only the third and the best Franck by Monteux himself, but the broadest in scope, the richest in musical values, of any now available. It does not have the interest of a new appraisal of the orchestral values (with the valuable freshness thus conveyed) of the admired one of Carlo [illegible] Giulini, [illegible] the old ones in a single way [illegible] recording leaves nothing to be desired [illegible] musical surroundings.

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 106

Tanglewood

1962

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

NATIONAL Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
56-032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
56-033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
56-034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
56-036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
56-041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
56-042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

B E R K S H I R E F E S T I V A L

1 9 6 2 S E A S O N

PRE-SEASON	FESTIVAL		3
PRE-SEASON	MUSIC CENTER		28
FIRST WEEK	JULY 4-JULY 8.	Beardslee, Vronsky & Babin, BSO Members, T'wood Choir.	36
SECOND WEEK	JULY 9-JULY 15.	Vronsky & Babin, Posselt, dePasquale.	50
THIRD WEEK	JULY 16-JULY 22	Crochet, BSO Members, Curtin Kopleff, Stern, Morgan, T'wood Choir.	60
FOURTH WEEK	JULY 23-JULY 29	Monteux, Janis.	71
FIFTH WEEK	JULY 30-AUG. 5	Steinberg, Serkin, Mayes.	83
SIXTH WEEK	Aug. 6-AUG. 12	Monteux, Ormandy, Fleisher.	97
SEVENTH WEEK	AUG. 13-AUG. 19	Ormandy, Addison, Graffman, Istomin, dePasquale.	109
EIGHT WEEK	AUG. 20-AUG. 26	Monteux, Addison, Kopleff, McCollom, Gramm, T'wood Choir.	122
CHAMBER CONCERTS			157
POPS	AUGUST 2	Fiedler, Wild.	170
GALA EVENING	AUGUST 23	Kopleff.	177
TODAY SHOW	JULY 23-24		184
MISCELLANEOUS			191
POST-SEASON			210
STUDENTS AWARDS			213
RADIO & T.V.			217

BLANK PAGE

2

PRE-SEASON

3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 15 1962

Sunday
JULY 15, 1962

Springfield Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT TANGLEWOOD IN THE BERKSHIRES

4
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

Focus on Tanglewood

Photographs by Joel Librizzi

NATIVES AND VISITORS in the Berkshires join together in various forms of musical activities when Tanglewood opens its gates to the music-loving public and Charles Munch waves the baton to start the Boston Symphony. The camera eye has caught a mood of quiet relaxation among spectators and musicians alike during the week-end concerts of July 7 and 8.

Music is a personal experience, and each person enjoys the sounds of music in his own way. Some listen in pairs; some listen alone. Some sit in quiet contemplation, with music and shade; some walk about, preferring music and motion. A few bring equipment, as if to pretend it is a day at the seashore. For others it is the opportunity to be free and bend into the contortions of a Tanglewood tree.

Musicians, poised with elegant informality in a study of black and white, evoke in a different way the summertime mood of Tanglewood. Even the ushers are victims of the mood, as they stand at ease after the onrush of people.

Gatekeepers

Box Seat

Tuning Up

Tuning In

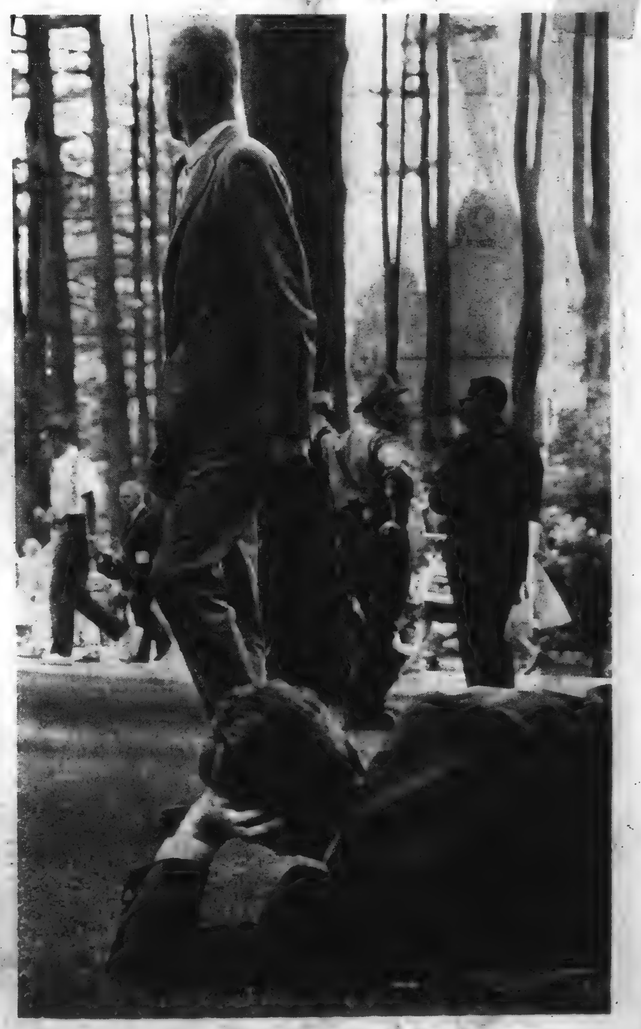
Put together, please

Long Hair

Light

Shade

Tangled Wood



Up and Down

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 22 1962

Tanglewood Casts Its Spell of Contentment

Music rings across the broad lawn at Tanglewood and afternoon sunshine blankets the melody and greenery with gold.

The music and warmth and pine-bordered lawn cast spells over listeners and melody-makers alike.

But there are different kinds of spells.

Some folks are merry.

Some get pensive.

Some get downright dreamy.

Some doze off.

They bring blankets and pillows and books and knitting. They come shirt-sleeved, sun-backed, in Bermuda shorts or business suits.

They dig spike-heeled pumps into the thick turf or pad in bare feet.

Music spins a private world for the listener. He's unhibited in the populous surroundings. He does pretty much what he wants to do and so does everybody else.

Times-Union Photographer Bernie Kolenberg paid a visit to the Tanglewood lawn and recorded the evident sum of such an afternoon.

There's a certain look of well-being on the faces. It's contentment. There's an elusive mood mingling with the melody and sunlight and pine shade. It's satisfaction.

No intermission needed for fans like these.

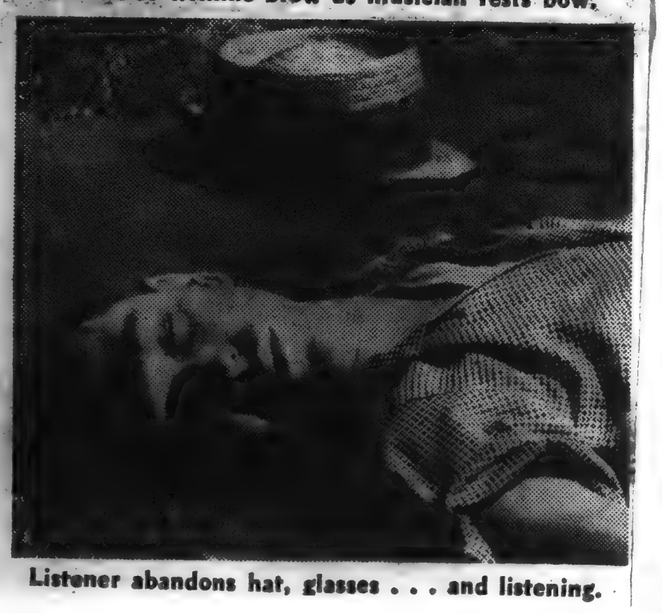
Duo doze and dream.

Wayward musician gives woodsy serenade.

Headlines wrinkle brow as musician rests bow.

Nothing succeeds like music and sunny day.

Lad learns about listening.



Listener abandons hat, glasses . . . and listening.

It's not loafing, it's listening.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
MAR 30 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
APR 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
APR 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
APR 1 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Sunday, April 22, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAY 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Circ. 6,309
MAR 29 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
MAR 31 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
MAR 31 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
WED MAR 21 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
APR 1 1962

1961

Berkshire Schedule Set

CHARLES MUNCH has announced the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 1962 festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet on Wednesday evening, July 4, and will close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26. Doctor Munch retires at the close of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Aug. 26 performance of the Beethoven symphony will be his farewell concert as head of the orchestra.

It was also announced that all evening activities at Tanglewood this summer will begin at 8, rather than at 8:30. The earlier starting time will apply to both the festival concerts and concerts of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music which is in session for the eight festival weeks.

The first three orchestra concerts—Friday, Saturday, Sunday, July 6, 7, 8—will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third festival weekends—July 13, 14, 15; 20, 21, 22—will be music of Mozart. Charles Munch will conduct these first nine festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five festival weeks. Mr. Monteux will conduct the concerts July 29, Aug. 11 and Aug. 24. Mr. Ormandy will conduct the concerts of Aug. 10 and Aug. 18. Mr. Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will make his first Tanglewood appearance to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Aug. 4.

Several vocalists have been invited by Dr. Munch to assist in the choral works he has scheduled. Among the soloists will be Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern.

Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will also be soloists.

Dr. Munch has invited six ensembles to give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. The groups, in addition to the Budapest String Quartet, are the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists whose concert will be given under auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio with Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloists, and two concerts by the Boston Arts Quartet, one sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation and one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, Aug. 2. The second beneift—Gala Evening—is scheduled for Thursday, Aug. 23.

The program schedule:

July 6: MUNCH: BACH Brandenburg Concert No. 3 Suites Nos. 2 (Dwyer) and 4; Cantata No. 51 (Beardslee); Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major (Vronsky and Babin).

July 7: MUNCH: BACH Brandenburg Cincert Nos. 6 and 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gom- Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss).

July 8: MUNCH: BACH Ricercare from The Musical Offering; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss); Concerto for Oboe and Violin (Gomberg, Silverstein); Cantata, "Trauer-Ode" (Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

July 13: MUNCH: MOZART Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361; Piano Concerto, K, 503 (Frank); Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

July 14: MUNCH: MOZART Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante (Posselt, de Pasquale), A Musical Joke; Symphony No. 39.

July 15: MUNCH: MOZART Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Concerto for Two Pianos, E-flat (Vronsky and Babin); Les Petits riens, Ballet Suite; Symphony No. 40.

July 20: MUNCH: MOZART Masonic Funeral Music; Symphony No. 31; Violin Concerto, K. 219 (Silverstein); Sinfonia Concertante (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt).

July 21: MUNCH: MOZART Symphony No. 36, "Linz;" Piano Concerto, K. 482 (Crochet); Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter."

July 22: MUNCH: MOZART Symphony No. 35, "Haffner;" Requiem (Curtin, Kopleff, Stern, Morgan, Tanglewood Choir).

July 27: MUNCH: DEBUSSY Printemps; PISTON symphony No. 6; BRAHMS Symphony No. 4.

July 28: MUNCH: HANDEL-HARTY Water Music; HAIEFF Symphony No. 3; BEETHOVEN Piano Concerto No. 3 (Janis).

July 29: MONTEUX: BEETHOVEN Symphoney No. 2; PURCELL Dido's Lament (Gray Masse); WEVER "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster" (Gray-Masse), STRAUSS: Ein Heldenleben.

Aug. 3: MUNCH: DEBUSSY Three Nocturnes (Festival Chorus); HONEGGER Symphony No. 5; SAINT-SAENS Cello Concerto (Mayes); RAVEL La Valse.

Aug. 4: STEINBERG: BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 8; BRUCKNER Symphony No. 8.

Aug. 5: MUNCH: BRAHMS Haydn Variations; MARTINU Fantaisies symphoniques; BEETHOVEN Piano Concerto No. 5, Emperor (Serkin).

Aug. 10: ORMANDY: BEETHOVEN Egmont Overture; BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 3, Eroica; BARTOK Concerto for Orchestra.

Aug. 11: MONTEUX: WAGNER Meistersinger Overture; ELGAR Enigma Variations; BRAHMS Piano Concerto No. 2 (Fleisher).

Aug. 12: MUNCH: RAMEAU Dardanus Suite; FINE Symphony (1962); TCHAIKOVSKY Symphony No. 6 Pathetique.

Aug. 17: MUNCH: KIRCHNER Sinfonia (conducted by the composer); BERLIOZ Harold in Italy (de Pasquale); MENDELSSOHN Symphony No. 5, Reformation.

Aug. 18: ORMANDY: PROKOFIEV Classical Symphony; PROKOFIEV Symphony No. 6; TCHAIKOVSKY Piano Concerto No. 1 (Istomin).

Aug. 19: MUNCH: SCHUBERT Symphony No. 5; FOSS Time Cycle (Addison; conducted by the composer); BRAHMS Piano Concerto No. 1 (Graffman).

Aug. 24: MONTEUX: WEBER Euryanthe Overture; HINDEMITH Mathis der Maler; BRAHMS Symphony No. 1.

Aug. 25: MUNCH: BERLIOZ Symphonie fantastique; DEBUSSY La Mer; RAVEL Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2.

Aug. 26: MUNCH: COPLAND Quiet City; BEETHOVEN Symphony No. 9 (Addison, Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, Festival Chorus).

Munch

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,764 S. 655,759
MAR 31 1962

CHARLES MUNCH will conclude his 13-year career as conductor of the Boston (Mass.) Symphony Orchestra with a performance Aug. 26 of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
MAR 23 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY BROCHURES FOR TANGLEWOOD RELEASED

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent out its season brochures for Tanglewood in Lenox and they show 24 concerts during the season of July 6 to Aug. 26.

Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts before retiring. Guest conductors will be Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteaux and William Steinberg.

Arthur Fielder and the Boston Pops will hold forth Aug. 2, and the Music Center benefit performance will be Aug. 23.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D 551,529 S. 643,232
MAR 31 1962

Munch To Leave Symphony Aug. 26

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—Charles Munch will conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 26 with a performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, it was announced Friday.

The Sunday afternoon concert also will mark the close of the 1962 Berkshire Musical. Munch will be succeeded in September by Eric Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Eastman-Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
MAR 21 1962

Boston Symphony Plans 24 Tanglewood Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent out its season brochures for Tanglewood in Lenox, and they show 24 concerts during the season of July 6 to Aug. 26. Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts before retiring. Guest conductors will be Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteaux and William Steinberg.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will hold forth Aug. 2, and the Music Center benefit performance will be Aug. 23.

8

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

MAR 31 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

APR 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

APR 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

APR 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728

APR 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636

MAR 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

MAR 26 1962

CHARLESTON, S.C.
NEWS AND COURIER
D. 61,500 S. 73,339
APR 1 1962

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554
MAR 31 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 1 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
MAR 31 1962

HUDSON REGISTER STAR
Monday, March 26, 1962

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, April 3, 1962

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, March 31, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

APR 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771

APR 10 1962

—The Berkshire Music Festival will open July 6 this year and continue for eight weeks, through Aug. 26. Weekend concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony will be on Friday and Saturday nights at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m.

Charles Munch Announces Berkshire Festival Program

Charles Munch announced the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, ~~Lenox, Mass.~~ The 1962 Festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet on Wednesday evening, July 4 and will close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, August 26. Doctor Munch retires at the close of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, after thirteen years as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his August 26th performance of the Beethoven Symphony will be his farewell concert as head of the Orchestra.

It was also announced today that all evening activities at Tanglewood this summer will begin at 8 p.m. (Eastern Daylight Time) rather than at 8:30 p.m. The earlier starting time will apply to both the Festival concerts and concerts of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music which is in session for the eight Festival weeks.

The first three orchestra concerts — Friday, Saturday, Sunday, July 6, 7, 8 — will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third Festival weekends — July 13, 14, 15; 20, 21, 22 — will be music of Mozart. Charles Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Doctor Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five Festival weeks. Mr. Monteux will conduct the concerts July 29, August 11 and August 24. Mr. Ormandy will conduct the concerts of August 10 and August 18. Mr. Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will make his first Tanglewood appearance to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 4.

Several vocalists have been invited by Doctor Munch to assist in the choral works he has scheduled for performance at the Festival this summer. Among the vocal soloists will be Adee Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern.

Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will also be soloists at the 1962 Festival.

Charles Munch has invited six ensembles to give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. The groups in addition to the Budapest String Quartet, are the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists whose concerts will be given under auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio with Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloists, and two concerts by the Boston Arts Quartet, one sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation and one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, August 2. The second benefit — Gala Evening — is scheduled for Thursday, August 23.

A detailed brochure on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with complete programs and ticket application forms is available from the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

APR 1 196

Munch to Conduct Boston Orchestra Finale Aug. 26

Lenox, Mass. — (UPI) — Charles Munch will conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra on Aug. 26 with a performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, it has been announced.

The Sunday afternoon concert also will mark the close of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival, expanded to eight weeks this summer for the first time.

Munch will be succeeded next September by Eric Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Eastman-Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra and recently guest director of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra.

Guest conductors of the 1962 Berkshire festival will include Pierre Monteux, 86-year-old director-emeritus of the Boston orchestra; William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, April 2, 1962

Berkshire Festival Dates Listed

This summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet Wednesday, July 4. It will close with a performance of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 26.

All evening concerts this summer will begin at 8 instead of 8:30. The first three orchestra concerts July 6, 7 and 8 will be devoted to music of Bach and the six concerts of July 13, 14 and 15 and 20, 21 and 22 will present music of Mozart. Charles Munch, who will retire at the close of the 1962 festival, will conduct the first nine concerts.

Pierre Monteux will conduct concerts of July 29, Aug. 11 and Aug. 24. Eugene Ormandy will be the conductor Aug. 10 and 18. The Aug. 4 concert will be conducted by William Steinberg.

Vocalists assisting in choral works will be Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern.

Five ensembles in addition to the Budapest String Quartet will present the eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. These include the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists, Beaux Arts Trio, Nova Arte Trio with Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloists and the Boston Arts Quartet. The latter will give two concerts, one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood Thursday, Aug. 2. A second benefit program, known as Gala Evening, will be held Aug. 23.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
APR 26 1962

'Berkshire Nights' Offer Is Renewed At Tanglewood

Tickets for five Friday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, will again be offered to area residents for the usual price of a three-concert weekend series in a renewal of the "Berkshire Nights" plan this year, it was announced today.

Formerly the only series tickets available were for a three-concert weekend but five years ago the Tanglewood Advisory Committee, pointing out that some area residents would like to attend the Friday night concerts, persuaded the Boston Symphony management to Make the special "Berkshire Nights" offer, now renewed for the 1962 season.

Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield, will again serve as chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee, it was also announced, and will begin at once to receive reservations for the five-concert series or furnish additional information. Series subscriptions will close June 1.

The Berkshire Nights concerts will be on July 27, Aug. 3, Aug. 10, Aug. 17 and Aug. 24. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Orchestra, will conduct three of them, including that of July 27, to be devoted to compositions of Debussy, Poston and Brahms, and that of Aug. 3 when the Festival Chorus will be heard in DeBussy's Three Nocturnes, Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the orchestra, will play Saint-Saens' Cello Concerto and Honneger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La Valse," will be performed.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, will be on the podium for the Aug. 10 program which will include Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Third ("Eroica") Symphony and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. On Aug. 17, Leon Kirchner will conduct his own Sinfonia and then Dr. Munch will conclude the program with Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" and Mendelssohn's Fifth ("Reformation") Symphony.

OnAu g. 24, Pierre Monteux, conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, will lead the Boston Orchestra in Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and Brahms' First Symphony."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
APR 1 1962

9

Notes of the Music World

The Boston Symphony orchestra's Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Mass., its season extended to eight weeks, opens July 4 and closes Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26, when Charles Munch conducts Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on his last concert as the orchestra's music director. Mr. Munch conducts most of the festival, including the opening week of all-Bach concerts beginning July 6 and the second and third weeks devoted to Mozart. Pierre Monteux will conduct July 29, Aug. 11, and Aug. 24; Eugene Ormandy, Aug. 10 and 18; William Steinberg conducts Aug. 4; Leon Kirchner conducts his own Sinfonia Aug. 17 and Lukas Foss his Time Cycle, Aug. 19. Instrumental soloists will include Vronsky and Babin, Byron Janis, Samuel Mayes, Rudolf Serkin, Leon Fleisher, Eugene Istomin, and Gary Graffman, vocalists include Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan, and Blake Stern. Evening concerts begin at 8 o'clock instead of 8:30. For a brochure with complete programs, write the Berkshire Festival ticket office, Symphony hall, Boston 15.

Charles Munch

• • •

The Montreal Symphony orchestra will become the first professional Canadian orchestra to tour Europe when it leaves at the end of this month for a three week trip to France, Austria, and Russia.

• • •

The University of Wisconsin extension division will hold its fifth conductors' symposium July 29 thru Aug. 7 in Fish Creek, Wis. Julius Herford will lecture on form and analysis, Thor Johnson will teach conducting, and the Peninsula Festival Symphony will be in residence for demonstration and direction by students.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933
MAR 31 1962

Beethoven 9th To Mark Munch's Final Concert

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—Charles Munch will conclude his 13-year musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Aug. 26 with a performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, it was announced Friday

The Sunday afternoon concert also will mark the close of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival, expanded to eight weeks this summer for the first time.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
APR 22 1962

Munch to Conduct Tanglewood Finale

The Boston Orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open with a Budapest String Quartet concert July 4 and end Aug. 26 when Charles Munch makes his farewell as the orchestra's conductor.

Munch will conduct nine concerts, closing with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg will be guest conductors in the last five weeks.

Chamber music ensembles include the New York Chamber soloists, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio and Boston Arts Quartet. Three orchestra concerts will be devoted to Bach and six week-end concerts to Mozart. All evening activities begin at 8, instead of 8:30, as in the past.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
MAR 21 1962

Boston Symphony Lists 24 Concerts For '62 Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent out its season brochures for Tanglewood in Lenox, and they show 24 concerts during the season of July 6 to Aug. 26. Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts before retiring. Guest conductors will be Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteaux and William Steinberg.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will hold forth Aug. 2, and the Music Center benefit performance will be Aug. 23.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
D. 336,211 S. 398,076
APR 15 1962

Summer Brings Concerts to Famed Tanglewood in the Berkshires
...The Shed, in background, is known for its fine acoustics

10

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

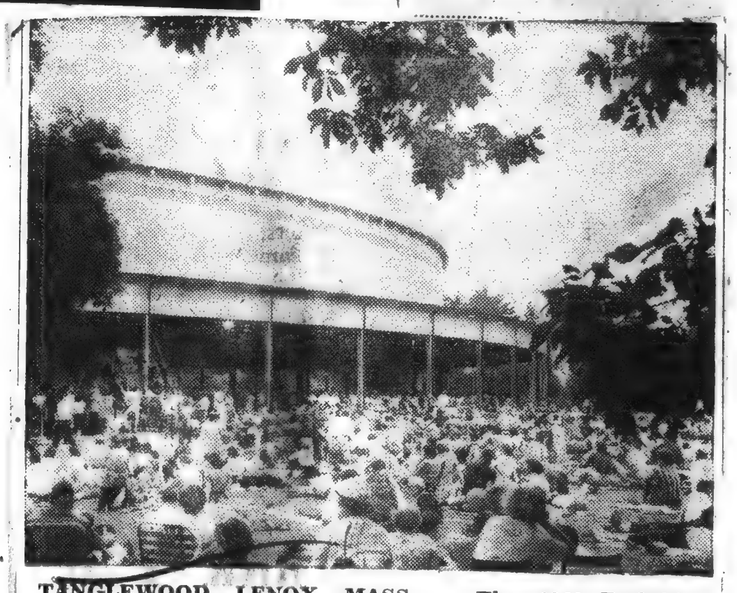
The two most prominent festivals, from an artistic and length-of-season point of view, are the Aspen Music Festival in Aspen, Colorado, and the aforementioned Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Massachusetts. Of equally great significance, aside from the fact that great music is heard there, is the existence of music schools on the grounds of these festivals for experimentation in contemporary music and for the improvement of the actual playing skills of many Americans via widely heralded master classes given in virtually every phase of music.

Probably the oldest rural festival on the Eastern seaboard, if not in the country, scheduling a season in excess of 30 days, is the Berkshire Festival, affectionately known as Tanglewood, the name of the estate upon which it is located. Here, in the heart of Massachusetts, the Boston Symphony reigns for a season lasting close to eight weeks (this summer from July 6 to August 26). Established in 1934 and inaugurated by a concert given by members of the New York Philharmonic conducted by Henry Hadley, this perennial habitué of music lovers first became allied with the Boston Symphony, then conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, in 1936. Presently, the concerts are under the general artistic direction of Charles Munch, who will conduct his farewell season this summer, a season which will be loaded with emotion and sentiment.

Major events at the coming season, already famous for its Bach and Mozart weekends, include performances of Mozart's Requiem (July 22), Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 (August 4) and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (August 26).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,219
JUL 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,304
JUL 11 1962



TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS. — The 1962 Berkshire Festival opens an eight week season at Tanglewood with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday, July 6 at 8 p.m. Twenty-four concerts will be presented throughout the season which concludes Aug. 26. Charles Munch, who retires as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
APR 25 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
APR 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
APR 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dalton-Hinsdale News
DALTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000
MAY 3 1962

Tanglewood Again Plans Berkshire Nights Concerts

Conductors Named; Subscription Sale Will Close June 1

Three of the world's leading symphony conductors, Dr. Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux, will share the podium for the Berkshire Nights series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this summer, when five major Friday evening performances are being offered for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The Subscriptions close June 1.

Announcement of the Berkshire Nights series was made today by the Tanglewood Advisory Committee. The Berkshire Festival season has been extended this season to eight weeks. The first three weeks will be devoted to the works of Bach and Mozart. The final five major concerts by the full BSO in the Music Shed will include the Berkshire Nights series on Friday evenings, arranged by Dr. Munch, who is retiring as musical director of the BSO at the close of the Tanglewood season.

Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Friday night concerts; Mr. Ormandy and Mr. Monteux, one each. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, is conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Monteux is conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch — Eugene Ormandy — Pierre Monteux

Mrs. Mahanna Chairman

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, announced today that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, 20 Warwick St., has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee for her fifth year.

Dr. Munch will open the Berkshire Nights series on July 27, conducting a program devoted to compositions by Debussy, Piston and Brahms. He also wil conduct the Aug. 3 concert, when the Festival Chorus will be heard in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the BSO, will play Saint-Saens' cello concerto on the same program, which also will include Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La-Valse."

Mr. Ormandy has programmed for the Friday evening concert, Aug. 10, Beethoven's Egmont Overture; Beethoven's Third Symphony (Eroica), and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

On Friday, Aug. 17, Dr. Munch has invited Leon Kirchner to conduct his Sinfonia to open the program. The BSO conductor will conclude the program with Berlioz' "Harold In Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola with the BSO as soloist, and Mendelssohn's Fifth Symphony (Reformation).

For the final Berkshire Nights concert on Aug. 24, Pierre Monteux has programmed Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Hindemith's Mathis der Maler, and Brahms' First Symphony.

Concerts Start at 8 p.m.

All concerts this season will start at 8 instead of 8:30, as in previous years.

Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1962 series may be mailed to her at 20 Warwick St.

10

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

The two most prominent festivals, from an artistic and length-of-season point of view, are the Aspen Music Festival in Aspen, Colorado, and the aforementioned Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Massachusetts. Of equally great significance, aside from the fact that great music is heard there, is the existence of music schools on the grounds of these festivals for experimentation in contemporary music and for the improvement of the actual playing skills of many Americans via widely heralded master classes given in virtually every phase of music.

Probably the oldest rural festival on the Eastern seaboard, if not in the country, scheduling a season in excess of 30 days, is the Berkshire Festival, affectionately known as Tanglewood, the name of the estate upon which it is located. Here, in the heart of Massachusetts, the Boston Symphony reigns for a season lasting close to eight weeks (this summer from July 6 to August 26). Established in 1934 and inaugurated by a concert given by members of the New York Philharmonic conducted by Henry Hadley, this perennial habitué of music lovers first became allied with the Boston Symphony, then conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, in 1936. Presently, the concerts are under the general artistic direction of Charles Munch, who will conduct his farewell season this summer, a season which will be loaded with emotion and sentiment.

Major events at the coming season, already famous for its Bach and Mozart weekends, include performances of Mozart's Requiem (July 22), Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 (August 4) and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (August 26).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Ridgefield Press
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,219
JUL 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,304
JUL 11 1962

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS. — The 1962 Berkshire Festival opens an eight week season at Tanglewood with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday, July 6 at 8 p.m. Twenty-four concerts will be presented throughout the season which concludes Aug. 26. Charles Munch, who retires as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
APR 25 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
APR 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
APR 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dalton-Hinsdale News
DALTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000
MAY 3 1962

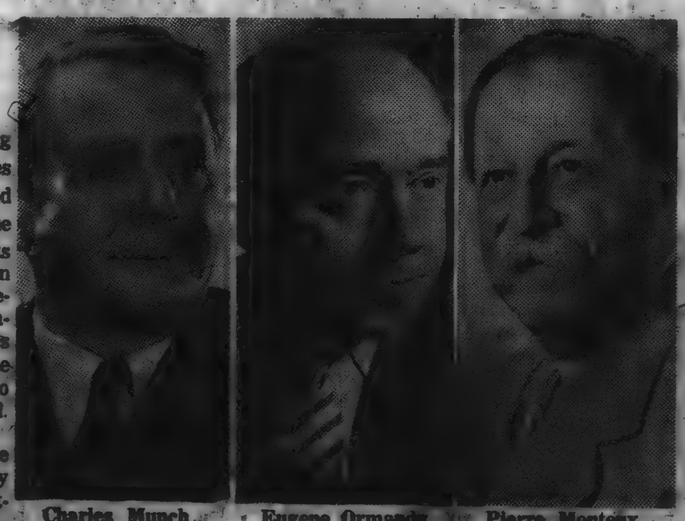
Tanglewood Again Plans Berkshire Nights Concerts

Conductors Named; Subscription Sale Will Close June 1

Three of the world's leading symphony conductors, Dr. Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux, will share the podium for the Berkshire Nights series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this summer, when five major Friday evening performances are being offered for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The Subscriptions close June 1.

Announcement of the Berkshire Nights series was made today by the Tanglewood Advisory Committee. The Berkshire Festival season has been extended this season to eight weeks. The first three weeks will be devoted to the works of Bach and Mozart. The final five major concerts by the full BSO in the Music Shed will include the Berkshire Nights series on Friday evenings, arranged by Dr. Munch, who is retiring as musical director of the BSO at the close of the Tanglewood season.

Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Friday night concerts; Mr. Ormandy and Mr. Monteux, one each. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, is conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Monteux is conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.



Charles Munch — Eugene Ormandy — Pierre Monteux

Mrs. Mahanna Chairman

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony, announced today that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, 20 Warwick St., has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee for her fifth year.

Dr. Munch will open the Berkshire Nights series on July 27, conducting a program devoted to compositions by Debussy, Piston and Brahms. He also wil conduct the Aug. 3 concert, when the Festival Chorus will be heard in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the BSO, will play Saint-Saens' cello concerto on the same program, which also will include Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La-Valse."

Mr. Ormandy has programmed for the Friday evening concert, Aug. 10, Beethoven's Egmont Overture; Beethoven's Third Symphony (Eroica), and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

On Friday, Aug. 17, Dr. Munch has invited Leon Kirchner to conduct his Sinfonia to open the program. The BSO conductor will conclude the program with Berlioz' "Harold In Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola with the BSO as soloist, and Mendelssohn's Fifth Symphony (Reformation).

For the final Berkshire Nights concert on Aug. 24, Pierre Monteux has programmed Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Hindemith's Mathis der Maler, and Brahms' First Symphony.

Concerts Start at 8 p.m.

All concerts this season will start at 8 instead of 8:30, as in previous years.

Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1962 series may be mailed to her at 20 Warwick St.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

APR 8 1962

The Lively Arts —

Tanglewood Tales

By T. H. Parker

Up at Tanglewood right now, robins are beginning to bob over the great, greening lawns, grackles are creaking from the tops of the ancient pines and elms, and in the marshes below redwings are clutching what is left of last year's cattails.

For some, this consort of nature's music would be enough, if augmented by other seasonal birdsong across the spring and summer. But a clattering of typewriters in the publicity department of the Boston Symphony Orchestra banishes such merely sylvan vistas. The annual Berkshire Music Festival will open there in July and continue through August. "Enclosed please find schedule of concerts."

★

This year the Boston Symphony has found new ways of skinning a cat and brightening the jaundiced ear. For while the programs show nothing new or startling, but just a moderately cheerful variety, the ranks of conductors will offer considerable change. Charles Munch, retiring head of the Boston orchestra, Pierre Monteux who at age 87 has just been given a 25-year contract with the London Symphony, William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony, and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia, will spell each other on the Tanglewood podium. They are not unfamiliar at the Lenox revels, but the swapping around will be more frequent this time.

When Mr. Munch lays down his baton at the close of the August 26 concert, it will mark his final moment with the orchestra he has conducted for 13 years. It is interesting to note that on that Sunday and the preceding Saturday evening, he will be conducting some of his most favorite works. He will conclude with the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. It is perhaps symbolic to recall that the first time he faced the Boston Symphony, he reportedly told the players "We will make joy together." They will end their long association with the "Freude," the "schoener Goetterfunken" of Schiller's Ode.

★

Here are the programs for the opening Bach concerts:

Friday, July 6—Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Suites Nos. 2 and 4; Cantata No. 51; Concerto for Two Pianos in C major.

Saturday, July 7—Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6 and 2; Suite No. 3; Piano Concerto in D Minor.

Sunday, July 8—Ricercare from "The Musical Offering"; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5; Concerto for Oboe and Violin; Cantata, "Trauer-Ode."

And the Mozart concerts:

Friday, July 13—Serenade for Thirteen Winds (K361); Piano Concerto (K503); Symphony No. 38 "Prague."

Saturday, July 14—Divertimento for Strings (K136); Sinfonia Concertante; "A Musical Joke"; Symphony No. 39.

Sunday, July 15—"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Concerto for Two Pianos, E Flat; "Les Petits Riens" Ballet Suite; Symphony No. 40.

Friday, July 20 — "Masonic Funeral Music"; Symphony No. 31; Violin Concerto (K219); Sinfonia Concertante (wind quartet and orchestra).

Saturday, July 21—Symphony No. 36 "Linz"; Piano Concerto in B Flat (K482); Symphony No. 41 "Jupiter."

Sunday, July 22—Symphony No. 35 "Haffner"; Requiem.

The programs for the major Festival concerts in the Shed include:

Friday, July 27—Mr. Munch conducting Debussy's symphonic suite "Printemps"; Symphony No. 6, Piston; Symphony No. 4, Brahms.

Saturday, July 28—Mr. Munch conducting the Handel "Water Music" Suite; Symphony No. 3, Haieff; Piano Concerto No. 3, Beethoven.

Sunday, July 29—Mr. Monteux conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 2; "Dido's Lament," Purcell; aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," Weber; "Ein Heldenleben," Strauss.

Friday, August 3—Mr. Munch conducting Debussy's "Three Nocturnes"; Symphony No. 5, Honegger; 'Cello Concerto, Saint-Saens; "La Valse," Ravel.

Saturday, August 4—Mr. Steinberg conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 8, Bruckner.

Sunday, August 5—Mr. Munch conducting Brahms' "Haydn" Variations; "Fantaisies symphoniques," Martinu; Piano Concerto No. 5, Beethoven.

★

Friday, August 10—Mr. Ormandy conducting the Beethoven "Egmont" Overture; Symphony No. 3, Beethoven; Concerto for Orchestra, Bartok.

Saturday, August 11—Mr. Monteux conducting Wagner's "Meistersinger" Overture; "Enigma" Variations, Elgar; Piano Concerto No. 2, Brahms.

Sunday, August 12—Mr. Munch conducting Rameau's "Dardanus" Suite; Symphony (1962), Fine; Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique," Tschaikowsky.

Friday, August 17—Mr. Munch conducting Berlioz' "Harold in Italy"; Symphony No. 5 "Reformation," Mendelssohn; the composer conducting his Sinfonia, Kirchner.

Saturday, August 18—Mr. Ormandy conducting Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony; Symphony No. 6, Prokofiev; Piano Concerto No. 1 Tschaikowsky.

Sunday, August 19—Mr. Munch conducting Schubert's Symphony No. 5; "Time Cycle," Foss; Piano Concerto No. 1, Brahms.

Friday, August 24—Mr. Monteux conducting Weber's "Euryanthe" overture; "Mathis der Maler," Hindemith; Symphony No. 1, Brahms.

Saturday, August 25—Mr. Munch conducting Berlioz' "Symphonie fantastique"; "La Mer," Debussy; "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2, Ravel.

Sunday, August 26—Mr. Munch conducting Copland's "Quiet City"; Symphony No. 9, Bethoven. Ave atque vale!

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN APR 1 1962

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Eighth Week Has Been Added to Tanglewood

By ROSS PARMENTER

SPRING is only twelve days old, but already the summer impresarios have done their major planning. Aspen with its Milhaud homage, Santa Fe with its Stravinsky tribute, Seattle with its world's fair have been filling the mails for weeks with accounts of their programs. Alaska has been telling the world that Robert Shaw and Julius Herford will be again the co-directors of the Alaska Festival. Franz Waxman has announced another Los Angeles International Music Festival.

And last week two of the principal Eastern festivals announced their events. The Berkshire Music Festival reported that this summer it would run to eight weeks, and the Marlboro Music Festival, which Rudolf Serkin runs at Marlboro, Vt., that it would extend its concert schedule by adding Friday evening events to its regular Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon programs.

The Berkshire festival has been expanding rapidly in recent years. In 1960, for instance, it decided to give the concerts of all six week-ends in the 6,000 seat Shed. (Formerly, the concerts of the first week-ends were in the smaller Theatre-Concert Hall.) Last year it extended the festival to seven weeks, and this year it is adding an eighth week. The extension will be at the end of the usual period, so that this year the festival, which opens at Tanglewood on July 4, will continue until Aug. 26.

All of the orchestral programs have been announced. Eugene Ormandy, who conducted once at Tanglewood last summer, will be back for two concerts this summer. William Steinberg, who has never conducted at the festival, will have a concert on Aug. 4. But Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux will again be the chief conductors. Dr. Munch, who is retiring at the end of the summer, will lead eighteen concerts. Mr. Monteux will lead three. For the most part, the programs will be repetitions of programs the Boston Symphony has given in New York.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 202,829 S. 289,586

APR 15 1962

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
D. 325,930 S. 503,908

APR 8 1962

NEWARK, N.J.
NEWS
D. 273,705 S. 379,749

APR 8 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

OSWEGO PALLADIUM TIMES
Monday, April 23, 1962

Tanglewood Is Favorite Spot Of Music Lovers

LENOX, Mass. — A favorite stop for summer vacationers to New England is the great estate called Tanglewood which is tucked into the green Berkshire Hills of southwestern Massachusetts — a few miles from the Connecticut and New York state lines and a short drive from the New York Thruway, the Taconic Parkway and the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Since 1936 Tanglewood has been the summer home of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra and here the orchestra holds its annual Berkshire Festival concerts and operates the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music that trained Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Mario Lanza, Leontyne Price and many others.

A few auditoriums have been built at Tanglewood but most of the 210 acres have been left in informal gardens, the hemlock hedges and avenues of tall pin set out soon after William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker and merchant, bought this land in 1848 and incorporated several farms into a gentleman's estate.

Nathaniel Hawthorne arrived at Tanglewood, depressed and impoverished, in 1850 and lived on the estate in 1850-1851. Here he was visited and encouraged by Longfellow, Holmes and Melville — the "jungle of literary lions" then living and writing in the Berkshires — and he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book" and planned Tanglewood Tales while in Lenox. A replica of the Hawthorne cotttage ("The Little Red House") is a favorite of visitors to Tanglewood.

Guided tours through the

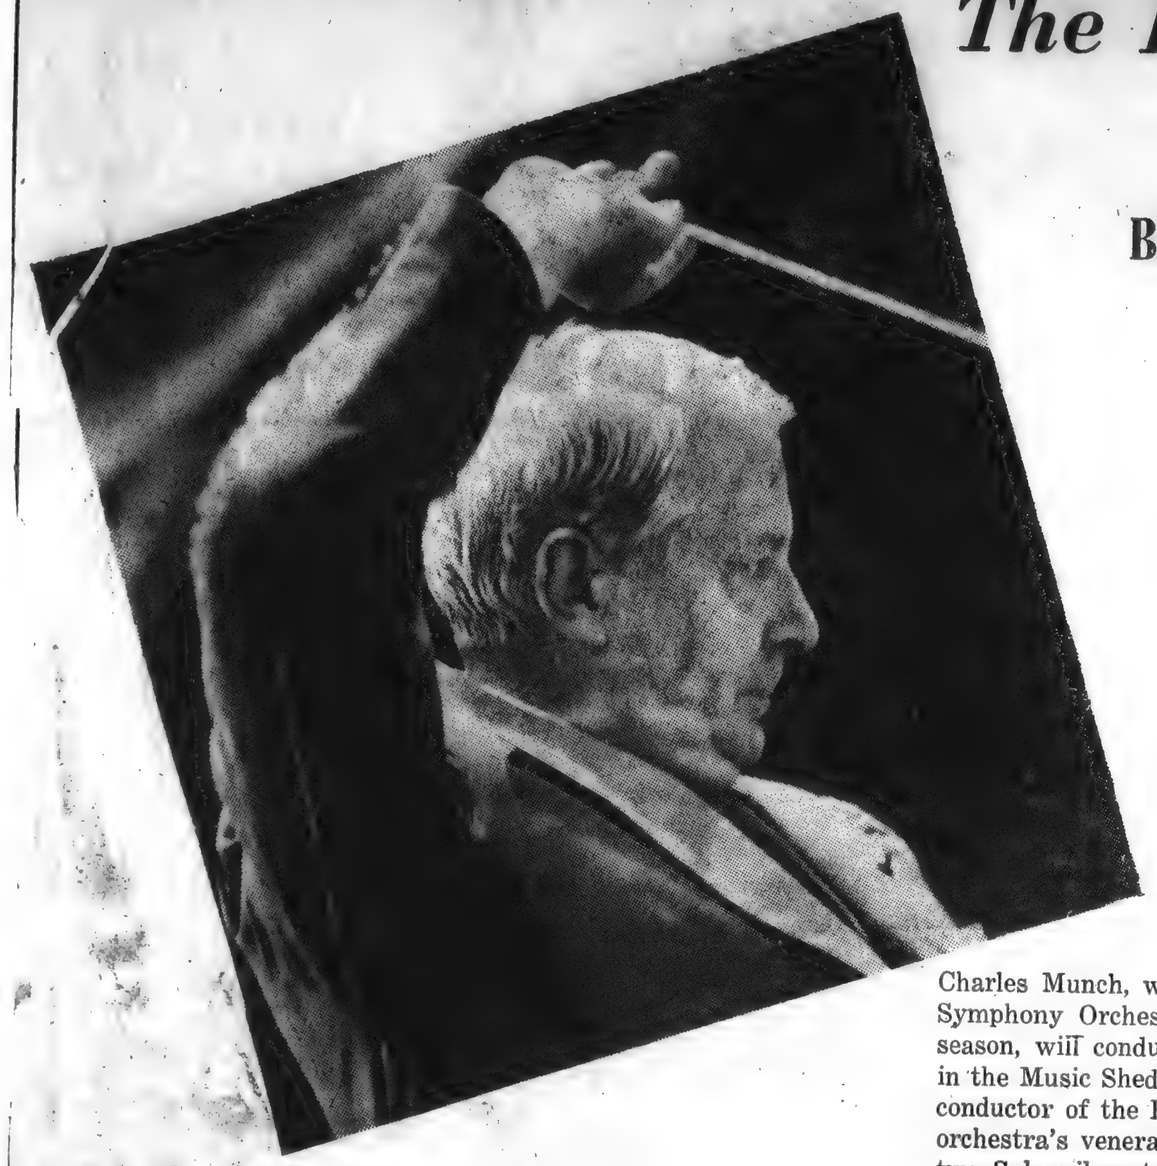
CHARLES MUNCH'S FINAL SEASON

The Berkshire Nights

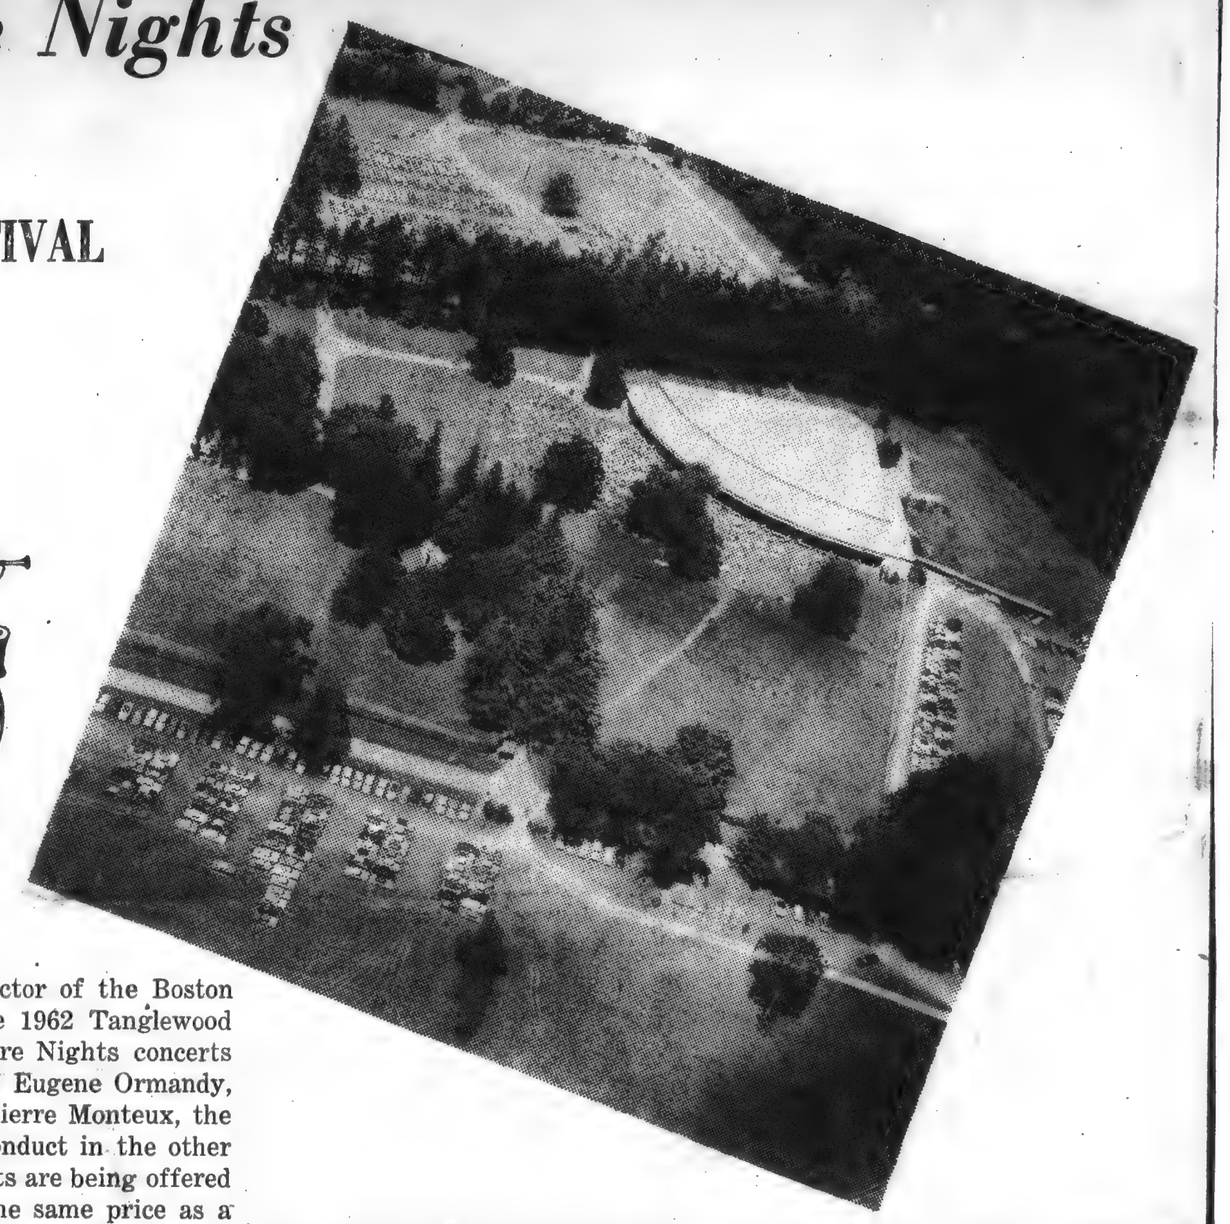
of the

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

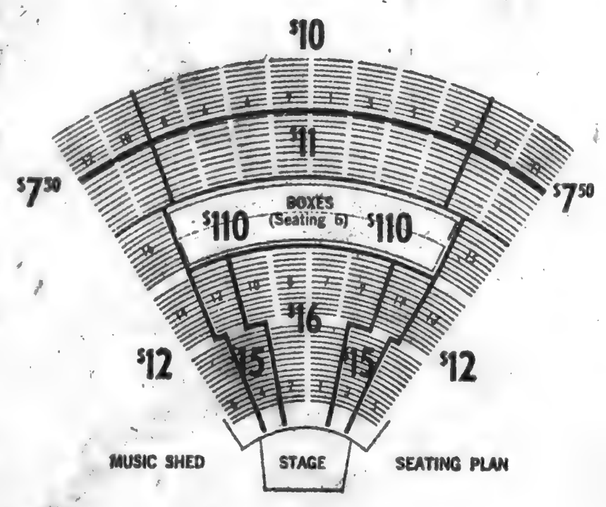
AT TANGLEWOOD



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA



Charles Munch, who retires as the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1962 Tanglewood season, will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts in the Music Shed this summer. He has invited Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Pierre Monteux, the orchestra's venerable conductor emeritus, to conduct in the other two. Subscribers to the Berkshire Nights concerts are being offered five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as a regular subscription to three concerts. This subscription offer closes June 1, 1962.



FIVE FOR THREE

The Friday Night Programs
In the Music Shed at 8

July 27

DEBUSSY: Printemps
PISTON: Symphony No. 6
BRAHMS: Symphony No. 4
Conductor: Charles Munch

August 3

DEBUSSY: Three Nocturnes (Festival Chorus)
HONEGGER: Symphony No. 5
SAINT-SAENS: Cello Concerto (Mayes)
RAVEL: La Valse
Conductor: Charles Munch

August 10

BEETHOVEN: Egmont Overture
BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 3, Eroica
BARTOK: Concerto for Orchestra
Conductor: Eugene Ormandy

August 17

KIRCHNER: Sinfonia
(Conducted by the composer)
BERLIOZ: Harold in Italy (de Pasquale)
MENDELSSOHN: Symphony No. 5, Reformation
Conductor: Charles Munch

August 24

WEBER: Euryanthe Overture
HINDEMITH: Mathis der Maler
BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1
Conductor: Pierre Monteux
(Programs subject to change)

Please reserve _____ seats at $ _____ each for the 1962 Berkshire Nights.

Prices for these five Friday concerts in the Shed:

$7.50, $10, $11 — Rear Sections $12, $15, $16 — Front Section
$22 — Single Box Seat ($110 — Box Seating Six)

Please make check payable to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and send remittance before June 1st to:

Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna
The Berkshire Nights
20 Warwick Street
Pittsfield, Massachusetts

Name _____

Address _____

Address after June 1st _____

Your tickets will be mailed to you after June 1st

JUNE 1st—LAST DAY

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
MAY 26 1962

WRAPPED FOR WINTER—The shed at Tanglewood will soon have its sidings removed. It takes some two weeks for the building to dry out. For seven weeks, from July 4 to August 26, the shed will be the scene of the beautiful music offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood:

Berkshire Music Festival's History Shows Slow Beginning; Big Success

For nine months of the year, some 210 acres of ground in the Berkshire Hills lie dormant; most of this time covered with snow drifts and completly in keeping with the mysterious beauty of winter and the resultant loneliness of the landscape.

But springtide brings life to the area, ... a lake sparkles in the background; snow melts, from Monument Mountain; clean up crews set to work ... to prepare for the opening of one of the largest music centers in the country .. Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Music Festival.

The idea of music in the Berkshires was conceived by a nucleus of people in 1934. Pushing his idea of music under the stars, Dr. Henry Hadley, conductor and composer, made known his wish to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, a long time summer resident of Stockbridge.

Miss Smith found the idea to be stimulating, not only to herself, but to a group of residents and that summer, Dr. Hadley with members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted a series of three outdoor concerts on the Hanna Estate in Stockbridge. (Now known as the Stockbridge School, a private organization.)

Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

These concerts and those the year after were well attended and received but by now the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., as the group came to be known, envisioned a festival on a larger scale with an orchestra performing as an entity, not assembled in part.

The group enlisted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the summer of 1936. Apparently the ghosts of Beethoven, Bach and Mozart stalked the grounds of Tanglewood, an estate owned by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, long time summer residents of Lenox, for the hemlock and pine tree dotted estate was offered as a gift to Dr. Koussevitzky as a permanent home for the festival.

What more perfect setting than this estate. Located on a hill, overlooking the calmness of Stockbridge Bowl, the land seemed to offer itself to music. The view from the lawns of Tanglewood down towards the lake has captured the romantic inclinations of many and so moved Nathaniel Hawthorne that he said. "I cannot write in the presence of that view."

It was Dr. Koussevitsky, who on inspection of the site, visited Hawthorne's home, which had been burned, and suggested its restoration. The National Federation of Music Clubs replaced the structure.

In 1937, the first concert took place on the Tanglewood grounds and taking place simultaneously was a storm. The tent was inadequate for the erratic temperament of Berkshire weather. "Even the French horns were shipping water." A shed had to be constructed.

Money was raised by subscription and the shed was first used in 1938. The shed covers an acre and half and seats 6,000 people.

This time of year finds the grounds beautiful and calm in their greeness. However activity is beginning. Thirty acres of lawn has to be mowed; the formal gardens have to be put in order. The main effort will be to take down the winter shelter of the shed, which requires the work of nine men. Then the clay floor has to be swept.

Other buildings to be prepared include the opera house, the symphony's practice house, the estate's original building and the chamber music hall.

July 4 will again be the opening of Tanglewood, its 25th season on the grounds. The first weekend of music will bring Bach to the Berkshires and Charles Munch, in his last year of conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
SUN. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 20 1962

FAREWELL: Conductor Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire (Mass.) Festival, this will be his last season there.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
MAY 1 1962

A view of Tanglewood at Lenox, scene of the Berkshire Festival to be conducted July 4-Aug. 26.

Music is synonymous with "the singing hills" of Massachusetts. The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, featuring Charles Munch conducting his last season, has extended its music series two extra weeks, commencing July 4 with the Budapest String Quartet, and concluding Aug. 26 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's presentation of Copland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
MAY 26 1962

WRAPPED FOR WINTER—The shed at Tanglewood will soon have its sidings removed. It takes some two weeks for the building to dry out. For seven weeks, from July 4 to August 26, the shed will be the scene of the beautiful music offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood:

Berkshire Music Festival's History Shows Slow Beginning; Big Success

For nine months of the year, some 210 acres of ground in the Berkshire Hills lie dormant; most of this time covered with snow drifts and completly in keeping with the mysterious beauty of winter and the resultant loneliness of the landscape.

But springtide brings life to the area, ... a lake sparkles in the background; snow melts, from Monument Mountain; clean up crews set to work ... to prepare for the opening of one of the largest music centers in the country .. Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Music Festival.

The idea of music in the Berkshires was conceived by a nucleus of people in 1934. Pushing his idea of music under the stars, Dr. Henry Hadley, conductor and composer, made known his wish to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, a long time summer resident of Stockbridge.

Miss Smith found the idea to be stimulating, not only to herself, but to a group of residents and that summer, Dr. Hadley with members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted a series of three outdoor concerts on the Hanna Estate in Stockbridge. (Now known as the Stockbridge School, a private organization.)

Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

These concerts and those the year after were well attended and received but by now the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., as the group came to be known, envisioned a festival on a larger scale with an orchestra performing as an entity, not assembled in part.

The group enlisted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the summer of 1936. Apparently the ghosts of Beethoven, Bach and Mozart stalked the grounds of Tanglewood, an estate owned by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, long time summer residents of Lenox, for the hemlock and pine tree dotted estate was offered as a gift to Dr. Koussevitzky as a permanent home for the festival.

What more perfect setting than this estate. Located on a hill, overlooking the calmness of Stockbridge Bowl, the land seemed to offer itself to music. The view from the lawns of Tanglewood down towards the lake has captured the romantic inclinations of many and so moved Nathaniel Hawthorne that he said. "I cannot write in the presence of that view."

It was Dr. Koussevitsky, who on inspection of the site, visited Hawthorne's home, which had been burned, and suggested its restoration. The National Federation of Music Clubs replaced the structure.

In 1937, the first concert took place on the Tanglewood grounds and taking place simultaneously was a storm. The tent was inadequate for the erratic temperament of Berkshire weather. "Even the French horns were shipping water." A shed had to be constructed.

Money was raised by subscription and the shed was first used in 1938. The shed covers an acre and half and seats 6,000 people.

This time of year finds the grounds beautiful and calm in their greeness. However activity is beginning. Thirty acres of lawn has to be mowed; the formal gardens have to be put in order. The main effort will be to take down the winter shelter of the shed, which requires the work of nine men. Then the clay floor has to be swept.

Other buildings to be prepared include the opera house, the symphony's practice house, the estate's original building and the chamber music hall.

July 4 will again be the opening of Tanglewood, its 25th season on the grounds. The first weekend of music will bring Bach to the Berkshires and Charles Munch, in his last year of conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
SUN. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 20 1962

FAREWELL: Conductor Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire (Mass.) Festival, this will be his last season there.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
MAY 1 1962

A view of Tanglewood at Lenox, scene of the Berkshire Festival to be conducted July 4-Aug. 26.

Music is synonymous with "the singing hills" of Massachusetts. The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, featuring Charles Munch conducting his last season, has extended its music series two extra weeks, commencing July 4 with the Budapest String Quartet, and concluding Aug. 26 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's presentation of Copland's "Quiet City" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9.

AN ARCHITECTURAL COINCIDENCE popped up in the news last week when the New York State Department of Conservation unveiled a drawing of a proposed theater for a performing arts center in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The fan-shaped building bore a remarkable resemblance to famed Music Shed at Tanglewood. Similarities did not stop there, however. New York group predicted the Saratoga project would become the "Salzburg of America."

ACOUSTICAL FIDELITY of the Shed at Tanglewood has long been a feature of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The basic plan for the Shed was created by the late Eliel Saarinen, world famous architect. It was dedicated in 1938 and has successfully withstood the test of time. In the photographs below, the New York planners incorporated the sound reflectors in the original plan. Tanglewood's were added in 1959.

Tanglewood's Twin?

By EDWARD J. FARRELL

Imitation is supposedly the sincerest form of flattery, and it is safe to assume the founders of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival have been flattered by the many efforts to imitate the famous Tanglewood concerts throughout the country.

Some have succeeded and some have failed.

Something of a peak in flattery, however, has been achieved in nearby Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The New York State Conservation Department last week unveiled plans for a performing arts center on the Saratoga Springs Reservation. A quick glance at the architectural rendition of plans for a musical center reveals an amazing likeness to the famed Music Shed at Tanglewood.

Reflectors Duplicated

To further confound the flattery, the designers have incorporated certain features of the Tanglewood Music Shed into the interior of the proposed auditorium. The major duplication is a series of suspended reflectors near the stage to enhance the accoustical characteristics of the hall. Tanglewood's reflectors were installed in 1959.

There are many other similar patterns included in the plans. The auditorium proper will have 5,200 seats built on a sloping floor. The theater will be open on three sides to accommodate some 7,000 lawn patrons for orchestral performances.

The general construction would be similar with a roof deck of timber supported on clear-spanning steel trusses.

Many Refinements

There are several refinements planned for the Saratoga Springs Center. The rear of the theater will have a stage house with an 80-foot high fly gallery which will be adaptable to performances by full orchestra with chorus, to ballet, or to opera with complete stage sets. An adjustable, removable orchestra enclosure, supplemented by acoustical reflecting walls will accommodate musical groups ranging from a string quartet to full orchestra and chorus. The proscenium opening can be adjusted to the required width for any type of production.

Harold G. Wilm, New York Commissioner of Conservation, has estimated the entire project will cost about $2,400,000. The proposal would have New York State pay about $580,000 for the site development while private funds of more than $1,750,000 would be used to build the theater.

The project would be built on the state-owned Saratoga Springs Reservation which is now being redeveloped as a major recreational area to serve the Capital area. Swimming pools, a championship golf course and a par 3 course, picnic areas and court games have been built on the reservation and will be opened to the public this summer. The traditional Spa services based on its supposedly therapeutic mineral waters will continue on the reservation. However, the Hall of Springs has recently been redesigned by the state and is now a formal restaurant with an outdoor terrace.

The idea for the performing arts center was developed by a citizens group known as the Saratoga Springs Committee on the Performing Arts. The ideas proposed would be to make the center a summer home for the New York Philharmonic Society and the New York City Ballet Company. The commission reports both groups have already shown a great interest.

There is every indication that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will bestow its blessings on the proposed project. It is an axiom in the business world that competition is good for business. However, there are some statements incorporated in the commission's brochure that should not go unchallenged by Berkshire County. The statements, attributed to Mr. Wilm, maintain "the state administration is very much aware of its responsibility to encourage the creation of centers where all of its citizens may enjoy the finest musical and theatrical performances. The residents of the capital district," the statement continues, "should not have to travel to other states, or New York City, Rochester or Buffalo for music and ballet."

The second, and more challenging comment by Mr. Wilm contends that "this project could make Saratoga Springs the Salzburg of America."

Tanglewood has long been recognized as Salzburg's counterpart in this country.

While no completion date has been set for the Saratoga Springs project, the proposal contains much food for thought for Berkshire County. The idea of the state underwriting much of the project offers intriguing possibilities here. Paramount, however, is the advantage Saratoga Springs presently enjoys over Berkshire County. That is superb highway connections with the population centers of New York via a direct access to the New York Thruway.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 611,942 S. 1,004,122

MAY 13 1962

15

Tanglewood famous as summer mecca for music lovers

A favorite stop for summer vacationers to New England is the great estate called Tanglewood which is tucked into the green Berkshire Hills of southwestern Massachusetts—a few miles from the Connecticut and New York State lines.

Since 1936 Tanglewood has been the summer home of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, where it holds its annual Berkshire Festival concerts and operates the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music that trained Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rósalind Elias, Mario Lanza, Leontyne Price and many others.

A few auditoriums have been built at Tanglewood but most of the 210 acres have been left in formal gardens, the hemlock hedges and avenues of tall pine set out soon after William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker and merchant, bought this land in 1848 and incorporated several farms into a gentleman's estate.

Guided tours through the Tanglewood grounds originate from the main gate many times every day during the eight week Berkshire Festival season.

Visitors also see the interesting Theater-Concert Hall and the small Chamber Music Hall which were designed by Eero Saarinen and are now used during the summer weeks for Festival and school events.

The Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open July 6 and close Aug. 26. Most of the Orchestra concerts will be conducted by Charles Munch — his final concerts before retirement as the Orchestra's Music Director. He has invited Pierre Monteux, Philadelphia's Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to appear as guest conductors during the Festival. Among the famous soloists who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are pianists Rudolf Serkin and the young Americans Gary Graffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and the Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin. The final Festival concert on Aug. 26 will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood in a special program on Thursday, Aug. 2.

Detailed information on Tanglewood with complete program and ticket prices is available, until June 18, from the Berkshire Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. After June 18 the Festival ticket office will be at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

ERIE, PA.
TIMES-NEWS
SUN. 71 594

MAY 6 1962

A CULTURAL CENTER not too far distant, too, is TANGLEWOOD, the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra located in the Berkshires of Western Massachusetts, where the orchestra presents annually its eight week Berkshire Festival . . . opening July 4 and continuing until August 26, the Festival is under the direction of CHARLES MUNCH, and will feature this season such noted performers as Rudolf Serkin, and such talented directors as Eugene Ormandy, as well as the Festival Chorus . . . there will be fifteen concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, eight Chamber Music Concerts . . . near Tanglewood, which is located in Lenox, Massachusetts, are the Berkshire Playhouse, at Stockbridge and the Williamstown Summer Theatre in Williamstown, where plays are presented nightly, and in Lee, there is the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival . . . with the ease of travel on Interstate Route 90, these exciting programs in Western Massachusetts are available to vacationers, who seem, in increasing numbers each year, to seek such relaxation for their holiday periods.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 5,000

MAY 1962

Portion of the crowd gathered at "Tanglewood" to hear a performance by the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF
TIMES
D: 552,220 S: 975,126

MAY 6 1962

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL: Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. July 4-Aug. 26. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductors: Munch, Steinberg, Ormandy, Monteux. Soloists: Vronsky and Babin, Foss, Janis, Gray-Masse, Mayes, Serkin, Fleisher, Istomin, Graffman, Addison, Kopell, McCollum, Gramm, Festival Chorus. Chamber Music: Budapest String Quartet, New York Pro Musica, Boston Arts Quartet, New York Chamber Soloists, Beaux Arts Trio, Nova Arte Trio, Kroll Quartet.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
D. 372,276 S. 513,696

MAY 20 1962

Aro

The Boston Symphony orchestra will conduct its annual music festival at Tanglewood, estate in Berkshire county, Mass., July 6 to Aug. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,047

MAY 30 1962

World Famous Conductors Share Tanglewood Podium

Three of the world's leading symphony conductors, Dr. Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux, will share the podium for the Berkshire Nights series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this summer, when five major Friday evening performances are being offered for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes Friday, June 1.

Announcement of the Berkshire Nights series was made by the Tanglewood Advisory Committee. The Berkshire Festival season has been extended to eight weeks. The first three weeks will be devoted to the works of Bach and Mozart. The final five major concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will include the Berkshire Nights series on Friday evening, arranged by Dr. Munch, who is retiring as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the close of the Tanglewood season.

Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Friday night concerts, Mr. Ormandy and Mr. Monteux one each. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, is conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Monteux conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony has announced that for the fifth year Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee.

Dr. Munch will open the Berkshire Nights series on July 27, conducting a program devoted to compositions by Debussy, Piston and Brahms. He will also conduct the August 3 concert, when the Festival Chorus will be heard in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the Boston Symphony will play Saint-Saen's cello pconcerto on the same program, which will include Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "LaValse."

Mr. Ormandy has programmed for the Friday evening concert, August 10, Beethoven's Egmont Overture; Beethoven's Third Symphony (Eroica), and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

On Friday, August 17, Dr. Munch has invited Leon Kirchner to conduct his Sinfonia to open the program and then the Boston Symphony conductor will conclude the program with Berlioz' "Harold In Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola of the Boston Symphony as soloist, and Mendelssohn's First Symphony (Reformation).

For the final Berkshire Nights concert on August 24, Pierre Monteux has programmed Weber's Euryanthe Overture; Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Brahms' First Symphony.

All concerts this season will start at 8 p.m. instead of 8:30 as in previous years. Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna, and subscriptions for the 1962 series may be mailed to her.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,028 S. 150,442

MAY 27 1962

Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will be held July 4-Aug. 26 at Lenox, Mass. Dr. Charles Munch who has been music director of the Boston Symphony the past 13 years will retire at the close of the Festival.

The Festival will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet. Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg will be guest conductors for some of the concerts.

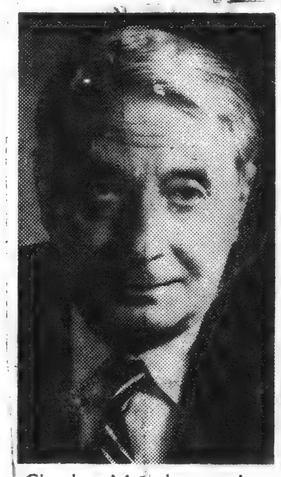
Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will give a benefit program Aug. 2.

Many well known vocalists, musicians and chamber music groups will also participate in the festival.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,152

MAY 16 1962



Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who retires as musical director of the Tanglewood Music Festival, following the final concert of the 8-week's season with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

MAY 13 1962

TANGLEWOOD on the other hand has lined up a banner eight-week season starting July 4 and concluding with a performance of Beethoven's celebrated Ninth Symphony on Aug. 26. This year marks the last under direction of Charles Munch who will retire as Boston Symphony's conductor at the end of August.

With the Berkshire Festival as the nucleus, the Western Massachusetts region has become a gigantic magnet for cultural activities of all sorts. In addition to great symphonic and choral works there can be found jazz at Berkshire Music Barn next door to the great Tanglewood estate, chamber music at South Mountain, only a few miles away; dance at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Lee; drama at the American Shakespeare Festival in Stratford, Conn., the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and Williamstown Summer Theater; films at Pittsfield's Berkshire Museum Little Cinema; and art displays at no less than eight museums and centers within a short radius.

The project would be built on the state-owned Saratoga Springs Reservation which is now being Commissioner of Conservation, has estimated the entire project will cost about $2,400,000. The project is now a formal will bestow its blessings on the musical and theatrical performances in this country. The idea for the performing arts restaurant with an outdoor terrace. to the New York Thruway.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 611,942 S. 1,004,122

MAY 13 1962

15

Tanglewood famous as summer mecca for music lovers

A favorite stop for summer vacationers to New England is the great estate called Tanglewood which is tucked into the green Berkshire Hills of southwestern Massachusetts—a few miles from the Connecticut and New York State lines.

Since 1936 Tanglewood has been the summer home of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, where it holds its annual Berkshire Festival concerts and operates the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music that trained Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Mario Lanza, Leontyne Price and many others.

A few auditoriums have been built at Tanglewood but most of the 210 acres have been left in formal gardens, the hemlock hedges and avenues of tall pine set out soon after William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker and merchant, bought this land in 1848 and incorporated several farms into a gentleman's estate.

Guided tours through the Tanglewood grounds originate from the main gate many times every day during the eight week Berkshire Festival season.

Visitors also see the interesting Theater-Concert Hall and the small Chamber Music Hall which were designed by Eero Saarinen and are now used during the summer weeks for festival and school events.

The Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open July 6 and close Aug. 26. Most of the Orchestra concerts will be conducted by Charles Munch — his final concerts before retirement as the Orchestra's Music Director. He has invited Pierre Monteux, Philadelphia's Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to appear as guest conductors during the Festival. Among the famous soloists who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are pianists Rudolf Serkin and the young Americans Gary Graffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and the Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin. The final Festival concert on Aug. 26 will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood in a special program on Thursday, Aug. 2.

Detailed information on Tanglewood with complete program and ticket prices is available, until June 18, from the Berkshire Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. After June 18 the Festival ticket office will be at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

ERIE, PA.
TIMES-NEWS
SUN. 71,594

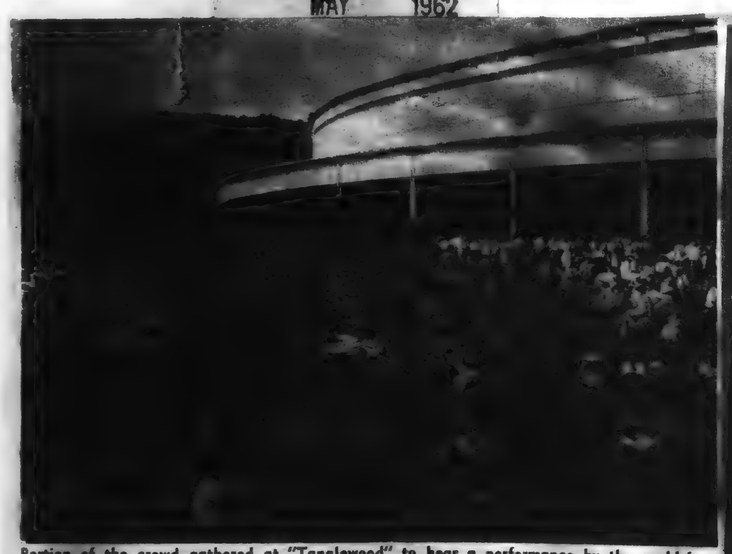
MAY 6 1962

A CULTURAL CENTER not too far distant, too, is TANGLEWOOD, the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra located in the Berkshires of Western Massachusetts, where the orchestra presents annually its eight week Berkshire Festival . . . opening July 4 and continuing until August 26, the Festival is under the direction of CHARLES MUNCH, and will feature this season such noted performers as Rudolf Serkin, and such talented directors as Eugene Ormandy, as well as the Festival Chorus . . . there will be fifteen concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, eight Chamber Music Concerts . . . near Tanglewood, which is located in Lenox, Massachusetts, are the Berkshire Playhouse, at Stockbridge and the Williamstown Summer Theatre in Williamstown, where plays are presented nightly, and in Lee, there is the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival . . . with the ease of travel on Interstate Route 90, these exciting programs in Western Massachusetts are available to vacationers, who seem, in increasing numbers each year, to seek such relaxation for their holiday periods.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Boston Business
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Ch. of Com.
Circ. 5,000

MAY 1962



Portion of the crowd gathered at "Tanglewood" to hear a performance by the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,047

MAY 30 1962

World Famous Conductors Share Tanglewood Podium

Three of the world's leading symphony conductors, Dr. Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy and Pierre Monteux, will share the podium for the Berkshire Nights series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this summer, when five major Friday evening performances are being offered for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes Friday, June 1.

Announcement of the Berkshire Nights series was made by the Tanglewood Advisory Committee. The Berkshire Festival season has been extended to eight weeks. The first three weeks will be devoted to the works of Bach and Mozart. The final five major concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will include the Berkshire Nights series on Friday evening, arranged by Dr. Munch, who is retiring as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the close of the Tanglewood season.

Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Friday night concerts, Mr. Ormandy and Mr. Monteux one each. Mr. Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey, is conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Monteux conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony has announced that for the fifth year Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee.

Dr. Munch will open the Berkshire Nights series on July 27, conducting a program devoted to compositions by Debussy, Piston and Brahms. He will also conduct the August 3 concert, when the Festival Chorus will be heard in Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the Boston Symphony will play Saint-Saen's cello pconcerto on the same program, which will include Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "LaValse."

Mr. Ormandy has programmed for the Friday evening concert August 10, Beethoven's Egmont Overture, Beethoven's Third Symphony (Eroica), and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

On Friday, August 17, Dr. Munch has invited Leon Kirchner to conduct his Sinfonia to open the program and then the Boston Symphony conductor will conclude the program with Berlioz' "Harold In Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, first viola of the Boston Symphony as soloist, and Mendelssohn's First Symphony (Reformation).

For the final Berkshire Nights concert on August 24, Pierre Monteux has programmed Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Brahms' First Symphony.

All concerts this season will start at 8 p.m. instead of 8:30 as in previous years. Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna, and subscriptions for the 1962 series may be mailed to her.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,152

MAY 16 1962

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who retires as musical director of the Tanglewood Music Festival, following the final concert of the 8-week's season with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

MAY 13 1962

TANGLEWOOD on the other hand has lined up a banner eight-week season starting July 4 and concluding with a performance of Beethoven's celebrated Ninth Symphony on Aug. 26. This year marks the last under direction of Charles Munch who will retire as Boston Symphony's conductor at the end of August.

With the Berkshire Festival as the nucleus, the Western Massachusetts region has become a gigantic magnet for cultural activities of all sorts. In addition to great symphonic and choral works there can be found jazz at Berkshire Music Barn next door to the great Tanglewood estate, chamber music at South Mountain, only a few miles away; dance at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Lee; drama at the American Shakespeare Festival in Stratford, Conn., the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and Williamstown Summer Theater; films at Pittsfield's Berkshire Museum Little Cinema; and art displays at no less than eight museums and con-

LOS ANGELES, CALIF
TIMES
D: 552,220 S: 975,126

MAY 6 1962

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL: Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. July 4-Aug. 26. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductors: Munch, Steinberg, Ormandy, Monteux. Soloists: Vronsky and Babin, Foss, Janis, Gray-Masse, Mayes, Serkin, Fleisher, Istomin, Graffman, Addison, Kopell, McCollum, Gramm. Festival Chorus. Chamber Music: Budapest String Quartet, New York Pro Musica, Boston Arts Quartet, New York Chamber Soloists, Beaux Arts Trio; Nova Arte Trio, Kroll Quar-

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
D. 372,276 S. 513,696

MAY 20 1962

Aro

The Boston Symphony orchestra will conduct its annual music festival at Tanglewood, [illegible] in Berkshire county, Mass., July 4 to Aug. 26.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,028 S. 150,442

MAY 27 1962

Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will be held July 4-Aug. 26 at Lenox, Mass. Dr. Charles Munch who has been music director of the Boston Symphony the past 13 years will retire at the close of the Festival.

The Festival will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet. Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg will be guest conductors for some of the concerts.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will give a benefit program Aug. 2.

Many well known vocalists, musicians and chamber music groups will also participate in the festival.

16

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
MAY 10 1962

Tanglewood Festival Concerts Start July 4; Munch to Bid Farewell with Beethoven Ninth

By IRENE JARRY
News Music Columnist

Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge on the Berkshire Hills is the home of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center.

On a beautiful estate of 210 acres, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it attracts leading performers and composers, listeners, amateurs and teachers. People from all quarters of the world can be seen there, making music or just enjoying it.

The 1962 Festival, which starts July 4, has been extended to eight weeks. It will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet on Wednesday, July 4, and close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26.

Dr. Munch retires at the close of the Festival, and the Beethoven Symphony concert will be his farewell as head of the orchestra.

Bach, Mozart

The first three orchestral concerts, on July 6, 7, and 8, will be devoted to the music of Bach, and the second and third Festival weekends, July 13, 14, 15 and 20, 21, 22, to the music of Mozart. Charles Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five Festival weeks. Leonard Bernstein is not listed as a conductor there this year.

Several top vocalists have been invited by Dr. Munch to assist in the choral works. Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes, and piano soloists Lucas Foss, Serkin, Istomin, and Graffman will also take part.

Six ensembles will give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. Evening concerts will start at 8 (EST) rather than at 8:30.

Modern works of special interest are Honegger's "Symphony No. 5", Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques", a Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, Kirchner's "Sinfonia" (conducted by the composer), Foss' "Time Cycle" (also conducted by the composer), Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler", and Copland's "Quiet City."

A detailed brochure on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with complete programs is available from the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

Pack a Lunch

There is a world of great music presented here. Pack a box lunch and go. It is a beautiful ride over. You can also go early and listen to rehearsals, or watch the Music Center at work, or browse in the music shop with its fascinating books and scores. The experience is stimulating and entertaining.

We hope that Eric Leinsdorf, who is to succeed Munch, will be a new leading spirit there and within the framework that makes Tanglewood the most successful Festival in the United States. He could change some of the traditional music although there are many people who have not yet heard it all. Many changes have been suggested. One known is the performance of 10 contemporary concertos next season. One wonders what will happen.

Mr. Leinsdorf, the 50-year-old Vienna born conductor, has already unveiled many of his plans which to musicians sound more promising than Mr. Munch's programs.

Together with his wife and five children Mr. Leinsdorf will live in suburban Brookline, a 10-minute ride from Symphony Hall, and will be neighbor to Arthur Fiedler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops.

More news about Boston Symphony later!

Happy listening!

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997
JUN 29 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123
JUN 17 1962 Byline

Festival Opens Season July 4

Charles Munch announces the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 1962 Festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet July 4 and will close with a performance of Bee toven's Symphony No. 9 on Aug. 26.

Dr. Munch retires at the close of this Festival after 13 years as music director of the Orchestra.

All evening activities will begin at 8 p.m. The earlier starting time will apply to Festival concerts and concerts of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music.

The first three orchestra concerts Friday, Saturday, Sunday, July 6, 7, 8 — will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third Festival weekends—July 13, 14, 15; 20, 21, 22 — will be music of Mozart. Dr. Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five Festival weeks. Monteux will conduct the concerts July 29, Aug. 11 and Aug. 24. Ormandy will conduct the concerts of Aug. 10 and Aug. 18. Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will make his first Tanglewood appearance on Aug. 4.

Several vocalists have been invited by Dr. Munch to assist in the choral works scheduled for the Festival this summer. Among the vocal soloists will be Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern. Miss Curtin sang with the Syracuse Symphony in May.

Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will also be soloists.

Munch has invited six ensembles to give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. The groups, in addition to the Budapest String Quartet, are the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists whose concert will be given under auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio with Gary Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloists, and two concerts by the Boston Arts Quartet, one sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation and one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, Aug. 2. The second benefit — Gala Evening — is scheduled for Aug. 23.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Circ. 17,729
JUN 22 1962

TANGLEWOOD

New England's summer concert highlight is the Berkshire Festival at Lennox, Mass. Tanglewood as the site is known, is the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Forty-five concerts are on the 1962 schedule, beginning July 4 and ending Aug. 26. Famous throughout the U.S., Tanglewood is about 75 miles from Middletown.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635
MAY 28 1962 Byline

TANGLEWOOD SESSION

Boston, May 28 — The 1962 session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, its twentieth session, will be held from July 1 to August 26 in conjunction with the orchestra's 8-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Charles Munch is music director of the festival and director of the Center.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
MAY 17 1962

Tanglewood Curtain Time

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I am told there has been some confusion and perhaps misunderstanding on the part of our friends in the Berkshires as to the reasons behind the Berkshire Festival's decision to advance the starting hour of all evening activities at Tanglewood this summer from 8:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. As manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Festival, I would be grateful if, through your paper, I could explain the reasons.

The change was made in the public interest and as an accommodation to our patrons, because of light. We believe patrons should be able to find Tanglewood, park their cars and get to the Music Shed before darkness hinders each of these operations. With an eight-week Festival, this is no longer possible if the 8:30 starting hour is retained. Getting away from Tanglewood in the dark, of course, is quite another matter—one knows how he came, where he left his car, what path he followed to get to the Shed, and retracing one's steps is relatively simple. Getting in in the dark could be pretty chaotic.

When the Festival was held for six or seven weeks and ended in mid-August, there was still enough natural daylight at 8:30 p.m. so one could move about Tanglewood with some ease. But this summer the final evening concert of the eight-week Festival will be held on Aug. 25. On this date the sun will set at 7:45 p.m.; at 8 p.m. some natural daylight will remain but it will be dark long before 8:30 p.m.

It is true that it will not be dark by 8:30 p.m. in the early weeks of the Festival, and we considered having the concerts in the first few weeks begin at 8:30 and those toward the end of the season to begin at 8 p.m. But this, I feel certain, would make for confusion, and would not solve anything. Therefore the best plan seems to be to start at a uniformly earlier hour, offering an added half hour after the concert to get home, and hoping the public will accustom itself to the new curtain time.

We trust our experiment—and it is just that—will be pleasing to patrons and to those who might not wish to attend the concerts at Tanglewood but whose interests are affected by the Tanglewood operation.

THOMAS D. PERRY Jr.
Symphony Hall,
Boston 15.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, June 28, 1962

Tanglewood Season Will Open July 4

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. next week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat Music Shed at 8 p.m. Friday, July 6, and Saturday, July 7, evenings and at 2:30 Sunday, July 8.

* * *

THE BUDAPEST STRING Quartet will open the Festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p.m. Wednesday, July 4, with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theatre.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight week session Sunday with Opening Exercises in the theatre at 3:30 p.m.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
STAR-TELEGRAM
D. 106,809 S 208,048
JUN 17 1962 Byline

Berkshire Festival

The famous Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will operate at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 4 to Aug. 26.

Concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch and guest conductors, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights of each weekend. Munch will retire at the close of the festival after 13 years as head of the Boston symphony.

There will also be eight Wednesday night chamber music concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 3 1962

Tanglewood Defended

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Some few weeks ago [May 27] there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune a criticism of the programming at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, written by Ronald Eyer, that newspaper's music editor, which I understand you reprinted in part.

Isn't it just too bad about this poor guy! He thinks concerts are given for the critics. Some day he will grow up and learn some of the facts of musical life. One of them is that concerts are given for audiences.

As a long-standing member of the Berkshire Festival audience, I should like nothing better than to hear a performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. And when said performance comes off, I think our critic will find the Shed crowded with eager listeners. Although many of them, myself included, will doubtless be completely familiar with this beautiful, moving and exciting composition, I venture to say it will be no more a "rehash" than Judith Anderson's Lady Macbeth or Laurence Olivier's Hamlet. Most of us have heard their lines before, too.

However, for those who prefer their musical fields planted in "tone rows," there are always the Friday afternoon seminars in contemporary music, and the Fromm Concerts. And at the student concerts, both choral and orchestral, one can hear many seldom performed works, although, in view of this young man's enthusiasm over next season's promised Haydn and Handel revivals, it would seem that he has merely gone fashionably baroque.

He should ask his paper to give him a new assignment for the summer. I am sure he will have no difficulty finding things to criticize. He doesn't have to come to Lenox, does he, if he is going to be all that bored?

(Mrs.) BLANCHE BLOCH.
Springhill Farm,
Hillsdale, N.Y.

16

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,205
MAY 10 1962

Tanglewood Festival Concerts Start July 4; Munch to Bid Farewell with Beethoven Ninth

By IRENE JARRY
News Music Columnist

Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire Hills is the home of the Berkshire Festival and Music Center.

On a beautiful estate of 210 acres, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it attracts leading performers and composers, listeners, amateurs and teachers. People from all quarters of the world can be seen there, making music or just enjoying it.

The 1962 Festival, which starts July 4, has been extended to eight weeks. It will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet on Wednesday, July 4, and close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26.

Dr. Munch retires at the close of the Festival, and the Beethoven Symphony concert will be his farewell as head of the orchestra.

Bach, Mozart

The first three orchestral concerts, on July 6, 7, and 8, will be devoted to the music of Bach, and the second and third Festival weekends, July 13, 14, 15 and 20, 21, 22, to the music of Mozart. Charles Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five Festival weeks. Leonard Bernstein is not listed as a conductor there this year.

Several top vocalists have been invited by Dr. Munch to assist in the choral works. Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes, and piano soloists Lucas Foss, Serkin, Istomin, and Graffman will also take part.

Six ensembles will give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. Evening concerts will start at 9 (EST) rather than at 8:30.

Modern works of special interest are Honegger's "Symphony No. 5", Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques", Bartok Concerto for Orchestra, Kirchner's "Sinfonia" (conducted by the composer), Foss' "Time Cycle" (also conducted by the composer), Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler", and Copland's "Quiet City."

A detailed brochure on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with complete programs is available from the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

Pack a Lunch

There is a world of great music presented here. Pack a box lunch and go. It is a beautiful ride over. You can also go early and listen to rehearsals, or watch the Music Center at work, or browse in the music shop with its fascinating books and scores. The experience is stimulating and entertaining.

We hope that Eric Leinsdorf, who is to succeed Munch, will be a new leading spirit there and within the framework that makes Tanglewood the most successful Festival in the United States. He could change some of the traditional music although there are many people who have not yet heard it all. Many changes have been suggested. One known is the performance of 10 contemporary concertos next season. One wonders what will happen.

Mr. Leinsdorf, the 50-year-old Vienna born conductor, has already unveiled many of his plans which to musicians sound more promising than Mr. Munch's programs.

Together with his wife and five children Mr. Leinsdorf will live in suburban Brookline, a 10-minute ride from Symphony Hall, and will be neighbor to Arthur Fiedler, famed conductor of the Boston Pops.

More news about Boston Symphony later!

Happy listening!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997
JUN 29 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123
JUN 17 1962

Festival Opens Season July 4

Charles Munch announces the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 1962 Festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet July 4 and will close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Aug. 26.

Dr. Munch retires at the close of this Festival after 13 years as music director of the Orchestra.

All evening activities will begin at 8 p.m. The earlier starting time will apply to Festival concerts and concerts of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music.

The first three orchestra concerts Friday, Saturday, Sunday, July 6, 7, 8 — will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third Festival weekends — July 13, 14, 15; 20, 21, 22 — will be music of Mozart. Dr. Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to conduct some concerts in the last five Festival weeks. Monteux will conduct the concerts July 29, Aug. 11 and Aug. 24. Ormandy will conduct the concerts of Aug. 10 and Aug. 18. Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will make his first Tanglewood appearance on Aug. 4.

Several vocalists have been invited by Dr. Munch to assist in the choral works scheduled for the Festival this summer. Among the vocal soloists will be Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern. Miss Curtin sang with the Syracuse Symphony in May.

Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will also be soloists.

Munch has invited six ensembles to give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. The groups, in addition to the Budapest String Quartet, are the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists whose concert will be given under auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio with Gary Graffman and Dorist Anthony Dwyer as soloists, and two concerts by the Boston Arts Quartet, one sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation and one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, Aug. 2. The second benefit — Gala Evening — is scheduled for Aug. 23.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Circ. 17,729
JUN 22 1962

TANGLEWOOD

New England's summer concert highlight is the Berkshire Festival at Lennox, Mass. Tanglewood, as the site is known, is the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Forty-five concerts are on the 1962 schedule, beginning July 4 and ending Aug. 26. Famous throughout the U.S., Tanglewood is about 75 miles from Middletown.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635
MAY 28 1962

TANGLEWOOD SESSION

Boston, May 28 — The 1962 session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, its twentieth session, will be held from July 1 to August 26 in conjunction with the orchestra's 8-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Charles Munch is music director of the festival and director of the Cen-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,217
MAY 17 1962

Tanglewood Curtain Time

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

I am told there has been some confusion and perhaps misunderstanding on the part of our friends in the Berkshires as to the reasons behind the Berkshire Festival's decision to advance the starting hour of all evening activities at Tanglewood this summer from 8:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. As manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Festival, I would be grateful if, through your paper, I could explain the reasons.

The change was made in the public interest and as an accommodation to our patrons, because of light. We believe patrons should be able to find Tanglewood, park their cars and get to the Music Shed before darkness hinders each of these operations. With an eight-week Festival, this is no longer possible if the 8:30 starting hour is retained. Getting away from Tanglewood in the dark, of course, is quite another matter—one knows how he came, where he left his car, what path he followed to get to the Shed, and retracing one's steps is relatively simple. Getting in in the dark could be pretty chaotic.

When the Festival was held for six or seven weeks and ended in mid-August, there was still enough natural daylight at 8:30 p.m. so one could move about Tanglewood with some ease. But this summer the final evening concert of the eight-week Festival will be held on Aug. 25. On this date the sun will set at 7:45 p.m., at 8 p.m. some natural daylight will remain but it will be dark long before 8:30 p.m.

It is true that it will not be dark by 8:30 p.m. in the early weeks of the Festival, and we considered having the concerts in the first few weeks begin at 8:30 and those toward the end of the season to begin at 8 p.m. But this, I feel certain, would make for confusion, and would not solve anything. Therefore the best plan seems to be to start at a uniformly earlier hour, offering an added half hour after the concert to get home, and hoping the public will accustom itself to the new curtain time.

We trust our experiment—and it is just that—will be pleasing to patrons and to those who might not wish to attend the concerts at Tanglewood but whose interests are affected by the Tanglewood operation.

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.
Symphony Hall,
Boston 15.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, June 28, 1962

Tanglewood Season Will Open July 4

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. next week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6600-seat Music Shed at 8 p.m. Friday, July 6, and Saturday, July 7, evenings and at 2:30 Sunday, July 8.

* * *

THE BUDAPEST STRING Quartet will open the Festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p.m. Wednesday, July 4, with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theatre.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight week session Sunday with Opening Exercises in the theatre at 3:30 p.m.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
STAR-TELEGRAM
D. 108,809 S 208,048
JUN 17 1962

Berkshire Festival

The famous Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will operate at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 4 to Aug. 26.

Concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch and guest conductors, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights of each weekend. Munch will retire at the close of the festival after 13 years as head of the Boston symphony.

There will also be eight Wednesday night chamber music concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 3 1962

Tanglewood Defended

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Some few weeks ago [May 27] there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune a criticism of the programming at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, written by Ronald Eyer, that newspaper's music editor, which I understand you reprinted in part.

Isn't it just too bad about this poor guy! He thinks concerts are given for the critics. Some day he will grow up and learn some of the facts of musical life. One of them is that concerts are given for audiences.

As a long-standing member of the Berkshire Festival audience, I should like nothing better than to hear a performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. And when said performance comes off, I think our critic will find the Shed crowded with eager listeners. Although many of them, myself included, will doubtless be completely familiar with this beautiful, moving and exciting composition, I venture to say it will be no more a "rehash" than Judith Anderson's Lady Macbeth or Laurence Olivier's Hamlet. Most of us have heard their lines before, too.

However, for those who prefer their musical fields planted in "tone rows," there are always the Friday afternoon seminars in contemporary music, and the Fromm Concerts. And at the student concerts, both choral and orchestral, one can hear many seldom performed works, although, in view of this young man's enthusiasm over next season's promised Haydn and Handel revivals, it would seem that he has merely gone fashionably baroque.

He should ask his paper to give him a new assignment for the summer. I am sure he will have any difficulty finding things to criticize. He doesn't have to come to Lenox, does he, if he is going to be all that bored?

(Mrs.) BLANCHE BLOCH.
Springhill Farm,
Hillsdale, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUN 28 1962

Tanglewood Opens 8-Week Season Sunday

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

It's that time of the year again—Tanglewood opens Sunday for an eight-week season.

It will mark the final season for Dr. Charles Munch as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire at the end of the 1962 Berkshire Festival.

Area concert-goers, as well as visitors, will have to readjust their schedules from previous years. Evening concerts for the Bach-Mozart series, spanning the first three weeks, and the major BSO performances in the Music Shed for the last five, all will start at 8 p.m. instead of 8:30 as in previous years.

Charles Munch

20th Season

Formal exercises opening the 20th season of the Berkshire Music Center will be held in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon at 3:30.

Dr. Munch will address the students, who represent just about every state in the Union in addition to more than 30 foreign students from 13 countires and 5 continents. Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty and the orchestra's associate conductor, who also will retire at the end of the Tanglewood season, also will speak.

BSO trustees, the faculty and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be hosts for the opening exercises which will be followed by tea in the formal gardens at Tanglewood.

Among the foreign students enrolled in the Music Center are four first-prize winners from the Paris Conservatory; the winner of the Australian Broadcasting Commission's scholarship to the Center and the current winner of the French Prix de Rome.

Foreign Conductors

The foreign students include the following conductors:

Serge Fouriner, 30, of Paris, assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, who won the Koussevitzky prize at the Center last year.

Pierre Hetu of Paris, a student in the Paris Conservatory conducting class of Fourestier, who last year won the international competition for young conductors at the Besancon Festival.

Asao Hasegawa, 28, of Tokyo, Japan, a student at Union Theological Seminary in New York and conductor of the International Christian University Orchestra in Tokyo.

Gunther Theuring, 31, of Vienna, conductor of Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienne, who studied at the Academy of Music in Vienna.

Theodor Avitahl, 31, a Rumanian refugee, former conductor of the Jassy State Philharmonic, who is being sponsored by the Council on Emigres in the Professions.

Jean-Jacques Barbieux, '26, of Brussels, whose travel expenses are being paid by the Belgian government and his board and room by the Gertrude Robinson Smith scholarship. The Music Center has granted him a tuition scholarship. Barbieux studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and has been a guest conductor with the National Broadcasting Orchestra of Brussels.

Edmund Kirchhofer, 33, of Duisburg, Germany; Louis Forner, 27, of Vienna and the only female conductor, Satako Takemae of Japan, assistant to Professor Saito at the Tokyo Musical Academy.

The Budapest String Quartet will officially open the Tanglewood concert season Wednesday evening with a chamber music performance in the Theater Concert Hall at 8.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the orchestra's 1962 Festival season over the following weekend with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. These concerts will be in the Music Shed at 8 p.m. Friday (July 6) and Saturday (July 7) and at 2:30 Sunday afternoon (July 8).

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch also has invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, BSO flutist, will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The Friday night concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

This year's eight-week Festival, to be held from July 4 to Aug. 26, will consist of 24 concerts by the BSO, conducted by Dr. Munch and guest conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg as well as eight concerts of chamber music by smaller ensembles.

21 Contemporary Compositions

Twenty-one contemporary compositions by 18 composers have been scheduled as part of both the orchestral and chamber music programs. They have been arranged to complement the Festival's classical repertoire which will include 25 compositions by Mozart, 13 by Bach, 11 by Beethoven, 7 by Brahms and others.

The contemporary composers whose works will be performed are: Milton Babbitt, Bela Bartok (2), Arthur Berger, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Irving Fine, Lukas Foss, Alexei Haieff, Paul Hindemith, Artur Honegger, Leon Kirchner, Bohuslav Martinu, Walter Piston, Serge Prokofiev (3), Arnold Schoenberg, Gunther Schuller and Anton Webern.

In paying a unique tribute to his orchestra, Dr. Munch has invited 10 BSO members to be soloists at his final concerts at Tanglewood this summer. In addition to the members of the orchestra, he has invited 24 other soloists, seven music ensembles and five guest conductors to assist him in the 32 concerts of the eight-week festival.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 285,024 SAT. 293,118

JUN 23 1962 Buffalo

CHARLES MUNCH
Last Tanglewood Season

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL in Tanglewood, Mass., has particular and poignant significance this season, as the last to be headed by noted Alsatian maestro Charles Munch, who became director in 1962, following the death of founder-director Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Munch will devote himself to guest appearances, in subsepuent seasons with leading orchestras of the world.

The first orchestra program will be directed by Mr. Munch on Friday evening, July 6, an all-Bach program.

Orchestra performances will continue Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, through Aug. 26, concluding with the traditional presentation of the Beethoven Ninth "Choral" Symphony.

Guest conductors will include the grand patriarch, Pierre Monteux, on July 29, Aug. 11 and 24; William Steinberg, former Buffalo conductor, Aug. 4; and Eugene Ormandy, maestro of the Philadelphia orchestra, Aug. 10 and 18.

Among the soloists of international repute will be pianists Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Leon Fleisher, Rudolf Serkin, Claude Frank and Byron Janis, duo pianists Vronsky & Babin, singers Phyllis Curtin, Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee Mac Morgan, John McCollum and Donald Gramm.

Works of Alexei Haieff, Leon Kirchner and Aaron Copland, composers who have appeared in Buffalo under the UB Slee bequest, will be performed.

Thursday evening programs will feature various ensembles including the Tanglewood Choir under Hugh Ross, forums by well-known composers, the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler and a Gala Music Center Benefit on Aug. 23, with outstanding soloists.

Chamber programs on Wednesday evenings will present the Budapest Quartet, Boston Arts Quartet, Pro Musica, Beaux Arts Trio, Kroll Quartet, Nova Arte Trio and a program of New York chamber music performers.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 3 1962

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK, N.Y.

JUN 3 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,147,219

JUN 3 1962 Buffalo

Berkshire Festival From July 4 to Aug. 26

Pittsfield, Mass. (Special).—The sound of music will resound for an extra week in the Berkshire hills this summer, because the Boston Symphony Orchestra has extended its season this year. The 1962 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will open July 4 and close Aug. 26.

This will be the last season that the orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, and the Aug. 26 performance will be his final concert as music director of the orchestra. He will retire from his post at the conclusion of the Tanglewood season.

The Berkshire Festival plays host each summer to over 250,000 persons who listen to orchestral concerts, eight public rehearsals of the entire orchestra, eight chamber music concerts, and over 50 recitals by the students at the Berkshire Music Center.

Nature and culture are the twin attractions for visitors to this western part of Massachusetts, but while the cultural programs have not yet begun, the attractions of nature are already in evidence.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUN 30 1962 Buffalo

Music

Tanglewood All Set For 1962 Festival

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

Beginning next week New Yorkers will be leaving by thousands for America's own Salzburg Festival—the Berkshire Festival nestling amid a paradise of rolling plains at Tanglewood, Mass.

There, for a period of eight weeks, programs of chamber music and symphonic classics, in small halls and large sheds, will rival in sound the panorama of beauty mantling the landscape.

This year the names of two conductors will hover nostalgically over the varied activity of study, workshop and performance. One of them is the late Serge Koussevitzky, who willed the fond dream of a festival into fulfillment.

His Last Concerts

The other is Charles Munch, successor to Koussevitzky as both director of the festival and of the Boston Symphony. After serving 13 years in both capacities Munch conducts his last concerts as titular head on Aug. 25 and 26.

It was the crusading zeal of Koussevitzky that brought the festival to fruition in the middle 30s. As a youth in his native Russia he had envisioned a playground of the arts in the bosom of Nature.

While Tanglewood has never been quite that, concentrating on music to the exclusion of other media of higher artistic pursuit, it became a practical and useful reality that will perpetuate his name.

Opens on Holiday

Havinng extended the annual season to eight weeks, Munch has invited three other conductors to share the podium with him during the last five festival weeks—Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg.

Although the festival opens officially in the theater on July 4 with a program of Mozart, Debussy and Beethoven, by the Budapest String Quartet, the big series gets under way next Friday night with a Bach program by Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Indeed, all three of the first orchestral concerts will be devoted to Bach. The six concerts of the second and third festivals week-ends will be given over exclusively to the music of Mozart. All BEAUTIFUL TANGLEW… …ce-shaded Tanglewood Music Shed at Lenox, as seen here from the air, … …ular tourist attractions in the western part of the state.

18

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244 271

JUN 1962

SUMMER FESTIVALS The Berkshire Festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet July 4 and close with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, August 26. This latter will be the farewell performance of Charles Munch, since he retires at the close of this season as conductor of the Boston Symphony. The first three orchestra concerts, July 6, 7, 8, will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third festival weekends, July 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 22, to the music of Mozart. Guest conductors during the last five weeks of the festival will be Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. Instrumental soloists for the festival will be violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale, and cellist Samuel Mayes. Six ensembles will take part: the Budapest String Quartet, the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists, the Beaux Arts Trio, the Nova Arte Trio and the Boston Arts Quartet

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUN 10 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUN 3 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 886,367 S. 1,158,921

JUN 10 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D: 159,283 S: 302,060

JUN 10 1962

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SUN 111 659

JUN 10 1962

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 380,066

JUN 12 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUN 12 1962

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
D. 537,792 SAT. 526,176

JUN 9 1962

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 191,090 S: 318,537

JUN 10 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D: 159,283 S: 302,060

JUN 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,191
JUN 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JUN 10 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
Sunday, June 3, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, June 10, 1962

nglewood July 4-Aug. 6

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL patrons have been given an expanded schedule this year. The 1962 festival at Tanglewood has been extended to eight weeks. The famed musical event runs from July 4 to August 8.

PITTSFIELD — An expanded schedule for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will give visitors to the Berkshire Hills an extra week to plan their summer vacation in this Western Massachusetts playground this year.

The 1962 Festival, extended to eight weeks this season, will open July 4 and close Aug. 26.

The Aug. 26 performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be directed by Charles Munch and will be his final concert as music director of the orchestra.

Dr. Munch will retire from his BSO post at the conclusion of the Tanglewood Season after 13 years as music director.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAY 30 1962

BERKSHIRE'S 4 STICKS

Munch's Farewell to Boston Symph Comes Aug. 2

Nenox, Mass., May 29.

The Berkshire Music Festival, at Tanglewood, extended to eight weeks and running from July 4 to August 26, will divide the chores between four conductors, Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. Munch, who with the final concert on the afternoon of Aug. 2 will conclude a 13-year service with the Boston Symphony, is scheduled to baton 12 programs. Monteux is set for three; Ormandy, for two; Steinberg, for one.

The Festival annually plays to 150,000 persons.

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D 43,126

JUN 20 1962

Munch To Retire At End Of Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open its 1962 season on July 4 with a chamber music concert by the Budapest String Quartet. The season closes on Aug. 26.

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will make several appearances during the course of the Festival, with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor on Aug. 18 and Pierre Monteux on Aug. 24.

At the conclusion of this season Mr. Munch will retire after 13 years as music director of the orchestra. The open concerts on Aug. 25 and 26 will be his last appearances as its head.

Other chamber music concerts scheduled will be by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, on Aug. 8, the Nova Arte Trio on Aug. 15 and the Kroll Quartet on Aug. 22.

The Boston Pops at Tanglewood under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, who appeared recently at the County Center in White Plains, will play on Aug. 2 with tickets available through mid-July.

The Tanglewood estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in Berkshire County was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Since, the first six Festival concerts were presented the following summer and it has been the orchestra's summer school, the Berkshire Music Center. The school is in session for the eight weeks of the Festival. Mr. Munch is director of the center and Aaron Copland is chairman of the faculty.

The public is invited to visit the Tanglewood gounds and gardens. Admission is by ticket only at the time of concerts. Further information can be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

JUN 28 1962

BSO Tanglewood Plans Announced

Charles Munch has announced the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. The 1962 Festival, extended to eight weeks, will open with a concert by the Budapest String Quartet on Wednesday evening, July 4 and will close with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 on Sunday afternoon, August 26.

All evening activities at Tanglewood this summer will begin at 8 p.m. (Eastern Daylight Time).

The first three orchestra concerts — Friday, Saturday, Sunday, July 6, 7, 8 — will be devoted to the music of Bach and the six concerts of the second and third Festival weekends — July 13, 14, 15; 20, 21, 22 — will be devoted to Mozart. Charles Munch will conduct these first nine Festival concerts.

Dr. Munch has invited Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg to conduct concerts in the last five Festival weeks.

Among the vocal soloists will be Adele Addison, Bethany Beardslee, Phyllis Curtin, Donald Gramm, Freda Gray-Masse, Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Mac Morgan and Blake Stern.

Violinists Ruth Posselt and Joseph Silverstein, violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will also be soloists at the 1962 Festival.

Mr. Munch has invited six ensembles to give eight Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music. The groups, in addition to the Budapest String Quartet, are the New York Pro Musica, the New York Chamber Soloists whose concert will be given under auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the Nova Arte Trio with Garr Graffman and Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloists, and two concerts by the Boston Arts Quartet, one sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation and one with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood on Thursday, August 2. The second benefit — Gala Evening — is scheduled for Thursday, August 23.

A detailed brochure on the Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with complete programs and ticket application forms is available from the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
June 10, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, June 23, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, June 23, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, June 10, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
JUN 7 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 535,565
JUN 8 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUN 9 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUN 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,446
JUN 9 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JUN 10 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060
JUN 10 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
JUN 10 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,861 S. 31,200
JUN 10 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUN 10 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUN 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
JUN 7 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUN 12 1962

Munch Invites 10 to Play At Tanglewood Concerts

Charles Munch, retiring Boston Symphony orchestra music director, has invited 10 of the members of the orchestra to be soloists during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

* * *

IN ADDITION to members of the orchestra Dr. Munch has invited 24 other soloists, seven chamber music ensembles and five guest conductors to assist him in the 32 concerts of the eight-week festival which runs from July 4 through Aug. 26.

The 10 soloists from the orchestra include Richard Burgin, its associate conductor and retiring concertmaster; Joseph Silverstein, the incoming concertmaster; and eight first desk men — Gino Cioffi, first clarinet; Joseph Di. Pasquale, first viola; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flute; Ralph Gomberg, first wBoe; Samuel Mayes, first cello; James Stagliano, first French horn; Roger Voisin, first trumpet; and Sherman Walt, first bassoon.

* * *

CONCERTS at which the members of the orchestra will be soloists and works they will be heard in include July 6, Bach, "Suite number 2"; July 7, Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto number 2"; July 8, Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto number 5" and "Concerto for Oboe and Violin"; July 14, Mozart, "Sinfonia Concertante"; July 20, Mozart, "Violin Concerto, K. 219" and "Sinfonia Concertante"; Aug. 3 Saint-Saens, "Cello Concerto"; Aug. 15, Prokofiev, "Flute Sonata"; and Aug. 17, Berlioz, "Harold in Italy."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158
JUN 20 1962

Wealth Of Fe For N.E. Sumr

BOSTON (UPI)—Hollywood and television personalities dominate this summer's New England musical showcase which also features the end of an era at the Berkshire Festival.

Stars appearing in Broadway shows in the round and outdoors almost overshadow traditional fare at Tanglewood and jazz at Newport, R.I.

The clangorous D major chords which end the Beethoven Ninth Symphony also will sound the end of Charles Munch's career as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His final downbeat on Aug. 26 will culminate the Berkshire Music Festival's longest season, eight weeks.

Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteux and William Steinberg will serve as guest conductors in unch's last season. Tanglewood programs also will feature solo pianists Rudolf Serkin, Eugene Istomin, Gary Graffman and Byron Janis, the latest American feted in Russian concert halls.

The 1962 Boston Pops Concerts conclude June 30 at Symphony Hall, whereupon Arthur Fiedler's orchestra moves outdoors to play free evening and children's programs on the Charles River Esplanade during the first two weeks of July. Formal weekend concerts at Tanglewood open July 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
JUN 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
CLINTON, Mass.
Circ. 3,411
JUN 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
JUN 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,500
JUN 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
JUN 20 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610
JUN 20 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Wednesday, June 20, 1962

Munch To Retire At End Of Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox., Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open its 1962 season on July 4 with a chamber music concert by the Budapest String Quartet. The season closes on Aug. 2

The Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch will make several appearances during the course of the Festival, with Eugene Ormandy as guest conductor on Aug. 18 and Pierre Monteux on Aug. 24.

At the conclusion of this season Mr. Munch will retire after 13 years as music director of the orchestra. The open concerts on Aug. 25 and 26 will be his last appearances as its head.

Other chamber music concerts scheduled will be by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, on Aug. 8, the Nova Arte Trio on Aug. 15 and the Kroll Quartet on Aug. 22.

The Boston Pops at Tanglewood under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, who appeared recently at the County Center in White Plains, will play on Aug. 2 with tickets available through mid-July.

The Tanglewood estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in Berkshire County was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Since, the first six Festival concerts were presented the following summer and it has been the orchestra's summer school, the Berkshire Music Center. The school is in session for the eight weeks of the Festival. Mr. Munch is director of the center and Aaron Copland is chairman of the faculty.

The public is invited to visit the Tanglewood gounds and gardens. Admission is by ticket only at the time of concerts. Further information can be obtained from the Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

20

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JUN 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

JUN 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JUN 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUN 21 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUN 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799

JUN 13 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

JUN 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUN 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUN 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 13,067

JUN 13 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

JUN 22 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, June 19, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

KINGSTON FREEMAN
Thursday, June 14, 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUN 19 1962 Buffalo

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16 609

JUN 14 1962 Buffalo

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139

JUN 12 1962 Buffalo

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636

JUN 22 1962

Tanglewood to Include Contemporary Selections

Contemporary music, including 21 compositions by 18 composers, will be presented at Tanglewood this summer as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

* * *

SIX OF THE contemporary compositions are being presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation. The contemporary music has been scheduled as part of both the orchestral and chamber music programs and has been arranged to complement the festival's classical repertoire which will include 25 compositions by Mozart; 13 by Bach, 11 by Beethoven, seven by Brahms and others.

This year's eight-week festival will be held from July 4 to Aug. 26 and will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch, the orchestra's retiring music director, and guest conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. Eight concerts of chamber music will be presented by smaller ensembles.

The contemporary compositions and date of performance include:

Webern, "Five Movements, opus 5;" Berger Quartet (1958); and Schoenberg, "Quartet number 3," all on July 25 played by the Boston Arts Quartet.

The Piston, "Symphony number 6," directed by Dr. Munch, July 27; and Haieff "Symphony number 3" directed by Dr. Munch July 28.

Schuller, "Composition," Babbitt, "Composition for tenor and six instruments;" and Carter "Sonata for flute, oboe, cello and harpsichord," all played by the New York Chamber Soloists Aug. 1.

The Honegger "Symphony number 5," conducted by Dr. Munch, Aug. 3; the Martinu "Fantaisies symphoniques," Dr. Munch, Aug. 5.

The Diamond "Trio," by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, Aug. 8.

Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra," conducted by Eugene Ormandy, Aug. 10.

The Fine "Symphony" (1962), conducted by Dr. Munch, Aug. 12.

The Prokofiev "Flute Sonata opus 94," Doriot Anthony Dwyer and the Nova Arte Trio, Aug. 15.

Kirchner, "Sinfonia:" Kirchner, Aug. 17.

Prokofiev "Classical Symphony" and the Prokofiev "Symphony number 6," conducted by Eugene Ormandy, Aug. 18.

The Foss "Time Cycle," played by Lucas Foss, Aug. 19.

Bartok "Quartet number 2," the Kroll Quartet, Aug. 22.

Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," conducted by Pierre Monteux, Aug. 24.

Copland, "Quiet City," conducted by Dr. Munch, Aug. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 13,067

JUN 27 1962

Schedule Ahead For Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat music shed at 8 p.m. Friday (July 6) and Saturday (July 7) evenings and at 2:30 Sunday (July 8) afternoon. The Budapest String Quartet will open the Festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p.m. Wednesday (July 4) with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theatre. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight week session Sunday, July 1, with opening exercises in the theatre at 3:30.

LIFE MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 6,931,049

JUN 22 1962 Buffalo

Music

Classical music, pop concerts, opera jazz and thousands of listeners are al about to move into informal fresh ai surroundings.

THE EAST. The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. is eight weeks long this year, leads off with the Budapest String Quartet on July 4 and winds up Aug. 26. Fridays through Sundays the Boston Symphony will be heard under the guest batons of Monteux, Steinberg and Ormandy as well as its own Charles Munch, conducting the final Berkshire season.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
D. 215,198 S. 243,108

JUN 26 1962 Buffalo

LENOX, MASS. Four batons will wave at Tanglewood (home of the Berkshire Music Festival) this summer as the Boston Symphony's retiring maestro, Charles Munch, shares his conducting chores with Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. The festival runs from July 4 to Aug. 26 and annually plays to 250,000 persons.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,412

JUN 30 1962

Music

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, 4th of July, 8 p.m. features Budapest String Quartet, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Tickets $3. and $3.50. Series of three Bach concerts to be presented July 6, 7 and 8 by Charles Munch and Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Fri. and Sat. concerts at 8 p.m.; Sun., July 8 concert at 2:30 p. m. Tickets for any concert in the series are $4 and $5. Leave Mass. Turnpike at Exit 1, follow signs to Berkshire Festival about 5 miles to parking grounds.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

JUN 23 1962

Music

Budapest Quartet to Open Berkshire Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — The Budapest String quartet will present the opening program of the 1962 series at the Berkshire festival in Tanglewood Wednesday evening, July 4. Included on the program will be the Mozart (Quartet K, 458); Debussy, (Quartet), and Beethoven (Quartet, Op. 135).

The second event of the opening week will be held on Friday afternoon, July 6, at which time Dr. Charles Munch, music director, of the Boston Symphony orchestra will offer an all Bach list. Highlight of this program will be the appearance of the famed piano duo, Vronsky and Babin, as guest artists. They will be heard in the Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major. On Saturday evening the orchestra, again under Dr. Munch, will play another Bach program. Lukas Foss will be the guest soloist and he will be heard in the D minor Concerto. Completing the opening week will be the Sunday afternoon concert. This is also an all Bach program. The Tanglewood Choir, Hugh Ross, conductor, will be heard in the Cantata: Trauer-Ode.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 161,388

JUN 30 1962 Buffalo

At the Berkshire Festival the Philadelphians' regular conductor, Eugene Ormandy, has been retained for two concerts with the resident Bostonians in August. Charles Munch, the BSO's retiring conductor, will inaugurate an eight-week season with the customary Bach-Mozart weekends (three this year, July 6-22) and will otherwise share the podium in the weeks to follow with Pierre Monteux and William Steinberg. Soloists include Phyllis Curtin (heading a vocal quartet for the Mozart "Requiem"), July 22; Byron Janis, July 29; Rudolf Serkin, Aug. 5; Leon Fleisher, Aug. 11; Gary Graffman and Eugene Istomin, Aug. 18-19; and Adele Addison, Aug. 26, appearing with others in the closing performance of the Beethoven Ninth. Dr. Munch bids his orchestra and his devoted following a formal farewell on that occasion.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885

JUN 28 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

The eight-week Berkshire Festival will open at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, July 4, with a Chamber Music Concert in the theater at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert will feature the Budapest String Quartet playing Mozart, Quartet, K. 458; Debussy, Quartet; and Beethoven, Quartet, Op. 135.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUN 30 1962

TANGLEWOOD WILL REOPEN THIS SUNDAY

First Concert of Season By Hub Orchestra Is Next Friday

LENOX—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat music shed at 8 p. m. next Friday and Saturday and at 2.30 next Sunday. The Budapest String Quartet will open the festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p. m., this Wednesday with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theater. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight week session this Sunday with opening exercises in the theater at 3.30.

Lawns Reseeded

James Kiley, superintendent of grounds and buildings at Tanglewood, said Friday crews are painting the clouds over the shell in the shed.

Kiley also said the famous Tanglewood lawns are having heavy going this year because of the very dry spring in the Berkshires. He has a crew of eight college men working the lawns all summer. They have been reseeded and are watered continually. Thousands of persons use the lawns to listen to Tanglewood music under the stars.

Victor Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51 and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

Four members of the orchestra, Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin, will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will open with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and will also include the Piano Concerto in D minor with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Suite No. 3.

Bach Contata

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the closing work at the Sunday, July 8, concert: Bach's Cantata, "Trauer-Ode." Ross' soloists will be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel and baritone David Clatworthy. Dr. Munch will begin his Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Foss, and Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

At the first of the festival's eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts, the Budapest String Quartet, Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 458, the Debussy Quartet and the Quartet, Op. 135, by Beethoven.

Dr. Munch will address the students of the Berkshire Music Center at the school's opening exercises Sunday. Richard Burgin, acting chairman of faculty and the orchestra's associate conductor, will also speak. Tea will be served in the Tanglewood gardens following the 3:30 exercises in the theater.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contribution to the school, are invited to two events at Tanglewood next week: an aspects of music lecture in the chamber music hall at 3:15 Friday and a concert of chamber music in the chamber music hall at 10 a. m. Sunday, July 8.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
TABLET (C)
W. 151,790

JUN 16 1962

Situated in the beautiful setting of the Berkshire Mountains, Tanglewood features the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the retiring Charles Munch and the ageless Pierre Monteux. The season runs from July 4 to Aug. 26 and along with Mr. Munch and Mr. Monteux several eminent guest artists are scheduled to appear.

Then too, many have found the 150-mile trip from New York to Lenox an ideal weekend excursion for the family. Easily accessible via the New York State Thruway or the more scenic Taconic Parkway, Tanglewood offers a spacious lawn where families may lounge in the sun or shade eating picnic lunches while listening to the music. Those who don't want to miss a note, may purchase tickets for seats within the music shed itself.

Concerts are held in the evenings from Tuesday through Saturday and on Sunday afternoon. This season, emphasis is placed on the chamber music of Bach and Mozart for the month of July. More balanced programs consisting of well-known standards and some contemporary works are slated for the latter portion of July and August, with the highlight of Beethoven's powerful Ninth Symphony Aug. 26.

And so from north to south, east to west, our area musically alive. No matter where we are, big city, town, village or hamlet, the sound of music is in the air.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400

JUN 24 1962

Tanglewood Will Offer Varied Programs

As usual, the programs of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood this Summer will be well-balanced between the classical repertoire and contemporary music.

This season's Festival, which will be held for eight weeks from July 4-Aug. 26, will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch, the orchestra's retiring music director, and guest conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. There will also be eight concerts of chamber music by smaller ensembles.

The contemporary compositions have been scheduled as part of both the orchestral and chamber music programs and have been arranged to complement the Festival's classical repertoire which includes 25 compositions by Mozart, 13 by Bach, 11 by Beethoven, seven by Brahms and others.

Among the contemporary composers whose works will be performed at Tanglewood this Summer are Milton Babbitt, Bela Bartok, Arthur Berger, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Irving Fine, Lukas Fosa, Alexei Haieff, Paul Hindemith, Artur Honneger, Leon Kirchner, Bohuslav Martinu, Walter Piston, Sergei Prokofieff, Arnold Schoenberg, Gunther Schuller and Anton Webern.

Included among the chamber music ensembles who will be appearing at Tanglewood are the Kroll Quartet, the Boston Arts Quartet, the New York Chamber Soloists, the Beaux Arts Trio, and the Nova Arte Trio. Soloists will include pianists Leon Fleisher, Gary Graffman, Byron Janis and Rudolf Serkin; violist Joseph de Pasquale; cellist Samuel Mayes, violinist Joseph Silverstein and soprano Adele Addison.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

JUL 1 1962

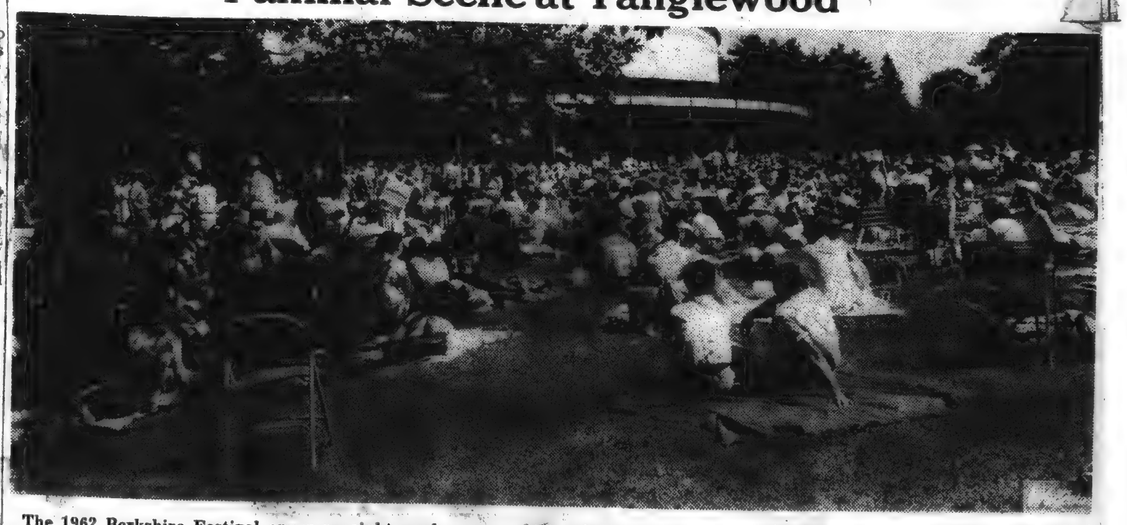
MUSIC MAESTRO: Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the Berkshire Festival Wednesday at 8 p.m. Munch will retire after the final Tanglewood program on Aug. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 1 1962

Familiar Scene at Tanglewood



The 1962 Berkshire Festival opens an eight week season at Tanglewood in Lenox with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday at 8 p. m. Twenty-four concerts will be presented throughout the season which concludes on August 26. Charles Munch, who retires as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, has invited Pierre Monteux, [illegible]m Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during [illegible]son.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUN 28 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

The eight-week Berkshire Festival will open at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, July 4, with a Chamber Music Concert in the theater at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert will feature the Budapest String Quartet playing Mozart, Quartet, K. 458; Debussy, Quartet; and Beethoven, Quartet, Op. 135.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUN 30 1962

TANGLEWOOD WILL REOPEN THIS SUNDAY

First Concert of Season By Hub Orchestra Is Next Friday

LENOX—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat music shed at 8 p. m. next Friday and Saturday and at 2.30 next Sunday. The Budapest String Quartet will open the festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p. m., this Wednesday with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theater. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight week session this Sunday with opening exercises in the theater at 3.30.

Lawns Reseeded

James Kiley, superintendent of grounds and buildings at Tanglewood, said Friday crews are painting the clouds over the shell in the shed.

Kiley also said the famous Tanglewood lawns are having heavy going this year because of the very dry spring in the Berkshires. He has a crew of eight college men working the lawns all summer. They have been reseeded and are watered continually. Thousands of persons use the lawns to listen to Tanglewood music under the stars.

Victor Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51 and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

Four members of the orchestra, Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin, will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will open with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and will also include the Piano Concerto in D minor with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Suite No. 3.

Bach Contata

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the closing work at the Sunday, July 8, concert: Bach's Cantata, "Trauer-Ode." Ross' soloists will be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel and baritone David Clatworthy. Dr. Munch will begin his Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Foss, and Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

At the first of the festival's eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts, the Budapest String Quartet, Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 458, the Debussy Quartet and the Quartet, Op. 135, by Beethoven.

Dr. Munch will address the students of the Berkshire Music Center at the school's opening exercises Sunday. Richard Burgin, acting chairman of faculty and the orchestra's associate conductor, will also speak. Tea will be served in the Tanglewood gardens following the 3:30 exercises in the theater.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contribution to the school, are invited to two events at Tanglewood next week: an aspects of music lecture in the chamber music hall at 3:15 Friday and a concert of chamber music in the chamber music hall at 10 a. m. Sunday, July

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
TABLET (C)
W. 151,780
JUN 16 1962

Situated in the beautiful setting of the Berkshire Mountains, Tanglewood features the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the retiring Charles Munch and the ageless Pierre Monteux. The season runs from July 4 to Aug. 26 and along with Mr. Munch and Mr. Monteux, several eminent guest artists are scheduled to appear.

Then too, many have found the 150-mile trip from New York to Lenox an ideal weekend excursion for the family. Easily accessible via the New York State Thruway or the more scenic Taconic Parkway, Tanglewood offers a spacious lawn where families may lounge in the sun or shade eating picnic lunches while listening to the music. Those who don't want to miss a note, may purchase tickets for seats within the music shed itself.

Concerts are held in the evenings from Tuesday through Saturday and on Sunday afternoon. This season, emphasis is placed on the chamber music of Bach and Mozart for the month of July. More balanced programs consisting of well-known standards and some contemporary works are slated for the latter portion of July and August, with the highlight of Beethoven's powerful Ninth Symphony Aug. 26.

And so from north to south, east to west, our area is musically alive. No matter where we are, big city, town, village or hamlet, the sound of music is in the air.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
JUN 24 1962

Tanglewood Will Offer Varied Programs

As usual, the programs of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood this Summer will be well-balanced between the classical repertoire and contemporary music.

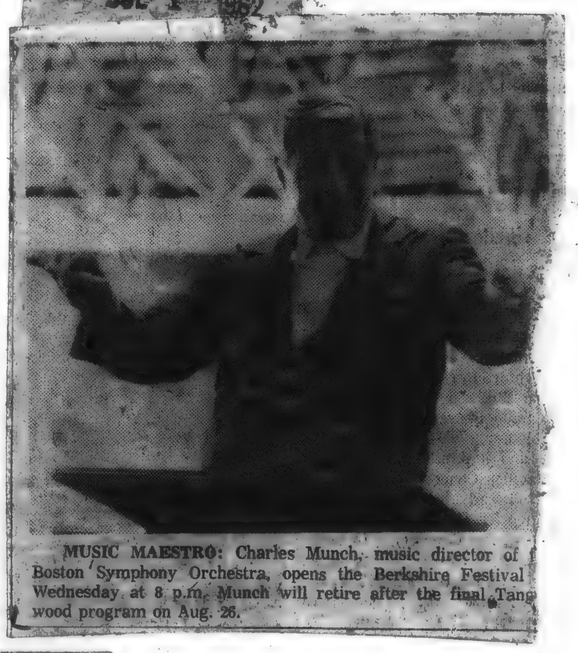
This season's Festival, which will be held for eight weeks from July 4-Aug. 26, will consist of 24 concerts by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch, the orchestra's retiring music director, and guest conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg. There will also be eight concerts of chamber music by smaller ensembles.

The contemporary compositions have been scheduled as part of both the orchestral and chamber music programs and have been arranged to complement the Festival's classical repertoire which includes 25 compositions by Mozart, 13 by Bach, 11 by Beethoven, seven by Brahms and others.

Among the contemporary composers whose works will be performed at Tanglewood this Summer are Milton Babbitt, Bela Bartok, Arthur Berger, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Irving Fine, Lukas Fosa, Alexei Haieff, Paul Hindemith, Artur Honneger, Leon Kirchner, Bohuslav Martinu, Walter Piston, Serge1 Prokofieff, Arnold Schoenberg, Gunther Schuller and Anton Webern.

Included among the chamber music ensembles who will be appearing at Tanglewood are the Kroll Quartet, the Boston Arts Quartet, the New York Chamber Soloists, the Beaux Arts Trio, and the Nova Arte Trio. Soloists will include pianists Leon Fleisher, Gary Graffman, Byron Janis and Rudolf Serkin; violist Joseph de Pasquale; cellist Samuel Mayes, violinist Joseph Silverstein and soprano Adele Addison.

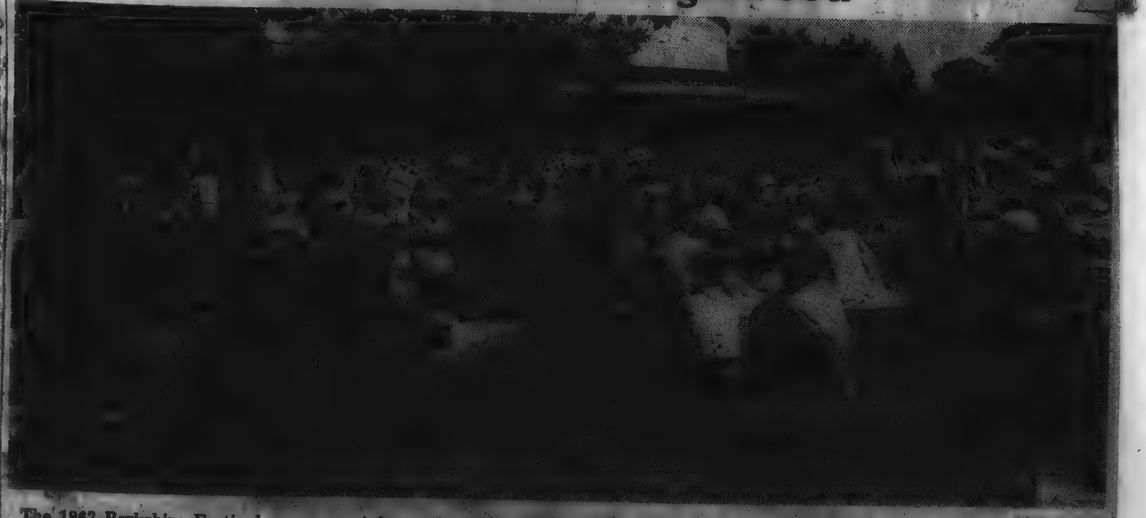
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
JUL 1 1962



MUSIC MAESTRO: Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the Berkshire Festival Wednesday at 8 p.m. Munch will retire after the final Tanglewood program on Aug. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 1 1962

Familiar Scene at Tanglewood



The 1962 Berkshire Festival opens an eight week season at Tanglewood in Lenox with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday at 8 p. m. Twenty-four concerts will be presented throughout the season which concludes on August 26. Charles Munch, who retires as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

22

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JUL 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,972

JUL 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUN 30 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

JUL 4 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400

JUL 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771

JUL 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728

JUL 1 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

JUL 3 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363

JUL 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUN 28 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,191

JUL 3 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123

JUL 1 1962 Byfieller

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, July 1, 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060

JUL 1 1962 Byfieller

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123

JUL 1 1962 Byfieller

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

JUL 3 - 1962

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
D 46,196 S 57,981

JUL 1 1962 Byfieller

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 1 1962 Byfieller

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUL 3 1962 Byfieller

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

JUN 30 1962

Tanglewood Tuning Up

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will open the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next week with three concerts of orchestral music by Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6,000-seat Music Shed at 8 p.m. Friday (July 6) and Saturday (July 7) and at 2:30 Sunday (July 8).

The Budapest String Quartet will open the festival's annual chamber music series at 8 p.m. Wednesday (July 4) with a concert in the 1,200-seat Tanglewood Theater.

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight-week session Sunday, with opening exercises in the theater at 3:30 p.m.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch has also invited Bethany Beardslee, soprano, to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

Four members of the orchestra — Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, and Roger Voisin—will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will open with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and will also include the Piano Concerto in D minor, with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Suite No. 3.

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the closing work at the Sunday (July 8) concert: Bach's Cantata, "Trauer-Ode." Mr. Ross's soloists will be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel, and baritone David Clatworthy.

Dr. Munch will begin his Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Mr. Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer, and Mr. Foss; and Messrs. Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

At the first of the Festival's eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts, the Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider — will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 458, the Debussy Quartet, and the Quartet, Op. 135, by Beethoven.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856

JUL 2 1962

Tanglewood Opens July 4; Munch Retires This Summer

LENOX, Mass.—Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open its gates to the annual Berkshire Festival on the Fourth of July.

The 1962 season will conclude Aug. 26 when Charles Munch, retiring music director, will conduct his last concert as head of the orchestra. Mr. Munch has been the conductor for the past 13 years.

In addition to the festival, the orchestra operates the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood during the eight-week season. Members of the Friends of the Center are invited to more than 50 events of the school, including special concerts and lectures.

Tanglewood is situated on Route 183, just off Route 7 and not far from the center of Lenox. The regular concert program is as follows:

July 4 8 p.m.
Theatre Concert Hall: Budapest String Quartet, chamber music concert.

July 6, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Charles Munch conducting. Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, Suite No. 2, Cantata No. 51, Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major, Suite No. 4.

July 7,8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, Piano Concerto in D minor, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, Suite No. 3.

July 8,2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Bach: Ricercare Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 Concerto for Oboe and Violin Cantata: Trauer-Ode (Tanglewood Choir).

July 11 8 p.m.
Theatre: New York Pro Musica chamber music concert.

July 13 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Mozart: Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361; Piano Concerto, K. 503; Symphony No. 38, Prague

July 14 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO Munch. Mozart: Divertimento for Strings K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante; A Musical Joke; Symphony No. 39.

July 15, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO Munch. Mozart: Eine kleine Nachtmusik, Concerto for Two Pianos in E flat Les Petits riens ballet suite Symphony No. 40.
Theatre: Boston Arts Quartet, chamber music concert.

July 20, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Mozart: Masonic Funeral Music; Symphony No. 31; Violin Concerto, K. 219; Sinfonia Concertante.

July 21, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Mozart: Symphony No. 36, Linz; Piano Concerto, K. 482; Symphony No. 41, Jupiter.

July 22, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Mozart: Symphony No. 35, Haffner; Requiem (Tanglewood Choir).

July 25, 8 p.m.
Theatre: Boston Arts Quartet, chamber music concert.

July 27, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Debussy: Printemps; Piston: Symphony No. 6; Brahms: Symphony No. 4.

July 28, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Handel-Harty: Water Music; Haieff: Symphony No. 3; Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4.

July 29, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Pierre Monteux conducting. Beethoven: Symphony No. 2; Purcell: Dido's Lament; Weber: Ocean Thou Mighty Monster; Strauss: Ein Heldenleben.

Aug. 1, 8 p.m.
Theatre: New York Chamber Soloists, chamber music concert.

Aug. 2, 8 p.m.
Shed: Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

Aug. 3, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Debussy: Three Nocturnes (Festival Chorus); Honegger: Symphony No. 5; Saint-Saens: Cello Concerto; Ravel: La Valse.

Aug. 4, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, William Steinberg conducting. Beethoven: Symphony No. 8; Bruckner: Symphony No. 8.

Aug. 5, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Brahms: Haydn Variations; Martinu: Fantaisies symphoniques; Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 5, Emperor.

Aug. 8, 8 p.m.
Theatre: Beaux Arts Trio of New York chamber music concert.

Aug. 10, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Eugene Ormandy conducting. Beethoven: Egmont Overture and Symphony No. 3, Eroica; Bartok: Concerto for Orchestra.

Aug. 11, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Monteux conducting. Wagner: Meistersinger Overture: Elgar: Enigma Variations; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2.

Aug. 12, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Rameau: Dardanus Suite; Fine: Symphony (1962); Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6, Pathetique.

Aug. 15, 8 p.m.
Theatre: Nova Arte Trio, chamber music concert.

Aug. 17, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Kirchner: Sinfonia (conducted by the composer); Berlioz: Haroid in Italy; Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 5, Reformation.

Aug. 18, 8p.m.
Shed: BSO, Ormandy conducting. Prokofiev: Classical Symphony and Symphony No. 6; Tchaikovsky: Piano Concerto No. 1.

Aug. 19, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Schubert: Symphony No. 5; Foss: Time Cycle (conducted by the composer); Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 1.

Aug. 22, 8 p.m.
Theatre: Kroll Quartet, chamber music concert.

Aug. 24, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Monteux. Weber: Euryanthe Overture; Hindemith: Mathis der Maler; Brahms: Symphony No. 1.

Aug. 25, 8 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Berlioz: Symphonie fantastique: Debussy: La Mer; Ravel: Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2.

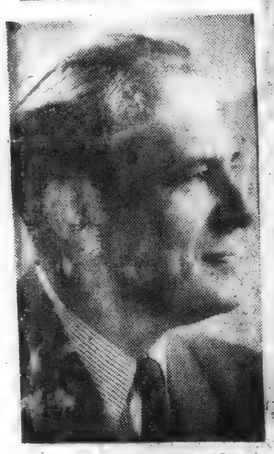
Aug. 26, 2:30 p.m.
Shed: BSO, Munch. Copland: Quiet City; Beethoven: Symphony No. 9.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 1 1962

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN 1962 SEASON



RICHARD BURGIN

BUDAPEST STRING QUARTET

DORIOT A. DWYER

RALPH GOMBERG

BETHANY BEARDSLEE

Munch Will Feature Music of Bach In First Full Concert Friday Evening

Opening Exercises Today, Budapest String Quartet Program Wednesday at Tanglewood

LENOX—Dr. Charles Munch will begin his final period as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival opens this week at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch, who will retire from his present position at the close of the summer season, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach in the 6000-seat Music Shed at 8 p. m. Friday and Saturday. The eight-week Berkshire Music Festival will officially get underway Wednesday evening at 8 in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theater with a performance by the Budapest String Quartet.

Opening Exercises

Next Sunday evening (July 8) Dr. Munch will again conduct an all-Bach concert by the orchestra in the Music Shed.

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summef school of music at Tanglewood, will begin its eight-week session today with opening exercises in the theater at 3.30 p. m.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C Major. Dr. Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51 and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

Four members of the orchestra—Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin—will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will open with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and will also include the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Suite No. 3.

Ross to Conduct

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the closing work at next Sunday's concert: Bach's Cantata, "Trauer-Ode." Mr. Ross' soloists will be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel and baritone David Clatworthy. Dr. Munch will begin his Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Rioercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Mr. Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Foss, and Messrs. Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

At the first of the festival's eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts, the Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider—will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 458, the Debussy Quartet and the Quartet, Op. 135, by Beethoven.

Dr. Munch will address the students of the Berkshire Music Center at the school's opening exercises today. Richard Burgin, acting chairman of faculty and the orchestra's associate conductor, will also speak. Tea will be served in the Tanglewood gardens, following the 3.30 p. m. exercises in the theater.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contribution to the school—are invited to two events at Tanglewood this week: an Aspects of Music lecture in the Chamber Music Hall at 3.15 p. m. Friday and a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall at 10 a. m. next Sunday.

The musical program follows:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4
8 P. M., Theater
Budapest String Quartet

Quartet, K. 458	Mozart
Quartet	Debussy
Quartet, Op. 135	Beethoven

FRIDAY, JULY 6
3.15 P. M. Chamber Music Hall
Lecture, "Aspects of Music"
8 P. M. Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3	Bach
Suite No. 2 (Dwyer)	Bach
Cantata No. 51 (Beardslee)	Bach
Concerto for Two Pianos C Major (Vronsky, Babin)	Bach
Suite No. 4	Bach

SATURDAY, JULY 7
10 A. M., Music Shed
BSO Open Rehearsal
8 P. M., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor

Brandenburg Concerto No. 6	Bach
Piano Concerto in D Minor (Foss)	Bach
Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin)	Bach
Suite No. 3	Bach

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its opening 1962 concert Friday evening in the Music Shed. Dr. Munch has selected the music of Bach for the opening concerts. Other featured personalities of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood are pictured here.

All four are represented on the Tanglewood programs; this is the centennial year of impressionist Claude Debussy's birth. Venerable Pierre Monteux will relieve Dr. Munch as conductor for three concerts, and William Steinberg, leader of the Pittsburg Symphony, will make his Berkshire debut in another, while Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia, who conducted at Tanglewood last summer for the first time, is engaged for two concerts in August.

Otherwise the orchestra will be under the direction of its regular leader, for 13 concerts in all, half of them in the Bach-Mozart series. Prominent pianists will again appear as guest soloists—Serkin, Janis, Fleisher, Istomin and Graffman, besides the expert two-piano pair, Vronsky and Babin. In addition 10 members of the orchestra are to perform solo parts; among these is Richard Burgin, whose 42 years as the outstanding concertmaster of the BSO also end next month, though he will continue as associate conductor.

With Dr. Munch as head of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festival, standards have been maintained, traditions upheld and expectations fulfilled. In appearance and manner a familiar figure on the podium, every performance he conducts these next few weeks will have special significance—the present in the very process of becoming the past. Luckily, he and his orchestra are to be occasionally reunited when he comes back as guest conductor at Symphony Hall—and perhaps at Tanglewood, too.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 1 1962

Dr. Munch's Festival

Insofar as an enterprise of such magnitude can be said to belong to any one man, this year's Berkshire Music Festival, opening this week, belongs to Charles Munch. When it ends late in August his career as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will also end, in retirement; shy, gracious Dr. Munch has guided the great Boston Orchestra for 13 years, longer continuously than any other leader save his predecessor Serge Koussevitzky.

During his tenure Dr. Munch took the orchestra on its first European tour, 10 years ago, and in 1956 it became the first American symphonic group to be heard in Russia. Two seasons ago these musicians visited the Far East, all this traveling being undertaken in addition to the regular Symphony Hall subscription series, the tours and out-of-town appearances, the rehearsals and recording sessions, and the summer seasons at Tanglewood.

Before leaving France Dr. Munch was leader of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, and had previously founded the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris. Naturally his penchant is for French music, and while the masterworks of other composers have not been neglected, and many new compositions by Americans and others have been given first hearings, it has been in the works of such Frenchmen as Berlioz, Debussy, Ravel and Saint-Saens that the Bostonians have reached their exciting, inspired apogee in the Munch era.

24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 8 1962

Charles Munch to Retire As Conductor in August

Became Music Director of Boston Symphony in 1949 Following Retirement of Koussevitzky

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, announced on April 21 Dr. Charles Munch would retire as the orchestra's music director in August at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Aug. 26). Dr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Many Honors

Dr. Munch, who will be 71 years of age in September, was appointed music director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired at the end of his 25th season.

Charles Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto. The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2. Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Debussy's "Images." During his tenure, the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

Foreign Tours

For the orchestra's 75th anniversary season (1955-56) Charles Munch and the orchestra commissioned works from Barber, Bernstein, Copland, Dutilleux, von Einem, Hanson, Ibert, Martinu, Milhaud, Petrassi, Schuman, Sessions and Villa-Lobos. In the first 10 years of Dr. Munch's tenure, his programs presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U. S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Charles Munch's book "I Am a Conductor" was published in Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New York, 1955; London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

Dr. Munch was responsible for the inauguration of the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 per winter season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in this country, extended its present season to 50 weeks.

Guest Conductor

Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in February, 1961. After his Boston concerts Mr. Leinsdorf went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony which were followed by engagements in Florence and Milan. In May he returned to Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna, Feb. 4, 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934, he was chosen by Bruno Walter to be his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arthuro Toscanini at the 1935, 1936 and 1937 festivals. In 1937 Mr. Leinsdorf, at Toscanini's recommendation, joined the musical staff of the Metropolitan Opera Association in New York.

After six seasons at the Metropolitan, Mr. Leinsdorf accepted a three-year contract, to begin in 1943, as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra. Almost immediately, however, he was drafted into the United States Army. Upon his discharge from service Mr. Leinsdorf was appointed music director of the Rochester Philarmonic Orchestra. He resigned from the Rochester post, after nine years, to become director of the New York City Opera and, in 1957, he rejoined the Metropolitan as conductor and musical consultant to the general manager.

In addition to his terms as conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, Mr. Leinsdorf has conducted the Los Angeles, the NBC and Philadelphia Orchestras in this country and, among others, the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the London Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf now reside in Larchmont, New York, with their five children: David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12 and Jenny, 9.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 1 1962

TRAVEL-RESORTS

Summer Musicale Notes

By JERRY HOPMAN
Assistant Travel and Resort Editor

MUSIC ranging from the intricate beat of modern jazz to the soaring themes of the old masters will fill the air again this Summer in the Berkshire Hills of Massachussets.

The famed music festival at Tanglewood opens this Wednesday evening with a July 4th chamber concert by the Budapest String Quartet.

On Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by the inspired baton of Charles Munch begins another season of weekend concerts. Dr. Munch, who has been guiding the Tanglewood music fest for the past 13 years, will retire from his post after this season.

Sharing the podium with Dr. Munch throughout the Summer will be conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinger.

Pianists Rudolf Serkin, Gary Hoffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin will serve as soloists.

Arthur Fiedler's annual Boston Pops program is scheduled for Aug. 2.

Tanglewood's concerts under the moon having been drawing culture and nature lovers to the Berkshire Hills since 1936. Visitors to the Festival have had the privilege of encouraging such artists as Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Leontyne Price in their early days.

During the Festival season, the Symphony Orchestra will play 24 concerts, eight public rehearsals. Also on the agenda are eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts.

Further musical treats will be offered by the 300 students of the Berkshire Music Center. The young masters will play more than 50 concerts.

Tanglewood's location has proven with the passing of the years particularly suitable to art and artists. Originally made into a gentleman's estate by William Aspinwall Tappan in 1848, the Massachussets hill country has served as home for such notables as Nathaniel Hawthorne, whose cottage still stands.

Hawthorne, along with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Herman Melville formed what was known in the 19th century as the "Berkshire jungle of literary lions."

The Festival's impressive music shed seats 6,000 viewers and the 106 members of the Symphony Orchestra.

HERALD-NEWS
PASSAIC-CLIFTON, N.J.

JUL 5 1962

W E D
CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApitol 6-4044

Music Festivals from Tanglewood to Yukon

On Sunday, Aug. 26, the Boston Symphony will perform Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the Berkshire Festival and an era will close for Tanglewood's listeners.

By Don Henahan
Special to The Herald-News
And Chicago Daily News

The performance, which also will be a milestone in the history of American summer music festivals, will be the final appearance of Charles Munch as head of the orchestra, which he is leaving after 13 years as musical director.

The 1962 season of the famous festival at Lenox, Mass., opened with a Budapest Quartet concert and ends with Munch's farewell.

The 70-year-old Alsatian will conduct the first nine concerts this summer, after which the podium is to be taken over by Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinberg.

Although the Tanglewood programs are very heavy with Beethoven, Bach, Mozart, Tschaikovsky, and other rather familiar names, the final season of the Munch regime once more contains an interesting sprinkle of moderns.

Leon Kirchner and Lucas Foss will conduct their own works in symphony concerts, and in the chamber-music department there will be much contemporary music, some of it under the auspices of the Forum Music Foundation of Chicago, which has supported a program at the Berkshire Music Center since 1956.

Tanglewood, now in its 27th year, has extended its season this summer to eight weeks.

A MUCH YO[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUL 1 1962

MUNCH TO SPEAK TODAY

Tanglewood Music Starts Wednesday

By ROBERT TAYLOR

ONE THINKS of the sun shifting through the foliage, the dappled lawns and hedges, the panoramas of distant lakes and promontories, the sweeping prow of the huge shed, the sprawled picnickers, the lines of cars spilling onto the grounds and raising tall pillars of dust, and the hills coming alive with the sound of great music.

Place Not Questionabl

The 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the summer home of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens this week in a mosaic of memories. Since 1936, when the vision of Serge Koussevitzky created the concerts on the 210-acre estate donated to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tapan, the Festival has grown bigger and busier.

Whether it has also grown better and better may be argued endlessly. But few will deny its importance as a cultural asset to Massachusetts; the valuable work it performs in shaping the musical artists of the future; or Tanglewood's viability as an institution. Since its founding The Berkshire Festival has evolved into both a tourist mecca and one of the nation's capitals of war-weather music.

This year, in addition, the Festival supplies a last chance to hear Charles Munch at the helm of The Boston Symphony. Tanglewood, literally, marks his farewell. With the poignance of imminent departure hanging over the fete, Dr. Munch has generally selected works that refer to his long tenure as the BSO Music Director.

This afternoon he and Richard Burgin will address the students of The Berkshire Music Center, probably the most vital part of the Tanglewood complex from a long-range point of view. Then, on Wednesday, July 4, the actual music-making begins with The Budapest String Quartet opening the annual chamber music series in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theater.

The Quartet—Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider — will perform Mozart's Quartet, K. 458; Debussy's Quartet; and the Quartet, Op. 135, by Beethoven. It is the kind of solid program in which they have consistently excelled. Thus the 1962 Festival will open.

On Friday afternoon at 3:15 a Seminar in Contemporary Music has been set for the chamber music hall, and we commend this to your attention if you are a Friend (i.e. made a voluntary contribution to the school) of the Berkshire Music Center. The curtain rises on the main event Friday night, with the first Shed concert, an initial occasion of striking interest: the first of a weekend of Bach readings.

★ ★ ★

Bach Programs

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin make their Tanglewood debut at this concert (the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major); and Dr. Munch has also invited the soprano, Bethany Beardslee, to be his guest in a performance of Bach's solo cantata No. 51. The Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3 opens this concert, while the Bach Suite No. 2 enlists the services of the flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. A Tanglewood brochure received well in advance of the season, lists the Suite No. 4, but we may assume this has been excised from what is already a full program of Bach Friday night.

The usual Open Rehearsal takes place in the Shed Saturday morning. Four members of the orchestra come forward as soloists at the concert beginning at 8 Saturday night: Richard Burgin, Doriot Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin — in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. The Brandenburg, No. 6, opens this evening. Lukas Foss, who wrote the weird and astounding "Time Cycle" suite last season, appears in a more traditional role in the Piano Concerto in D minor, and the Suite No. 3 will be heard.

The homage to Bach concludes Sunday afternoon, July 8, at 2:30. Hugh Ross, the head of the Center's choral department, has been invited to conduct Bach's Cantata "Trauer-Ode," with the Tanglewood Choir and soloists. Prior to this Charles Munch will conduct the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering," and the concert also includes the Brandenburg No. 5 (Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Foss, soloists), and Bach's Concerto for Oboe and Violin, with Gomberg and Joseph Silverstein as solo artists.

It promises, all in all, to be a rewarding homage—a homage to Bach and to Charles Munch, and the opening of an institution.

The New York Times
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
JUL 1 1962

25

Whitestone

BACH REIGNS AT TANGLEWOOD—The Boston Symphony will open the eight-week Berkshire Festival Friday with three programs devoted to works of the composer. At right, Charles Munch, who will conduct the orchestra, soloists and chorus. Above, interior view of the Shed on the estate in Lenox, Mass., where the concerts are given.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 1 1962

New Season Will Open At Tanglewood on Wednesday

THE WORLD-FAMOUS musical event, the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, will open on Wednesday. Tanglewood, a beautiful estate in the Berkshire Hills, is the summer residence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Under the direction of Charles Munch, the orchestra will present fifteen concerts on weekends from July 27 to Aug. 26. Pierre Monteux will conduct on July 29, Aug. 11 and 24; Eugene Ormandy on Aug 10 and 18 and William Steinberg on Aug. 4. A program will be given on Aug. 2 by the well-known Boston Pops Orchestra, whose conductor is Arthur Fiedler. Popular guest artists will appear during the season, and for those who enjoy the music of Bach and Mozart, nine concerts will be given on weekends from July 6 to 22 by a Chamber Orchestra, made up of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Again this year, eight chamber music concerts will be presented on Wednesday evenings beginning this week. The conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival will mark the retirement of Charles Munch.

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION Traveling Exhibition Service is presently circulating several children's exhibitions from foreign countries. Featured at the Craft Center through July 15 is an exhibition of paintings by young Ceylonese entitled "Designs by Children of Ceylon." The display is lent by the Junior Museum of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, and was a gift to the museum from the art inspector of Ceylon. The paintings include 21 intricate and melodic designs.

LAS CRUCES, N.M.
SUN-NEWS.
D, 6,161 S. 6,446
JUL 22 1962

Berkshire Music Festival Offers Varied Training

The 210-acre Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., is setting for the Berkshire Music Festival which got underway July 1 and extends through August 26.

The Berkshire Music Center was established at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to provide a center where young musicians could continue their professional training and add to their artistic experience under the guidance of eminent musicians and teachers.

Aaron Copland Chairman

Aaron Copland, whose compositions have been played by Las Cruces High School concert band and by groups throughout the world, is chairman of the faculty. However, he is on leave of absence for 1962.

Tanglewood was the meeting place of Emerson, Holmes and Melville, and there in 1850 and 1851, Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived his Tanglewood Tales and The Wonder Book and wrote The House of the Seven Gables.

In 1936 Tanglewood was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Andrew Hepburn and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan as a home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Requirements listed in the brochure: "In general, there are no academic requirements for admission to the Berkshire Music Center. For each of the advanced departments, admission is based on demonstrated proficiency in the field of study for which application is made. Students must be 18 years of age or older, except in the Department of Listening and Analysis where the minimum age is 16. There is no maximum age limit in any department."

Among courses offered are in fields of orchestra and conducting, chamber music, choral conducting, composition, opera.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997
JUL 6 1962

Musical Events

Berkshire Musical Festival Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., at 8 p.m., July 6, 7, 13 and 14, and at 2:30 p.m. July 8 and 15.

Starlight Festival of Chamber Music Concert in the Courtyard of the Yale Law School in New Haven at 8:30 p.m. on July 10 and July 24.

26

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000

JUL 14 1962 Buffalo

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

JUL 28 1962 Buffalo

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

JUL 28 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE
BROOKLYN DAILY
JUL 28 1962

New York World-Telegram

Footlights and Spotlights

Academy of Music to Sponsor Day at Tanglewood on Aug. 5

By ARTHUR ALPERT
World-Telegram Staff Writer

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will sponsor its sixth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" Aug. 5.

The all-inclusive ticket provides round-trip transportation, a picnic lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserve seat inside the Music Shed for the matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch, in his last season as music director of the Bostonians, will be on the podium and the soloist Piano Concerto No. 5 in E will be Rudolph Serkin. Serkin will play Beethoven's flat, the "Emperor."

The program will open with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn. It will include also Bohuslav Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques, commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and dedicated to Dr. Munch.

Pianist Serkin is no stranger to the Boston Symphony. Since 1938, shortly after his American debut, he has been soloist with the orchestra 18 times—13 of them with Dr. Munch conducting. He played the "Emperor" concerto with the Boston in 1955 and in February of this year.

"Sunday at Tanglewood" costs $12. Members of the Academy (1962-63) pay only $11. The musical excursionists travel by air-conditioned bus from Vanderbilt Ave., between 44th and 45th Sts., Manhattan, to Tanglewood. Departure is 8:30 a.m. Arrival is just before noon. They may stroll around Tanglewood before and after lunch. The buses leave for New York immediately after the concert, stopping en route for a rest period at which time a supper may be obtained. Homecoming time is 10 p.m.

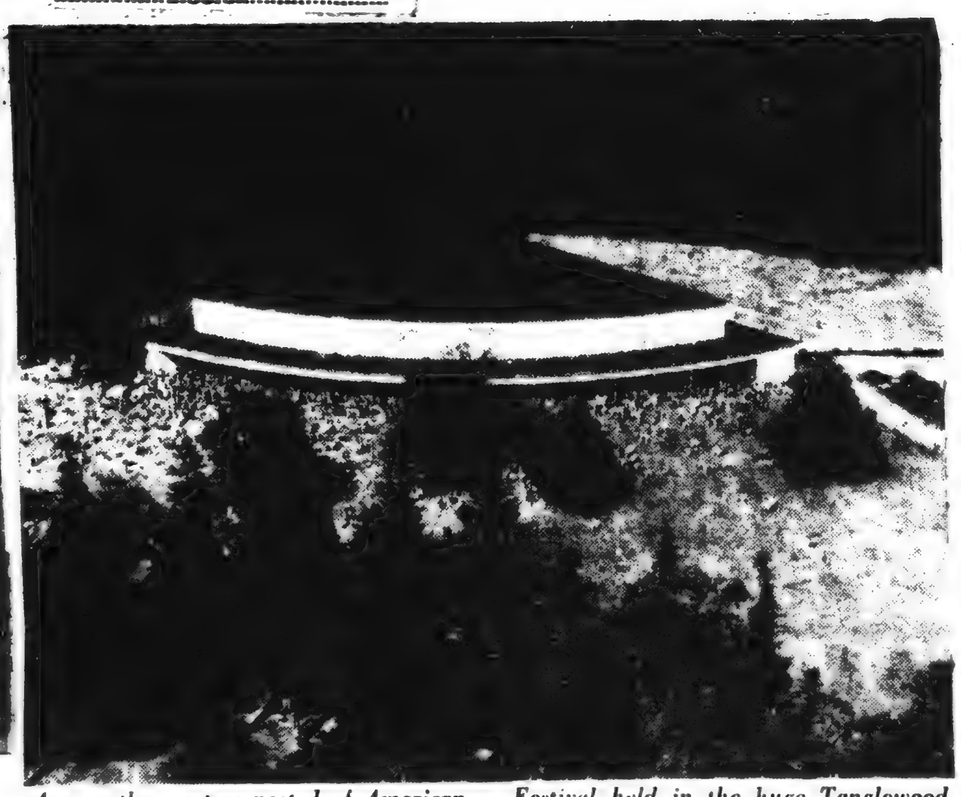
The $12 tab includes a $3 ticket. Should a music-lover wish, he may apply the $3 value toward a better seat (prices range upward to $6.50). The Academy will handle the switch at no extra charge. Deadline for reservations is July 31, at 5 p.m. Telephone ST 3-6700 for details.

RUDOLPH SERKIN

CHARLES MUNCH

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 407,089 S. 474,073

JUN 10 1962 Buffalo



Among the most respected of American summer music havens is the Berkshire Festival held in the huge Tanglewood auditorium at Lenox, Mass.

2

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 1 1962 Buffalo

TRAVEL-RESORTS

Summer Musicale Notes

By JERRY HOPMAN
Assistant Travel and Resort Editor

MUSIC ranging from the intricate beat of modern jazz to the soaring themes of the old masters will fill the air again this Summer in the Berkshire Hills of Massachussets.

The famed music festival at Tanglewood opens this Wednesday evening with a July 4th chamber concert by the Budapest String Quartet.

On Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by the inspired baton of Charles Munch begins another season of weekend concerts. Dr. Munch, who has been guiding the Tanglewood music fest for the past 13 years, will retire from his post after this season.

Sharing the podium with Dr. Munch throughout the Summer will be conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinger.

Pianists Rudolf Serkin, Gary Hoffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin will serve as soloists.

Arthur Fiedler's annual Boston Pops program is scheduled for Aug. 2.

Tanglewood's concerts under the moon having been drawing culture and nature lovers to the Berkshire Hills since 1936. Visitors to the Festival have had the privilege of encouraging such artists as Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Leontyne Price in their early days.

During the Festival season, the Symphony Orchestra will play 24 concerts, eight public rehearsals. Also on the agenda are eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts.

Further musical treats will be offered by the 300 students of the Berkshire Music Center. The young masters will play more than 50 concerts.

Tanglewood's location has proven with the passing of the years particularly suitable to art and artists. Originally made into a gentleman's estate by William Aspinwall Tappan in 1848, the Massachussets hill country has served as home for such notables as Nathaniel Hawthorne, whose cottage still stands.

Hawthorne, along with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Herman Melville formed what was known in the 19th century as the "Berkshire Jungle of literary lions."

The Festival's impressive music shed seats 6,000 viewers and the 106 members of the Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695

JUL 1 1962

Berkshire Festival Starts

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Berkshire Music Festival gets under way this week with the longest schedule of events in the history of these Tanglewood concerts. Last year the season was extended to seven weeks, and this summer still another week has been added. As previously announced with justifiable fanfare, the increase now makes the musicians of the Boston Symphony the envied members of the symphonic profession with a full 50 weeks of employment annually. No other orchestra in this country even comes close to this employment figure.

To say that the present festival will follow the pattern of those of former years would be something of an understatement. Much has been said and written about this phase of the Tanglewood concerts, little of it complimentary. However, if it is to be "business as usual" this summer in the hills of western Massachusetts, the fact that this will be the last festival for the retiring conductor, Charles Munch, should offset a flagging interest in the concerts on the part of many. And if the music will be familiar, at least it will be given its due in a series which closes another era in the history of Boston Orchestra.

This week's three concerts will — as usual — "begin with Bach." Friday evening's opening concert will mark the Tanglewood debut of the celebrated piano-duo, Vronsky and Babin. They will be featured in a performance of the Concerto for two pianos and orchestra in C major. Another guest artist is to be Bethany Beardslee who will be heard in the solo "Cantata No. 51." The other offerings are listed as the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3" and the "Suite No. 2."

by Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department. Soloists are to be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel, and baritone David Clatworthy.

The Budapest String Quartet will give the opening concert in the chamber music series on Wednesday evening. The program includes Mozart's "Quartet (K. 458)," Beethoven's Quartet (Op. 135), and the DeBussy "Quartet."

Opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center (the festival's school) will be held this afternoon at 3:30. Dr. Munch will address the students, as will the orchestra's retiring concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

The "Brandenburg Concertos No.'s 2 and 6 will be performed in Saturday evening's concert with four members of the orchestra as soloists in the former. The highlight of this program will be the "Piano Concerto in D minor" with Lukas Foss as soloist. The "Suite No. 3" rounds out the program.

Next Sunday afternoon's concert (2:30) will also feature first chair members of the orchestra in the performances of the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 5" and the concerto for oboe and violin. The third instrumental work to be heard is the "Ricercare" from "The Musical Offerings." The major program listing is the Cantata "Trauer-Ode" which will be conducted

16

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000

JUL 14 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

JUL 28 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

JUL 28 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN DAILY
Tuesday, July 24, 1962

047

New York World-Telegram

AND SUN, MONDAY, JULY 9, 1962

Footlights and Spotlights

Academy of Music to Sponsor Day at Tanglewood on Aug. 5

By ARTHUR ALPERT
World-Telegram Staff Writer

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will sponsor its sixth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" Aug. 5.

The all-inclusive ticket provides round-trip transportation, a picnic lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserve seat inside the Music Shed for the matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch, in his last season as music director of the Bostonians, will be on the podium and the soloist Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat, the "Emperor."

RUDOLPH SERKIN

CHARLES MUNCH

The program will open with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn. It will include also Bohuslav Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques, commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and dedicated to Dr. Munch.

Pianist Serkin is no stranger to the Boston Symphony. Since 1938, shortly after his American debut, he has been soloist with the orchestra 18 times—13 of them with Dr. Munch conducting. He played the "Emperor" concerto with the Boston in 1955 and in February of this year.

"Sunday at Tanglewood" costs $12. Members of the Academy (1962-63) pay only $11. The musical excursionists travel by air-conditioned bus from Vanderbilt Ave., between 44th and 45th Sts., Manhattan, to Tanglewood. Departure is 8:30 a.m. Arrival is just before noon. They may stroll around Tanglewood before and after lunch. The buses leave for New York immediately after the concert, stopping en route for a rest period, at which time a supper may be obtained. Homecoming time is 10 p.m.

The $12 tab includes a $3 ticket. Should a music-lover wish, he may apply the $3 value toward a better seat (prices range upward to $6.50). The Academy will handle the switch at no extra charge. Deadline for reservations is July 31, at 5 p.m. Telephone ST 3-6700 for details.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 487,089 S. 474,073

JUN 10 1962

Among the most respected of American summer music havens is the Berkshire Festival held in the huge Tanglewood auditorium at Lenox, Mass.

2

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,578

JUL 1 1962

TRAVEL-RESORTS

Summer Musicale Notes

By JERRY HOPMAN
Assistant Travel and Resort Editor

MUSIC ranging from the intricate beat of modern jazz to the soaring themes of the old masters will fill the air again this Summer in the Berkshire Hills of Massachussets.

The famed music festival at Tanglewood opens this Wednesday evening with a July 4th chamber concert by the Budapest String Quartet.

On Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by the inspired baton of Charles Munch begins another season of weekend concerts. Dr. Munch, who has been guiding the Tanglewood music fest for the past 13 years, will retire from his post after this season.

Sharing the podium with Dr. Munch throughout the Summer will be conductors Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinger.

Pianists Rudolf Serkin, Gary Hoffman, Byron Janis, Eugene Istomin and Metropolitan Opera soprano Phyllis Curtin will serve as soloists.

Arthur Fiedler's annual Boston Pops program is scheduled for Aug. 2.

Tanglewood's concerts under the moon having been drawing culture and nature lovers to the Berkshire Hills since 1936. Visitors to the Festival have had the privilege of encouraging such artists as Leonard Bernstein, Thomas Schippers, Rosalind Elias, Leontyne Price in their early days.

During the Festival season, the Symphony Orchestra will play 24 concerts, eight public rehearsals. Also on the agenda are eight Wednesday evening chamber music concerts.

Further musical treats will be offered by the 300 students of the Berkshire Music Center. The young masters will play more than 50 concerts.

Tanglewood's location has proven with the passing of the years particularly suitable to art and artists. Originally made into a gentleman's estate by William Aspinwall Tappan in 1848, the Massachusetts hill country has served as home for such notables as Nathaniel Hawthorne, whose cottage still stands.

Hawthorne, along with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Herman Melville formed what was known in the 19th century as the "Berkshire Jungle of literary lions."

The Festival's impressive music shed seats 6,000 viewers and the 106 members of the Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695

JUL 1 1962

Berkshire Festival Starts

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Berkshire Music Festival gets under way this week with the longest schedule of events in the history of these Tanglewood concerts. Last year the season was extended to seven weeks, and this summer still another week has been added. As previously announced with justifiable fanfare, the increase now makes the musicians of the Boston Symphony the envied members of the symphonic profession with a full 50 weeks of employment annually. No other orchestra in this country even comes close to this employment figure.

To say that the present festival will follow the pattern of those of former years would be something of an understatement. Much has been said and written about this phase of the Tanglewood concerts, little of it complimentary. However, if it is to be "business as usual" this summer in the hills of western Massachusetts, the fact that this will be the last festival for the retiring conductor, Charles Munch, should offset a flagging interest in the concerts on the part of many. And if the music will be familiar, at least it will be given its due in a series which closes another era in the history of Boston Orchestra.

This week's three concerts will — as usual — "begin with Bach." Friday evening's opening concert will mark the Tanglewood debut of the celebrated piano-duo, Vronsky and Babin. They will be featured in a performance of the Concerto for two pianos and orchestra in C major. Another guest artist is to be Bethany Beardslee who will be heard in the solo "Cantata No. 51." The other offerings are listed as the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3" and the "Suite No. 2."

by Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department. Soloists are to be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel, and baritone David Clatworthy.

The Budapest String Quartet will give the opening concert in the chamber music series on Wednesday evening. The program includes Mozart's "Quartet (K. 458)," Beethoven's Quartet (Op. 135), and the DeBussy "Quartet."

Opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center (the festival's school) will be held this afternoon at 3:30. Dr. Munch will address the students, as will the orchestra's retiring concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

The "Brandenburg Concertos No.'s 3 and 6 will be performed in Saturday evening's concert with four members of the orchestra as soloists in the former. The highlight of this program will be the "Piano Concerto in D minor" with Lukas Foss as soloist. The "Suite No. 3" rounds out the program.

Next Sunday afternoon's concert (2:30) will also feature first chair members of the orchestra in the performances of the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 5" and the concerto for oboe and violin. The third instrumental work to be heard is the "Ricercare" from "The Musical Offerings." The major program listing is the Cantata "Trauer-Ode" which will be conducted

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
D. 182,249 S. 180,858

JUL 1 1962

THE MUSIC SHED AT TANGLEWOOD, MASS.
Unusual canopy designed by Eero Saarinen

The World Of Music

Tanglewood Summer Season Opens July 4

By LEE STEELE

THE VISITOR to Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, could gorge himself musically during any of the eight weekends commencing Friday through the end of August.

So much musical fare abounds Tuesdays through Sundays that vacationers frequently halt one or two days in this musical mecca on the western side of Massachusetts. Tanglewood, just outside Lenox, Mass., is only 45 miles from Albany, 150 miles from Broadway, and about 600 miles from Toledo.

Whether the visitor sits in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, or on the grass; whether he attends a student performance in the chamber music hall or hears visiting chamber music ensembles in the theater concert hall, the experience is bound to be memorable.

★ ★ ★

WHILE Tanglewood refers to the 210-acre estate that was donated to the orchestra in 1936, the musical series is entitled the Berkshire Festival. The orchestra also operates the Berkshire Music Center, which is its summer school of music. Some of the school's alumni include Leonard Bernstein, Louis Lane, the Cleveland Orchestra's assistant conductor, and Harry Kruger, conductor of the BSGU Symphony Orchestra.

The school also provides specialized training in chamber, choral, composition and opera for gifted students whose teachers are, for the most part, orchestra personnel. A number of student performances are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Membership in the Friends is available at a nominal fee.

On July 4, Tanglewood's 1962 season gets underway with a chamber music concert by the Budapest String Quartet.

★ ★ ★

EVERY FRIDAY during the season there will be seminars in contemporary music. Typical Saturday sessions at Tanglewood begin at 10 a.m., with open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony. Few orchestras permit visitors at rehearsals and the rule at these sessions is for the audience to be as quiet as possible. Conductor Charles Munch, who winds up his affiliation with the Boston Symphony after this season, is usually gentle, but he has been heard to lose his temper at these rehearsals. The visitor then may take a guided tour of Tanglewood —or stroll without a guide between 12:30 and 1:30.

Saturday afternoon is a good time for the visitor to motor to nearby Lee, Mass., for performances at Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival; to Williamstown, Mass., for summer theater, or simply to relax. The shed concerts commence at 8 p.m. Saturdays.

Sunday mornings at 10 are the chamber music series open to Friends, during which students may be heard. Most listeners prefer to sit on benches just outside the small hall, and gaze on the Berkshires in the distance, and smell the crisp cool air.

★ ★ ★

THE 2:30 Sunday concerts draw upwards of 10,000 listeners. Listeners come equipped with blankets, folding chairs, thermos jugs and picnic baskets.

Box lunches — tastefully prepared and ample for the picnicker—are available at the nearby cafeteria on the grounds, and there is a bookstore open for browsing and buying.

The acoustical stage canopy in the Music Shed, dedicated in 1959, was made possible through a $40,000 gift by Edna Betts Talbot of Boston. Another $10,000 gift toward the canopy was given by Conductor Munch. The canopy, incidentally, was designed by the late architect, Eero Saarinen of Bloomfield Hills, Mich.

As is customary, the first two weeks at Tanglewood will be devoted to Bach (this week) and Mozart (next week). Pianists Vronsky and Babin will be heard in a two-piano concerto of Bach on Thursday, and return for a July 15 Mozart two-piano concerto.

★ ★ ★

OTHER musicians scheduled to appear during the summer will be conductors William Steinberg and Pierre Monteux; pianists Byron Janis, Rudolf Serkin, and Leon Fleisher; sopranos Adele Addison and Phyllis Curtin.

A number of eminent chamber music groups are scheduled on the Wednesday night chamber music series, including Nova Arte Trio; Kroll Quartet, New York Chamber Soloists and Beaux Arts Trio of New York.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood Aug. 2 and the season will end Aug. 26 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Tanglewood offers a special type of musical vacation for the visitor with at least two weeks free time—available anytime during the season. The vacationer enrolls as a student in the listening and analysis sequence. Class meets two hours daily, four days a week. The rest of the time, the vacationer-student is on his own to relax, look, and above all, to choose from an overwhelming assortment of things to listen to.

WUOM To Air Three Concerts

The University of Michigan Broadcasting Service — WUOM-FM — will broadcast live three concerts by the University of Michigan Stanley Quartet during the summer session. The concerts will be given on Tuesday evenings at 8:30 on July 3, 17 and 31.

Members of the Quartet are violinists Gilbert Ross and Gustave Rosseels, violist Robert Courte, and cellist Jerome Jelinek.

CHARLES MUNCH
In action at Tanglewood

27

28

PRE-SEASON BERKSHIRE CENTER

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
T[illegible], February 20, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
FEB 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
FEB 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
MAR 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,006
FEB 19 1962

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22 000
APR 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 18 1962

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
MAR 11 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 25 1962
1961

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 868 958 S. 1 186.625
FEB 17 1962

Music Note

Auditions in five eastern cities begin Tuesday for instrumentalists wishing summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony orchestra's Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass. Hartford, Philadelphia, New York, Washington, and Boston are the cities to be visited by the committee, which ends its work April 5 in Washington. For information, write Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 7 1962

Tanglewood Prospects

Charles Munch, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has invited Witold Lutoslawski to come from Poland and Iain Hamilton to come from England this summer to be guest professors in the Composition Department at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Messrs. Lutoslawski and Hamilton's eight-week visit to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program.

Perhaps the only contemporary Polish composer of international fame, Mr. Lutoslawski, who was born in Warsaw in 1913, and studied at the Warsaw Conservatory with Maliszewski, has had his works performed at the first Polish Festival of Contemporary Music. His "Little Suite" has been performed in the United States.

Mr. Hamilton—born in Glasgow in 1902—began his musical studies in 1947, after preparing himself for a career in engineering. Upon his graduation from the Royal Academy of Music he received the school's highest award. He has also been awarded the Royal Philharmonic Society's Prize and, in 1951, he received the Koussevitzky Foundation Award for his Second Symphony.

The Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the center's program of contemporary music. This summer the foundation will sponsor the Fromm Fellows and concerts of contemporary chamber music.

Dr. Munch has granted Aaron Copland, his chairman of faculty, a sabbatical leave for the 1962 session, and Richard Burgin has been appointed acting chairman of faculty. The Center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced that the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's Department of Instrumental Music; Pierre Monteux, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky, and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to this department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — including, for the first time, Joseph Silverstein — will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the Department of Choral Music, and Swarthmore College's Professor Peter Gram Swing will head the Department of Listening and Analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1962 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D 66,353
FEB 17 1962

The Boston Symphony is always very willing to keep the world informed of its activities, especially plans for its summer's stay at Tanglewood.

And so we hear from Boston that talented instrumentalists who wish to study at Tanglewood this summer can audition next week in Hartford, Philadelphia or New York. The Hartford College of Music; New York, Friday, 2 to 4 at Juilliard School; Philadelphia, Thursday, 1 to 3 p.m., New School of Music. Auditions will be held March 19 in Boston and April 5 in Washington, D. C.

Gone from Tanglewood this summer will be a familiar face, that of Aaron Copland, on sabbatical.

Witold ~~Lutosaucs,~~ LUTOSLAWSKI perhaps the only contemporary Polish composer of international fame, will teach at Tanglewood courtesy the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program. On the same basis, Ian Hamilton will be here from England.

This is the last season for Charles Munch at the helm of both the Berkshire Music Center and the Boston Symphony. Mr. Munch is retir-

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
FEB 18 1962

New School auditions For Tanglewood study

Auditions will be held Thursday, 1 to 3 P. M. in the New School of Music for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, which includes many of the 23 Boston Symphony members who serve on the Center's faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp auditions.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244 2[illegible]
JUN 1962

The Berkshire Music Center, founded by the Boston Symphony in 1940, will be in session at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, from July 1 to August 26, with Charles Munch as Director and Richard Burgin as his Acting Chairman of Faculty. Faculty members will include Eleazar de Carvalho, with Pierre Monteux, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein as advisors. Richard Burgin and William Kroll head the Orchestral Playing and Chamber Music faculty with assistance from many members of the orchestra, including for the first time, Joseph Silverstein, who becomes Boston Symphony concertmaster in the fall.

WOMAN'S DAY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 5,174,781
AUG 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
MAY 26 1962

WED CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApital 6-4044

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635
MAY 26 1962

The Berkshire Music School (Tanglewood) at Lenox, Mass., with its resident Boston Symphony Orchestra, offers some of the finest professional instruction available to young students. "The great thing about the school," Dean Ralph Berkowitz says, "is that it allows a young person to meet his contemporaries and see how he stacks up, . . the atmosphere makes them better than they are."

As Dean Berkowitz implies, the atmosphere of a summer music school is its main success. Young students feel privileged to socialize with famous musicians, usually thought of as distant specks on a concert stage. Sunday concert students at Marlboro, for instance, often find themselves sitting in the audience next to such noted pianists as Rudolf Serkin.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
MAR 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
MAR 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAR 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 11 1962

Berkshire Music Center Auditions

Audtions will be held Monday, Mar. 19, from 2 to 4 p.m. in Symphony Hall, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for Summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshiire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, which includes many of the twenty-three Boston Symphony Orchestra members who serve on the Center's instrumental faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp.

Applicants accepted in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards offered.

Those planning to audition should, if possible, notify the registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

28

PRE-SEASON BERKSHIRE CENTER

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, February 20, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
FEB 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
FEB 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
MAR 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,006
FEB 19 1962

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
APR 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 18 1962

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 854,085 S. 1,157,232
MAR 11 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 25 1962
1961

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 868,958 S. 1,186,625
FEB 17 1962

Music Note

Auditions in five eastern cities begin Tuesday for instrumentalists wishing summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony orchestra's Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass. Hartford, Philadelphia, New York, Washington, and Boston are the cities to be visited by the committee, which ends its work April 5 in Washington. For information, write Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 7 1962

Tanglewood Prospects

Charles Munch, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has invited Witold Lutoslawski to come from Poland and Iain Hamilton to come from England this summer to be guest professors in the Composition Department at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Messrs. Lutoslawski and Hamilton's eight-week visit to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program.

Perhaps the only contemporary Polish composer of international fame, Mr. Lutoslawski, who was born in Warsaw in 1913, and studied at the Warsaw Conservatory with Maliszewski, has had his works performed at the first Polish Festival of Contemporary Music. His "Little Suite" has been performed in the United States.

Mr. Hamilton—born in Glasgow in 1902—began his musical studies in 1947, after preparing himself for a career in engineering. Upon his graduation from the Royal Academy of Music he received the school's highest award. He has also been awarded the Royal Philharmonic Society's Prize and, in 1951, he received the Koussevitzky Foundation Award for his Second Symphony.

The Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the center's program of contemporary music. This summer the foundation will sponsor the Fromm Fellows and concerts of contemporary chamber music.

Dr. Munch has granted Aaron Copland, his chairman of faculty, a sabbatical leave for the 1962 session, and Richard Burgin has been appointed acting chairman of faculty. The Center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced that the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's Department of Instrumental Music; Pierre Monteux, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky, and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to this department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — including, for the first time, Joseph Silverstein — will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the Department of Choral Music, and Swarthmore College's Professor Peter Gram Swing will head the Department of Listening and Analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1962 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D 66,353
FEB 17 1962

The Boston Symphony is always very willing to keep the world informed of its activities, especially plans for its summer's stay at Tanglewood.

And so we hear from Boston that talented instrumentalists who wish to study at Tanglewood this summer can audition next week in Hartford, Philadelphia or New York. The Hartford College of Music; New York, Friday, 2 to 4 at Juilliard School; Philadelphia, Thursday, 1 to 3 p.m., New School of Music. Auditions will be held March 19 in Boston and April 5 in Washington, D. C.

Gone from Tanglewood this summer will be a familiar face, that of Aaron Copland, on sabbatical.

Witold ~~Lutoswes~~ LUTOSLAWSKI, perhaps the only contemporary Polish composer of international fame, will teach at Tanglewood courtesy the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program. On the same basis, Ian Hamilton will be here from England.

This is the last season for Charles Munch at the helm of both the Berkshire Music Center and the Boston Symphony. Mr. Munch is retir-

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
FEB 18 1962

New School auditions For Tanglewood study

Auditions will be held Thursday, 1 to 3 P. M. in the New School of Music for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, which includes many of the 23 Boston Symphony members who serve on the Center's faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp auditions.

WOMAN'S DAY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 5,174,781
AUG 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
MAY 26 1962

W E D CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApital 6-4044

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635
MAY 26 1962

The Berkshire Music School (Tanglewood) at Lenox, Mass., with its resident Boston Symphony Orchestra, offers some of the finest professional instruction available to young students. "The great thing about the school," Dean Ralph Berkowitz says, "is that it allows a young person to meet his contemporaries and see how he stacks up . . . the atmosphere makes them better than they are."

As Dean Berkowitz implies, the atmosphere of a summer music school is its main success. Young students feel privileged to socialize with famous musicians, usually thought of as distant specks on a concert stage. Sunday concert students at Marlboro, for instance, often find themselves sitting in the audience next to such noted pianists as Rudolf Serkin.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
MAR 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
MAR 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAR 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 11 1962

Berkshire Music Center Auditions

Audtions will be held Monday, Mar. 19, from 2 to 4 p.m. in Symphony Hall, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for Summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshiire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, which includes many of the twenty-three Boston Symphony Orchestra members who serve on the Center's instrumental faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp.

Applicants accepted in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards offered.

Those planning to audition should, if possible, notify the registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271
JUN 1962

The Berkshire Music Center, founded by the Boston Symphony in 1940, will be in session at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, from July 1 to August 26, with Charles Munch as Director and Richard Burgin as his Acting Chairman of Faculty. Faculty members will include Eleazar de Carvalho, with Pierre Monteux, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein as advisors. Richard Burgin and William Kroll head the Orchestral Playing and Chamber Music faculty with assistance from many members of the orchestra, including for the first time, Joseph Silverstein, who becomes Boston Symphony concertmaster in the fall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 113,846

FEB 2 3 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

FEB 18 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

WED FEB 14 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
WED FEB 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

FEB 18 1962

PORTLAND, ORE.
REPORTER
D. 53,940

MAR 2 1962

Winners Named By Music Group

Winners of three scholarships awarded each year to outstanding members of the Portland Junior symphony have been announced by the joint music and scholarship committees of the association.

The Tangleward scholarship to the Berkshire Music center in Lennox, Mass., went to Barton Parker, principal horn, and a junior at Lewis & Clark college. Vicki Poulette, flutist with the orchestra and also an accomplished organist, won a nine-week scholarship to Aspen, Colo. Gail Rosebraugh, first violist, was awarded the half scholarship for the same period at Aspen. Larry Zgonc, principal bass, was named as alternate.

Each of the seven candidates performed a work of his own choosing, sightread and was interviewed by the two committees under Charles E. P. Wright, scholarship chairman, and Dr. Reinhard G. Pauly, music committee chairman, who presided at the five-hour meeting at Reed college.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

MAY 31 1962

Silverman Named

Stanley Silverman, whose Afternoon Music for Orchestra was premiered at the White House last month by the Greater Boston Youth Orchestra, has been appointed assistant in the Department of Composition, Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school of music at Tanglewood.

Plans for Tanglewood, 1962

Audtions will be held this week in Hartford, Philadelphia and New York for instrumentalists who wish to apply for Summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Hartford auditions are scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 20, from 2 to 4 p.m., at the Julius Hart College. In Philadelphia the auditions will be Thursday, Feb. 22 from 1 to 3 p.m., at the New School of Music. The New York auditions will be at the Juilliard School of Music Friday, Feb. 23, from 2 to 4 p.m. Auditions in Boston are listed for Mar. 19, and in Washington on Apr. 5.

The Berkshire Music Center, founded by the Orchestra in 1940 in fulfillment of the wish of Serge Koussevitzky, will be in session at Tanglewood from July 1 to Aug. 26. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will be held at the same time. Charles Munch is director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Applicants accepted in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are also many other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards offered in the names of such distinguished artists interested in the Music Center as Jascha Heifetz, Gregor Piatigorsky, Albert Spalding, and Leonard Bernstein. Fellowships are also available for instrumentalists interested in the performance of contemporary music (Fromm Fellowships) and advanced players of stringed instruments (String Fellowships.)

Dr. Munch has invited Witold Lutoslawski to come from Poland, and Iain Hamilton to come from England, this Summer, to be guest professors in the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center. Their eight weeks visit has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program.

Perhaps the only contemporary Polish composer of international fame, Mr. Lutoslawski who was born in Warsaw in 1913 and studied at the Warsaw Conservatory with Maliszewski, has had his works performed at the first Polish Festival of Contemporary Music. His Little Suite has been performed in the United States.

Mr. Hamilton, born in Glasgow in 1922, began his musical studies in 1947, after preparing himself for a career in engineering. Upon his graduation from the Royal Academy of Music he received the school's highest award. He has also been awarded the Royal Philharmonic Society's Prize and, in 1951, he received the Koussevitzky Foundation Award for his Second Symphony.

Mr. Hamilton has previously taught in the United States, at Duke University. Mr. Lutoslawski has not previously taught in this country.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

FEB 18 1962

BURGIN TO HEAD FACULTY AT LENOX

NEW YORK—Presumably the summer ahead should be a productive one for Aaron Copland, for the American composer generally rated the leader among his colleagues has been granted a sabbatical leave from his duties as chairman of faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

His place, for the time, will be taken by Richard Burgin, retiring concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has the title of acting chairman of faculty. Among Copland's commitments are the commission for a work to be heard at the opening of Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center Sept. 23. He is also scheduled to conduct in Ravinia and elsewhere. I. K.

Dr. Munch has granted Aaron Copland, chairman of faculty, a sabbatical leave for the 1962 session and Richard Burgin has been appointed acting chairman of faculty. The Center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music. Pierre Monteux, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisors to this department.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Schenectady, June 5, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

WHITE PLAINS REPORTER DISPATCH
Wednesday, June 27, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, June 3, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

MAY 31 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

MAY 31 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

JUN 2 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUN 3 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400

JUN 3 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N.J.

JUN 5 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUN 5 1962 Byline

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUN 5 1962 Byline

Center Gets 30 Foreign Music Pupils

The Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has accepted 30 foreign students from 13 countries and five continents for the 1962 session which runs from July 1 through Aug. 26.

* * *

THE GROUP includes seven students from Japan; six from France; three each from England and Canada; two each from Austria and Venezuela; and one each from Belgium, Germany, Israel, Australia, Chile, Roumania and Indonesia.

Nine of the students will study conducting; 17 are instrumentalists; one each is scheduled for choral work and composition and two have signed up for listening and analysis.

Included are four first prize winners from the Paris Conservatory (Jacques Sudrat, Marcelle Verignon, Madeleine Simoni and Martine Joste); the winner of the Australian Broadcasting Commission's scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center (Brian Coogan, trumpet); and the current winner of the French Prix de Rome (Alain Margoni, France, composer).

30

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN
D. 44,384 S. 33,804

MAY 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

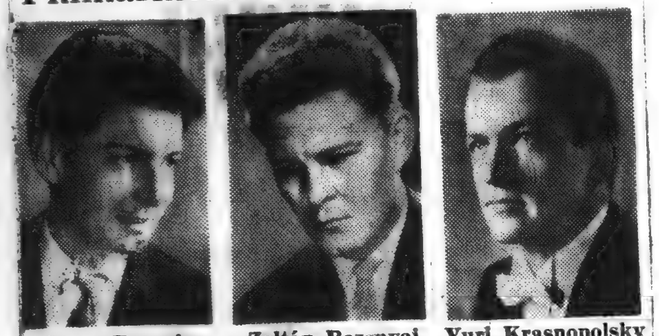
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

MAY 26 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 660,265 S. 1,306,418

MAY 10 1962

Philharmonic Names 3 Assistants



Serge Fournier Zoltán Rozsnyai Yuri Krasnopolsky

An American, a Frenchman and a Hungarian have been selected as New York Philharmonic assistant conductors for next season. They are Yuri Krasnopolsky, Serge Fournier, and Zoltán Rozsnyai.

M. Fournier, the Frenchman, has never conducted in the United States, but the others have. Mr. Krasnopolsky, a native of Chicago, conducted the Philharmonic in February, 1961, at a Pension Fund Concert devoted to the music of the Philharmonic's conductor, Leonard Bernstein.

Mr. Rozsnyai, who was born in Budapest, toured the United States in 1959 as conductor of the Philharmonia Hungarica, an orchestra composed of refugees from the unsuccessful 1956 Hungarian revolt.

The orchestra, which Mr. Rozsnyai founded in 1956, was "adopted" by the Town of Marl, Germany, as its permanent orchestra in 1960.

The 23-year-old French conductor was a 1961 winner of the Koussevitzky Conducting Prize at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. A Paris Conservatory graduate, he has conducted the Orchestre de la Radiodiffusion - Télévision Française, the Orchestre Symphonique du Grand Casino in Vichy, France, and the Orchestra of the Concerts Colonne in Paris.

In addition to his appearance with the Philharmonic, Mr. Krasnopolsky, who is 34, has been associate musical director of the St. Louis Municipal Opera and musical director of the Los Angeles Civic Opera. He toured fourteen European countries as associate conductor of the Ballet Theatre in 1960, and he conducted twenty-seven European orchestras.

This will be the fourth season in the Philharmonic's Assistant Conductors Project. Last year's assistants were Seiji Ozawa, Maurice Peress and John Canarina.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

JUN 17 1962

Music

Tanglewood's Fame is Worldwide

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

A musical United Nations will be in residence at Tanglewood this summer. The Berkshire Music Center, Boson Symphony Orchestra's summer school, has accepted 30 foreign students from 13 countries and five continents for the 1962 session, from July 1 through Aug. 26.

Among them are four first-prize winners from the Paris Conservatory (Jacques Sudrat, Marcelle Verignon, Madeleine Simoni and Martine Joste), winner of the Australian Broadcasting Commission's scholarship to the Berkshie Center (Brian Conan, trumpet) and the current winner of the Prix de Rome (Alain Margoni, France, composer).

Berkshire Grads

Casually dressed students at the Berkshire Music Center give little indication of the impact that the summer institution has had on professional ranks here and abroad.

Forty-three Tanglewood-trained conductors now have their own orchestras. There are 89 first-chair players and 11 concertmasters in United States orchestras who studied in the center's instrumental department. Eight of the 12 assistant conductors to Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic were students at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood singers, producers, conductors and designers are now with major opera houses of the United States and Europe.

Richard Burgin

Dr. Charles Munch, who is retiring as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will address the students of the Berkshire Music center at the school's opening exercises tomorrow. Richard Burgin, who is retiring as concert master but will retain his position as associate conductor, will also address the students. He is acting chairman of faculty. Tea will be served in the Tanglewood gardens following the exercises which are to be held in the theater.

The first of the eight festival Wednesday evening concerts will be held next week. A chamber music program will feature the Budapest String quartet. The members are Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384

3 0 1962

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695

JUN 3 1962

Summer Festivals Draw Blasts For Lacking Adventurous Music

Music

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Well, it's "festival baiting" time again, with critics getting in the first punch in the now annual verbal fisticuffs with the program directors of summer musical festivals. In short, the complaint is that the only "fresh air" to be encountered at music festivals here in the East is that which you breathe in through your nose. Judging by what we read, the less conservative members of the press are holding their noses instead of sniffing expectantly at the musical menus being cooked up once again for audiences at symphonic events.

The slogan of the dissident group could well be a paraphrase of Horace Greely's well known utterance, "Go West, young music lover." We use the word "young" advisedly since older music devotees, as indicated by attendance figures east of the Appalachians, still go for the familiar warhorses in the standard repertory. The situation is different in the West, say the critics. The pioneering spirit still exists there, programwise, and the winds of free enterprise sweep across the western musical panorama in the summer months.

However, there is something of a paradox in the national music scene with regard to the seasons. The picture is reversed during the winter season when Eastern concerthalls provide the more adventurous music-making and the "three B's" are apt to be Berg, Bartok, and Barber as often as the traditional ones. The latter are back in business at Eastern summer festivals and the emphasis on new music shifts back to the West at a time when our program makers seem to subscribe rather literally to the "lazy summer months" theme!

In looking for an explanation of this curious state of affairs, perhaps it should be called "just one of those things" in the overall picture. The fact that audiences are admitted free to such summer series as those at Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia and Grant Park in Chicago may be contributing factors to a laissez faire attitule in their program making. And the fact that musicians' fees for rehearsal time are larger in the east than the west may partially explain the "musical re-hash" served to patrons at the Lewisohn Stadium in New York and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Maybe, who knows?

The Berkshire Music Festival, of course, is one of the prime targets of the critics. This is hardly news at this late date. The smoldering fires of critical displeasure with the sameness of programs there for the past several years broke into flaming headlines in last year's musical press. Charges and countercharges flew thick and fast in a heated exchange between Harold Schonberg of The New York Times and Thomas Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony.

Perhaps another "round" is in the offing this season. Mr. Perry has a new challenger in the person of Ronald Eyer, music editor of The New York Herald Tribune. The coming Berkshire Festival looms up as another in which the critical fraternity will employ its collective hands not in applauding but in stifling yawns and supporting drooping heads, according to Eyer's recent blast. That is, if the boys don't head for Coney Island instead!

"The Berkshire Festival, as for a long time now, is dead on its feet," says Eyer. "I have searched the programs in vain for anything worth more than two subway tokens to Carnegie Hall, where similar fare is available all season," he added. The Boston manager won't like this crack either: "The great Eastern centers, which provide the freshest and most animated musical activity during the winter season, seem to run to pap, pop, and perdition come June!"

Though the Berkshire Festival doesn't start until July, Mr. Perry won't be too technical about the time element in the latter remark which should help to build up his resentment against the specific charges made by the critic regarding Tanglewood programs. It remains to be seen whether the Boston manager and others will take this latest and most severe blast lying down.

The writer has seen the entire list of programs for this summer's Berkshire Festival and with one or two exceptions I can't get excited about the schedule either. As for the past several seasons, I'll probably do most of my listening "lying down" — in the backyard rather than on the Tanglewood lawn. My recorded versions of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 and Beethoven's Ninth may not be as satisfying as the Tanglewood performances listed, but they'll have to do and there'll be compensations. The ice-box will be real handy, among other things. And I won't have to worry about flat tires and other road hazards.

In particular, this season's Berkshire Festival is sorely remiss in completely ignoring the current observance of a milestone in the still active career of one of the great composers of our time. He is, of course, Igor Stravinsky, who will celebrate his 80th birthday on June 18. To be sure, the Berkshire Festival programs are "subject to change" and perhaps this oversight may be corrected. Undoubtedly Mr. Perry can explain this too. But it'll take a lot of explaining!

FADED TEXT

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
May 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, June 3, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
MAY 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
JUN 9 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,861 S: 31,200
JUN 3 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
MAY 23 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 1 1962

Public Invited To Tanglewood

LENOX—The opening exercises of the 1962 session of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3.30 p. m. today in the theater at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra extends a cordial invitation to the public to attend the exercises and to the tea which will follow in the Formal Gardens.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the Boston Symphony and administrator of the Music Center, will introduce the afternoon's speakers. The students and guests will hear Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, and Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty. Speaking for the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Talcott Banks. The 38 members of the faculty will be presented to the students by Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Music Center.

Concluding the exercises will be the traditional performance by the students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," conducted by Hugh Ross. This work was written for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,747
JUL 7 1962

31

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

FROM THROUGHOUT the United States and a number of foreign countries, some 280 students have come to pursue courses of study at the Berkshire Music Center. Registration has been completed, and the opening ceremonies took place Sunday, July 1. Many of the students have returned for their second or third summers at Tanglewood.

While sitting in the audience during the ceremonies, I noticed many familiar faces and several new ones among the members of the Music Center's faculty. Some have been at Tanglewood since the inception of the school in 1940. Two faculty members not present were Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty, and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, who are on leave for the current session.

Charles Munch has appointed Richard Burgin as acting chairman of the faculty. Mr. Burgin is familiar to Tanglewood concert goers as the concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, a position from which he retires after this season. For 42 years, or a period just greater than half the life of the orchestra, Mr. Burgin has held this position of eminence among musicians. His long association with the orchestra will not come to an end, however, as he will continue as associate conductor.

* * *

I NOTED Joseph Silverstein sitting among the faculty members for the first time. A recent winner of the Walter W. Naumberg Foundation Award, Mr. Silverstein will become concertmaster of the orchestra at the beginning of the winter season.

Polish composer Witold Lutoslawski and Iain Hamilton, British composer, are joining the composition department this summer—each for the first time. Replacing G. Wallace Woodworth as head of listening and analysis is Peter Gram Swing who is presently chairman of the Department of Music at Swarthmore College and a former student at the Berkshire Music Center.

When the first classes of the Music Center met last Monday, Hugh Ross and the Tanglewood Choir had a rather monumental task ahead. They had one week in which to prepare for a performance with the Boston Symphony at the Festival concert Sunday. But students and faculty alike took the matter in stride, for such is the way the Music Center is operated: professional training for a finished performance. Students are aware of the intensive program and are prepared for the tremendous outpouring of highest quality music within the eight week period.

* * *

THE OTHER DAY I had occasion to amble through the Music Shed for the first time this season. I am impressed each time I see it, for this is truly a magnificent and awe-inspiring structure. Years ago I had read of the details of construction, but with the passage of time they had become less clear than they should be. For my own re-edification I dug out the details, some of which are related here for the benefit of others who might have raised in their own minds the same questions as I.

Designed by the late Eero Saarinen and later improved by the addition of the Talbot Memorial Canopy, the Shed seats 6,037 people in an arrangement resembling a curved fan, the outer rim of which measures 404 feet. Seventy-eight columns 16 feet high support the 66,000 square feet of the roof which is slightly over 40 feet above ground. This is the key structure at Tanglewood. It is here that the major concerts of the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Center are presented.

The Shed for a number of years was the property of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the organization which inaugurated great music in the Berkshires back in the mid-1930s. John G. W. Mahanna, county editor of The Eagle, ably describes these early years and the events of one stormy night which brought the Shed into existence. His book, "Music Under the Moon," is certainly a must for those interested in the colorful history of the Berkshire Festival.

Berkshire Music Center Has Many Noted Alumni

Two New Assistant Conductors to Bernstein Among Former Pupils at Lenox

LENOX — Two of the three young conductors—Serge Fournier and Yuri Krasnopolsky—appointed recently as assistant conductors to Leonard Bernstein at the New York Philharmonic for the orchestra's 1962-1963 season are former pupils at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Trained at Tanglewood

Since Bernstein began his New York Philharmonic assistant conductors project three seasons ago, eight of the 12 appointees to this position have had training at Tanglewood: Fournier and Krasnopolsky plus Seiji Ozawa, Slyakum Shapira, Russell Stanger, Kenneth Schermerhorn, Stefan Bauer-Mengelberg and Seymour Lipkin.

Bernstein was head of the orchestra and conducting department for several seasons and is now an adviser to the department. Pierre Monteux is also an adviser to the department, which is under the active direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

Many other now notable musicians have studied at the Berkshire Music Center since it was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the request of Serge Koussevitzky, then the orchestra's music director.

Have Own Orchestras

In addition to Bernstein, a Tanglewood pupil of Serge Koussevitzky in 1940 and 1941, and the conductors he has engaged for the New York Philharmonic, 41 other Tanglewood trained conductors now have their own orchestras. Seven former pupils are now assistant or associate conductors of major orchestras. Geographically these former students from the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts now range from Zubin Mehta in Los Angeles to Walter Hendl and Thor Johnson in Chicago, Louis Lane in Cleveland, Theodore Bloomfield in Rochester and Robert Whitney in Louisville.

The orchestra and conducting department at Tanglewood has also contributed 11 concertmasters and 89 first-chairmen to the nation's symphony orchestras.

Major opera houses in the United States and Europe are now well staffed with musicians from Tanglewood. Among the vocalists are Adele Addison, Phyllis Curtin, Mattiwilda Dobbs, Rosalind Elias, Reri Grist, Frank Guarrera, Heidi Krall, Mildred Miller, Patricia Neway, Leontyne Price, Regina Sarfaty and Sylvia Stahlman. Lorin Maazel, Thomas Schippers and Samuel Krachmalnick now conduct in the major opera houses and Nathaniel Merrill, Sarah Caldwell and Alfred Popper design, produce and direct at several opera houses.

Session Opens July 1

The 1962 session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood—its 20th —will be held from July 1 to Aug. 26 in conjunction with the orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch is music director of the festival and director of the center. His teaching associates at the center are Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty (on leave of absence 1962); Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty and in charge of chamber music; De Carvalho, orchestra and conducting; Boris Goldovsky, opera (on leave of absence 1962); Lukas Foss, composition; William Kroll, chamber music; Hugh Ross, choral music; Peter Gram Swing, listening and analysis. The faculty also includes 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Iain Hamilton from England and Witold Lutoslawski from Poland will be guest teachers in the department of composition for the 1962 session.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
JUN 30 1962

Opening Event At Tanglewood

Berkshire Music Center Exercises Tomorrow

The opening exercises of the 1962 session of the Berkshire Music Center will be held tomorrow at 3.30 p. m. in the theater at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra extends an invitation to the public to attend the exercises and to the tea which will follow in the formal gardens.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the Boston Symphony and administrator of the music center, will introduce the afternoon's speakers. The students and guests will hear Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, and Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty. Speaking for the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Talcott Banks. The 38 members of the faculty will be presented to the students by Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the music center.

Springfield, Mass., Daily News

Concluding the exercises will be the traditional performance by the students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," conducted by Hugh Ross. This work was written for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

AIR CONDITIONED

32

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Thursday, May 31, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

KINGSTON FREEMAN
Thursday, May 31, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

WHITE PLAINS REPORTER DISPATCH
Thursday, May 31, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Tuesday, May 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Thursday, May 31, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

MAY 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

MAY 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

MAY 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

MAY 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542

MAY 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

MAY 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 535,565

MAY 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856

MAY 31 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

MAY 29 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010

MAY 29 1962 Buffalo

EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER
D. 61,186

MAY 30 1962 Buffalo

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 43,126

MAY 31 1962 Buffalo

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
REPORTER DISPATCH
D. 32,049

MAY 31 1962 Buffalo

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D. 43,126

MAY 31 1962 Buffalo

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 3 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JUN 3 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUN 7 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, June 4, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

PORT CHESTER ITEM
Saturday, June 2, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, June 3, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW ROCHELLE STANDARD STAR
Friday, June 1, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

JUN 10 1962

PORT CHESTER, N.Y.
ITEM
D. 15,053

JUN 2 1962 Buffalo

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060

JUN 3 1962 Buffalo

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123

JUN 3 1962 Buffalo

CANTON, OHIO
REPOSITORY
D. 70,496 S. 77,659

JUN 3 1962 Buffalo

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
D. 226,427 S. 257,927

JUN 3 1962 Buffalo

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387

JUN 4 1962 Buffalo

CHARLESTON, S.C.
POST
D. 36,122

JUN 7 1962 Buffalo

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

JUN 9 1962 Buffalo

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

JUN 9 1962

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE
D 168 450 S. 179,038

JUN 10 1962 Buffalo

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
SUN. 312,266

JUN 10 1962 Buffalo

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 267,283 S. 313,407

JUN 10 1962 Buffalo

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS-TELEGRAM
D. 85,795

JUN 21 1962 Buffalo

CHARLESTON, S.C.
POST
D. 36,122

JUN 7 1962 Buffalo

Violinists Invited To Compete

BOSTON — Talented young violinists are invited to apply for String Fellowships at the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood. The Fellowships pay tuition and dormitory charges for the eight week course in chamber music and orchestra playing. In addition, two prizes await gifted young violinists who are students at the Music Center's 1962 session.

The Jascha Heifetz Prize of $500 for a violin student of exceptional attainment and promise is the income from a fund established by Mr. Heifetz. The Albert Spalding Prize of $300 is for the most promising instrumentalist in the student body and is the income of a fund established by Mrs. Spalding. Other prizes for instrumentalists include the Gregor Piatigorsky Prize and the Leonard Bernstein Prize, established by these gentlemen.

The prizes will be awarded by the Faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, which includes such violinists as Richard Burgin, retiring Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Orchestra's Associate Conductor; William Kroll, leader of the Kroll String Quartet; and Joseph Silverstein, Naumberg Prize winner and Concertmaster-designate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Applications and inquiries should be addressed to the Registrar, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUN 29 1962

Public Invited To Tanglewood Opening Sunday

The public is invited to the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center and tea at Tanglewood in Lenox Sunday afternoon at 3:30.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the Boston Symphony and administrator of the Music Center, will introduce the afternoon's speakers. The students and guests will hear Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, and Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty. Speaking for the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Talcott Banks. The 38 members of the faculty will be presented to the students by Ralph Berkowtiz, dean of the music Center.

Concluding the exercises will be the traditional performance by the students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," conducted by Hugh Ross. This work was written for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
JUN 30 1962

Music Center Opens At Lenox Tomorrow

Opening exercises of the 1962 session of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra extends a cordial invitation to the public to attend the exercises and to the tea which will follow in the Formal Gardens.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the Boston Symphony and administrator of the Music Center, will introduce the afternoon's speakers. The students and guests will hear Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, and Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty. Speaking for the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Talcott Banks. The thirty-eight members of the faculty will be presented to the students by Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Center.

Concluding the exercises will be the traditional performance by the students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," conducted by Hugh Ross.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 106,635
JUN 5 1962

30 ACCEPTED

Tanglewood Officials List Student From 13 Nations

Lenox, Mass., June 5 — The Berkshire Music Center — the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood has accepted 30 foreign students from 13 countries and 5 continents for the 1962 session, which will be held from July 1 through August 26.

Among the foreign students are four first prize winners from the Paris Conservatory; the winner of the Australian Broadcasting Commission's Scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center; and the current winner of the French Prix de Rome.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Saturday, June 30, 1962

Music Center Opens At Lenox Tomorrow

Opening exercises of the 1962 session of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra extends a cordial invitation to the public to attend the exercises and to the tea which will follow in the Formal Gardens.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the Boston Symphony and administrator of the Music Center, will introduce the afternoon's speakers. The students and guests will hear Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra, and Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty. Speaking for the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Talcott Banks. The thirty-eight members of the faculty will be presented to the students by Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Center.

Concluding the exercises will be the traditional performance by the students of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," conducted by Hugh Ross.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

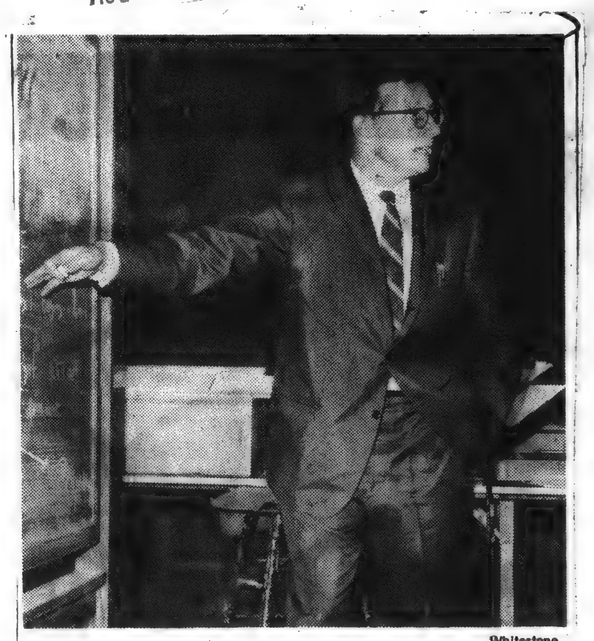
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 2 1962

Whitestone

WELCOMING STUDENTS to the 20th session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon is Dr. Charles Munch, head of the summer school conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire at the end of the 1962 Berkshire Festival season as musical director of the BSO. Joining in the greeting extended to the famed conductor are Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Music Center; Richard Burgin, acting chairman of the faculty, who is retiring as concertmaster at close of the Tanglewood season; and Talcott Banks, a trustee of Boston Symphony.
(Story on Page 8).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 14 1962



Whitestone

Peter Gram Swing

Open to Public

Peter Gram Swing To Explain Festival Concerts in Lenox

TANGLEWOOD — The first of two free lectures sponsored by the Lenox Library will be given Wednesday at 4:15. Peter Gram Swing, head of the department of listening and analysis at the Berkshire Music Center, will speak on the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Berkshire Festival concerts this weekend. Introductory remarks will be made by Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Music Center. Mr. Gram Swing is the son of the former well-known radio newscaster, Raymond Gram Swing.

Using recordings in the collection of the Lenox Library, Mr. Swing will analyze the programs to be conducted by Charles Munch and Eugene Ormandy. Particular emphasis will be given to Schubert's Symphony No. 5, which will be heard at Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

The second lecture by Mr. Swing in this series will be on Wednesday, Aug. 22, at 4:15 in the Lenox Library. These lectures are open to the public.

34

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 2 1962

Tanglewood Season Begins

NOTED GUESTS in the Tanglewood garden after opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center are Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and Mrs. John Senior of Lenox.

EXCHANGING GREETINGS are Mrs. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, famed violinist's widow, and Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, Berkshire Nights chairman.

More Than 1,500 at Opening Of Berkshire Music Center

TANGLEWOOD — A crowd of more than 1,500 attended the opening exercises of the 20th season of the Berkshire Music Center here yesterday afternoon when Dr. Charles Munch gave his final welcoming address.

"This is the last time that I have the honor to open the session of the Berkshire Music Center," Dr. Munch told the audience in the Theater Concert Hall.

"I am sure you will understand it is with much emotion that I offer you a cordial welcome," he added.

The musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra paid tribute to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who founded the school in 1940. "His presence among us is always alive and reminds us of the greatness and beauty of this wonderful creation which is unique in all the world," Dr. Munch declared.

Students Number Almost 300

Addressing his remarks to the student body of almost 300 men and women from all parts of the United States and many foreign countries, he said:

"You have come here to learn and find inspiration and guidance. Here is an opportunity of listening to beautiful music and to profit from it. You carry the responsibility to help develop and express the inner life of our nation. We are here to help you find your place. We hope you will find benefit and that it will accompany you in the years to come. Let me repeat what I said 10 years ago in my first address. Do not use music but serve music. Make music with all your intention and all your conviction. You bring us your youth, your good will and your confidence and your illusions. You cannot have illusions without disillusions and there is only one remedy for disillusion: work and more work. The ability to work is essential here."

In closing, Dr. Munch thanked all who have helped him in his 13 years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and he paid special tribute to "our countless friends in Berkshire County who so generously interest themselves in the work at Tanglewood."

Leonard Burkat Presides

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the BSO and administrator of the Music Center, presided at the ceremonies.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the BSO, who like Dr. Munch is retiring at the close of the 1962 Tanglewood season, chairman of the Music Center faculty this season, also welcomed the students. Speaking as one of the collaborators of Dr. Koussevitzky in helping to establish the summer school, he described Koussevitzky as "a man of great vision who was inclined to look ahead rather than dwell in the past."

"The Berkshire Music Center," said Mr. Burgin, "offers to the performer an opportunity to get a better insight into the creative stage of composing music by making it possible for them to be in contact with the live composers and for the composers to acquaint themselves with the problems of the performer.

"We welcome students who have many questions on their minds. We welcome those who are prepared to question everything in music to the point of being iconoclastic. We welcome those who do not shy from experiment."

The Berkshire Music Center differs in some respects from educational institutions, Mr. Burgin said. For one thing, he added, the curriculum is much simpler. It can be condensed into one word: music. There is one requirement which "we strongly insist upon," he said, "because we conder it a prerequisite of any successful concerted effort in making music: an tratistic discipline of the highest order.

Board Is Represented

Talcott Banks, a member of the BSO board of trustees, represented the board at the opening exercises. Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the Music Center, introduced to the students the 38 members of the faculty. Concluding the exercises, Hugh Ross conducted the students in the traditional performance of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

After the ceremonies refreshments were served in the formal gardens.

Whitestone

FIRST VISIT to Tanglewood is paid by Erich Leinsdorf, who will become musical director of BSO next season, at center, with Joseph Silverstein and Richard Burgin, concertmaster. Mr. Silverstein will succeed Mr. Burgin, who will retire in August.

BLANK PAGE

36 1ST. WEEK JULY 4TH TO JULY 8.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 6, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 3, IN G MAJOR, FOR STRINGS
I. Allegro
II. Allegro

SUITE NO. 2, IN B MINOR, FOR FLUTE AND STRINGS
Overture: Largo; Allegro
Rondo: Allegretto espressivo
Bourrée I; Bourrée II: Allegro
Polonaise and Double: Moderato
Minuet
Badinerie: Presto
Flute Solo: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

CANTATA NO. 51, "JAUCHZET GOTT IN ALLEN LANDEN"
I. Aria
II. Recitative
III. Aria
IV. Chorale – Alleluja
Soprano Solo: BETHANY BEARDSLEE
Trumpet Solo: ROGER VOISIN

Intermission

CONCERTO IN C MAJOR FOR TWO PIANOS, NO. 2
I. Allegro maestoso
II. Adagio ovvero largo
III. Fugue: Allegro
Soloists: VITYA VRONSKY and VICTOR BABIN

SUITE NO. 4, IN D MAJOR
Overture
Bourrées I and II
Gavotte
Minuet
Réjouissance

Miss VRONSKY and Mr. BABIN play Steinway pianos

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 7, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6, IN B♭ MAJOR, FOR STRINGS
I. Allegro
II. Adagio ma non troppo
III. Allegro

PIANO CONCERTO IN D MINOR
I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro
Soloist: LUKAS FOSS

Intermission

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 2, IN F MAJOR, FOR TRUMPET, FLUTE, OBOE AND VIOLIN, WITH STRINGS
I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegro assai
Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER
Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG
Violin: RICHARD BURGIN

SUITE NO. 3, IN D MAJOR, FOR ORCHESTRA
I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavotte I; Gavotte II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

Mr. FOSS plays the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, July 8, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

RICERCARE (SIX PART FUGUE) FROM "THE MUSICAL OFFERING"

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 5, IN D MAJOR, FOR ORCHESTRA WITH PIANO, VIOLIN AND FLUTE
I. Allegro
II. Adagio affettuoso
III. Allegro
Piano: LUKAS FOSS Violin: RICHARD BURGIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

CONCERTO FOR VIOLIN AND OBOE, IN D MINOR
I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro
Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
Oboe Solo: RALPH GOMBERG

Intermission

TRAUER-ODE, CANTATA NO. 198
Chorus
Recitative and Aria (Soprano)
Recitative and Aria (Contralto)
Recitative (Tenor) – Chorus
Aria (Tenor)
Recitative and Arioso (Bass)
Chorus

TANGLEWOOD CHOIR
Soprano: VIRGINIA BABIKIAN
Contralto: EVELYN SACHS
Tenor: NICO CASTEL
Bass: DAVID CLATWORTHY
Conducted by HUGH ROSS

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 8 1962

37

Second Thoughts On Music

Musicianship, Integrity Qualities of Dr. Munch

Has Lived Up to Promise Made Many Years Ago of Working Together With One Aim

By WILLARD M. CLARK

It is going to be a lot of fun getting back to Tanglewood. The meeting with old friends and all the new people always is stimulating for we all speak the same language. I have listened to practically all the festival concerts conducted by Charles Munch and have come to admire his musicianship and musical integrity. I am going to miss him, but I am anticipating the new musical leadership of Erich Leindsdorf.

Familiar Programs

We shall start our festival duties just as the chamber music series begins. The programs and participants are all familiar, but one will hear some fine playing and marvelous musicianship. In fact, these concerts, and those devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, bring out the discriminating audiences of the festival.

We go to Tanglewood this season sure in the knowledge that we shall hear fine music beautifully played, and what more could one ask. After all, Tanglewood is not a clearing house for contemporary music. Those who admire such music can attend the Fromm concerts and get their fill.

Thinking back through the years, I believe that if I were to write a sermon it would be entitled, "Be kind to each other." As a rule, musicians are something less than kind.

This attitude has many sources. There is always the element of jealousy and a very real feeling of insecurity behind disparaging remarks. But one seldom hears them from those in the top ranks.

I speak particularly of the tenor, Richard Crooks. During a long friendship with him, I never heard him say an unkind word about anyone.

The fact remains that those who can, do; the others trail along.

I would be less than gallant if I picked out any particular group, yet in all fairness I have found the ladies more prone to criticism than the men. Of course, everyone has a right to his own opinion, but it would be far better if such opinions were based on knowledge.

If you listen to a concert and realize it is good, say so. If, on the other hand, the results are not so fruitful as they might have been but you realize the artist is doing his best, put on the soft pedal when talking about it.

To return to Tanglewood for a moment, we notice the programs will be fundamentally the same as in past years. Mr. Munch has had a good answer for those who have criticized his constant repetition of works; he points out that with the schedule the Boston Symphony Orchestra carries it is virtually impossible to study new works primarily for festival audiences.

We have said before that the festival-goer can be sure of a good repertoire, superbly played, and after all, that is the function of a musical festival.

Munch said when he first addressed the orchestra, "We shall make beautiful music together." This he has done.

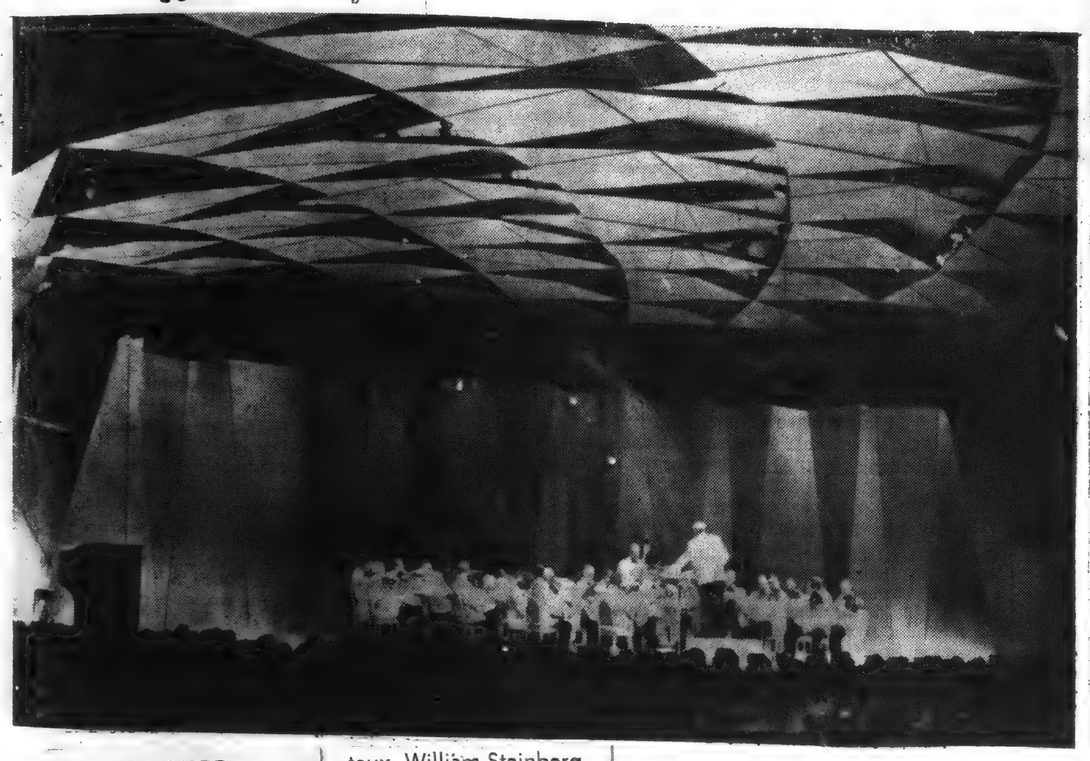
If there has been a lack of very famous solo musicians, it may be pointed out that their fees are astronomical and are increasing all the time.

Tanglewood Personalities

Among the featured performers at Tanglewood in Lenox this week are, top left, Joseph Silverstein, violin; top right, Joseph de Pasquale, viola; lower left, Noah Greenberg, director of the New York Pro Musica; and lower right, Hugh Ross, conductor and head of the department of choral music at the Berkshire Music Center.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 8 1962



AT THE SHED . . . Charles Munch raises baton at the uniquely constructed Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. to begin the current 1962 Berkshire Festival. Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg and Eugene Ormandy have been invited by Mr. Munch to act as guest conductors during the season which will end August 26th.

Munch Selects Mozart's Work for Next Concerts

Tanglewood Choir Debuts This Afternoon With Ross Conducting; Five Soloists Listed

LENOX—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts of the music of Mozart at Tanglewood next week end. For Friday's concert at 8 p. m. Dr. Munch has invited Claude Frank to be soloist with the orchestra in a performance of the Piano Concerto, K. 503. Also to be heard will be the Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361 and the Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

First Performance

This afternoon at 2.30 the Berkshire Festival program will consist of Bach's Ricercare, from the Musical Offering; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Richard Burgin, violin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Lukas Foss, piano, the soloists. Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, will be heard in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin. The Tanglewood Choir in its initial performance of the year will perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Hugh Ross conducting, Bach's Cantata: Trauer-Ode. Soloists for this portion of the concert will be Virginia Babikian, soprano, Evelyn Saks, contralto, Nico Castel, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass.

Following an open rehearsal Saturday morning at 10, the 8 p. m. concert will consist of the Mozart Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, in E-flat, K. 364, with Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, Principal Viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloists; Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 522; Symphony No. 39, K. 543.

Chamber Concert

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season on the 15th at 2.30 p. m. With Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G Minor, K. 550.

The New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, music director, returns to Tanglewood for the second concert in the Tanglewood chamber music series Wednesday at 8 p. m. They will present a program of early Baroque vocal and instrumental music.

During the second week of the Tanglewood season a number of events are available to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make contributions for the support of the Music Center and its scholarship funds. On Thursday there will be a concert of chamber music by the students in the Chamber Music Hall at 4 p. m. and that evening at 8 the Tanglewood Choir will give a performance of choral music in the theater. The second in the series of Aspects of Music will be held Friday afternoon at 4 in the Chamber Music Hall, and the traditional Sunday (July 15) morning chamber music concert by the students of the Music Center will take place at 10 in the Chamber Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra wishes to draw to the attention of its patrons that all Tanglewood evening performances will begin at 8.

Schedule this week at Tanglewood follows:

SUNDAY, JULY 8
10 a. m., Music Hall
BMC Chamber Music
2.30 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Ricercare ..... Bach
Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss) ..... Bach
Concerto for Oboe, Violin (Gomberg, Silverstein) ..... Bach
Cantata: Trauer-Ode (Choir, Soloist, Ross, conducting) ..... Bach

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11
8 p. m., Theater
Chamber Music Concert
New York Pro Musica
Early Baroque Vocal and Instrumental Music

THURSDAY, JULY 12
4 p. m., Music Hall
BMC Chamber Music
8 p. m., Theater
Tanglewood Choir

FRIDAY, JULY 13
3.15 p. m., Music Hall
Aspects of Music
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symvhony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K 361 ..... Mozart
Piano Concerto, K 503 (Frank) ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 38, Prague ..... Mozart

SATURDAY, JULY 14
10 a. m., Music Shed
BSO Open Rehearsal
8 p. m., Music Shed
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Charles Munch, Conductor
Divertimento for Strings, K 136 ..... Mozart
Sinfonia Concertanto (Posselt, de Pasquale) ..... Mozart
A Musical Joke ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 39 ..... Mozart

38

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580

JUL 5 1962

Tanglewood Begins Season Tomorrow

Boston Symphony To Offer Eight-Week Program

Opening Week End Of Berkshire Music Festival Will Present Three Concerts of Orchestral Music By Johann Sebastian Bach.—Orchestra Members Will Be Soloists.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat Music Shed at 8:00 p. m. Friday and Saturday and at 2:30 Sunday afternoon.

Vtiya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debuts at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51 and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2. The concert will open with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.

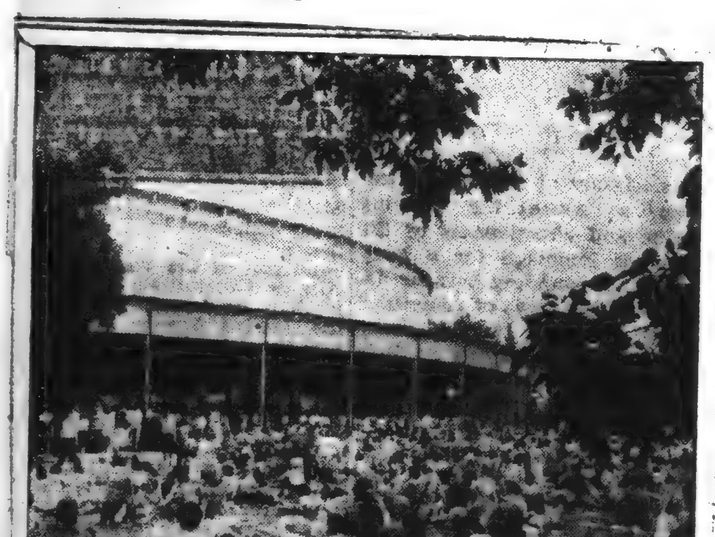
Four members of the orchestra—Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, and Roger Voisin—will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will open with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and will also include the Piano Concerto in D minor with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Suite No. 3.

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the closing work at the Sunday concert: Bach's Cantata, "Trauer-Ode." Mr. Ross's soloists will be soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel and baritone David Clatworthy. Doctor Munch will begin his Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Mr. Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Foss, and Messrs. Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 34,490

JUL 5 1962



TANGLEWOOD SCENE—The 1962 Berkshire Festival opens an eight week season at Tanglewood with the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday, July 6 at 8 p.m. Twenty-four concerts will be presented throughout the season which concludes on August 26. Charles Munch, who retires as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 6 1962

Open Rehearsals Start Tomorrow At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD—The first open rehearsal of the 1962 Berkshire Festival season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in the Music Shed tomorrow morning at 10 with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

The first Music Shed concert will be held tonight at 8 when the BSO, with Munch conducting, will open the Bach series for the weekend. Gov. John A. Volpe will attend tonight's concert.

Tomorrow night at 8, the Bach program will feature Lukas Foss as soloist in a performance of the Bach piano Concerto in D minor, which will be followed by the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in which four members of the orchestra, Richard Burgin, violin; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomeberg, oboe, and Roger Voisin, trumpet, will appear as soloists. The concluding work will be the Suite No. 3.

Sunday afternoon's concert, beginning at 2:30, will consist of Bach's Ricercare, from "The Musical Offering"; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Richard Burgin, violin; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Lukas Foss, piano, the soloists.

Ralph Gomeberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, will be heard in the Concerto for Oboe and violin.

The Tanglewood choir in its initial performance of the year will perform with the Boston Symphony, Hugh Ross conducting, Bach's Cantata; Trauer-Ode. Soloists for this portion of the concert will be Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Saks, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

VALATIE ROUGH NOTES
Friday, June 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
Sunday, July 1, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

HERALD AMERICAN
July 1, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, July 2, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 3, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, July 6, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUL 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN,
Mass.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 1,047

JUL 5 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175

JUL 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091

JUL 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050

JUL 7 1962

ATHENS, N.Y.
HERALD
W. 315

JUL 5 1962

CAIRO, N.Y.
HERALD
W 350

JUL 5 1962

RAVENA, N.Y.
NEWS-HERALD
W. 1,700

JUL 6 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

JUL 7 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ATHENS HERALD
Thursday, July 5, 1962

Berkshire Festival Opens This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three concerts of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach. The concerts will be given in the 6000-seat Music Shed at 8 p. m. Friday and Saturday evenings and at 2:30 Sunday afternoon. The Budapest String Quartet will open the chamber music series at 8 p.m. Wednesday with a concert in the 1200-seat Tanglewood Theatre. The Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood began its eight week session Sunday.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut Friday as soloists in a performance of the Bach Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Doctor Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51 and Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2.

Four members of the Orchestra - Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, and Roger Voisin - will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will also include the Piano Concerto in D. minor with Lukas Foss as soloist.

Doctor Munch will begin the Sunday afternoon program with a performance of the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." The concert will also include the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Mr. Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Foss, and Messrs. Gomberg and Silverstein will be soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin. Hugh Ross, the Music Center Choral Dept. head, will conduct the closing number, Bach's "Trauer-Ode".

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center - those who make voluntary contribution to the school - are invited to two events at Tanglewood this week: an Aspects of Music lecture in the Chamber Music Hall at 3:45 Friday and a concert of chamber music n the Chamber Musc Hall at 10:00 a. m. Sunday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 5 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

JUL 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 5 1962

Governor Coming To Tanglewood Tomorrow Night

LENOX — Gov. and Mrs. A. Volpe will attend the opening Tanglewood performance tomorrow night at 8 in the Music Shed, it was announced today.

The governor's party will fly from Boston to the Great Barrington Airport and then proceed to Tanglewood. Included in the party will be Maj. Allan R. Zenowitz of Great Barrington, the governor's military aide, and Selectman Vincent R. Caroleo of Agawam, the governor's administrative secretary.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D: 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 7 1962

Charles Munch, musical director of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, gave the "Hi" sign to The Times-Union photographer during a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The week-end concerts of Bach programs are scheduled tonight, at 8 p. m. and tomorrow at 2:30 p. m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 7 1962

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD—Saturday, July 7, Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second all-Bach concert. Program includes Brandenburg Concerto No. 6; Piano Concerto in D Major, Lukas Foss, soloist; Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, Richard Burgin, violin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Roger Voisin, trumpet; and Suite No. 3 (8 p.m. Music Shed) . . . Sunday, July 8, Charles Munch conducting the final all-Bach concert, with Ricercare from The Musical Offering; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Lukas Foss, soloists; Concerto for Violin and Oboe, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin; and Cantata: Trauer-Ode, with Hugh Ross conducting the Tanglewood Choir (8 p.m. Music Shed). Friends Concert (10 a.m. Chamber Music Hall) . . . Wednesday, July 11, The New York Pro Musica, early Baroque vocal and instrumental chamber music (8 p.m. Theatre) . . . Thursday, July 12, Friends Events: chamber music (4 p.m. Chamber Music Hall); Tanglewood Choir (8 p.m. Theatre) . . . Friday, July 13, Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in the first of six concerts devoted exclusively to Mozart. On the program are Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361; Piano Concerto, K. 503, Claude Frank, piano; and Symphony No. 38, Prague (8 p.m. Music Shed). Friends event: "Aspects of Music," a series of lecture-concerts (3:15 Music Hall) . . . Saturday, July 14, Charles Munch conducting Mozart's Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante, Ruth Posselt, violin, Joseph de Pasquale, viola; A Musical Joke; and Symphony No. 39 (8 p.m. Music Shed). Boston Symphony open rehearsal (10 a.m. Music Shed) . . . Sunday, July 15, Charles Munch conducting more of Mozart: Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Concerto for Two Pianos, E-flat, with Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin; Les Petits riens, Ballet Suite; and Symphony No. 40 (2:30 p.m. Music Shed). Friends event: chamber music (10 a.m. Chamber Music Hall).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

JUL 6 1962

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct his first concert of the Berkshire Festival season tonight, an all-Bach program.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

39

AMSTERDAM RECORDER
Saturday, July 7, 1962

Weekend Tanglewood Events Includ Bach Program Tonite

Following the first open rehearsal of the season in the Berkshire Festival this morning, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program devoted to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach at 8 this evening.

Opening the Tanglewood program will be the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6. Lukas Foss will be soloist in a performance of the Bach Piano Concerto in D minor which will be followed by the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in which four members of the orchestra will appear as soloists. The concluding work of this program will be the Suite No. 3.

Tomorrow's Berkshire Festival program at 2:30 p.m. will consist of Bach's Ricercare, from the Musical Offering; Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Richard Burgin, violin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Lukas Foss, piano, the soloists. Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, will be heard in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin.

The Tanglewood Choir in its initial performance of the year will perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Hugh Ross conducting, Bach's Cantata: Trauer-Ode. Soloists for this portion of the concert will be Virginia Babikian, soprano, Evelyn Saks, contralto, Nico Castel, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass.

For Next Weekend

Charles Munch and the Boston Orchestra will present three concerts of the music of Mozart at Lenox next weekend. For next Friday's concert at 8 p.m. Dr. Munch has invited Claude Frank to be soloist with the orchestra in a performance of the Piano Concerto, K. 503. Also to be heard will be the Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361 and the Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

An open rehearsal will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. and the evening concert at 8 o'clock will consist of the Mozart Divertimento for Strings, K. 364, with Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, principal Viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloists; Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 522; Symphony No. 39, K 543.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season on July 15 at 2:30 p.m. with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

The New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, Music Director, returns to Tanglewood for the second concert in the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday (July 11, 8:00 p.m.). They will present a program of Early Baroque vocal and instrumental music.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, July 1, 1962

DEBUTS—Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will make their Tanglewood debut at the opening Bach concert Friday. They will be soloists in a performance of the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major. Dr. Munch has also invited soprano Bethany Beardslee to be his guest at this concert, in a performance of Bach's solo Cantata No. 51, Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be soloist in the Bach Suite No. 2.

Four members of the orchestra—Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin—will be soloists at the Saturday concert in a performance of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. This concert will also include the Piano Concerto in D minor, with Lukas Foss as soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 44,471

JUL 7 1962

Volpe Honors Munch As Tanglewood Opens

LENOX. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra launched the 1962 music festival season at Tanglewood last night with a concert devoted to Bach.

Some 3690 persons, including Gov. and Mrs. John A. Volpe, were on hand for the opening of the orchestra's eight-week season in the Berkshires.

During intermission in a dressing room, Volpe presented Charles Munch, retiring music director of the orchestra, with an inscribed silver Paul Revere bowl.

The governor also extended his congratulations to Munch on his 13 years of service with the Boston Symphony. Munch retires at the end of the summer season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

40

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
July 7, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY HERALD RECORD
July 7, 1962

TROY, N.Y.
RECORD
D- 7,029

JUL 7 1962

1962

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D- 40,554

JUL 7 1962

Season Opens At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) last night with the concert of orchestral music by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Two other Bach concerts will be given in the 6,000-seat Music Shed at 8 p.m. today and at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, began its eight-week session last Sunday.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, July

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890

JUL 6 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

JUL 6 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S: 302,060

JUL 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 7 1962

TANGLEWOOD'S SEASON BEGINS TO BACH MUSIC

Gov. Volpe Gives Munch Bowl From People of Commonwealth

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Charles Munch opened the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Friday night with a concert of music by Bach.

3700 in Audience

Gov. John A. Volpe and Mrs. Volpe were in the audience of 3700. During the intermission the governor visited Dr. Munch in his suite backstage and presented him a silver Paul Revere bowl in behalf of the people of the commonwealth in appreciation of the retiring conductor's 13 years as head of the orchestra.

Pianists Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin made their Tanglewood debut at this concert. They were soloists in the "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major." Bethany Beardslee was soloist in the "Cantata No. 51 for Soprano" and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, was soloist in the Bach "Suite No. 2."

The concert opened with Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3" and concluded with "Suite No. 4 in D major."

Soloists Tonight

Four members of the orchestra—Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin—will be soloists at Tanglewood tonight in a performance of Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2." This concert will open with the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6"

See TANGLEWOOD'S
Page Four

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 7 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, July 9, 1962

All-Bach Program Well Balanced

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

At yesterday's Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home since 1936, both Charles Munch who conducted, and the Bostonians were in full command during another diversified all-Bach program.

Mr. Much, attired in a formal tux set off with a collegiate blue bow tie, strolled quickly onto the stage, was roundly applauded and—to the delight of concertgoers—the concert was on.

It was an afternoon of fugue, concerto, cantata and choir.

The program ranged from the opening Ricercare in Six Parts from the Musical Offering, one of the greatest works of all music in fugal style, to the funeral ode for the Dutchess of Eberhardine, which is known to be arranged from portions of Bach's lost Passion According to St. Mark.

That Mr. Much will continue conducting both in this country and abroad after leaving the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came through readily and visibly in his forceful handling and musical excursion into Johann Sebastian Bach's intricate polyphonic writing in the Ricercare six part fugue.

The funeral cantata, commissioned on the death of the Queen of Poland in 1727, brought out the full talents of the orchestra and also the full Tanglewood choir in a church-like blending of voice and musical instrument. The Trauer-Ode Cantata No. 198 comprised the second half of the afternoon program and Mr. Munch treated the beautifully-moving score with full dignity and restraint. Soloists included Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass.

The popular Fifth Brandenburg Concerto in D Major and the melodic Concerto for Violin and Oboe in C minor completed the well-balanced afternoon program. The orchestra lingered long and sweetly over the concerto's hypnotic second movement adagio. All three soloists, Luka Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, violin; and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; were roundly applauded for their energetic solo performance in the Brandenburg concerto.

Tanglewood's emphasis now shifts to Mozart with an all-Mozart weekend coming up. The Friday-Saturday-Sunday weekend will include the Symphony 38, 39, and 40, Eine Kleine Nachmusik, and the Divertimento for Strings.

The concert on Aug. 26 at Tanglewood will be Mr. Munch's last appearance as head of the famed orchest-

Whitestone

OPENING CONCERT in the main shed at Tanglewood was attended by Mrs. Lytle Hull, a member of the board of the New York Philharmonic, who visits with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hoving of Stockbridge. A total of 3,690 were at the all-Bach event. Jay C. Rosenfeld's review of concert is on Page 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 7 1962

Massachusetts' Tribute to Dr. Munch

Whitestone

Governor John A. Volpe, right, presents Dr. Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a Paul Revere bowl as a token of commonwealth's appreciation of his 13 years as the orchestra's leader. Presentation was made last night in Tanglewood Shed as orchestra opened its eight-week season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly
JUL 12 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE.
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
July 5, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE.
MOUNT VERNON ARGUS
Thursday, July 5, 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
D 43,126
JUL 5 1962

Music, Drama Festivals On From Tanglewood To Anchorage, Alaska

Summer travelers to various parts of the United States, Canada and Alaska can be assured of excellent musical and dramatic programs, the Chicago Daily News Service reports.

Tanglewood, which opened yesterday and has extended its season this summer to eight weeks, will include in its program music of Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Tchaikovsky and other familiar names. Charles Munch, who at the close of the season will end 13 years as musical director at the Berkshire Festival, will be conductor for the first nine concerts. After which the podium will be taken over by Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and William Steinberg.

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the 1962 Berkshire Festival on July 6 at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed, in an all Bach program. Dr. Munch, who retires from his position with the Orchestra following the final Tanglewood program (Aug. 26), has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 7 1962

Massachusetts' Tribute to Dr. Munch

Whitestone

Governor John A. Volpe, right, presents Dr. Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a Paul Revere bowl as a token of commonwealth's appreciation of his 13 years as the orchestra's leader. Presentation was made last night in Tanglewood Shed as orchestra opened its eight-week season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly

JUL 12 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE.
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
July 5, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
MOUNT VERNON ARGUS
Thursday, July 5, 1962

YONKERS, N.Y.
HERALD STATESMAN
43,126

JUL 5 1962 Buffalo

...ic, Drama Festivals ... From Tanglewood ... Anchorage, Alaska

...avelers to various ... United States, Can... ...a can be assured ... musical and dra... ...ns, the Chicago ...vice reports.

... which opened ... ...as extended its ...mer to eight ...e in its pro... ...h, Beethoven, ... and other ...rles Munch, ... the season ...musical di... ... Festival ... the first ...hich the ...ver by ...rmandy ...

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the 1962 Berkshire Festival on July 6 at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed, in an all Bach program. Dr. Munch, who retires from his position with the Orchestra following the final Tanglewood program (Aug. 26), has invited Pierre Monteux, William Steinberg, and Eugene Ormandy to be guest conductors during the season.

42

REVIEWS. 1ST WEEK.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 7 1962

Music Review

All Bach Concert at Tan

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST orchestral concert of the 1962 Tanglewood season was played last night in the great Shed by a small chamber-sized ensemble of front desk men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire program was from Bach and consisted of a Brandenburg concerto, two of the suites, a contata and a two-piano concerto.

Serge Koussevitzky inaugurated the plan of devoting the opening weeks to programs of Bach and Mozart but they have now outgrown the concert hall capacity and the front half of the Shed now is completely filled. An audience of 3,690, a thousand more than the attendance at the first concert last year, recalled director Charles Munch and a constellation of soloists in the various works.

The brisk, clear evening was a propitious one for strings, and the Boston orchestral tone was in evidence throughout the program but nowhere more so than in the opening Brandenburg concerto, the third, in G major. It was as fresh and buoyant as though it was a new experience for the musicians. As a matter of fact, it was the tenth time this one has been played on these premises.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY on occasion inserted a contrasting movement, always from Bach, between the two allegros. Munch was content to play the bridge of the two chords as written and then to proceed into the good-natured finale.

Munch then brought out his "specialite de la maison"—the B minor suite in which Doriot Anthony Dwyer was the flute soloist. There was an innovation in the seating this time with Miss Anthony and her fellow-flautist James Pappoutsakis seated at the desk of honor where normally the concertmasters sit. It was a good move, too, for the lovely tone of the flute was heard here to more advantage than from its usual spot in the midst of the winds and all the solos came through in their proper clarity and perspective instead of merely the ever-sparkling final "Badinerie."

* * *

THE SENSATION of the evening was the singing of soprano Bethany Beardslee in the Cantata no. 51 "Praise Jehovah, all ye people." This is written for string orchestra and trumpet. Roger Voisin supplied his usual brilliant work, using a shrill D trumpet. The final choral calls for two solo violins which Richard Burgin and Clarence Knudson played with easy authority. But Miss Beardslee's musicianship in the opening Aria "Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen" was a super vocal feat. Bach uses the voice like an instrument here and Miss Beardslee was completely in command. The ensuing recitative afforded her the opportunity to show another side of her competence and her compactly-focused voice sustained the long lines with warm fluency.

The new starting hour of the evening concerts—8 o'clock—allows the audience to depart at a more reasonable hour, provided the musical repast is limited to a few courses, but Munch served a lavish fare last night. For us one might have been eliminated but to name which one would have presented a quandary beyond our capacity to choose. In any case, for reasons probably not due to anything but our own powers of absorption, we found the half after the intermission less stimulating.

* * *

THE C MAJOR concerto for two pianos brought to the stage the well-known team of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. There was vivacity in the final fugue but the preceding two movements had been less than exciting. The adagio, in which the accompanying orchestra is silent, was played without forward urgency.

The D major suite, number 4, was played to end the program. The fascinating dances, bourrees, gavotte and minuet, ending with the Rejouissance

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 9 1962

BACH CONCERT ATTRACTS 4922 TO BERKSHIRES

Opening Week End at Tanglewood Shows Attendance Up

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon gave a performance of works by Bach before an enthusiastic audience of 4922, concluding the first week end of the eight-week Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

Weather Helps

Sunny weather and a blue sky greeted music lovers for Sunday afternoon's concert. The first portion was conducted by Charles Munch and the last half by Hugh Ross, head of the choral department at the Berkshire Music Center with 57 voices from the center making up the Tanglewood Choir.

The week-end attendance at the all-Bach concerts totaled 16,855, which is 1501 more than last year for the opening week end. Sunday's audience was about 500 more than a year ago.

The program opened with Bach's ricracare from "The Musical Offering," followed by the Brandenburg Concert No. 5 in D Major for orchestra with Lukas Foss, piano, Richard Burgin, violin, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute.

Final Presentation

Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe, were soloists in the concerto for violin and oboe in D Minor to conclude the first half of the Sunday program.

Mr. Ross conducted the orchestra and Tanglewood Choir with four vocal soloists in the final presentation of the afternoon, Bach's Trauer-ode Cantata No. 198. The soloists were Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor and David Clatworthy, bass.

The Saturday night concert drew 5890 to the Music Shed, the program opened with the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major for strings. Lukas Foss, piano soloist in Bach's piano concerto in D Minor, was given a tremendous ovation at the end of his performance. Four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were soloists in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F Major. They were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin.

Pro Musica Group

The next major event at Tanglewood will be the appearance Wednesday evening at eight in the Theatre Concert Hall of the New York Pro Musica, featuring early Baroque and instrumental chamber music.

Friday and Saturday evenings at 8, and Sunday afternoon at 2.30 the Boston Symphony with Charles Munch conducting will present the first of two week-end concerts of works by Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 680,265
JUL 9 1962

Music: Week-end of Bach

16,855 Flock to Hear Tanglewood Series

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., July 8—The Bach week-end drew 16,855 persons to Tanglewood and the second and third concerts devoted to the chosen master were of the same high quality as the first.

The weather was of a high order, too. As Saturday night's concert began, the setting sun sent long golden fingers into the Shed. This afternoon was so lovely that the overflow of 3,000 listeners spread out on the lawns and basked in sunshine and warm summer air as well as in Bach.

The "Trauer-Ode," the funeral cantata that Bach composed in 1727 to mourn the death of Christiane Eberhardine, Electoral Princess of Saxony, was the week-end's closing work. It was the only selection of the festival within the festival that was not well known.

The Saturday-Sunday schedule included three more "Brandenburg" Concertos — Nos. 2, 5 and 6—the orchestra Suite No. 3 in D major, the six-voice ricercare from "The Musical Offering," and two more instrumental concertos.

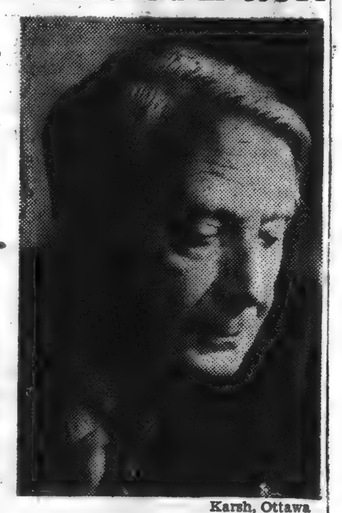
The selections gave members of the Boston Symphony a chance to shine as soloists, for, with one exception, Charles Munch assigned the solo parts to his instrumentalists. The exception, Lukas Foss, was not far from the fold, as he was the orchestra's pianist from 1944 to 1950.

Mr. Foss was the soloist in Saturday night's Piano Concerto in D minor, and he won an ovation from the audience. It was easy to understand why. He played the corner movements with the greatest of elan, and the slow movement was as romantic as if he had been playing Chopin. It was lovely in its own way, even if stylistically it was well in advance of the Baroque.

All of the Bach, in fact, was romantic in cast. But that tends to be Dr. Munch's way with the composer, and no one was in a mood to quarrel with him, especially in this, his final summer as director of the Berkshire Music Festival. Indeed, the affection openly felt for him by his players and by his followers was part of the pleasure of the week-end.

Dr. Munch must have felt it himself. Some of his fast movements tended to be as rapid as ever but, on the whole, his conducting was relaxed and genial. He seemed to mold the phrases of the adagios with special tenderness. His pauses between movements were those of a man who knew that his listeners were with him and that they loved Bach as much as he did.

Mr. Foss was also the soloist in this afternoon's Fifth "Brandenburg" Concerto. Richard Burgin, the retiring concert master, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the first flutist, were the co-soloists. They were doing double duty, for the evening before they were soloists in the Second "Brandenburg."



Karsh, Ottawa
Charles Munch

Roger Voisin too was a soloist in the Second "Brandenburg." His playing of the high part on a specially built trumpet was one of the features of the series. Without ever piercing unpleasantly, the little trumpet sounded out brilliantly, and although it had so distinctive a sound it remained balanced with the ensemble.

Ralph Gomberg was the oboist in the Second "Brandenburg" and so-soloist this afternoon in the Concerto for Violin and Oboe in D minor. In this work, the other soloist was Joseph Silverstein, who is succeeding Mr. Burgin at the close of the Tanglewood season.

Messrs. Silverstein and Gomberg were beautifully matched, with the oboe being just as supple and songfull as the violin. The way their differing timbers contrasted within a framework of exceptional rhythmic and dynamic cohesion was a joy to hear, particularly in the slow, interweaving slow movement.

Orchestra members joined heartily in the applause, just as they had done for other members earlier.

The thirty-seven-minute "Truer-Ode," led by Hugh Ross, sounded thin and a little tentative after the familiar works played by the orchestra under its own conductor. Nor could it be said that the Princess inspired Bach to music of special distinction. So the cantata came as a gentle but somewhat feeble finale.

The chorus consisted of fifty-seven Berkshire Music Center students whom Mr. Ross has coached in the week they have been here. The soloists were Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass. Next week-end's three concerts will be devoted to Mozart.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, July 9, 1962

Tanglewood Weekend Lures 16,855 Music Fans

While no records were shattered, opening weekend attendance total at Tanglewood came to 16,855, compared to last year's opening weekend total of 15,354.

Tanglewood officials also note yesterday afternoon's concert, an all-Bach program held in 90-degree-plus weather, attracted 4,922 music lovers, contrasted to last year's opening Sunday audience of 4,418.

Additional figures:

Nearly 2,400 turned out for Saturday morning's 10 a.m. "open rehearsal" and 5,890 heard the all-Bach program the same evening. (The Saturday morning open rehearsals, with admission set at $1.50, benefit the orchestra's Pension Fund.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 7 1962

Tanglewood Opens Another Season With 3,700 Present

Tanglewood opened another season last night and in the first of three consecutive Bach concerts attracted some 3,700 music lovers including Massachusetts Gov. and Mrs. John A. Volpe.

Munch Directs

Tonight Charles Munch again directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra in selections by the German master and tomorrow afternoon the 1962 Berkshire Festival's opening weekend ends with a third round of Bach.

Pianists Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin made their debuts last night with "Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C major." Bethany Beardslee was soloist in the "Cantata No. 51 for Soprano," and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, was soloist in the Bach "Suite No. 2."

Tonight's concert which starts at 8:00 p.m., will include the "Bradenburg Concerto No. 6" and "Piano Concerto in D minor."

Tomorrow's Concert

Tomorrow the third Bach concert, which starts at 2:30 p.m., includes "Bradenburg Concerto No. 5," the "Concerto for Oboe and Violin" and "Cantata: Trauer-Ode," featuring the Tanglewood Choir.

Gov. Volpe presented a silver Paul Revere bowl to Dr. Munch who will retire as Boston Symphony Orchestra director after the Tanglewood concerts.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 7 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Munch Opens 25th Festival

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS., JULY 7.—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony's Chamber Group began the 25th season of Berkshire Festival weekends traditionally with a Bach program last night. The event attracted 3,690 persons, a larger audience than a year ago. The night was clear and cool.

The familiar aspects of Much's interpretation of Bach became evident as the concert opened with the Third Brandenburg Concerto; the personal element accentuated by the big retards at the end of each movement; the rhythmic drive!

Welcome Variety

His accustomed virility did not materialize until the Suite No. 2 was under way. Then the concert began to jell.

A certain welcome variety in selections brought four soloists and broader repertory. The Suite No. 2 inevitably had Doriot Anthony Dwyer to play the flute part. She now sits up front and receives the recognition she has always earned and deserved. It was she who supplied the real animation and the finest artistry of the evening.

Bethany Beardslee sang the soprano solo in Cantata No. 51 with plenty of vocal agility for the florid aspect and a lovely sense of line in the lyric stretches. With volume somewhat limited, she could not sail out of the doldrums into which the work fell, but she contributed plenty of quality.

Competition presented itself, of course, in the trumpet solos of Roger Voisin and in the Duo Violin "Concerto" played by Richard Burgin and Clarence Knudson in the final movement. The work provided a pleasant variation on the instrumental fare.

Catches Spirit

Vitya Bronsky and Victor Babin made their Tanglewood debut playing the Concerto in C No. 2. Their approach was matter-of-fact, eeding a touch of elegance to bring the work into focus. Their momentum, however, admirable, was simply not enough; some more color in crescendos would have helped.

The evening worked up to the Suite No. 4 the performance of which finally caught the spirit expected from the start. The coarse-grained violin playing acquired some refinement, but this is not characteristic of Munch's Bach. It may take a day or two before Bach gets his due.

To see this chamber group in its music shed setting is always a treat. The white coats stand out before the background of maroon screen and gray walls. To hear the sound now enhanced by the new acoustical panels remains a fresh experience. Perhaps the purity of the sound prompts some of the reservations about the orchestral playing. It is not often that a harpsichord completes so favorably with 40 strings. Tanglewood has its special attractions.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 9 1962

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, JULY 8, 1962.

Music: Tanglewood Fete

Munch Enters 13th and Last Festival Year

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass, July 6 — Bach began opening the Berkshire Music Festival in 1945. That was when the festival was much reduced by World War II. But what began as a stop-gap measure —a Bach week-end—became a tradition. And Friday night Bach provided the music when the Boston Symphony gave its first concert of the twenty-seventh festival.

The orchestra was reduced to fifty because of the character of the baroque music, but the program was nevertheless given in the shed. The festival has expanded year by year, and it was the season before last when the Bach week-end, formerly given in the smaller theatre-concert hall, was transferred to the larger shed.

●

This year the festival is expanding from seven weeks to eight, but the first Bach concert had some of the intimacy of the earlier Bach week-end. It was a lovely, clear night, and the audience of 3,690—less than enough to fill the shed — was fairly small. Notwithstanding the empty seats under cover, most of those on the lawn preferred to stay out in the open, and a new moon in the sky kept them company.

This is Charles Munch's thirteenth and final season as the festival's music director, and the applause that greeted his first appearance suggested the particular warmth of friends who wanted to pay him honor. When he began the brisk and vigorous Allegro of the Third "Brandenburg" Concerto it was clear that he was in good form.

There was a general feeling of tradition, too, for old-timers were obviously pleased to be greeting friends of other summers again. Again the concert was pleasant to see as well as to hear. The white-coated instrumentalists made a pleasant sight against the maroon screen stretching across the back of the stage, and overhead there were the flying triangles of the charcoal gray acoustical panels.

The concert had three women soloists. In the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings there was Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's principal flutist. She played with the charm, agility and beauty of tone that she has made so familiar.

Bethany Beardslee

Then came Bethany Beardslee, who was the soprano in the Solo Cantata No. 51, "Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen." She was as accurate and precise as an instrumentalist, yet she also sang with style and imaginative feeling, and this listener has never heard her voice sound as clear and lovely.

The third woman instrumentalist, Vitya Vronsky, appeared with her husband, Victor Babin, in the Concerto in C major for Two Pianos, No. 2.

●

The concerto was beautifully coordinated — between the orchestra and the two pianists and between the pianists themselves. Since this concerto has a lot of unaccompanied sections, the duo-pianists were able to make a definite mark. Their playing was especially subtle and gentle in the Adagio.

As far as the audience was concerned, they were the biggest hit of the evening.

The high-spirited Suite No. 4 in D major closed the program. Mr. Munch's tempos and dynamics were all well chosen, and the orchestra played in unison with skill as well as much warmth and expressiveness of tone. The cheerful and courtly suite, more elaborately scored than the other works, made an excellent closing piece for a refreshing evening.

Music Review

Sunday at Tanglewood

By ELSBET WAYNE

THE FIRST weekend of the newly enlarged Tanglewood season concluded with a third concert traditionally devoted to compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach. For the Sunday afternoon program, Dr. Munch drew from the very familiar as well as from the rarely heard of Bach's creations.

The orchestra opened with the Six Part Ricercare from the "Musical Offering." The term ricercare refers to the precurser of the fugal technique. The theme, introduced by the second violin and taken up in turn by violin 1, cello, viola, flute, and bass, historically dates back to Frederick the Great who submitted it to the composer when they met in 1747. The rather ponderous — intentionally academic — work in which the string orchestra is enhanced solely by the exquisite timbre of the flutists Dwyer and Pappoutsakis, was read with both sonority and lucidity.

* * *

BY NOW Tanglewood audiences can almost expect an annual reading of the Brandenburg Concerti written in 1721 and dedicated to the Markgraf von Brandenburg. This season is no exception. What made yesterday's performance exceptional, however, was the pianism of Lukas Foss. Joined with Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and Richard Burgin, violin, the Concerto Grosso emerged as the acme of the baroque. The semitive give and take between the solo instruments, the vigorously joyful final movement with its initial upward leap, the adagio which might also be called a trio as it is just that, are the high lights of this work.

The piano was most impressive, not for the flawless technique throughout the concerto, but for the linear concept of the long cadenza at the end of the first movement. Here the audience witnessed a constantly expanding, never-breaking line of music which only the piano can produce, and which is so characteristic of the composer that it may be found in an simple a piano composition as the prelude in C major from the Well-Tempered Clavichord.

The subtitle of the Concerto No. 5 suggests a scoring for cembalo. With such an instrument readily available, Dr. Munch must have had good reason for substituting the piano.

* * *

SOLOISTS Virginia Babikian, soprano, Evelyn Sachs, contralto, Nico Castel, tenor and David Clatworthy, bass, joined with the Tanglewood Choir in the performance of the Cantata No. 198, the Ode of Mourning, accompanied by the orchestra and conducted by Hugh Ross. The work comprises three choruses and four recitatives and arias. Miss Sachs' voice quality was very impressive as was the clarity of Mr. Clatworthy's diction. The chorus, placed in an interesting arrangement of alternating voices, performed a difficult task very creditably, and if a weakness could be detected here and there in the performance, it can be ascribed only to the brief period available for preparation.

Two popular soloists, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, joined forces in a rendition of the Concerto for Violin and Oboe in D minor. To be sure, we know of no such setting by Bach, and we are therefore safe to assume that this concerto is a transcription of one written for violins. Three movements, Allegro, Adagio, Allegro, are contrasted in mode and mood to produce a work full of lovely melody. Especially beautiful is the middle movement with the theme being treated alternately by the solo instruments, with its changes of major and minor tonality, and with the pizzicato accompaniment by the ensemble.

The affinity between orchestra and conductor emanates from a hardly perceptible yet most authoritative direction. In the case of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, conducting may mean use of baton or smile, vigorous bodily motion or complete negation. These ingredients result in great performance.

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175

JUL 9 1962

43

Tanglewood Opening Is Auspicious

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — The all-Bach programs performed at Tanglewood over the week end with Charles Munch conducting began this 25th season of music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed under as auspicious a beginning as ever accompanied the annual festival. Nearly 17,000 attended these "early season" programs before the major festival which comes after two weeks of all-Mozart music beginning this coming week end.

The performers, soloists and chorus, as well as the orchestra itself were all in excellent form. The weather was as nice as one can find in the Berkshires at their best with the beautiful lawns at Tanglewood showing some of the damage due to lack of rain for many weeks in Western Massachusetts. Friday night's opening concert was graced by the Governor of Massachusetts. This week-end's attendance represented an increase of some 1,500 over the Bach series last year. The Sunday afternoon audience of almost 5,000 heard a fine performance of "Brandenburg Concerto No.5, in D Major" with Lukas Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, violin, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. This was followed by the "Concerto for Violin and Oboe, in D Minor," with Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe. Silverstein will become concert master of the Boston Symphony this fall when Richard Burgin retires.

The concert opened with a six part fugue, "Ricercare." The second half of the concert presented the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross in an excellent performance of "Trauer-Ode, Cantata No. 198" with soloists, Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass. The choir of more than 50 young voices was making its first appearance this season and the audience was warm in its applause.

To Retire

Audiences this year are well aware that at the end of the eight weeks of summer festival concerts Dr. Munch will take his leave of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and retire. Applause and ovations during, and at the end of each concert, indicate the warmth of the audience for their beloved conductor. The audience of 5,900 Saturday night heard Lukas Foss, soloist, in the "Piano Concerto in D Minor" give a brilliant performance with power and spirit and indicated, by calling him back three times, that he has become a Tanglewood, "regular."

"The Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F Major, for Trumpet, Flute, Oboe and Violin with strings" brought the quartet of the orchestra's leaders in a popular performance with Roger Voisin, Doyiot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, and Richard Burgin. The concert had begun with 16 musicians in the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, in B Major, for Strings." It ended with an exquisite and vigorously spirited performance of "Suite No. 3, in D Major, for Orchestra." The opening concert Friday night brought 3,700 for performance of "The Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G Major, for Strings," Miss Dwyer in "Suite No. 2, in B Minor, for Flute and Strings," "Cantata No. 51" with Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist and Roger Voisin, trumpet soloist. The two-piano team of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin in "Concerto in C Major for Two Pianos, No. 2" completed the program. An additional 2,352 heard the first of the Saturday morning open rehearsals.

Concerts this year will be given during an additional week, making it an eight-week festival continuing until Aug. 26. Evening concerts this year begin at 8 p. m., a half hour earlier than in other years. This week end it will be all Mozart, beginning on Friday night. With Dr. Munch and Concertmaster Burgin retiring at the end of the summer, audiences at this year's festival will be savoring every moment of their performances.

S. M.

S. M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 9 1962

Music Review

Bach at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST Tanglewood weekend was favored with ideal Berkshire weather, and the Shed was barely adequate to shelter the audiences of yesterday afternoon and Saturday night which came to hear the last two of the Bach trio of concerts.

One of the phenomena of the current musical scene is the appearance of Bach on the best-seller list. One might say the "reappearance" of Bach for he has never been so universally popular as in this day and age. The Brandenburg concertos, of which three were heard in these two programs, and the suites, of which three were included, were neglected for a century after their composer had departed, and it is only within the memory of a great share of the audience that they have been brought to their present degree of familiarity.

* * *

THE SATURDAY night program brought impressive performances of two of Bach's most inspired works: The sixth Bradenburg and the D minor piano concerto.

Bach in his search and exploration for varied sound formulas must have been intrigued by the potentialities of the lower registers of the strings, as was Mozart later as evidenced by his string quintets. Bach's success in utilizing them is attested in the B flat Brandenburg where only violas, cellos and basses are called for. Charles Munch must be given credit for the success of these performances, but it would be less than fair not to mention that he had at his disposal two platoons of probably as surpassing excellence as may be available in the orchestral market. Joseph de Pasquale as solo viola and Samuel Mayes, solo cello, are principals of sections which are a joy to hear in any situation. And in one specifically designed to fit and display their attributes they are doubly so.

* * *

BACH DIVIDED the sections into smaller segments, thus achieving a more complete harmonic structure. Munch abetted the printed pages by instilling great contrasts and subtle nuances within the narrow confines of his forces. In the phrases where the viola has steps of diminished sevenths to begin, Munch allowed the section to play with lovely restraint and the section tone came through with beautiful sonority. If the cellos and basses here had obeyed the indications of their conductor and adjusted their grunting drones to his ideas, the effect would have been even more impressive.

Lukas Foss has now played the D minor concerto with this orchestra on this stage six times, and each performance seems to have increased in inner expressiveness and tension. One could actually see and feel lines surge and phrases grow under his musicianly fingers. He has outgrown mere pianism. This was lofty music-making. And Munch entered into the spirit of the evening with an equal comprehension for a marvelous moment of cohesive thinking.

* * *

FOSS DISPLAYED a gamut from the far reaches of poetry to the other end of the map of heroics. Once past the opening tutti and a less than disciplined fingering of the opening solo cluster Foss soared into the spheres of great music. Even in the unspoken stretches of the slow movement he was able to convey cumulative lines in the silences, and in the finale there was an exhilaration which occurs all too rarely.

The second half of the evening was the second Bradenburg with Roger Voisin playing the B flat piccolo trumpet, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin. The program closed with the D major

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 9 1962

Bach Enthusiasts Satiated At Tanglewood's Opening

By D. E RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

Bach enthusiasts flocked t Tanglewood, the summer home o the Boston Symphony Orchestr in the Berkshires near Lenox Mass., over the weekend to hea three programs conducted b Charles Munch featuring work by Johann Sebastian Bach.

* * *

THE CONCERT yesterday af ternoon drew an audience of 4, 418. The Friday evening concer drew 3,690 and the Saturday con cert 5,890 in addition to 2,353 at tending the Saturday mornin open rehearsal. This brought th opening of the season weekend to tal of concertgoers to 16,855 o 1,501 more than last year's open ing weekend attendance.

At yesterday's program Dr Munch shared the podium with Hugh Ross, who conducted the fi nal number—the "Trauer-Ode Cantata number 198" for orches tra and chorus.

The string section of the Bos ton Symphony, which is featured in the Bach orchestra, is noted for its brilliance and purity of tone.

THE PROGRAM opened with the "Ricercar a 6" from the "The Musical Offering" with its noble theme and rich string textures, its ethereal flute passages and harpsichord background.

Lukas Foss, pianist; Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Dariot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, appeared as soloists in the "Brandenburg Concerto number 5 in D major." The beautiful cadenza for piano which closes the opening movement was given outstanding performance by Foss. The thoughtful and beautifully modulated "adagio affettuoso" movement for the solo trio was a marvel of ensemble playing. The concluding "Allegro" is a vigorous dance theme with solo trio and orchestra parts finely balanced.

* * *

THE CONCLUDINIG number conducted by Dr. Munch was the "Concerto for Violin and Oboe in D minor" with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster-elect; and Ralph Gomberg, oboist, as soloists. We do not remember having heard this concerto before and were quite charmed with it. It is more closely involved with the orchestral accompaniment than is the "Brandenburg number 5" and quite different in character. It is a singing music with both violin and oboe singing to and answering each other, particularly in the slow movement with its soft pizzicato and harpsichord accompaniment.

* * *

HUGH ROSS chose as soloists for the "Trauer-Ode" Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass.

The "Trauer-Ode" was written, according to the excellent program notes of the Tanglewood programs, for a memorial service on Oct. 17, 1727, for Christiane Eberhardine, Queen of Poland and electoral Princess of Saxony, who had died in September of that year.

Following an orchestra introduction, the first chorus is impressive in its simplicity. This is followed by recitatives and arisas for soprano and contralto, a recitative for tenor, a chorus interlude and then a tenor aria; a recitative and arioso for bass and a concluding chorus.

Ross is not only an excellent trainer of choruses but is a fine conductor and the "Trauer-Ode" is magnificent music.

* * *

TANGLEWOOD is continuing this season for a total of eight weekends concluding on Aug. 26. This summer season marks Dr. Munch's final season as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony and Burgin's final appearances as concertmaster of the symphony.

Concerts are scheduled each week on Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
JUL 9 1962

All-Bach Program Well Balanced

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

At yesterday's Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home since 1936, both Charles Munch who conducted, and the Bostonians were in full command during another diversified all-Bach program.

Mr. Much, attired in a formal tux set off with a collegiate blue bow tie, strolled quickly onto the stage, was roundly applauded and—to the delight of concertgoers—the concert was on.

It was an afternoon of fugue, concerto, cantata and choir.

The program ranged from the opening Ricercare in Six Parts from the Musical Offering, one of the greatest works of all music in fugal style, to the funeral ode for the Dutchess of Eberhardine, which is known to be arranged from portions of Bach's lost Passion According to St. Mark.

That Mr. Much will continue conducting both in this country and abroad after leaving the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came through readily and visibly in his forceful handling and musical excursion into Johann Sebastian Bach's intricate polyphonic writing in the Ricercare six-part fugue.

The funeral cantata, commissioned on the death of the Queen of Poland in 1727, brought out the full talents of the orchestra and also the full Tanglewood choir in a church-like blending of voice and musical instrument. The Trauer-Ode Cantata No. 198 comprised the second half of the afternoon program and Mr. Munch treated the beautifully-moving score with full dignity and restraint. Soloists included Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass.

The popular Fifth Brandenburg Concerto in D Major and the melodic Concerto for Violin and Oboe in C minor completed the well-balanced afternoon program. The orchestra lingered long and sweetly over the concerto's hypnotic second movement adagio. All three soloists, Luka Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, violin; and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; were roundly applauded for their energetic solo performance in the Brandenburg concerto.

Tanglewood's emphasis now shifts to Mozart with an all-Mozart weekend coming up. The Friday-Saturday-Sunday weekend will include the Symphony 38, 39, and 40, Eine Kleine Nachmusik, and the Divertimento for Strings.

The concert on Aug. 26 at Tanglewood will be Mr. Munch's last appearance as head of the famed orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
JUL 10 1962

Tanglewood Season Off To Fine Start

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — The all-Bach programs performed at Tanglewood over the week end with Charles Munch conducting began this 25th season of music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed under as auspicious a beginning as ever accompanied the annual festival. Nearly 17,000 attended these "early season" programs before the major festival which comes after two weeks of all-Mozart music be-

The performers, soloists and chorus, as well as the orchestra itself were all in excellent form. The weather was as nice as one can find in the Berkshires at their best with the beautiful lawns at Tanglewood showing some of the damage due to lack of rain for many weeks in Western Massachusetts. Friday night's opening concert was graced by the governor of Massachusetts, This week-end's attendance represented an increase of some 1,500 over the Bach series last year. The Sunday afternoon audience of almost 5,000 heard a fine performance of "Brandenburg Concerto No.5, in D Major" with Lukas Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, violin, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. This was followed by the "Concerto for Violin and Oboe, in D Minor," with Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe. Silverstein will become concert master of the Boston Symphony this fall when Richard Burgin retires.

The concert opened with a six part fugue, "Ricercare." The second half of the concert presented the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross in an excellent performance of "Trauer-Ode, Cantata No. 198" with soloists, Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass. The choir of more than 50 young voices was making its first appearance this season and the audience was warm in its applause.

To Retire

Audiences this year are well aware that at the end of the eight weeks of summer festival concerts Dr. Munch will take his leave of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and retire. Applause and ovations during, and at the end of each concert, indicate the warmth of the audience for their beloved conductor. The audience of 5,900 Saturday night heard Lukas Foss, soloist, in the "Piano Concerto in D Minor" give a brilliant performance with power and spirit and indicated, by calling him back three times, that he has become a Tanglewood, "regular."

"The Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F Major, for Trumpet, Flute, Oboe and Violin with strings" brought the quartet of the orchestra's leaders in a popular performance with Roger Voisin, Doyiot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, and Richard Burgin. The concert had begun with 16 musicians in the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, in B Major, for Strings." It ended with an exquisite and vigorously spirited performance of "Suite No. 3, in D Major, for Orchestra." The opening concert Friday night brought 3,700 for performance of "The Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G Major, for Strings," Miss Dwyer in "Suite No. 2, in B Minor, for Flute and Strings," "Cantata No. 51" with Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist and Roger Voisin, trumpet soloist. The two-piano team of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin in "Concerto in C Major for Two Pianos, No. 2" completed the program. An additional 2,352 heard the first of the Saturday morning open rehearsals.

Concerts this year will be given during an additional week, making it an eight-week festival continuing until Aug. 26. Evening concerts this year begin at 8 p. m., a half hour earlier than in other years. This week end it will be all Mozart, beginning on Friday night. With Dr. Munch and Concertmaster Burgin retiring at the end of the summer, audiences at this year's festival will be savoring every moment of their performances.

S. M.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUL 11 1962

Berkshire Presentation Thrills Bach Devotee

The first weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox attracted an attendance of 16,155 as against last year's 15,354. Saturday night's concert drew the largest number of Bach devotees, 5890, with Sunday afternoon's almost totalling 5000, actually 4922.

Charles Munch, retiring director of the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Festival School, conducted all three Bach concerts. Vronsky and Babin, duo pianists, made their first appearance at Tanglewood on Friday evening playing the C major concerto. Their second performance will be next Sunday afternoon in Mozart's E-flat concerto for two pianos.

Bach's sixth Brandenburg concerto opened Saturday's concert. A dark contrast to the third, (also for strings, but defining sharply those of the upper register,) which was played Friday evening, it was given a superb reading. Vigorous and middling deep tones of the two "viola da ntsvvos' predominate with almost constant bass tones to darken the three movements' colour in varying degrees.

According to Terry's "Bach's Orchestra," the "viola da braccia" was simply the ordinary viola of Bach's time, or "arm viol," to distinguish it from the "viola da gamba" or "leg viol."

Enthusiastic and prolonged approval was tendered Lukas Foss at the close of his expressive and sensitive performance in the D minor concerto for piano and orchestra. Never at rest, the piano alternates its solo and accompanying role throughout this unusual concerto, the first movement a contrast between rhythmically forceful and lighter, freer passages. The playful interaction of the third was handled by Dr. Munch and the orchestra with perceptive attention for the pianists and their integrated roles.

The second Brandenburg concerto and the third Suite completed a delightful program. The first with its thrilling and sometimes chilling notes of the high trumpet is a repeated source of wonder at the ability of Roger Voisin to maintain the prescribed notes. Here also the continuo instruments violin, flute, oboe and trumpet, playing in pairs, sound almost like interior duets. For famous "Air for the G string" in the final Suite sounded too slow, but Dr. Munch continues to demand this tempo, which does remove it from the usual popular rendition.

Warm weather again prevailed, with higher humidity, for Sunday's final Bach concert, with orchestra members as soloists in the first half of the program. A broadly outlined performance of the "Ricercare" from "The Musical Offering" brought a warmth of anticipation through its six-part fugue to the obviously attentive audience.

Applause after each movement of most concertos seems the order of the day, so eager is the audience of today to express its approval and appreciation, with repeated appearances demanded at the final close of the concerto. Bravos and huzzahs accompany these, with cameras flashing and clicking future pictorial references. Sunday is no exception.

Although the fifth Brandenburg concerto for orchestra with flute, Doriot Dwyer, violin, Richard Burgin, and piano, Lukas Foss, seemed to invite a scarcely noticed but undermining variety of tempo among its soloists after a brilliant beginning, it coalesced before the end of the first movement. Mr. Foss likes to set the tempo, and may seem to pull at the other players, but it maintains an excitement and an urging forward which Bach's allegros demand for perfect accord and enjoyment.

Purity of ensemble became the adagio affetuoso among the three soloists, exquisitely tendered and endured. The virtuosity of each is known and was again recognized through the final flowing allegro.

Physical resemblance was noticed between Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, playing the D minor concerto, first written in C minor. Differences of instrumental tone dispelled the simulation. At times the silky sweetness of the violin could scarcely be heard over the orchestra or the oboe's harsh and penetrating sound. This is usual in the first movement, but was noticed in the Adagio also. It was still a joy to hear.

Hugh Ross conducted the Tanglewood choir, with soprano Virginia Babikian, contralto Evelyn Sachs, tenor Nico Castel and bass David Clatworthy in the Trauer-Ode, Cantata No. 198. The funeral cantata is an expression of general sorrow at the death of a beloved queen, Christiane Eberhardine of Poland. It preserves five parts of Bach's Passion according to St. Mark, composed in 1731, otherwise irretrievably lost, according to most Bach scholars.

It is always surprising to hear each newly formed Tanglewood choir and marvel at its ability to encompass a new work for a creditable performance, with members previously unknown to each other. The confidence of their able conductor Hugh Ross, is no small part of this accomplishment. The soprano's recitative and aria were delivered with a clean full voice, the bass' with vigor and incisively clear diction. The contralto's high tones were warm and pleasant the tenor, although he possesses good sound but small resonance, made the best of his interminable parts. The final chorus was the most expressive in its simplicity.

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Tuesday, July 10, 1962

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
JUL 10 1962

45

Music Review

Tanglewood Opens on Grand Scale With Bach-Filled Weekend Concerts

By LISA TATE

LENOX, Mass. — Tanglewood is a phenomenon on a grand scale.

That thousands (16,855 by actual count) should flock to Lenox to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing three all - Bach concerts as they did this opening weekend can be only partially explained by the increased mobility of an affluent society, by the increasing popularity of "culture," by the revolution in recording that has made many people music - conscious by bringing music into their homes, by the golden reputation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and by the expert publicity that has made Tanglewood "the place to go."

This partial explanation must also make room for the addicts of music, the addicts of Bach in particular. But the only possible total explanation for such a large-scale manifestation of public interest in the music of an 18th century church musician is that Tanglewood, plus Bach and the Boston Symphony must be many things to many people.

Different Vantage Points

I start out in this vein because I had occasion to hear two of the three concerts last weekend and to hear and see them from entirely different vantage points. Each concert presented at least a segment of the immense variety of forms which Bach used. I was sorry to miss the Sunday concert, which presented even a further of his forms, the choral.

The staples of the Friday and Saturday night concerts were the orchestra compositions of Bach —three of the six Brandenburg Concertos (Nos. 2, 3 and 6) and the Suites 2, 3 and 4. Of these, the Brandenburg No. 2 for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin stood out for its extraordinary brilliance and the virtuosity of the four solo performers from the orchestra, particularly Roger Voisin, whose trumpet cut through clean and sharp but never shrill.

The second Suite (in B Minor) for flute and strings also has surefire appeal in lilting dance forms it includes and in the unassuming mastery of the Boston Symphony's first flutist (one of the three female players in the BSO), Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Her fingers fly and her breath seems endless.

As for programming, this is the third opening concert I have heard which has featured this particular suite with this particular player. For that matter, most of the same Brandenburgs and Suites were played in the first two concerts last year. Perhaps it is to the Boston Symphony that we owe the incorporation of Bach's music into the public domain, by the constant repetition of such already-appealing works.

This, though, is not without its musical dangers, for it leads the listener too easily into taking Bach as musical gospel, and taking only a small part of his voluminous output as the main message. I must say, though, that it is a joy to hear a series of concerts constructed on the work of one composer. Too often symphonies hop all over the program map, sometimes selecting composers that seem to kill one another's music.

It would be silly to go out of my way to try to find fault with a virtually flawless orchestra, as the Boston Symphony is, under the direction of the compelling conductor that Charles Munch is. If one sits close up to the stage, under the roof of the great shed, one sometimes senses a professional nonchalance written into the faces and gestures of the orchestra members.

But if they are nonchalant, they are so good technically that they get by with it. I heard only one instance of an audible slip in the cello section.

A Musical Machine?

Not a bad reminder at that, for when one sits on the lawn outside the shed and looks toward the stage, one sees but the abstraction of an orchestra, white-jacketed, moth-shaped, with only the lone figure of the conductor and his baton distinct. And the music, though very much "alive," seems the product of one giant musical machine rather than the sum of its many individual players.

The only musical question that came to my mind was Munch's interpretation of the Brandenburgs and the Suites, where an extreme slowness of pace marked all the slow movements. At moments they sounded loose rather than deliberate, at moments almost too lyrical, and at the last moment so retarded one was caught wondering when and whether he would allow them to be resolved.

The Friday program also included the performance of Bach's Concerto No. 2 in C Major for Two Pianos played by the husband-and-wife team of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. Their playing was fluid, their piano manner impassive (as I believe appropriate to Bach), and the blend of their playing and pianos so perfect as to be indistinguishable, since the pianos were placed side to side, the sound rising from one central point.

Foss' Varied Talents

On Saturday night, Lukas Foss "brought down the shed" by his not so impassive playing of Bach's Piano Concerto in D Minor. Foss teaches composition at the Berkshire Music Center (the on-going part of Tanglewood) and also conducts, having been a pupil of the late Serge Koussevitsky whose name is so inextricably linked with that of the Boston Symphony and of Tanglewood. So Foss' playing was all the more impressive, a brilliant display of just one of his musical talents.

An Impressive Start

All in all, the season at Tanglewood is off to an impressive start. There is a certain grandiose quality about it that could scare the true music-lover away, but the results of the orchestra's playing are too good to let that stand in the way. And these concerts did not include the full orchestra by far. They were performed by the first desk men who comprise a chamber-sized orchestra. The full orchestra will not be assembled until the fourth week (July 27-29) of the season, which is extended to eight weeks this year. The chamber orchestra will devote itself strictly to the works of Mozart for the next two weekends.

There is some irony in coming away with the impression that a large part of Tanglewood's audience is made up of people who must be exposed to a variety of similar concerts during the winter season. Yet they drive great distances to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the summer, while Vermonters, who do not often have the chance to hear large symphony orchestras playing large symphonic works, do not seem willing to drive the little-over-an-hour that it takes to get to Tanglewood from here. Tanglewood is worth at least one try!

14,000 Attend Opening of Tanglewood Season

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

All roads led to Tanglewood over the weekend, inaugurating the 28th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in the heart of the Berkshires. The magnet which drew some 14,000 music lovers from nearly every state in the Union was the smaller orchestra of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its retiring conductor, Charles Munch, whose final concert of the 8-week's season will be held Sunday afternoon, Aug 28 with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

During the past two years, the preliminary concerts, featuring the music of Bach and Mozart, the audiences have been moved to the large shed, with its fine acoustical properties, allowing protection from the elements. The three-day exposition to the prolific musical output of Johann Sebastian Bach was magnificently conceived and executed by Mr. Munch and the appropriately smaller group for the proper projection of the chamber-type music.

We sensed a greater degree of enthusiasm, not only from the audience, but also, from the members of the orchestra for the friendly cooperation of Mr. Munch, his businesslike approach to his conducting and the warmth and sympathetic approach to his chosen tasks.

Masterful Performance

Mr. Munch had prepared a program which explored the music of the German composer, including many of the Brandenburg Concertos, a piano concerto with guest soloist, Lukas Foss, giving a masterful performance. First chair men were introduced as soloists with Roger Voisin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Richard Burgin in the Concerto, No. 2. The concerto for two pianos was excitingly played by Vronsky and Babin, who, incidentally, will be heard in Albany next fall with the Civic Music Association.

Bethany Beardslee, soprano and Roger Voisin shared honors in the Cantata, No. 5. And as is traditional, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flutist of the orchestra, received an ovation after the playing of the Suite, No 2.

One of the outstanding works was the concerto for violin and oboe, with Joseph Silverstein violinist newly appointed concertmaster of the orchestra, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe soloist.

Final Work

The final work on the Sunday afternoon program was the Trauer-Ode Cantata, No. 198 with many of the themes reminiscent of the composer's "Passion, according to St. Mark" in which the orchestra was assisted by the Tanglewood Choir, under the direction of Hugh Ross, head of the choral department of the Berkshire Music Center. The difficult recitatives and arias were artistically sung by Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor and David Clatworthy, baritone.

Perfect weather, if a bit on the warm side preempted the large music shed and overflowed onto the lawns and tree-shaded oases of the beautiful Boston Symphony Orchestra estate, overlooking the Stockbridge Bowl. A heartening aspect of the triple-concerts was the great number of young people, many from nearby summer camps, who listened, attentively to the magnificent contrapuntal effects and beautiful harmonic achievements of Mr. Bach and their recreation by Dr. Munch and his superb orchestra.

46

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6, • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e).
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 9 1962

In Music Shed

All-Bach Concerts Open Weekends at Tanglewood

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Charles Munch, Conductor. Opening weekend with three all-Bach concerts.
Brangenburg Concerto No. 3
Suite No. 2
Cantata No. 51
Concerto for Two Pianos (C Major)
Suite No. 4
Brandenburg Concerto No. 6
Piano Concerto in D Minor
Brandenburg Concerto No. 2
Suite No. 3
Ricercare, from the Musical Offering
Brandenburg Concerto No. 5
Concerto for Oboe and Violin
Cantata: Trauer-Ode No. 198

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

It is rare that a concert program of one composer will leave the listener less than surfeit, not, one might add, does the composer usually fare too well himself. His style and characteristics become idiosyncrasies which finally often appear as undeniable faults. The first three concerts of the 1962 Tanglewood season began this weekend with seven concerti, three suites, two cantatas and a ricercare, all by one composer. That this did not pall the listener nor show up any grave faults is perhaps a rather good measure of the genius of the composer, Johann Sebastian Bach.

Usual Dilemma

Other than the nests of birds in the eaves of the shed that set up loud clamors when a parent flew in with not enough food to go around, there were still a few times when Bach didn't have everything his way. There was, as with any chamber orchestra today, the dilemma of providing the delicate intimacy of a limited group of musicians (intended, of course for a limited audience) to listeners, not only in a massive shed, but those on the lawn as well. How to preserve the personality of the instruments, the sound, the dignity of the music — without enfeebling all with force, effects, and the necessary neglect of the natural assets so small a group engenders — is still a most baffling problem. The Brandenburg 6th became somewhat muffled and dulled in the darkness of viola and celli, and the slow ricercare became indistinct whispering glossing over important detail and elaboration.

There were, however, frequent upturns in performance when there was either enough body of sound for Munch to deal in lager lines, or when the many fine soloists, generally refusing to impress sounds beyond moderate means, made magnificent success in expressing ideas.

Bethany Beardslee, a member of the New York Pro Musica with a naturally small but excitingly accurate voice, sang the beautifully ornamented Cantata No. 51 with the brilliance of a most intelligent virtuoso. The distinct and virile performance by Lucas Foss in the D Minor Concerto, though no doubt most taxing to the performer, was perhaps the most successful of all the many solos.

Other Soloists

Other soloists included Roger Voisin, long famous for his excellent trumpet and clarino performances; Doriot Dwyer in a warm and careful performance of the Suite No. 2 for flute and strings; Vronsky and Babin in the Concerto for two Pianos; and Concert-master, Richard Burgin in the Brandenburg Nos. 2 and 5.

This list of soloists would be quite incomplete without mention of the gorgeous adagio of softly plucked strings to the duet of Joseph Silverstein, violinist and Ralph Gomberg, oboist, in the violin and oboe concerto.

Cantata No. 198, least successful of all the works performed, is a relatively "new" work to the musical public. The performance hinted of a fine potential in musical substance without ever clearly indicating it. With the exception of the contralto, Evelyn Sachs, the soloists were immature voices. Though the chorus is too new to pass fast judgment, it was here rather insecure, as, too, was the orchestra, especially in continuo passages where the incredibly abmiguous mode of Mr. Ross' conducting appeered to promote some confusion.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 10 1962

PIANIST LUKAS FOSS is congratulated by Dr. Charles Munch, right, on his performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night of Bach's piano concerto in D minor, a high light of the first weekend concerts by the BSO in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Saturday night's concert drew 5,890 persons, and 4,922 turned out yesterday afternoon, bringing the weekend total to 16,855, which is about 1,500 more than the first week last year.

Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUL 9 1962

MUSIC

'Berkshire Festival'

By Ronald Eyer
Music Editor

A crecendo of musical quality as well as public interest reached its crest with the concerto for piano, violin and flute, featuring Lukas Foss as piano soloist, yesterday afternoon during the opening weekend of the Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony in three all-Bach programs Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon under Charles Munch who is retiring as conductor and musical director of the festival after this season, its 25th at Tanglewood.

The series got off to a slow start Friday with a listless performance of the Brandenburg concerto No. 3 for strings which was muddy in texture and leaden-footed of pace. There also was some disagreement among the players about intonation.

Things began to look up with the familiar suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings brightened by the cool delicacy and flawless technique of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, but fell into doldrums again with the cantata "Jauchzet Gott in Allen Landen" in which the soprano of Bethany Beardslee proved to be insufficiently robust, particularly in the low range, to take the dominant position, along with the excellent solo trumpet of Roger Boisin, needed to create urgency and immediacy of interest for the listener.

But the audience which filled barely half of the vast music shed, was roused by the majestic, serenely contemplative performance of the C major concerto for two pianos by Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. The middle movement, an adagio for the pianos unaccompanied, was poetic dialogue of the most moving quality.

A considerably larger crowd and more alert orchestra was on hand Saturday night for an electrifying performance of the concerto in D minor, played as a piano concerto (originally it undoubtedly was something else) by Lukas Foss, the first of his appearances in which he scored heavily in the series. He brought an impassioned lyricism, suggestive of what we are prone to consider 19th rather than 18th century style to the slow movement and irrestible rhythmic vitality and fire to the brilliant opening and closing allegros.

Even the orchestra stood up to applaud a performance which, while not orthodox had a rightness and authenticity born of the player's own conviction and ability to translate it into convincing sound.

This was followed by the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin with Mr. Voisin, Miss Dwyer and Ralph Gomberg and Richard Burgin as the respective soloists. Mr. Voisin, attempting the high trumpet harmonics originally written for the obsolete clarino of Bach's day was asking for trouble, but he managed to get a clear, bright tone and a remarkable degree of accuracy in intonation.

The "Funeral Cantata" might have been expected to receive yesterday's laurels, but instead they went again to Mr. Foss who, taking the clavier or cembalo part on the piano, made an impressive affair of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Miss Dwyer and Mr. Burgin as assisting soloists on flute and violin.

I say assisting advisedly for, though the keyboard part clearly was meant to dominate the other soloists in musical interest, it also was made to dominate them accoustically yesterday and sometimes the flute and voilin lines were barely audible.

But Mr. Foss again infused his performance with such vital rhythmic movement and, particularly in the long cadenza of the first movement, built his climaxes with such skill and power that he made up single handedly for the anemia of the other solo voices.

The concerto for violin and oboe in D minor, with the beautifully echoing discourse between the two instruments in the adagio movement, was played with highly polished artistry by Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Mr. Gomberg.

But the "Funeral Cantata," conducted by Hugh Ross, was a distinct disappointment. Although the tanglewood choir sang very well for Mr. Ross and seemed well prepared for its task, the performance as a whole, thanks partly to Mr. Ross' rub-a-dub method of conducting and also, apparently, to lack of preparation with the soloists.

Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto, and David Clatworthy, bass managed their highly ornamental solos with Aplomb and occasionally even pro-professional finish, but the young tenor, Nico Castel, was not yet adequately prepared to handle baroque music of such difficulty.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Music Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

JUL 9 1962

Munch Conducts All-Bach Concert in Berkshire Festival

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Lenox, Mass. — In the unchanging tradition of Tanglewood the first Sunday concert paid homage to the genius of Bach and in so doing traversed some fairly unfamiliar musical terrain.

How often, for instance, does the Bach fancier have an opportunity to hear the so-called "Trauer-Ode," the Concerto for Oboe and Violin in D minor, or anything from "The Musical Offering"?

The purists might castigate Charles Munch for programming only the final Ricercare from "The Musical Offering" but they would probably not deny that it is a little masterpiece in its own right. The performance of this six part fugue came off beautifully Sunday afternoon in an expansive, dignified treatment.

* * *

MUNCH'S only concession to popular taste was the inclusion of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 but with soloists of the caliber of Richard Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, and Lukas Foss it was understandable. This was particularly true in the case of Mr. Foss.

In fact, he earned an ovation after the brilliant cadenza of the first movement, which he handled with rock-like rhythmic solidity and plenty of tonal color. This was an excellent performance all around and deserved the warm reception it was accorded.

Joseph Silverstein, the incoming concertmaster of the orchestra, and Ralph Gomberg were the soloists for the Violin and Oboe Concerto and they acquitted themselves in virtuoso fashion. It was only in the ravishing second movement that I had any reservations. I would have preferred a less businesslike approach.

* * *

THE CANTATA No. 198, better known as the "Trauer-Ode," is important to scholars because it preserves five sections of Bach's "St. Mark's Passion," which is otherwise lost to us. However, it is a lovely work in its own right.

The chorale that forms the keystone of this cantata has a somber persuasion that is worthy of the composer at his best and the contralto aria with its instrumental accompaniment is a haunting creation.

Hugh Ross was the conductor of the so-called Tanglewood Choir and he brought a warmth and conviction to this work that was exemplary. If the soloists were not quite in the same league with some that have appeared here in the past, they handled their parts with dignity and taste.

Close to 5,000 persons turned out for this opening Sunday concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

JUL 10 1962

47

17,000 Attend Tanglewood Week-End

Bach, Brats And Birds Were Evidenced At Opening Of Berkshire Music Festival

The weekend's concerts at Tanglewood were definitely for the birds.

Perhaps the city of Washington has solved its starling problem, but the music shed in Lenox certainly has a long way to go. But the feathered soloists did not seem to bother concert-goers who bought almost 17,000 tickets to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the 27-year-old Berkshire Music Festival.

Following a tradition initiated in 1945, the first three concerts were dedicated to J. S. Bach. The next two weekends will feature Mozart chamber music.

Beginning July 20, the rest of the orchestra will sally down the turnpike for the major concert series which lasts through the end of August.

Many Changes

This seems to be a year of transition for both the BSO and the Festival. On Friday night, over 3½ thousand people greeted Dr. Munch and the 50-piece orchestra with a solid ovation — tribute to Munch's last opening concert. After a Brandenburg concerto, two suites, a contata and a two-piano concerto, Gov. Volpe presented the retiring conductor a Paul Revere Bowl as a token of the Commonwealth's appreciation of his 13 years as the orchestra's music director.

In the fall, Erich Leinsdorf leaves his position with the Metropolitan Opera Assn. in New York to succeed Munch as music director of the BSO.

Also retiring after this season is Richard Burgin, who has held the esteemed position as concertmaster for the past 42 years. Mr. Burgin, however, will continue as associate conductor.

For the Tanglewood concert series, other major changes include the extension of the season from seven to eight weeks and the rescheduling of the Friday and Saturday evening concert hours from 8:30 back to 8. The latter move was made in onder to allow the audience a chance to get away a little earlier. As it turned out, however, Parkinson's Law came to play and the music seemed to last that much longer.

Since we missed the Friday evening performance, we were only able to find out that the soloists were grandly received. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, who performed again Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon charmed all three audiences. There also were soprano soloists Bethany Berdslee and the husband-wife piano combination Victor Babin and Vitya Vronsky. The only complaint we heard was that Dr. Munch never chooses anything new for these programs.

Children's Hour

The Saturday morning open rehearsal of the Sunday program could be called the children's hour. There must be a hundred and one summer camps in Berkshire County. All of them advertise a trip to Tanglewood as an effort to aesthetize their broods and all of them send busloads to these morning rehearsals. So between the brats and the birds—who were both now in full chorus — we couldn't really concentrate on what was going on.

Someone mentioned to us that Dr. Munch is not the showman that his immediate predecessor Serge Koussevitsky, was at these rehearsals. Conductor Koussevitzky often interrupted the orchestra and made the rehearsal a real labor. Munch, however, is not quite so exacting even though the tempo seemed to bit spotty in places. Later, Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral department, acted more Koussevitzkian and made his group repeat one pattern of three measures three times before he was satisfied.

That evening's performance consisted of two Brandenburg Concerto's, a piano concerto and a suite. Lukas Foss won the top applause rating of the weekend with his dramatic and hard-hitting solo in Piano Concerto in D Minor. We thought he did much better than when we had seen him last two summers ago when he conducted one of his own compositions which sounded like an interpretation of a New York traffic jam. Mr. Burgin, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg and Roger Voisin—all members of the orchestra — were soloists in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2.

Top Attendance

Attendance for this concert topped the other two with the entire front section of the 6,000-seat Shed well filled. The lawn was also heavily populated with couples, blankets and what-not.

Sunday afternoon, Dr. Munch began his program with a performance of the complex Ricercare from "The Musical Offering." Also included were the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 with Mr. Burgin, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Foss and Messrs. Gomberg and Silverstein soloists in the Concerto for Oboe and Violin. The Brandenburg Concerto is a rather soft-spoken piece despite its vigorous rhythm in the beginning, yet seemed to interest everyone the most.

The Tanglewood Choir under Hugh Ross made its first official appearance in the second half of the concert. This group is composed of unpaid devotees who, we are told, had had a hard time practicing up for this appearance in one short week. However, they were very impressive.

In all, the weekend was a substantial success both judging by the performances and the attendance figures were up from last year. According to a groundskeeper friend, all that was needed was a little rain to get the lawns in shape. Bubbled one official, indications point to this being the best season yet.

By RUBY ALIMANSKY

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 9 1962 Buffalo

AT TANGLEWOOD

Weekend of Bach

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 9.—Almost 17,000 people attended the Bach weekend of the Berkshire Festival this year. This exceeds last year by 1,500, suggesting that each year more and more people are lured to these Tanglewood concerts.

A varied program brought interesting diversity to yesterday's concert. Three numbers might be called old friends, the Ricercare from "The Musical Offering," which must appeal especially to Charles Munch; the Fifth Brandenburg Concerto, one of Bach's truly great chamber works; the Concerto for Violin and Oboe in D Minor, one of Bach's famous transcriptions. New to these Bach sessions was the "Trauer-Odo," Cantata No. 2, offered by Hugh Ross as a variation to the usual programing.

The sobering influence of the Trauer-Ode came as an anticlimax to the brightness and gaiety of the earlier part of the program. The work is probably more significant to devout Bach students than to the general public. While Mr. Ross may have realized its musical overtones, the "Exuberant Expression" which Albert Schweitzer found in the score did not materialize in this performance. The result was all the more sobering.

Exuberance Lacking

David Clatworthy, the bass soloist, caught attention for his vitality as well as his voice. Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto, and Nico Castel, tenor, sang acceptably, but they only suggested the latent beauty of the music. The Tanglewood Choir sang the choruses creditably, but again the performance did not begin to move the listener as expected.

The other works went well; at no time, however, did the performances generate a feeling of genuine exuberance. Both the Fifth Brandenburg and the D Minor Concerto have that potentiality. As the piano soloist in the Brandenburg, Lukas Foss erred by overpedaling.

The prominence of the piano at the expense of the other two soloists, Richard Burgin, violin, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, robbed their role of proper balance. Mr. Foss has played the first movement of this work more sensitively and more brilliantly on other occasions. All three sounded more congenially adjusted in the adagio, where they were entirely on their own.

Oboe Impresses

Ralph Gomberg's impressive oboe playing dominated the other concerto. Joseph Silverstein's violin sounded sweet but pale beside it. The use of the harpsichord raised the question of its absense in the Brandenburg Fifth. Authentic performances are not, necessarily, the rule at Tanglewood. As far as I can gather, neither are great ones at the moment.

An interesting aspect of Mr. Munch's conducting yesterday was his observation of more justly proportioned final cadences at the end of each movement, a reverse of Friday night performances. I did miss his customarily animated Bach which usually stimulates me, however personal the interpretation.

The Saturday night concert drew 5,890 people for a program listing the Brandenburgs Nos. 6 and 2, the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Mr. Foss, and the Suite No. 3.

48

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860

JUL 9 1962

Bach Concerts Draw Record Audiences

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The first week at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, drew audiences totaling more than those of 1961 and setting a new record for concerts of Bach music.

Charles Munch, who always conducts Bach and Mozart with obvious love and enjoyment, was in good fettle, leading the small ensembles of Boston Symphony players with fine attention to detail. If some passages were rushed and made unduly emphatic, for contrast there were lovely episodes where leisurely poetry prevailed.

Friday evening offered Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 for strings, Suite No. 4, and three works with soloists. Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute was much admired in Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings. Cantata No. 51, "Jauchzet Gott in Allen Landen," was scored entirely for soprano solos by Bethany Beardslee, and trumpet solos by Roger Voisin, with strings.

Piano Soloists

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin were soloists in the Concerto in C major for Two Pianos.

Sunday afternoon brought forward a flock of soloists. Lukas Foss, pianist, Richard Burgin, violinist, and Mrs. Dwyer, flutist, were heard with the ensemble in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5. Joseph Silverstein's violin and Ralph Gomberg's oboe were featured in the Concerto in D minor. The other orchestral work was a six-part fugue, a Ricercare, from "The Musical Offering." The Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross, was introduced in "Trauer-Ode," Cantata No. 198, Virginia Babikian, Evelyn Sachs, Nico Castel and David Clatworthy.

The very well-attended Saturday night concert brought Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 6 and 2, the Piano Concerto in D minor, and Suite No. 3.

The marvel of the Concerto No. 6 was its perfect sound projection without any electrical aids. A group of 15 strings, from which Bach omitted violins, was backed by the small inner shell onstage, and easily voiced its tone throughout the large Music Shed and out onto the surrounding lawns for many picknickers. The unique scoring for lower instruments suggested alternately by a quiet joyousness and deeply tranquil thought.

Foss Is Ideal

Foss was, as on several previous occasions, the ideal soloist, in this unremitting part, working with 30 strings, and ranging from delicacy and deftness in the opening "allegro" to slow and personal expression in the "Adagio." There were plenty of bravura moments in the final "Allegro."

The solo instruments, Voisin's trumpet, Mrs. Dwyer's flute, Gomberg's oboe and Burgin's violin, were mellow and well-balanced in the opening of Concerto No. 2, with strings. The trumpet was silent in the Andante, but Bach gave it a continually priminent place in the final movement, a role Voisin filled brilliantly and with excellent taste.

The full ensemble of 40 players was heard in Suite No. 3, with its noble Overture, by turns fugal, jubilant and grave, its heart-melting Air for strings (heard so often as the "signature" at Worcester Festivals) and gay, vigorous dances, the two Gavottes, Bourree and Gigue.

The next two weekends will be devoted entirely to music of Mozart. This year all evening concerts begin at 8 o'clock, half an hour earlier than heretofore.

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE, MONDAY, July 9th 1962

Bach Enthusiasts Satiated At Tanglewood's Opening

By D. E RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

Bach enthusiasts flocked to Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires near Lenox, Mass., over the weekend to hear three programs conducted by Charles Munch featuring works by Johann Sebastian Bach.

* * *

THE CONCERT yesterday afternoon drew an audience of 4,418. The Friday evening concert drew 3,690 and the Saturday concert 5,890 in addition to 2,353 attending the Saturday morning open rehearsal. This brought the opening of the season weekend total of concertgoers to 16,855 or 1,501 more than last year's opening weekend attendance.

At yesterday's program Dr. Munch shared the podium with Hugh Ross, who conducted the final number—the "Trauer-Ode, Cantata number 198" for orchestra and chorus.

The string section of the Boston Symphony, which is featured in the Bach orchestra, is noted for its brilliance and purity of tone.

* * *

THE PROGRAM opened with the "Ricercar a 6" from the "The Musical Offering" with its noble theme and rich string textures, its ethereal flute passages and harpsichord background.

Lukas Foss, pianist; Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Dariot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, appeared as soloists in the "Brandenburg Concerto number 5 in D major." The beautiful cadenza for piano which closes the opening movement was given outstanding performance by Foss. The thoughtful and beautifully modulated "adagio affettuoso" movement for the solo trio was a marvel of ensemble playing. The concluding "Allegro" is a vigorous dance theme with solo trio and orchestra parts finely balanced.

* * *

THE CONCLUDINIG number conducted by Dr. Munch was the "Concerto for Violin and Oboe in D minor" with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster-elect; and Ralph Gomberg, oboist, as soloists. We do not remember having heard this concerto before and were quite charmed with it. It is more closely involved with the orchestral accompaniment than is the "Brandenburg number 5" and quite different in character. It is a singing music with both violin and oboe singing to and answering each other, particularly in the slow movement with its soft pizzicato and harpsichord accompaniment.

* * *

HUGH ROSS chose as soloists for the "Trauer-Ode" Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Sachs, contralto; Nico Castel, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass.

The "Trauer-Ode" was written, according to the excellent program notes of the Tanglewood programs, for a memorial service on Oct. 17, 1727, for Christiane Eberhardine, Queen of Poland and electoral Princess of Saxony, who had died in September of that year.

Following an orchestra introduction, the first chorus is impressive in its simplicity. This is followed by recitatives and arias for soprano and contralto, a recitative for tenor, a chorus interlude and then a tenor aria; a recitative and arioso for bass and a concluding chorus.

Ross is not only an excellent trainer of choruses but is a fine conductor and the "Trauer-Ode" is magnificent music.

* * *

TANGLEWOOD is continuing this season for a total of eight weekends concluding on Aug. 26. This summer season marks Dr. Munch's final season as regular conductor of the Boston Symphony and Burgin's final appearances as concertmaster of the symphony.

Concerts are scheduled each week on Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64 387

JUL 9 1962

At the Concert

Bravos Open Last Season for Munch

By TED STRONGIN

[illegible] were bravos at the [illegible] the first Boston Symphony concert of the year [illegible] night at Tanglewood. [illegible] the appreciation [illegible] ostedly due to the [illegible]'s knowledge that [illegible] the beginning of [illegible] Charles Munch. [illegible] first concert of [illegible].

Certainly, the applause was not because of any great novelty of programming or any unexpected turn of interpretation. It was all-Bach again at Tanglewood and so it will be for the entire week end, just as next Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons will be all-Mozart. The reason, of course, is that the Boston Symphony's season must of necessity be schizophrenic. Part of the orchestra is still back home playing along the Charles River.

And so it has been in past seasons, all-Bach and all-Mozart. The end of the Munchian regime leads to directly to conjecture about the future. Will the Boston Symphony under its new leader, Erich Leinsdorf, decide to recognize the immense and varied literature for small, split orchestra that exists. If the orchestra has to split up, at least let it get a new strain of the disease. Maybe we'll get a little Handel, or Haydn, or Hindemith, or even lesser known but worthy names who have composed fine works.

★ ★ ★

AND THEN NEXT year will bring new interpretations. Mr. Munch's Bach is by now familiar. Its positive qualities are familar: stately, gentle, rich.

Its negative ones are also familiar: underemphatic, unpungent, dull-edged at times sluggish; too —and at best just short of brilliance.

Mr. Munch's fare Friday night was generous and varied for a one composer program. There was a Brandenburg for an appetizer, the No. 3, played unfocussed. Real listening began with the B minor Suite for Flute and Strings. Here again, Mr. Munch's concept is soft and breezy and in the Rondo and Minuet, very slow. This is not the cold, classic, perfectly-formed aristocratic B-minor suite that other conductors take it for. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first desk flutist, the very fine soloist, was wasted here. She has more elegance than she was allowed to show.

DISAPPOINTMENT of the evening to me was the debut of Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin in the C major, two piano concert. My feeling is, it's a mistake for an established two-piano team to try this work. The counterpoint gets lost. The wonderful play of individual personality in each of the parts as they reply to each other and jostle each other, was submerged in the perfectly merged, joint sound made by the experienced team.

The C major should drive staunchly and joyfully forward. It stayed perfunctorily in one place Friday night.

But finally, in the last work of the evening, the orchestral suite No. 4, Mr. Munch came somewhat to life. The bravos came right after the suite.

Along the way, Bethany Beardslee very prettily sang the Cantata No. 51 "Jauchzet Gott in Allen Landen." She could not compete with the massed orchestra in volume —which is a way of saying that balance was not achieved in the huge shed. Roger Voisin provided some passages of brave trumpet obbligato. All in all, this is not the most concentrated and distinguished Bach ever, this cantata, at least not when done in circumstances just the opposite of intimate, as are Tanglewood's in the Shed.

VRONSKY AND BABIN, DUO PIANISTS

$30 2ND. WEEK JULY 9TH TO JULY 15TH.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 13, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

SERENADE IN B-FLAT MAJOR FOR 13 WIND INSTRUMENTS, K. 361

I. Largo; Molto allegro
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto
IV. Rondo: Allegro molto

PIANO CONCERTO NO. 25, IN C MAJOR, K. 503

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Andante
III. (Allegretto)

Soloist: CLAUDE FRANK

Intermission

SYMPHONY NO. 38, IN D MAJOR, "PRAGUE," K. 504

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Andante
III. Finale: Presto

Mr. FRANK plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 14, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

DIVERTIMENTO IN D MAJOR, FOR STRINGS, K. 136

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Presto

SINFONIA CONCERTANTE FOR VIOLIN AND VIOLA, IN E-FLAT, K. 364

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Andante
III. Presto

Soloists: RUTH POSSELT; JOSEPH DEPASQUALE

Intermission

EIN MUSIKALISCHER SPASS ("A MUSICAL JOKE") FOR STRINGS AND HORNS, K. 522

I. Allegro
II. Menuetto: Maestoso
III. Adagio cantabile
IV. Presto

SYMPHONY NO. 39, IN E-FLAT MAJOR, K. 543

I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale: Allegro

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director

Berkshire Festival, Season 1962

MUSIC SHED AT TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS

Sunday Afternoon, July 15, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

EINE KLEINE NACHTMUSIK, SENENADE FOR STRING ORCHESTRA, K. 525

I. Allegro
II. Romanza: Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Rondo: Allegro

CONCERTO IN E-FLAT MAJOR, FOR TWO PIANOS AND ORCHESTRA, K. 365

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Rondo: Allegro

Soloists: VITYA VRONSKY AND VICTOR BABIN

Intermission

LES PETITS RIENS, BALLET SUITE, K. 299B

Overture
Andantino
Larghetto
Allegro
Gavotte gracieuse
Pantomine
Gavotte

SYMPHONY IN G MINOR, NO. 40, K. 550

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

Miss VRONSKY and MR. BABIN play Steinway Pianos

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728

Berkshire Festival . . .

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season today at 2:30 p.m. with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, making voluntary contributions for the support of the Music Center, are entitled to the first performance of the season by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Tuesday evening at 8:00 p.m. Other Friends events this week are a concert for chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall at 4 p.m. Friday and next Sunday's chamber music program in the Chamber Music Hall at 10:00 a.m.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will make their annual benefit appearance at Tanglewood at 8 p.m., August 18. The second benefit is scheduled for August 22.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554

JUL 14 1962 Buffalo

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, July 14, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, July 14, 1962

Mozart Concerts At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present two concerts of the music of Mozart at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend.

Following an open rehearsal this morning, the evening concert at 8 p.m. today will feature Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloists.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. With Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, and Symphony No. 40 in G minor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 14 1962

Four Soloists At Tanglewood On Weekend

TANGLEWOOD—Violinist Ruth Posselt and the first violist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Joseph de Pasquale, will be soloists tonight at 8 in the Music Shed when Charles Munch and the BSO will present another all-Mozart program.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, with Dr. Munch on the podium, the Boston Symphony concert will feature as piano soloists during the Mozart program, Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin.

Six European Tours

Miss Posselt, a native of Medford, has been a frequent soloist at Tanglewood with the BSO. She is a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center in the department of chamber music. She made her debut at the age of nine, giving a recital at Carnegie Hall. Her subsequent career has included six tours of Europe where she has appeared in recitals and with the principal orchestras of various countries. In the United States, she has also appeared as soloist with the leading symphony orchestra of this country.

Mr. de Pasquale, a native of Philadelphia, graduated with honors from the Curtis Institute. During World War II, he played with the U.S. Marine Corps Band in Washington, D.C., subsequently joining the viola section of the American Broadcasting Company Orchestra in New York City. He became first viola of the BSO in 1947 and has given numerous solo performances with the orchestra.

The Sunday afternoon soloists are making their first appearance with the BSO. Natives of Russia, they were fellow students under Artur Schnabel in Berlin when they first met. They were married and came to America and in 1937 made their debut in New York. They now make their home in Santa Fe, N.M.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 10, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Tuesday, July 9, 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUL 10 1962 Buffalo

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636
JUL 12 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

JUL 10 1962 Buffalo

Boston Symphony Slates 3 Concerts at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, will present three concerts of music by Mozart at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend.

* * *

FRIDAY AND Saturday concerts open at 8 p.m. and the Sunday concert at 2:30 p.m.

Claude Frank will be soloist with the orchestra Friday in a performance of the "Piano Concerto, K. 503." Also scheduled for Friday evening are the "Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361" and the "Symphony number 38, 'Prague.'"

An open rehearsal will be conducted Saturday at 10 a.m.

The Saturday evening program will include the Mozart "Divertimento for Strings, K. 136"; "Sinfonia Concertainte for Violin and Viola in E flat, K. 364" with Ruth Posselt, violinist; and Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloist; "Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 52" and "Symphony number 39, K. 543."

* * *

VITYA VRONSKY and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season Sunday afternoon. They will perform the Mozart "Concerto in E flat Major for Two Pianos" with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concert will include "Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525," "Les Petits Riens, Balet Suite, K. 299B" and the "Symphony in G minor, K. 550."

The New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, music director, will present the second concert in the Tanglewood chamber music series tomorrow at 5 p.m. They will present a program of early Baroque vocal and instrumental music.

A number of events will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center, this week. A concert of chamber music by students will be presented Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall. The Tanglewood Choir will give a performance of church music in the Theater Thursday at 8 p.m. The second lecture on "Aspects of Music" will be presented Friday at 4 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall and the traditional Sunday morning chamber music concert by students of the music center will take place at 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834

JUL 8 1962

Berkshire Festival

Three concerts devoted to music by Mozart will make the Berkshire Festival weekend at Tanglewood, July 13-15. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will also be heard at an Open Rehearsal Saturday morning at 10. The programs will be as follows:

Today at 2:30, Music Shed. Bach program. Ricercare from "The Musical Offering;" Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss soloists); Concerto for Oboe and Violin (Ralph Gomberg and Joseph Silverstein soloists); Cantata: Trauer-Ode, Hugh Ross conducting; soloists: Virginia Babikian, soprano; Evelyn Saks, contralto; Nice Castel, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass.

Wednesday at 8 pm, Theater-Concert Hall. Early baroque vocal and instrumental music presented by New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg director.

Friday at 8, Music Shed. Mozart program. Piano Concerto (K. 503), Claude Frank soloist; Serenade for 13 Winds (K. 361); "Prague" Symphony.

Saturday at 8 pm, Music Shed. Mozart program. Divertimento for Strings (K. 136); Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat (K. 34), soloists: Ruth Posselt, violin, and Joseph De Pasquale, viola; "A Musical Joke" (K. 522); Symphony in E-flat (K. 543).

Sunday, July 15, at 2:30 pm, Music Shed. Mozart program. Concerto in E-flat for Two Pianos, soloists: Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin; Eine Kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525); Ballet Suite, "Les Petite Riens (K. 299-B); Symphony in G minor (K. 550).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 16 1962

Attendance Is Up 4,607 At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Attendance at the Berkshire Festival concerts for the first two weeks of the Bach-Mozart series is 4,607 ahead of the corresponding period last year. The weekend concerts and Saturday morning's open rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew 19,224 here, compared to 16,170 a year ago. The biggest crowd of the season thus far showed up Saturday night when 6,214 persons attended the all-Mozart concert. An audience of 5,891 turned out Sunday afternoon.

52

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

GREENVILLE LOCAL
Thursday, July 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, July 8, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CAIRO HERALD
Thursday, July 12, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD-AMERICAN
Sunday, July 8, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY REPUBLICAN AMERICAN
Thursday, July 12, 1962

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D: 69,446 S. 116,010

JUL 8 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 210,123

JUL 8 1962

RAVENA, N.Y.
NEWS-HERALD
W. 1,700

JUL 13 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

JUL 14 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

JUL 11 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JUL 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

JUL 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,890

JUL 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350

JUL 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,191

JUL 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

JUL 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
NEW MILFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4030

JUL 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 7 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063

JUL 11 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 10 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175

JUL 9 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682

JUL 8 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

JUL 12 1962

Berkshire Festival Features Mozart Works This Weekend

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts of the music of Mozart at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this weekend. For Friday's concert (July 13, 8:00) Dr. Munch has invited Claude Frank to be soloist with the Orchestra in a performance of the Piano Concerto, K. 503. Also to be heard will be the Serenade for Thirteen Winds, K. 361 and the Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

Following an Open Rehearsal Saturday) (July 14; 10:00) morning, the evening concert (8:00 p.m.) will consist of the Mozart Divertimento for Strings, K. 136; Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, in E-flat, K. 364, with Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, Principal Viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as soloists; Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns, K. 522; Symphony No. 39, K. 543.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season on July 15 at 2:30 p.m. With Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

The New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, Music Director, returns to Tanglewood for the second concert in the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday (July 11, 8:00 p.m.). They will present a program of Early Baroque Vocal and Instrumental Music.

During the second week of the Tanglewood season a number of events are available to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make contributions for the support of the Music Center and its scholarship funds. On Thursday (July 12) there will be a concert of chamber music by the students in the Chamber Music Hall at 4:00 p.m. and that evening at 8:00 p.m. the Tanglewood Choir will give a performance of choral music in the Theatre. The second in the series of Aspects of Music will be held Friday (July 13) afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall, and the traditional Sunday (July 15) morning chamber music concert by the students of the Music Center will take place at 10:00 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra wishes to draw to the attention of its patrons that all Tanglewood evening performances will begin at 8:00 p.m

vEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 16 1962

Ormandys Visit BSO Conductor

Whitestone

Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, left, greets Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ormandy in the green room of the Music Shed at Tanglewood on Saturday evening following the all-Mozart concert. Mr. Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and a summer resident of Monterey, has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the BSO in the Music Shed on Aug. 10 and 18.

REVIEWS. 2ND WEEK

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 16 1962

Tanglewood

Music of Mozart Is Offered With Munch Directing

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox.
Music of Mozart
Charles Munch, Conductor
Serenade for Wind Instruments K. 361
Piano Concerto No. 25 in C
Soloist: Claude Frank
Symphny No. 38, "Prague"
Divertimento in D for Strings
Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola
Soloists: Ruth Posselt; Joseph dePasquale
Ein Musikalischer Spass
Symphony No. 39 in E-Flat
Eine Kleine Nachtmusik
Concerto in E-Flat for Two Pianos
Soloists: Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin
Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite
Symphony #40 in G Minor

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The success of the first two weekends of music devoted to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart can perhaps well be compared to the perfect weather which accompanied it. A small, well-timed program change in this perfect weekend weather could have produced a pleasant surprise and much deep satisfaction. While a smaller change from the usual symphonies, programmed one at each of the three concerts, to something less standard, might also have produced the satisfaction of a long awaited, gentle rain. The surprise, one would little doubt be pleasant, Mozart seldom missed his mark with any generation.

Wrote to Delight

Mozart simply wrote music to delight. He never wrote a note in the seismic range of Beethoven, nor has any Tchaikowskian, anguished shriek ever clouded his musical idea, and only once or twice would his music yield any personal views from the couch of analysis. For truly the emotions produced in his music are but the finest products of the listener's own ear and mind.

Seldom have the balance of composition, performance and audience roles been better adjusted. There seems little risk in any Mozart substitutions.

However, after such a fine concert, this appears to be somewhat laboring a point, for the orchestra played exceedingly well as did the soloists, especially Vronsky and Babin in the warm and deeply felt concerto for two pianos.

Claude Frank, a one-time student at Tanglewood, played with a marvelous air of confidence, though some words might be found concerning the weight of tone employed and the briskness lost because of it. Though Munch's approach to slow movements would tend to drag a little, and allegros became prestos as in the Nachtmusik where the first three beautifully performed sections by the string orchestra were, it seemed, rushed rather intensively and the excellent preformance of the strings dropped off to something less than perfection.

"Musikalischer Spass"

Of course the "Musikalischer Spass" was gauche. The horns fumbling for notes were rescued by strings double forte, which in turn, it would appear, never played so many wrong notes themselves. The composition itself is an aimless nonsequitor of pretty phrases punctuated by errors of harmony, rhythms and reason. When the work finally closed in a maladroit bungle, even the most enlightened guffaw at the music that the finest musical straightman in the world played for Mozart's slapstick "Musikalischer Spass"—a musical gag.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL 19 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by C. N. D.

Friday evening at Tanglewood marked the beginning of a series of three concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, and for this program Dr. Munch chose three of the composer's most felicitous works. There was the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments. Four movements of this Serenade were played, and with the wind instrument players of the Boston Symphony it goes without saying that the performance was a superb one.

Next came the C major Piano Concerto K. 503 with Claude Frank in the solo part. Mozart wrote four piano concertos in this key and this is one of the best. Frank gave it a radiant performance and was recalled for bows again and again.

The program ended with the great Symphony in D major, commonly known as the "Prague" symphony. It is fittingly named after Prague because here it had its first performance and here was the city that gave Mozart the warmest recognition during his short lifetime. From its slow introduction to its fiery last movement, Munch played the work with gusto and verve.

Saturday by E. B. H.

There is no doubt about it: Mozart is the ideal composer and Tanglewood the ideal spot, for a summer night of music. As in the Bach concerts last week, the size of the orchestra was reduced, but the sound carried beautifully in the clear, still air, and despite the large crowd in the shed and on the lawns a sense of intimacy was established.

The program was interesting and rewarding. It started with the early Divertimento for Strings, K. 136, composed when Mozart was sixteen, and ended with the great E-flat symphony (No. 39), the first of that incredible group of three that flowed from his pen during the course of six weeks in the summer of 1788. In between were the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K. 364, and the "Musical Joke" for strings and horns, Mozart's only parody.

Ruth Posselt and Joseph de-Pasquale were the soloists in the Sinfonia and gave a good account of themselves, always audible in their dialogue against the orchestral background. The "Joke" was broadly played but no less delightful for that: it was fun to see Dr. Munch so clearly enjoying the nonsense. One may have quibbled with certain details of his reading of the E-flat symphony, which lacked the inimitable lightness of Beecham's but there was a good deal of subtlety and clarity nevertheless; the work itself is sublime, and it was a joy to hear it again.

Sunday by E. M.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch concluded the all-Mozart weekend with a well-chosen and rewarding program. The first selection, the always-delightful Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, featured a superb Romanza and a rousing final Rondo.

Vitya Vronsky & Victor Babin were the soloists in the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra. They drew an enthusiastic response with their clarity and control, and were particularly impressive when playing with the melodic oboe duet in the Andante. The concluding Rondo was bright and sure, orchestra and soloists playing in true "concert."

It is regrettable that the Les Petits Riens Ballet Suite is not performed more often, for it reveals Mozart's mastery in a series of short, intriguing variations. Dr. Munch and the orchestra were outstanding in the first Gavotte, with its lilting interplay of oboe and horn; the Andantino; and the brisk, lighthearted final Gavotte.

The Symphony No. 40 in G Minor drew a well-deserved ovation. This music transcends chamber intellectuality. The full orchestra was flawless, revealing the deep emotions, vigorous power, and compelling spirit of the composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 14 1962

Mozart Attracts 3542 To Tanglewood Concert

(Special to The Union)

LENOX — The first of two week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of works by Mozart opened in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tonight with an audience of 3542, slightly more than the attendance on a corresponding night a year ago.

Claude Frank, 37-year-old pianist gave a thrilling performance as soloist with the BSO of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 25 in C Major, the last concerto of the great succession of 15 composed by Mozart for public performance in Vienna.

The young pianist was given a

See MOZART ATTRACTS Page Five

zart Attracts

...ued From Page 1

...ndous ovation at the con...on of his performance and was sent back to the stage three times alone by the BSO conductor, Charles Munch, to acknowledge it.

The German born pianist, who has appeared frequently as a guest artist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, was a student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1947, and for a time was active in choral conducting, but after studying with Artur Schnabel and teaching at Rudolf Serkin's Marlboro, Vt., School, he has devoted his career to the piano.

Sinfonia Concertante Tonight

Dr. Munch opened the program with Mozart's serenade for 13 wind instruments and concluded with his Symphony in D Major.

Tonight's four-part concert in the Music Shed at 8 will feature, before intermission, soloists Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph De Pasquale, first violist with the BSO.

Miss Posselt is the wife of Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony. They will be heard with the BSO in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola.

A Musical Joke

Also to be performed tonight will be Mozart's Divertimento in D Major for strings, Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for strings and horns, and Symphony No. 39 in E Flat Major.

Sunday afternoon at 2.30, the BSO with Dr. Munch conducting will open the program with Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for String Orchestra, followed by the Concerto in E Flat Major for two pianos and orchestra, with Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin as piano soloists.

The last half of the program will include Les Petits Riens, ballet suite and Mozart's Symphony in E Minor.

The two soloists are making their first appearance with the BSO. Both are natives of Russia. They were fellow students under Artur Schnabel in Berlin where they first met.

They were married and came to America, where in 1937 they made their debut in New York. They live in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
JUL 21 1962

Music: Munch Conducts Mozart Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's all Mozart program at the Berkshire Music Festival, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch, was music for the connoisseur, or the selective layman devotee of pure, classic style.

There's a goodly number from both listening categories in this area (at least during the Tanglewood season) because last night's audience numbered 3,580.

Friday night's audience is almost invariably the weekend's smallest. This second and final festival Mozart weekend will continue tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

Munch's Last Year

Munch will end his 13-year service with the Boston Symphony at this festival's conclusion on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Munch is therefore paying his final tributes to key members of his orchestra by inviting them to appear as soloists. Last night there were five of them.

Incoming concert master, Joseph Silverstein (to succeed Richard Burgin after this Tanglewood summer) played concerto No. 5 in A major, K. 219. Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K.297B featured Gino Cioffi clarinet; Raph Gomberg, oboe; James Stagliano, french horn; Sherman Walt, bassoon. The orchestra was heard in masonic funeral music, K.477 and symphony No. 31 in D major, K.219, "Paris."

The violin concerto and "Paris" symphony are standard material, seldom heard on a single occasion, but individually included on varied programs. The masonic music and Sinfonia Conertante are specialized works that sound most agreeably on sympathetic or trained ears.

Public Response

The Boston Symphony is fortunate that the public has responded so well to some of this unfamiliar fare, performed in the spirt of a family party.

Frankly the slow movements of the concerto, "Paris" and "Funeral Music" approached the danger of boredom. Performance alone, even of Boston Symphony standard, does not guarantee interest. It would seem that it requires a rabid follower of Mozart to justify the long trek some disciples make to hear this highly select repertoire.

Judging the performance of the music in terms of its effect, one must admit that the "Funral Music" sounded well last night. It had a personalized quality, clearly generated from the podium, that makes it intimate rather than dolefully ceremonial.

Rich Sound

The choral portion was richly intoned by clarinets and oboes. The work had clear form, rich sound in the bass register, and an effective reiteration of the initial melody.

"Paris" symphony brought the orchestra to the fullest height it achieved last night. Brilliant contrasts were made between broad, full chords for full orchestra and delicate figuration concentrated in first violins.

The slow movement was euphonious, beautifully controlled in tone, but it dragged. The final movement brought into the open both the craftsmanship of its construction.

Much was meticuls in displaing its intricate materials, especially in he fugue section.

Silverstein Impatient

Mozart's A major violin concerto is not a vehicle of bowing brilliance for soloist alone. It gives the orchestra much to say, important stuff. During the long orchestral introduction of the first movement, Silverstein was impatient to begin so he joined the first violin section, somewhat damaging the solist illusion. He did the same thing in the final movement.

It was obvious last night that the orchestra sat solidly behind Silverstein, but even more dutifully behind Mozart. From his opening phrase, Silverstein disposed of his subject matter with a brisk, firm, steady bow. He's an excellent technician. All of the notes, most conspicuously in the three cadenzas, were in their places without faltering or spotty intonation. It was effortless playing — confident, precise and phrased with polish. The young violinist is absolutely devoid of mannerisms.

Tonight's soloist is Evelyne Crochet in Mozart's piano concerto in E flat K 482. Munch and the orchestra will perform the "Linz" and "Jupiter" symphonies.

REVIEWS. 2ND WEEK

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 16 1962

Tanglewood

Music of Mozart Is Offered With Munch Directing

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox.
Music of Mozart
Charles Munch, Conductor
Serenade for Wind Instruments K. 361
Piano Concerto No. 25 in C
Soloist: Claude Frank
Symphny No. 38, "Prague"
Divertimento in D for Strings
Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola
Soloists: Ruth Posselt; Joseph dePasquale
Ein Musikalischer Spass
Symphony No. 39 in E-Flat
Eine Kleine Nachtmusik
Concerto in E-Flat for Two Pianos
Soloists: Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin
Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite
Symphony #40 in G Minor

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The success of the first two weekends of music devoted to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart can perhaps well be compared to the perfect weather which accompanied it. A small, well-timed program change in this perfect weekend weather could have produced a pleasant surprise and much deep satisfaction. While a smaller change from the usual symphonies, programmed one at each of the three concerts, to something less standard, might also have produced the satisfaction of a long awaited, gentle rain. The surprise, one would little doubt be pleasant, Mozart seldom missed his mark with any generation.

Wrote to Delight

Mozart simply wrote music to delight. He never wrote a note in the seismic range of Beethoven, nor has any Tchaikowskian, anguished shriek ever clouded his musical idea, and only once or twice would his music yield any personal views from the couch of analysis. For truly the emotions produced in his music are but the finest products of the listener's own ear and mind.

Seldom have the balance of composition, performance and audience roles been better adjusted. There seems little risk in any Mozart substitutions.

However, after such a fine concert, this appears to be somewhat laboring a point, for the orchestra played exceedingly well as did the soloists, especially Vronsky and Babin in the warm and deeply felt concerto for two pianos.

Claude Frank, a one-time student at Tanglewood, played with a marvelous air of confidence, though some words might be found concerning the weight of tone employed and the briskness lost because of it. Though Munch's approach to slow movements would tend to drag a little, and allegros became prestos as in the Nachtmusik where the first three beautifully performed sections by the string orchestra were, it seemed, rushed rather intensitively and the excellent preformance of the strings dropped off to something less than perfection.

"Musikalischer Spass"

Of course the "Musikalischer Spass" was gauche. The horns fumbling for notes were rescued by strings double forte, which in turn, it would appear, never played so many wrong notes themselves. The composition itself is an aimless nonsequitor of pretty phrases punctuated by errors of harmony, rhythms and reason. When the work finally closed in a maladroit bungle, even the most enlightened guffaw at the music that the finest musical straightman in the world played for Mozart's slapstick "Musikalischer Spass"—a musical gag.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL 19 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by C. N. D.

Friday evening at Tanglewood marked the beginning of a series of three concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, and for this program Dr. Munch chose three of the composer's most felicitous works. There was the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments. Four movements of this Serenade were played, and with the wind instrument players of the Boston Symphony it goes without saying that the performance was a superb one.

Next came the C major Piano Concerto K. 503 with Claude Frank in the solo part. Mozart wrote four piano concertos in this key and this is one of the best. Frank gave it a radiant performance and was recalled for bows again and again.

The program ended with the great Symphony in D major, commonly known as the "Prague" symphony. It is fittingly named after Prague because here it had its first performance and here was the city that gave Mozart the warmest recognition during his short lifetime. From its slow introduction to its fiery last movement, Munch played the work with gusto and verve.

Saturday by E. B. H.

There is no doubt about it: Mozart is the ideal composer and Tanglewood the ideal spot, for a summer night of music. As in the Bach concerts last week, the size of the orchestra was reduced, but the sound carried beautifully in the clear, still air, and despite the large crowd in the shed and on the lawns a sense of intimacy was established.

The program was interesting and rewarding. It started with the early Divertimento for Strings, K. 136, composed when Mozart was sixteen, and ended with the great E-flat symphony (No. 39), the first of that incredible group of three that flowed from his pen during the course of six weeks in the summer of 1788. In between were the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K. 364, and the "Musical Joke" for strings and horns, Mozart's only parody.

Ruth Posselt and Joseph de-Pasquale were the soloists in the Sinfonia and gave a good account of themselves, always audible in their dialogue against the orchestral background. The "Joke" was broadly played but no less delightful for that: it was fun to see Dr. Munch so clearly enjoying the nonsense. One may have quibbled with certain details of his reading of the E-flat symphony, which lacked the inimitable lightness of Beecham's but there was a good deal of subtlety and clarity nevertheless; the work itself is sublime, and it was a joy to hear it again.

Sunday by E. M.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch concluded the all-Mozart weekend with a well-chosen and rewarding program. The first selection, the always-delightful Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, featured a superb Romanza and a rousing final Rondo.

Vitya Vronsky & Victor Babin were the soloists in the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra. They drew an enthusiastic response with their clarity and control, and were particularly impressive when playing with the melodic oboe duet in the Andante. The concluding Rondo was bright and sure, orchestra and soloists playing in true "concert."

It is regrettable that the Les Petits Riens Ballet Suite is not performed more often, for it reveals Mozart's mastery in a series of short, intriguing variations. Dr. Munch and the orchestra were outstanding in the first Gavotte, with its lilting interplay of oboe and horn; the Andantino; and the brisk, lighthearted final Gavotte.

The Symphony No. 40 in G Minor drew a well-deserved ovation. This music transcends chamber intellectuality. The full orchestra was flawless, revealing the deep emotions, vigorous power, and compelling spirit of the composer.

TH

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 14 1962

Mozart Attracts 3542 To Tanglewood Concert

(Special to The Union)

LENOX — The first of two week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of works by Mozart opened in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tonight with an audience of 3542, slightly more than the attendance on a corresponding night a year ago.

Claude Frank, 37-year-old pianist gave a thrilling performance as soloist with the BSO of Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 25 in C Major, the last concerto of the great succession of 15 composed by Mozart for public performance in Vienna.

The young pianist was given a

See MOZART ATTRACTS Page Five

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
JUL 21 1962

Music: Munch Conducts Mozart Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's all Mozart program at the Berkshire Music Festival, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch, was music for the connoisseur, or the selective layman devotee of pure, classic style.

There's a goodly number from both listening categories in this area (at least during the Tanglewood season) because last night's audience numbered 3,580.

Friday night's audience is almost invariably the weekend's smallest. This second and final festival Mozart weekend will continue tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

Munch's Last Year

Munch will end his 13-year service with the Boston Symphony at this festival's conclusion on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Munch is therefore paying his final tributes to key members of his orchestra by inviting them to appear as soloists. Last night there were five of them.

Incoming concert master, Joseph Silverstein (to succeed Richard Burgin after this Tanglewood summer) played concerto No. 5 in A major, K. 219. Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K.297B featured Gino Cioffi clarinet; Raph Gomberg, oboe; James Stagliano, french horn; Sherman Walt, bassoon. The orchestra was heard in masonic funeral music, K.477 and symphony No. 31 in D major, K.219, "Paris."

The violin concerto and "Paris" symphony are standard material, seldom heard on a single occasion, but individually included on varied programs. The masonic music and Sinfonia Concertante are specialized works that sound most agreeably on sympathetic or trained ears.

Public Response

The Boston Symphony is fortunate that the public has responded as well to some of this unfamiliar fare, performed in the spirt of a family party.

Frankly the slow movements of the concerto, "Paris" and "Funeral Music" approached the danger of boredom. Performance alone, even of Boston Symphony standard, does not guarantee interest. It would seem that it requires a rabid follower of Mozart to justify the long trek some disciples make to hear this highly select repertoire.

Judging the performance of the music in terms of its effect, one must admit that the "Funral Music" sounded well last night. It had a personalized quality, clearly generated from the podium, that makes it intimate rather than dolefully ceremonial.

Rich Sound

The choral portion was richly intoned by clarinets, and oboes. The work had clear form, rich sound in the bass register, and an effective reiteration of the initial melody.

"Paris" symphony brought the orchestra to the fullest height it achieved last night. Brilliant contrasts were made between broad, full chords for full orchestra and delicate figuration concentrated in first violins.

The slow movement was euphonious, beautifully controlled in tone, but it dragged. The final movement brought into the open both the craftsmanship of its construction.

Much was meticulous in displaing its intricate materials, especially in he fugue section.

Silverstein Impatient

Mozart's A major violin concerto is not a vehicle of bowing brilliance for soloist alone. It gives the orchestra much to say, important stuff. During the long orchestral introduction of the first movement, Silverstein was impatient to begin so he joined the first violin section, somewhat damaging the solist illusion. He did the same thing in the final movement.

It was obvious last night that the orchestra sat solidly behind Silverstein, but even more dutifully behind Mozart. From his opening phrase, Silverstein disposed of his subject matter with a brisk, firm, steady bow. He's an excellent technician. All of the notes, most conspicuously in the three cadenzas, were in their places without faltering or spotty intonation. It was effortless playing — confident, precise and phrased with polish. The young violinist is absolutely devoid of mannerisms.

Tonight's soloist is Evelyne Crochet in Mozart's piano concerto in E flat K 482. Munch and the orchestra will perform the "Linz" and "Jupiter" symphonies.

zart Attracts

ntinued from Page 1

ndous ovation at the con- on of his performance and was sent back to the stage three times alone by the BSO conductor, Charles Munch, to acknowledge it.

The German born pianist, who has appeared frequently as a guest artist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, was a student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1947, and for a time was active in choral conducting, but after studying with Artur Schnabel and teaching at Rudolf Serkin's Marlboro, Vt., School, he has devoted his career to the piano.

Sinfonia Concertante Tonight

Dr. Munch opened the program with Mozart's serenade for 13 wind instruments and concluded with his Symphony in D Major.

Tonight's four-part concert in the Music Shed at 8 will feature, before intermission, soloists Ruth Posselt violinist, and Joseph De Pasquale, first violist with the BSO.

Miss Posselt is the wife of Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony. They will be heard with the BSO in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola.

A Musical Joke

Also to be performed tonight will be Mozart's Divertimento in D Major for strings, Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for strings and horns, and Symphony No. 39 in E Flat Major.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30, the BSO with Dr. Munch conducting will open the program with Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for String Orchestra, followed by the Concerto in E Flat Major for two pianos and orchestra, with Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin as piano soloists.

The last half of the program will include Les Petits Riens, ballet suite and Mozart's Symphony in F Major.

The [illegible] soloists are making their first appearance with the BSO. Both are natives of Russia. They were fellow students under Artur Schnabel in Berlin where [illegible] first met.

They were married and came to America, where in 1937 they made their debut in New York. They live in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 14 1962

Music Review

Mozart Weekends Open

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

FRIDAY NIGHT'S program was the first of the two Mozart weekends at Tanglewood. Charles Munch, in his final months as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, obviously, and quite justifiably, plans to use his favorites for the home stretch of his long and honored tenure. This can hardly be construed as a selfish policy, for what has been good for Munch has been good for his public.

He began with the B-flat serenade for 13 wind instruments, surely one of the most gratifying works, soundwise, that came out of the Vienna period. Mozart employs four clarinets of which two should be basset horns, two oboes, four horns, two bassoons and a contra bassoon.

* * *

MOZART'S inexhaustible resources served him for all the occasions for which he was called on to supply entertaining music, and his genius never allowed him to descend to a level where grace and taste were not visible. But it was the texture of serenade tone which made it so beautiful. The artists of the Boston wind sections played with exceptional tonal coherence, and there flexibility responded to Munch's fanciful vagaries with a fidelity he had not complete reason to expect.

The "Prague" symphony with which Munch closed the evening is one in which he feels most at home. He seemed to enjoy playing it as much as his audience patently did hearing it, if evidence of their enthusiasm at the completion of the symphony is sufficiently valid. He played the long, slow introduction most spaciously and as the road narrows at the entrance of the allegro, he steered with consummate confidence. After the spirited first theme, he resorted to the individual bowing the Bostonians always use in the more gentle second theme, compounding the contrast Mozart clearly desired.

In the slow movement, he asked the strings, as in previous readings, to use mutes, a direction Mozart did not think of, but it proves practical since Mozart himself reduces the strength of the winds here. In a string choir of lesser caliber, we doubt if this would be feasible, but the Bostonians sustained the long lines with rarified tenuousness.

* * *

THE FINAL movement is a great frolic. Mozart juggles his phrases, now slightly and then with major alterations, but always landing with a feline sence of equilibrium on his harmonic feet.

The center of the program was devoted to the C-major piano concerto (K503) which introduced a stellar new soloist to the Tanglewood platform. Claude Frank gave the concerto, a product of the same Vienna week as the "Prague" symphony, a performance which ranged from the depths of poetic simplicity to flights of high spirits and abandon.

* * *

THE CONCERTO has an extraordinarily long orchestral introduction, practically an operatic overture, a factor of taxing endurance for the soloist, but Frank's stage deportment was exemplary and his entrances were exact and always to the point without fanfare. The slow movement revealed a tone of round sonority which he used to convey the elementary idioms and the decorative ornaments with masterful poise.

The finale provided him with the framework of fireworks he required to display that part of his pianistic equipment and when he subsided in the contrasting sections to the more gentle moods Mozart juxtaposes, he was equally truthful and capable. The audience, which numbered more than 3,500, recalled him and Munch many times.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
JUL 14 1962

Music: Mozart Weekend At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The niceties and a few severities of Mozart's music were represented in the concert given last night at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch.

There was an audience of 3,542.

This opened two all-Mozart weekends of the Berkshire Music Festival. Concerts are Friday and Saturday nights, and Sunday afternoon.

Last night's soloist was Claude Frank in piano concerto No. 25 in C, K. 503. Balance of the program was serenade in B flat major for 13 wind instruments, K. 361, and symphony No. 38 in D major, K. 504, "Prague."

None of the Mozart concerts will have greater variety than this one. All of it was confined to the dimensions of a small orchestra (50 players) even slightly larger than Mozart's intentions.

The "Prague" symphony was most revealing of the orchestras and conductor's capabilities. Last night's performance strove for grandiloquence. It probably never achieved such bravura in the composer's day. However, last night's brilliant veneer wasn't necessarily the reason for its superiority.

Brilliant Offering

Munch certainly went on a treasure hunt for brilliant tonal properties, notably in adopting a particularly slow tempo for the introduction. In ensuing rapid passages, melodic lines were kept intact while rushing full speed ahead.

The program's pride and joy was the B flat Serenade, known as the "Granpartita." Four of the seven movements were performed. Where, but in such an organization as the Boston Symphony, are found 13 wind instruments capable of such speed, as performed in the Rondo, and such pure quality?

One could take the tempo (both fast and slow) for granted but not such a panorama of brightly unspotted color. Instruments used were two each of oboes, bass horns, clarinets, bassoons, four French horns and one contra-bassoon.

Outstanding Adagio

The adagio was pliant, soothing and spotlessly toned. This was perhaps the outstanding movement. The introduction was set in squarely-formed chords, with sensitive changes of nuance within short phrases. The fast portion of the movement was utter delight — bouncing bassoon phrases, deep roots dug by contrabassoon and agile but alive ornaments. The Menuetto was made to sound like a truce dance but the Rondo was not always center-of-beat at such a fast clip.

Frank, orchestra and conductor set out to give the C Major piano concerto elevation of mood, technical clarity and sentiment. Actually, the only seriously static area appeared at the start of the slow movement. It was naturally placid but became quite devoid of vitality. A rise in interest came when Mozart gave the pianist more to do in developed episodes.

Methodical Performance

This was a methodical performance. Frank has a sound technique with reservoirs of power which he tastefully avoided using except in the final movement.

A majestic quality was achieved in the opening. Changes of key were as clear as looking at the operation of intricate machinery through glass. Running passages were articulate and smoothly played. Frank did his best to make them sound like significant material and he partly succeeded. The long cadenza was performed with finesse, although opportunities were missed to effect a truly gentle tone.

The pianist lost some of poise in the finale, hastening the speed to a point that Munch appeared to be seriously concerned.

Soloists for tonight's all-Mozart program are Ruth Posselt, violinist and Joseph DePasquale, violist, in Sinfonia Concertante, K. 364. Munch will conduct the orchestra in Divertimento in D major for strings, K. 136; "A Musical Joke," and symphony No. 39 in E flat major.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
D. 41,175
JUL 16 1962

19,224 Hear All-Mozart Concert

(Special to The American)

LENOX, Mass.—The week-end of all-Mozart concerts at Tanglewood was one of sheer delight and charm for 19,224 listeners who heard soloists, the Boston Symphony musicians, and Dr. Charles Munch in as easy-going and unhurried program of Old World charm as one could hope for under the ideal conditions of this pastoral setting. It was a relaxed afternoon concert of sheer delight with no one seeming in any hurry to go anywhere and with the music appropriate for the Sunday afternoon. A second week-end of all-Mozart music will begin Firday night. Sunday afternoon's audience will hear Mozart's "Requiem" with soloists and the Tanglewood Choir performing in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, long-time conductor of the Boston.

This week-end's audiences savored with Dr. Munch his choice of favorite Mozart heard here on other occasions but never with the extra flavor of knowing it is his last summer at Tanglewood before his retirement. Saturday night's audience all but laughed aloud at the playing of the Mozare "Musical Joke" for strings and horns. Ruth Posselt and Joseph DePasquale gave a hauntingly beautiful performance of the "Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola," and were given an ovation. The Saturday concert had opened with the ever delightful "Divertimento in D Major, for Strings" and set the flavor of the evening which concluded with "Symphony No. 39, in E-Flat Major."

The playing of Claude Frank as soloist in the "Piano Concerto No. 25, in C. Major" at Friday night's concert was as crisp and clear as the Berkshire evening air. Performance of the "Prague" symphony that night was really spirited to the end. Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, the two-piano team heard last week in a Bach program, played Mozart's "Concerto in B-Flat Major" yesterday afternoon and seemed more at home with the music of Mozart than they were with Bach. The Sunday concert had opened with "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" setting the pace for an afternoon of graciousness. The program included the deft "Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite" and concluded with "Symphony in G Minor, No. 40." Audiences throughout the week-end and for the Saturday morning open-rehearsal attended by 3,577 were appreciative, generous with applause and gave Dr. Munch an ovation.

The chamber music concert at 8 p. m. Wednesday promises to be one of the big attractions of the season when Rudolf Serkin will bring his Marlboro (Vt.) Festival Orchestra to Tanglewood for a special concert and will himself perform.

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 16 1962

All-Mozart Program Attendance Record

Attendance at the all-Mozart program at the Music Shed broke all previous records for Mozart programs at Tanglewood, with 19,224 persons attending the Friday, Saturday and Sunday concerts.

Yesterdays blue and sunny skies with an 80-degree temperature brought 5,891 persons out for the concluding concert in the Mozart series.

Attendance for the first two weeks of the concert series is running 4,607 ahead of last year's.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848
JUL 17 1962

All-Mozart Program One Of Delight

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX MASS.—The week end of all-Mozart concerts at Tanglewood was one of sheer delight and charm for 19,224 listeners who heard soloists, the Boston Symphony musicians, and Dr. Charles Munch in as easy-going and unhurried program of Old World charm as one could hope for under the ideal conditions of this pastoral setting. It was a relaxed afternoon concert of sheer delight with no one seeming in any hurry to go anywhere and with the music appropriate for the Sunday afternoon. A second week end of all-Mozart music will begin Firday night. Sunday afternoon's audience will hear Mozart's "Requiem" with soloists and the Tanglewood Choir performing in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, long-time conductor of the Boston.

This week end's audiences savored with Dr. Munch his choice of favorite Mozart heard here on other occasions but never with the extra flavor of knowing it is his last summer at Tanglewood before his retirement. Saturday night's audience all but laughed aloud at the playing of the Mozare "Musical Joke" for strings and horns. Ruth Posselt and Joseph DePasquale gave a hauntingly beautiful performance of the "Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola" and were given an ovation. The Saturday concert had opened with the ever delightful "Divertimento in D Major, for Strings" and set the flavor of the evening which concluded with "Symphony No. 39, in E-Flat Major."

The playing of Claude Frank as soloist in the "Piano Concerto No. 25, in C. Major" at Friday night's concert was as crisp and clear as the Berkshire evening air. Performance of the "Prague" symphony that night was really spirited to the end. Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, the two-piano team heard last week in a Bach program, played Mozart's "Concerto in B-Flat Major" Sunday afternoon and seemed more at home with the music of Mozart than they were with Bach. The Sunday concert had opened with "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" setting the pace for an afternoon of graciousness. The program included the deft "Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite" and concluded with "Symphony in G Minor, No. 40." Audiences throughout the week end and for the Saturday morning open-rehearsal attended by 3,577 were appreciative, generous with applause and gave Dr. Munch an ovation.

The chamber music concert at 8 p. m. tomorrow promises to be one of the big attractions of the season when Rudolf Serkin will bring his Marlboro (Vt.) Festival Orchestra to Tanglewood for a special concert and will himself perform.

S. M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 16 1962

Mozart at Tanglewood

Whitestone

ACKNOWLEDGING OVATION from the Tanglewood audience after their performance as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday evening are Ruth Posselt, Violinist, left, and Joseph de Pasquale, violist, and at right, Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the BSO.

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE LAST TWO concerts of the first Mozart week at Tanglewood followed the same formula. Charles Munch, directing the reduced chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players, ended each program with one of the last three big symphonies, playing them both with devotion and relaxed fondness.

In each program he had the assistance of a pair of soloists. Saturday night Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph de Pasquale, viola, played the Sinfonia Concertante in E flat (K364), and Sunday afternoon Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin played the two-piano concerto, also in E flat (K365), both the product of the 1779 summer in Salzburg.

* * *

BETWEEN THESE two anchors on each program were choices from Mozart's less weighty treasure store, the lovely and familiar serenade "Kleine Nachtmusik," and the ballet suite, "Les Petit Riens," on Sunday; and Saturday the D major Divertimento for strings (K136) and "A Musical Joke" (K522).

Munch has played the symphonies many times during his 13 years with the Boston orchestra at Tanglewood, and he always seems to adjust the performance to his mood of the day. This weekend there was an evident desire to enjoy the performances himself as much as to convey their beauties to the large audiences. He took personal liberties with tempi, playing the first allegro of the G minor with a pleasant dreaminess then compensating for it by taking the final one with humming-bird speed.

* * *

THE INCREASING appreciation these early concerts have won has been due to many factors, but we are likely to overlook the basic and constant one, and that is the Boston orchestral tone. This, not only enhances the acknowledged masterpieces, but endows the less inspired works with an interest which less capable hands, and embouchures, could not enlist. The "Joke" Saturday and its almost unintended counterpart Sunday, the ballet tidbits, were examples of this kind.

The Musical Joke is not so much a hoax on the players as it was on the would-be composers of the day. To be sure, there are the auditory departures of the horns bleating like Strauss's sheep and gargling like ridiculous tenors, and the confusion of keys at the final cadence. But the real humor is hidden in the sly pokes he takes at tyros by writing in unsymmetrical phrases, strange harmonic sequences and purposeful faults. It resolves into a parody as though possibly a famous clown, Fernandel, let us say, would do a series of mimes on characters as far separated as Pelleas, Cyrano and Tartarin.

* * *

MUNCH CAN hardly have intended to insert a trifle of equal levity and character as the "Joke" on the Sunday program, but the ballet music nearly turned out to be just that. He omitted a few of the short movements and altered their sequence, thereby bringing up some unexpected and mildly shocking color schemes with the result that the audience did not know what it was all about, and from all appearances on stage there was equal bewilderment there.

* * *

THE TWO-PIANO concerto is an intimate work which found Vronsky and Babin complete masters of the dignity and eloquence it requires. The soloists played with deep penetration and remarkable articulation within the dynamic limits the score imposes.

The Sinfonia concertante is a more worldly work, designed to afford the soloists the means of display where the two-piano concerto is more withdrawn. Miss Posselt and Mr. de Pasquale attained the heights of vigorous oratory to the great delight of the audience. Mozart gives each artist the spotlight alternately as fully as any scene-stealer could hope for, and then when he gives them coordinated pages like the bravura cadenza in the first movement, the respective tone quality of both soloists, the breadth of their phrasing and the solidarity of their musicianship all contribute to the stunning effect their performance produced.

Audiences of 6,200 Saturday and 5,900 Sunday brought the weekend total near a remarkable figure of 16,000. The best of all possible clear, cool weather prevailed at all times, and many who might have enjoyed the privilege of sitting under the Shed roof chose to remain on the blankets or the folding chairs which had been brought by hundreds of the ticket buyers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
JUL 17 1962

Tanglewood Crowds Numbered 19,000 Over Weekend For More Of Mozart

The second weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood drew crowds totaling over 19,000 people to hear three of six Mozart concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch.

The second trio of Mozart concerts next weekend will complete the three Bach-Mozart weekends which prelude the major concerts of the Berkshire Nights series beginning July 27.

All this past week's events were endowed with beautiful weather which insured the record-breaking attendance by vacationers who are now flooding the Berkshires.

For those who braved the unlucky evening of the 13th, Director Munch presented a fare of Mozart's Serenade in B-flat Major for 13 winds — to the aggravation of the superstitious — plus the Piano Concerto No. 25 featuring Claude Frank is soloist. Also heard was Symphony No. 38, "Prague."

Saturday evening's performance was best received of all, for Dr. Munch, now in his last months as head of the famous orchestra, had chosen one of his favorites — Ein Musikalischer Spass ("A Musical Joke") for Strings and Horns. This is Mozart's one lampoon of a musical score.

The butt of the joke is the would-be composed who mismanages his harmonies, minces his chords and thoroughly mixes his horns with his strings into a ridiculous crazy-quilt of sound. The whole orchestra had a lot of fun, the audience was in an uproar, and with the final complete discord, Dr. Munch hopped off the podium to pump the hands of the horn players with mock graciousness.

Also on the program were Divertimento in D Major for Strings, Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola in E-flat with soloists Ruth Posselt and Joseph dePasquale and the very spirited Symphony No. 39 in E-flat.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo-pianists, made their second appearance of the Tanglewood season Sunday afternoon performing the Concerto in E-flat Major for Two Pianos.

Also heading the bill was the famous Eine kleine Nachtmusik which, though thought to have been written for the composer's own amusement, has become his most popular work. The almost 6,000-person audience also enjoyed Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, and the Symphony in G Minor.

For July 18, Rudolf Serkin has accepted Charles Munch's invitation to perform with his Marlboro (Vt.) Festival Orchestra under the musical direction of Alexander Schneider.

The unscheduled and potentially sell-out event was prompted by the illness of a member of the Budapest String Quartet. The Quartet was also supposed to have initiated the Wednesday evening chamber music concerts July 4, but had to cancel their engagement for the same reason.

Next weekend will feature the three concerts marking the end of the Bach-Mozart series. Dr. Munch has announced that the concert on Sunday, July 22, will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Munch was Koussevitzky's successor and, in turn, is retiring this fall. Erich Leinsdorf of New York will become the third music director of the Symphony.

On the up-and-coming attraction list is the Festival's perennial favorite, Tanglewood on Parade (TOP for the initiated). This concert features Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops who perform Thursday, Aug. 2, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the BSo's summer music school at Tanglewood. The Pops includes many members of the BSO who moonlight by playing Fiedler's more popular-type selections.

The concert will begin with the Boston Pops' famous rendition of Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever." The balance of the program includes the Suite from "El-Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Main Lebenslauf is Lieb and Lust, waltzes, the Pines of Rome by Respighi, Selections from West Side story by Leonard Bernstein, and as many encores as the campers in the audience can screech for.

The final item on the agenda is the return of the National Broadcasting Company's "Today Show" for the second consecutive summer to televise activities at the Orchestra Festival. Two programs will be taped on Wednesday and broadcast next Monday and Tuesday (July 23 and 24) to a nationwide daily audience estimated at six million viewers.

BURT ALIMANSKY.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 15 1962

MOZART CONCERT ATTENDED BY 6216 AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Again Establishes Record For Attendance

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night continued to break attendance records with the help of the weatherman, by drawing 6214. Persons in the music shed at Tanglewood heard an all-Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting.

Features Soloists

The program featured two soloists, Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist, in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola. Their performances proved to be the high light of the evening.

Saturday morning's open rehearsal by the Boston Symphony reflected the great influx of visitors to the Berkshires for the festival concerts, even though the major concerts by the full orchestra do not begin until July 27 when the first of the Berkshire Nights series will open with a program of works by Debussy, Piston and Brahms. Saturday morning 3577 persons attended the rehearsal in the music shed.

Notables in the audience Saturday night included Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey and the conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. He will appear Aug. 10 and Aug. 18 as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Also attending the concert was Miss Getrude Robinson-Smith of Stockbridge, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., a pioneer in the festival movement in 1934 when symphony concerts began in the Berkshires. Miss Robinson-Smith and relatives and friends also attended the Mozart concert Saturday night, marking her 81st birthday anniversary.

Concert Wednesday

Next week will mark the end of the Bach-Mozart series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the Wednesday evening chamber music concert in the theatre concert hall promises to be one of the big attractions of the season when Rudolf Serkin will bring his Marlboro (Vt.) Festival Orchestra to Tanglewood for a special concert under the direction of Alexander Schneider.

The Marlboro group, at the invitation of Dr. Munch, is coming to Tanglewood to fill in for the Boston Arts Quartet.

The Budapest String Quartet was scheduled to appear at the opening chamber music concert at Tanglewood on July 4, the first festival concert, but the illness of one of its members prompted a change and the Boston Arts Quartet substituted, changing its engagement from the scheduled appearance on July 18. As a result Dr. Munch called upon his friend in nearby Marlboro, Rudolf Serkin, to have his group fill-in on Wednesday.

To Play for TV

For the second consecutive year the National Broadcasting Company's "Today" show will televise from Tanglewood. Fifty members of the Today staff will be at Tanglewood on Wednesday to tape a session including members of the Boston Symphony, with Dr. Munch conducting. It will be done during a rehearsal of Mozart's violin concerto No. 5 in A major with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

Also to be taped will be a woodwind and quintet consisting of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn; and Sherman Walt, bassoon, the principal woodwind players of the Boston Symphony.

SOVIETS IN ALGIERS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

JUL 15 1962

Music: Mozart Program At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's all-Mozart program at Tanglewood played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch, was an event of sunny disposition with comedy added for good measure.

This continued the first of two Mozart weekends of the Berkshire Music Festival. The audience numbered 6,214.

Soloists were Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist, in Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K. 364. Orchestral works were Divertimento in D major for strings, K.136; "A Musical Joke" for strings and horn, K.522; and Symphony No. 39 in E flat major K.543.

Cheerful Atmosphere

The spirit of this Mozart feast was reflected in yesterday morning's open rehearsal, attended by 3,577 persons. It wasn't unusually cheerful atmosphere with a frequently smiling and relishing Munch. He didn't seem in the least perturbed by yowling babies, off pitch, or their percussive obbligati to stronger rhythms.

Some idea of the remarkable ability of the string section, which had such a prominent role in last night's concert, was shown in a rehearsal incident. One of the second violinists left the platform abruptly, during the lively first movement of the G monor symphony, to repair or replace his bow.

He returned in a couple of minutes and dashed into the middle of a particularly hazardous phrase, hardly consulting the score.

Applause Restrained

Until the G minor symphony was rehearsed, the audience refrained from applauding between movements of the preceding works. Munch's reaction to such interruptions hasn't always been a glowing example of tolerance. We recall a performance of the Berlioz "Requiem" when he took the players unawares by impulsively rushing into the next movement without as much as the customary five second pause.

Last night, the strings were in splendid form for the D major divertimento. As in the "Musical Joke" that followed, the objectives were an almost flippant effect (within reason), tonal beauty and a degree of technical perfection such as required by the Mozart quartets.

The performance was subtly enhanced by the awareness that this was written by a 16-year-old Mozart. There certainly is nothing immature in subject matter or style, unless it be the quaint plucked string introduction to the last movement. Munch and orchestra made prominent feature of the work's spontaneous alternations between "Joie de Vivre" and precocious sentiment. Excessive speed at which Munch took the first and third movements reflected credit on the strings which remained quite unperturbed.

Also Youthful

Despite its academic title, the Sinfonia Concertante is also youthful Mozart, composed when he was 23. The symphonic part of the title was indicated in the long, orchestral introduction, played with full contours of volume and decorative technique.

Miss Posselt and De Pasquale blended their tones in the best interest of ensemble results. Here were two superlative technicians with special affinity for Mozart's style. The cadenzas of all three movements were admirably performed, individually and coordinately.

There was fine discipline in passages requiring them to play in unison or divided voices at high and tempered speeds.

The only discernible flaws of intonation appeared during the last movement from the solo violin.

Revel in Satire

In his "Musical Joke," Mozart gave orchestra and conductor free rein to revel in satire and harpooned personality. The playing of the score is no joke, however. The real lampooning was directed at pseudo-composers of Mozart's day and not performing musicians.

This ordinarily reserved orchestra and conductor exploited Mozart's machinations with downright glee. There was no disguise of the dulcet horn solo that goes haywire, solo violin suffocated in orchestral fanciwork, mongrel fugue, and final harmonic chaos after a simple chord has been hammered to death.

This afternoon at 2:30, Munch conducts the orchestra in "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the "Little Nothings" ballet suite, K.299B, and G minor symphony, K.550. Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will be soloists in the E flat Concerto for two pianos and orchestra, K.365.

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
JOURNAL
W. 3,132

JUL 19 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by C. N. D.

Friday evening at Tanglewood marked the beginning of a series of three concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, and for this program Dr. Munch chose three of the composer's most felicitous works. There was the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments. Four movements of this Serenade were played, and with the wind instrument players of the Boston Symphony it goes without saying that the performance was a superb one.

Next came the C major Piano Concerto K. 503 with Claude Frank in the solo part. Mozart wrote four piano concertos in this key and this is one of the best. Frank gave it a radiant performance and was recalled for bows again and again.

The program ended with the great Symphony in D major, commonly known as the "Prague" symphony. It is fittingly named after Prague because here it had its first performance and here was the city that gave Mozart the warmest recognition during his short lifetime. From its slow introduction to its fiery last movement, Munch played the work with gusto and verve.

Saturday by E. B. H.

There is no doubt about it: Mozart is the ideal composer and Tanglewood the ideal spot, for a summer night of music. As in the Bach concerts last week, the size of the orchestra was reduced, but the sound carried beautifully in the clear, still air, and despite the large crowd in the shed and on the lawns a sense of intimacy was established.

The program was interesting and rewarding. It started with the early Divertimento for Strings, K. 136, composed when Mozart was sixteen, and ended with the great E-flat symphony (No. 39), the first of that incredible group of three that flowed from his pen during the course of six weeks in the summer of 1788. In between were the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K. 364, and the "Musical Joke" for strings and horns, Mozart's only parody.

Ruth Posselt and Joseph de-Pasquale were the soloists in the Sinfonia and gave a good account of themselves, always audible in their dialogue against the orchestral background. The "Joke" was broadly played but no less delightful for that: it was fun to see Dr. Munch so clearly enjoying the nonsense. One may have quibbled with certain details of his reading of the E-flat symphony, which lacked the inimitable lightness of Beecham's but there was a good deal of subtlety and clarity nevertheless; the work itself is sublime, and it was a joy to hear it again.

Sunday by E. M.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch concluded the all-Mozart weekend with a well-chosen and rewarding program. The first selection, the always-delightful Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, featured a superb Romanza and a rousing final Rondo.

Vitya Vronsky & Victor Babin were the soloists in the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra. They drew an enthusiastic response with their clarity and control, and were particularly impressive when playing with the melodic oboe duet in the Andante. The concluding Rondo was bright and sure, orchestra and soloists playing in true "concert."

It is regrettable that the Les Petits Riens Ballet Suite is not performed more often, for it reveals Mozart's mastery in a series of short, intriguing variations. Dr. Munch and the orchestra were outstanding in the first Gavotte, with its lilting interplay of oboe and horn; the Andantino; and the brisk, lighthearted final Gavotte.

The Symphony No. 40 in G Minor drew a well-deserved ovation. This music transcends chamber intellectuality. The full orchestra was flawless, revealing the deep emotions, vigorous power, and compelling spirit of the composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554

JUL 22 1962

Mozart Weekend at Tanglewood

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD — The second week-end of the Berkshire Festival is always devoted to the music of Mozart and last Friday, Saturday and Sunday found the Music Shed at Tanglewood with its usual complement of music lovers who enjoy this intensive type of listening. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I was unable to get up to hear the Friday concert when Claude Frank was soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 25 in C, K. 503. Good reports were heard of this, the "Prague" Symphony, K.504 and the Serenade for 13 Wind Instruments, K.361. The shed lends itself well to the intimacy of these concerts, which used to be held in the Chamber Music Hall. A dark garnet backdrop like a folding screen has been designed to decrease the size of the immense stage and it enfolds the sound with excellent balance, so none of it is lost in the backstage cavern.

Saturday evening the soloists were Ruth Posselt, violin, and Joseph dePasquale, violist who played the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K.364. Their performance was flawless and they were given artistic support by their colleagues. During the entire Mozart series, the most outstanding feature was perhaps the beauty of the slow movements in every work. It was the beauty which, by its miniature perfection, dwarfs beauty of much greater proportions and brings wonderment to one's mind. Mozart was really present in the devoted interpretation of these dedicated musicians.

We had been prepared for this lovely concerted music, by a performance of the Divertimento in D major for Strings, K.136, and here again there was the perfection of detail and balance of tone for which this orchestra is noted

We had not been prepared for the hilariously funny Mozart "Ein Musikalischer Spass" (A Musical Joke) for Strings and Horn, K.522. To be sure, recordings of this work are available and they are funny. But there was something so incongrously unbelievable about this, well constructed lampoon on musical construction, written by a master hand and played by artists of note, which sent the audience off into gales of laughter many times. The laughter was short, during the performance, because one might be missing something if it were too lengthy. The false fugue nearly finished me off. I had forgotten how clever it was. To hear the horns make dissonance as aptly as does Elliott Carter's most recent score, was to realize once more, that there is really nothing new under the sun. There is only more of everything in this day and age. Oh, for the simple days of Mozart! It was wonderful fun to shed seriousness along with the composer, who was an expert in the distillation of many a serious passage.

The two Mozart Symphonies we heard were No. 39 in E flat, K.543 on Saturday and No. 40 in G minor, K.550 on Sunday. These works were played with devotion to the purity of style required. Tempo marks were followed. The difference from other performances which might have been noted, was the degree with which Dr. Munch interprets "Allegro assai." His musicians can really play "very fast."

On Sunday we heard the Concerto in E flat for Two Pianos and Orchestra, K.365 played by Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. Their playing was superior. Perfectly matched and artistically blended, this was one of the high points of the week-end.

Dr. Munch also included the pleasant, gay music from the Ballet Suite, "Les Petits Riens", K.229b, and the Serenade for String Orchestra, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", K.525, which has been the joy of many an amateur group for many a year. It was as fresh and beautiful as ever because the musicians who played it are experts in the interpretation of Mozart's style.

The Berkshire Festival continues through a total of eight weeks this season and by all counts it bids fair to exceed all records in attendance and excellence of performance, if that is possible.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 1[illegible]

MOZART SERIES IN TANGLEWOOD DRAWING WELL

Munch Leads Symphony; 19,224 Turn Out for Week-End Events

LENOX—With the temperture registering around 80 degrees beneath a blue sky and a bright sun, a crowd of 5891 turned out at Tanglewood for the concluding concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first Mozart series at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Nearly Half Outside

Nearly half of the audience chose to listen to the concert, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, on the spacious lawns outside of the Music Shed.

Solosists were Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, pianists, making their first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They performed Mozart's Concerto in E. Flat Major for two pianos and orchestra and were given a great ovation.

Also heard on Sunday's program were Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra; "Les Petits Riens," ballet suite, and Symphony in G. Minor No. 40.

The afternoon's attendance was 887 more than last year on the same day. The week end attendance at Tanglewood broke

[illegible] records for A[illegible]
A total of 19,224 [illegible] out for the [illegible] night and Sunday [illegible] certs, and [illegible] Saturday m[illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] in the shed.

Weather Kind

The weather [illegible] been kind to the [illegible] Festival in the first [illegible] of the eight-week season [illegible] attendance for the first [illegible] weeks is 1607 ahead of the [illegible] weeks a year ago.

The next [illegible] at Tanglewood, be[illegible] ing Mozart series [illegible] will be the [illegible] night chamber music [illegible] the Marlboro (Vt.) Festival [illegible] orchestra featuring [illegible] with Mozart's [illegible] No. 12 in A Major [illegible] concert hall stage.

Joseph Silverstein [illegible] joke over next [illegible] certmaster of the [illegible] phony, will be soloist [illegible] day night [illegible] Mozart's Violin [illegible]

Other members [illegible] tra who will [illegible] night are Gino [illegible] clarinet; Ralph [illegible] cipal oboe; [illegible] principal horn. [illegible] Walt, principal [illegible] will be heard in [illegible] fonia concertante.

Will Make [illegible]

At Saturday even[illegible] Evelyne Croch[illegible] Tanglewood d[illegible] zart Piano Con[illegible] Dr. Munch [illegible] Symphony.

Next Sunday [illegible] Munch has ann[illegible] cert will be in m[illegible] Koussevitzky. [illegible] Berkshire Mu[illegible] former music [illegible] Boston Symph[illegible]

Mozart's "[illegible] heard with fo[illegible] Tanglewood Cho[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 15 1962

Music:

Mozart Program At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's all-Mozart program at Tanglewood played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch, was an event of sunny disposition with comedy added for good measure.

This continued the first of two Mozart weekends of the Berkshire Music Festival. The audience numbered 6,214.

Soloists were Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist, in Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K. 364. Orchestral works were Divertimento in D major for strings, K.136; "A Musical Joke" for strings and horn, K.522; and Symphony No. 39 in E flat major K.543.

Cheerful Atmosphere

The spirit of this Mozart feast was reflected in yesterday morning's open rehearsal, attended by 3,577 persons. It wasn't unusually cheerful atmosphere with a frequently smiling and relishing Munch. He didn't seem in the least perturbed by yowling babies, off pitch, or their percussive obbligati to stronger rhythms.

Some idea of the remarkable ability of the string section, which had such a prominent role in last night's concert, was shown in a rehearsal incident. One of the second violinists left the platform abruptly, during the lively first movement of the G monor symphony, to repair or replace his bow.

He returned in a couple of minutes and dashed into the middle of a particularly hazardous phrase, hardly consulting the score.

Applause Restrained

Until the G minor symphony was rehearsed, the audience refrained from applauding between movements of the preceding works. Munch's reaction to such interruptions hasn't always been a glowing example of tolerance. We recall a performance of the Berlioz "Requiem" when he took the players unawares by impulsively rushing into the next movement without as much as the customary five second pause.

Last night, the strings were in splendid form for the D major divertimento. As in the "Musical Joke" that followed, the objectives were an almost flippant effect (within reason), tonal beauty and a degree of technical perfection such as required by the Mozart quartets.

The performance was subtly enhanced by the awareness that this was written by a 16-year-old Mozart. There certainly is nothing immature in subject matter or style, unless it be the quaint plucked string introduction to the last movement. Munch and orchestra made prominent feature of the work's spontaneous alternations between "Joie de Vivre" and precocious sentiment. Excessive speed at which Munch took the first and third movements reflected credit on the strings which remained quite unperturbed.

Also Youthful

Despite its academic title, the Sinfonia Concertante is also youthful Mozart, composed when he was 23. The symphonic part of the title was indicated in the long, orchestral introduction, played with full contours of volume and decorative technique.

Miss Posselt and De Pasquale blended their tones in the best interest of ensemble results. Here were two superlative technicians with special affinity for Mozart's style. The cadenzas of all three movements were admirably performed, individually and coordinately.

There was fine discipline in passages requiring them to play in unison or divided voices at high and tempered speeds.

The only discernible flaws of intonation appeared during the last movement from the solo violin.

Revel in Satire

In his "Musical Joke," Mozart gave orchestra and conductor free rein to revel in satire and harpooned personality. The playing of the score is no joke, however. The real lampooning was directed at pseudo-composers of Mozart's day and not performing musicians.

This ordinarily reserved orchestra and conductor exploited Mozart's machinations with downright glee. There was no disguise of the dulcet horn solo that goes haywire, solo violin suffocated in orchestral fanciwork, mongrel fugue, and final harmonic chaos after a simple chord has been hammered to death.

This afternoon at 2:30, Munch conducts the orchestra in "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the "Little Nothings" ballet suite, K.299B, and G minor symphony, K.550. Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin will be soloists in the E flat Concerto for two pianos and orchestra, K.365.

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
JOURNAL
W. 3,132
JUL 19 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday by C. N. D.

Friday evening at Tangle wood marked the beginning of a series of three concerts devoted to the music of Mozart, and for this program Dr. Munch chose three of the composer's most felicitous works. There was the Serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments. Four movements of this Serenade were played, and with the wind instrument players of the Boston Symphony it goes without saying that the performance was a superb one.

Next came the C major Piano Concerto K. 503 with Claude Frank in the solo part. Mozart wrote four piano concertos in this key and this is one of the best. Frank gave it a radiant performance and was recalled for bows again and again.

The program ended with the great Symphony in D major, commonly known as the "Prague" symphony. It is fittingly named after Prague because here it had its first performance and here was the city that gave Mozart the warmest recognition during his short lifetime. From its slow introduction to its fiery last movement, Munch played the work with gusto and verve.

Saturday by E. B. H.

There is no doubt about it: Mozart is the ideal composer and Tanglewood the ideal spot, for a summer night of music. As in the Bach concerts last week, the size of the orchestra was reduced, but the sound carried beautifully in the clear, still air, and despite the large crowd in the shed and on the lawns a sense of intimacy was established.

The program was interesting and rewarding. It started with the early Divertimento for Strings, K. 136, composed when Mozart was sixteen, and ended with the great E-flat symphony (No. 39), the first of that incredible group of three that flowed from his pen during the course of six weeks in the summer of 1788. In between were the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K. 364, and the "Musical Joke" for strings and horns, Mozart's only parody.

Ruth Posselt and Joseph de-Pasquale were the soloists in the Sinfonia and gave a good account of themselves, always audible in their dialogue against the orchestral background. The "Joke" was broadly played but no less delightful for that: it was fun to see Dr. Munch so clearly enjoying the nonsense. One may have quibbled with certain details of his reading of the E-flat symphony, which lacked the inimitable lightness of Beecham's but there was a good deal of subtlety and clarity nevertheless; the work itself is sublime, and it was a joy to hear it again.

Sunday by E. M.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch concluded the all-Mozart weekend with a well-chosen and rewarding program. The first selection, the always-delightful Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, featured a superb Romanza and a rousing final Rondo.

Vitya Vronsky & Victor Babin were the soloists in the Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra. They drew an enthusiastic response with their clarity and control, and were particularly impressive when playing with the melodic oboe duet in the Andante. The concluding Rondo was bright and sure, orchestra and soloists playing in true "concert."

It is regrettable that the Les Petits Riens Ballet Suite is not performed more often, for it reveals Mozart's mastery in a series of short, intriguing variations. Dr. Munch and the orchestra were outstanding in the first Gavotte, with its lilting interplay of oboe and horn; the Andantino; and the brisk, lighthearted final Gavotte.

The Symphony No. 40 in G Minor drew a well-deserved ovation. This music transcends chamber intellectuality. The full orchestra was flawless, revealing the deep emotions, vigorous power, and compelling spirit of the composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 16 1962

MOZART SERIES IN TANGLEWOOD DRAWING WELL

Munch Leads Symphony; 19,224 Turn Out for Week-End Events

LENOX—With the temperature registering around 80 degrees beneath a blue sky and a bright sun, a crowd of 5891 turned out at Tanglewood for the concluding concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first Mozart series at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Nearly Half Outside

Nearly half of the audience chose to listen to the concert, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, on the spacious lawns outside of the Music Shed.

Solosists were Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, pianists, making their first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They performed Mozart's Concerto in E. Flat Major for two pianos and orchestra and were given a great ovation.

Also heard on Sunday's program were Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra; "Les Petits Riens," ballet suite, and Symphony in G. Minor No. 40.

The afternoon's attendance was 887 more than last year on the same day. The week end attendance at Tanglewood broke all records for Mozart concerts.

A total of 19,224 persons turned out for the Friday, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts, and the open rehearsal Saturday morning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed.

Weather Kind

The weatherman has been kind to the Berkshire Festival in the first two weeks of the eight-week season. The attendance for the first two weeks is 4607 ahead of the first two weeks a year ago.

The next major event at Tanglewood, before the concluding Mozart series next week end, will be the Wednesday night chamber music concert by the Marlboro (Vt.) Festival orchestra featuring Rudolph Serkin with Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 12 in A Major. In the theater concert hall starting at 8.

Joseph Silverstein, who will take over next season as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist at the Friday night concert, performing Mozart's Violin Concerto.

Other members of the orchestra who will be soloists that night are Gino Cioffi, principal clarinet; Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe; James Stagliano, principal horn, and Sherman Walt, principal bassoon. They will be heard in Mozart's "Sinfonia concertante."

Will Make Debut

At Saturday evening's concert, Evelyne Crochet will make her Tanglewood debut with the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 582 with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony.

Next Sunday afternoon, Dr. Munch has announced, the concert will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mozart's "Requiem" will be heard with four soloists and the Tanglewood Choir.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 191,554
JUL 22 1962

Mozart Weekend at Tanglewood

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD — The second week-end of the Berkshire Festival is always devoted to the music of Mozart and last Friday, Saturday and Sunday found the Music Shed at Tanglewood with its usual complement of music lovers who enjoy this intensive type of listening. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I was unable to get up to hear the Friday concert when Claude Frank was soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 25 in C, K. 503. Good reports were heard of this, the "Prague" Symphony, K.504 and the Serenade for 13 Wind Instruments, K.361. The latter lends itself well to the intimacy of these concerts, which used to be held in the Chamber Music Hall. A dark garnet backdrop like a folding screen has been designed to decrease the size of the immense stage and it enfolds the sound with excellent balance, so none of it is lost in the backstage cavern.

Saturday evening the soloists were Ruth Posselt, violin, and Joseph dePasquale, violist who played the Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, K.364. Their performance was flawless and they were given artistic support by their colleagues. During the entire Mozart series, the most outstanding feature was perhaps the beauty of the slow movements in every work. It was the beauty which, by its miniature perfection, dwarfs beauty of much greater proportions and brings wonderment to one's mind. Mozart was really present in the devoted interpretation of these dedicated musicians.

We had been prepared for this lovely concerted music, by a performance of the Divertimento in D major for Strings, K.136, and here again there was the perfection of detail and balance of tone for which this orchestra is noted

We had not been prepared for the hilariously funny Mozart "Ein Musikalischer Spass" (A Musical Joke) for Strings and Horn, K.522. To be sure, recordings of this work are available and they are funny. But there was something so incongrously unbelievable about this well constructed lampoon on musical construction, written by a master hand and played by artists of note, which sent the audience off into gales of laughter many times. The laughter was short during the performance, because one might be missing something if it were too lengthy. The false fugue nearly finished me off. I had forgotten how clever it was. To hear the horns make dissonance as aptly as does Elliott Carter's most recent score, was to realize once more, that there is really nothing new under the sun. There is only more of everything in this day and age. Oh, for the simple days of Mozart! It was wonderful fun to shed seriousness along with the composer, who was an expert in the distillation of many a serious passage.

The two Mozart Symphonies we heard were No. 39 in E flat, K.543 on Saturday and No. 40 in G minor, K.550 on Sunday. These works were played with devotion to the purity of style required. Tempo marks were followed. The difference from other performances which might have been noted, was the degree with which Dr. Munch interprets "Allegro assai." His musicians can really play "very fast."

On Sunday we heard the Concerto in E flat for Two Pianos and Orchestra, K.365 played by Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin. Their playing was superior. Perfectly matched and artistically blended, this was one of the high points of the week-end.

Dr. Munch also included the pleasant, gay music from the Ballet Suite, "Les Petits Riens" K.229b, and the Serenade for String Orchestra, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", K.525, which has been the joy of many an amateur group for many a year. It was as fresh and beautiful as ever because the musicians who played it are experts in the interpretation of Mozart's style.

The Berkshire Festival continues through a total of eight weeks this season and by all counts it bids fair to exceed all records in attendance and excellence of performance, if that is possible.

TIGHT BINDING

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D 94 387
JUL 16 1962

19,000 Attend Tanglewood Mozart Concerts

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

[illegible] time for Mozart, [illegible] soloists. And all [illegible] collectively over the [illegible] at Tanglewood.

[illegible] weekend in[illegible] the Austrian com[illegible] 39 and 40th Sym[illegible] two piano concertos [illegible] works. Next [illegible] base in Sym[illegible] No. 21, 35 and [illegible] more than 19,[illegible] persons for the [illegible] two all-Mozart and [illegible] beamed down on [illegible] lovers who throng[illegible] to hear the works of the [illegible] youthful and enchantingly melodic composer.

Perfect for Strings

It was the perfect occasion for conductor Charles Munch to show why the string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has world renown. And he did. The strings literally glittered and sparkled. In the Divertimento for D Major, Saturday night's opening work, they were tender and delicate. And in last night's dazzling performance of the Symphony in G Minor (No. 40) they were powerfully melodic.

The strings also starred in Saturday night's audience "treat." This was in "Ein Musilikalischer Spass" ("A Musical Joke") where Mozart pokes fun at composers who try to be too serious. Thus in the musical joke, the strings chop and hack away at the melody. A horn sounds feeble and sick. The violins get lost in ripples and, at mice. It was obvious the audience appreciated and understood Mozart's humorous intention and the playing drew spirited titters at the comic high spots and musical low spots.

Happy Combination

Saturday evening's soloists featured Ruth Posselt, violin, and Joseph DePasquale, viola, in the intriguing Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola in E-Flat, K. 346. It was a happy combination and the two soloists gave the concerto every ounce of youthfulness, warmth and charm it deserves. Miss Posselt, incidentally, is the wife of concertmaster Richard Burgin.

The concerto in E-Flat Major for Two Pianos and Orchestra, with Soloists Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, brought out the delicate, sensitively exact melody. The concluding Rondo featured the paired pianos in a hauntingly pretty and gay solo. Yesterday's performance contrasted sharply with the concluding Symphony in G Minor No. 40 and its powerful, Beethoven-like qualities.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
16 1962

Music: 1st Mozart Weekend Ends at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The 25th Berkshire Music Festival's first gala Mozart weekend at Tanglewood ended yesterday afternoon with Charles Munch conducting 50 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program from caprice to serious drama.

Yesterday's audience of 5,891 brought the weekend total to 16,855, or 2,369 more for Mozart's music than the previous week's attendance for the all-Bach programs.

Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin (Mr. and Mrs.) were yesterday's soloists in the Concerto in E Flat major for two pianos and orchestra, K.365. Munch conducted the orchestra in the Serenade for String Orchestra K.525, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," "Les Petits Riens" (Little Nothings) ballet suite, K.299B, and Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K.550.

Vronsky and Babin gave the concerto a painstaking, but rather tinkling, performance. It was a correct example of superficial, fluent technique that creates a liquid tone, but only partly realizes the stamina of Mozart's piano music.

Munch and the orchestra gave the pianists a handsomely volumed introduction. A slight rhythmic unsteadiness was detected when the pianists came in.

Their digital technique was admirable, but, of course, this is an assumed trait of first - rung duopianists. Difficult, ornamental passages were parallel on both keyboards.

It rested with the orchestra, however, to project the Mozartean elan that was duplicated so well later by Rossini in his operatic overtures. The first cadenza on the pianos was tonally restrained, but vivified by the orchestra for the windup. The cadenza of the final movement fared rather better at the keyboards.

The pianists were permitted maximum freedom in the slow movement, which calls for the most sensitive playing. There, the "sing-song" quality was even more apparent.

Rare String Beauty

Much of this was rectified in the scintillating rondo. In summary, Vronsky and Babin played with exactitude, but the over-all product was better suited to salon listening than to major concert proportions.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" had rare string beauty. Munch was restrained in speeds (almost unduly prudent) until he came to the final dance movement.

The fragile decorations of the opening allegro sounded as if played by a string quartet, rather than 50 instruments. Complete serenity prevailed in the "Romanza," with accents exactly placed on two-syllable phrases.

Every fragment of detail was exposed in the minuet and the rondo moved at top speed without leftovers of sound at abrupt phrase endings.

Weightless, Witty Music

Mozart used his lightest pen to compose the "Petits Riens" ballet music. The overture and six of the original 13 dances were played yesterday. The players not only appeared to be intrigued with this weightless, witty music, but they gave it the advantage of their best resources.

They even managed to inject a little undercurrent of heroism in the overture. The succeeding dances (each a delightful miniature) brought out polished solos from woodwinds, cleanly played fragments by horns and singing strings in typical 18th century gavotte style.

The G minor symphony was the most mature, heavily dramatic Mozart work performed at the three weekend concerts. Following the ballet music, it was like going from lightly tinted cameos to a dazzling mural.

Friday's Program

The first few measures sufficed to show that the orchestra had left the playground and was now in the graduate classroom. Page after page of intensity was unfolded, much of it (especially the first movement) proclaiming plaintive sorrow.

The hopscotch minuets of previously played works gave way to a tense dance. The finale had marvellous impetus and ended the weekend in an atmosphere of splendor.

The Mozart cycle resumes Friday night at 8 p.m. Munch and his orchestra will play the Masonic Funeral Music and Symphony No. 36, the "Linz." Soloists are all members of the Boston Symphony — Joseph Silverstein in the violin concerto in A major, K.219; Sinfonia Concertante, with Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; James Stagliano, horn and Serman Walt, bassoon.

COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK M[illegible] EAST
Thursday, May 19, 1962
547

Music

Boston Symph[illegible]

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL. At Music of Mozart, Friday—Sunday

This weekend, being the second week of the Berkshire Music Festival, was devoted to the music of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. It was an extremely felicitous occasion.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] playing at its superlative best. Conductor Charles Munch, who retires at the end of the summer after a successful tenure of 13 years as permanent conductor, was sharing his love of Mozart's melodic genius with an enthusiastic audience.

For the opening selection of Friday evening's concert, Mr. Munch chose to show off the Boston Symphony Orchestra's brilliant wind section. They played the Serenade in B-flat major for 13 Wind Instruments, K. 361, and they played to the hilt. The introductory largo sounded organ-like, the legato in the slow movement was melting while the playing in the allegros of the first and last movements was very brisk and clear.

Claude Frank was the soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 25, in C major, K. 503, the last of the C major concerti. After a slow start, he proved equal to conductor and orchestra. His playing was particularly distinguished in the slow movement, one of Mozart's sublime, leisurely slow movements.

The evening ended with the Prague Symphony, the composer's 38th, in D major, K. 504. Here Mr. Munch pushed his and the orchestra's virtuosity a little too far: the fast tempi were too fast and the slow ones dragged so that the general effect was lost to the conductor's indulgence in planning out an individual phrase.

Saturday evening's concert began with an exhibition of the Boston's rich string section. The Divertimento in D major, for Strings, K. 136 sparkled and bubbled like champagne and became, literally, a diversion.

The performance of the Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola in E-flat, K. 364 was marred in the last movement because of the uncertain intonation of Ruth Posselt, the solo violinist. Joseph de Pasquale, who leads the viola section, was solo violist.

The seldom heard ein Musikalischer Spass for Strings and Horns, K. 522 followed immediately after intermission. Though obvious, Mozart's spoofing of bad composing remains amusing and fresh after almost 200 years.

Mr. Munch's reading of the E-flat major Symphony, K. 543 —the first of the last three great symphonies—was equal to the perfection of the symphony.

Sunday's program, the last of the series, opened with a delightful performance of Eine kleine Nachtmusik, Serenade for String Orchestra, K. 525.

The day's concerto was the E-flat major for Two Pianos, K. 365 played musically and tenderly by Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin.

The ballet music, Les Petits Riens, K. 299B, followed. Like good French pastry, it was rich and light.

The concert and the weekend ended with a moving performance of the great G minor Symphony, No. 40, K. 550.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUL 17 1962

57

Mozart's Musical Genius Displayed At Tanglewood

For the second and third weekend concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, musical genius of the 18th century, was, and will be, respectively, the sole composer featured through various works.

Four of the seven movements of his Serenade for Thirteen Wind Instruments K. 361, opened last Friday's program by the Boston Symphony Chamber Orchestra. Unwonted beauty of tone and color through the master's use of wind instruments was dispersed to 3542 delighted listeners by masterful instrumentalists at Dr. Munch's sensitive directions. That only 13 musicians produced the depth and breadth of the Adagio, the pompous stolidity of the Menuetto and the fleeting lightness of the Rondo, was almost incredible.

Claude Frank was the soloist for one of Mozart's maturer piano concertos, the C major, K. 503. Requiring the utmost concentration, Mr. Frank gave his complete attention to Dr. Munch and the orchestra, every phase and phrase reflected in his emphatic performance. Clarity of running passages in the first movement seemed blurred by the pedal or technical presentation, although ensuing demands, revealing a sensitive musicianship, were crystal clear Technically enormously difficult, this concerto is rarely played. Its impersonal and sophisticated approach leaves the listener unsatisfied, but increasingly in suspense during the unfolding of its inventive intricacies, and unsurpassed contrapuntal developments. The enthusiastic audience recalled Mr. Frank and Dr. Munch several times.

During intermission an entirely different solo performance caused many listeners to turn their attention skyward, as the satellite Telstar twinkled more brightly than any other star across the firmament.

From its unusual Adagio introduction, which occurs in only three other of Mozart's owr symphonies, to the swift finale, which leaves one on the crest of musical enjoyment, the D major "Prague" symphony brought the evening to a close. The fourth last of Mozart's symphonies, it is noted also for its lack of the usual minuet.

One was once again aware, during the evening, of Dr. Munch as the disseminator of musical directions, unlike the Bach performances in which the music seemed to revolve around, but not noticeably through, him. The accent then was on the marvelously coordinated musicians.

A visit to Saturday morning's rehearsal found an even larger audience, 3577, than the previous evening. Few breaks mar what was, and is, usually Sunday afternoon's program. Outside of these, the only difference from the regular performance is the musicians' dress and informal manner, even the wandering listener kept at a minimum by the attendants, with at all times the first six rows closed to everyone. Children are seen in great numbers, and in as good control, if not better, as the more formal concerts.

The romantic and popular Eine Kleine Nachtmusik started the rehearsal, followed by the second Tanglewood appearance of the excellent duo pianists, Vronsky and Babin, playing the concerto in E-flat major, K. 365. Beautifully balanced style was exacted by both pianists, simply and sensitively executed were each phrase, the cadenzas moments of gentle exposition. The exquisite droplet melody, first in the violins, then pianos, uplifted the andante at its close.

Three of the nine movements of the ballet suite Les Petits Riens, K. 299B, were subjected to partial repetitions after a brief intermission The final Symphony in G minor, No. 40, K. 550, found Dr. Munch requesting the first three notes of the first theme to be played in unaccented smoothness, in contrast to the later forceful power of this same phrase.

Lunches were enjoyed, after unrestrained applause for Dr. Munch and the orchestra, the beauty of the grounds enchanting young and middling agee, in an appropriately relaxed atmosphere. Noticeably lovely right now are the stunning plantings of white petunias and bright red geraniums. — M. deB. B.

58

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579

JUL 14 1962 Buffalo

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Bostonians Excel In Choice Mozart

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 14.—Charles Munch opened a fortnight of Mozart concerts with the Boston Symphony's chamber group last night. For the first time in Berkshire festival history the two weekends following the traditional Bach opening will be devoted to Mozart.

The six programs will terminate with the Requiem on July 22, which concert commemorates the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, the inspiration and the first conductor of the festival.

Some choice Mozart made last night's concert a delight. The program included the serenade in B flat for 13 wind instruments, K. 361, always a refreshing experience; the piano concerto in C, K. 503, sometimes considered "Olympian"; and the symphony No. 38, "Prague," as fine a work as the famous "Last Three"—but yet to be recognized as such.

The serenade makes wonderful outdoor music. Its irresistible last movement never fails to conquer an audience; such infectious gaiety is one of the constant joys of listening to Mozart anyhow.

As a study in the timbre of wind instruments, the score is notable for the emergence of the clarinets.

The Bostonians played it with relish. Mr. Munch imparted his inspirational impetus so that the performance reflected both the expertness of the players and the spirit of the music.

If the serenity of the concerto sounded secondary to the artful simplicity of the music, the reason lay in an undistinguished but nevertheless articulate performance. Claude Frank, as soloists, gave a neatly executed, musicianly account of the piano part.

Too Mannered

His performance needed less method and more abandon to give the music its true character. Pianistically his playing was exemplary though perhaps too mannered. His finger facility made all the figuration especially fine, but his forthright approach curtailed realization of the "olympian" character of the work. The audience, however, highly approved of his playing.

Mr. Munch's vitality injected a rewarding freshness to the symphony. The slow movement revealed his poetic sensibilities, while the finale sparkled. An enthusiastic audience of 3,542 showed obvious appreciation not only of this performance but of the whole concert.

BLANK PAGE

to 3RD WEEK / JULY 16TH TO JULY 22ND

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 20, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

MASONIC FUNERAL MUSIC, K. 477

SYMPHONY IN D MAJOR, NO. 31, "PARIS," K. 297

I. Allegro assai
II. Andantino
III. Allegro

VIOLIN CONCERTO NO. 5, IN A MAJOR, K. 219

I. Allegro aperto
II. Adagio
III. Rondeau: Tempo di menuetto

Soloist: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

Intermission

SINFONIA CONCERTANTE IN E-FLAT, K. 297B

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Andantino con variazioni

Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG
Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI
Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 21, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

SYMPHONY IN C MAJOR, "LINZ," NO. 36

I. Adagio; allegro spiritoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto

PIANO CONCERTO IN E-FLAT, K. 482

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegro; Andante cantabile; Allegro

Soloist: EVELYNE CROCHET

Intermission

SYMPHONY NO. 41 IN C MAJOR, "JUPITER," K. 551

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante cantabile
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, July 22, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

SYMPHONY IN D MAJOR, NO. 35, "HAFFNER," K. 385

I. Allegro con spirito
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Presto

Intermission

REQUIEM MASS IN D MINOR, K. 626

I. Requiem
II. Dies iræ
III. Tuba mirum
IV. Rex tremendæ
V. Recordare
VI. Confutatis
VII. Lacrimosa
VIII. Domine Jesu
IX. Hostias
X. Sanctus
XI. Benedictus
XII. Agnus Dei

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano
FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Alto
BLAKE STERN, Tenor
MAC MORGAN, Bass

TANGLEWOOD CHOIR prepared by LORNA COOKE DEVARON

BALDWIN PIANO
RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 15 1962

Concert Next Sunday Will Be Memorial to Founder

Three Tanglewood Programs Devoted to Mozart With Koussevitzky Tribute On 22d

LENOX—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play three concerts of music by Mozart during the third week of the Berkshire Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch has announced that the concert next Sunday (July 22) will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Today's Program

Today's program at Tanglewood includes the 10 a. m. chamber music program by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. At 2 p. m. in the Music Shed Dr. Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of his week's programs devoted to Mozart.

The Friday program at 8 p. m. will consist of Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 31, K. 297. Dr. Munch has invited Joseph Silverstein to be soloist at this concert in a performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto, No. 5, K. 219. Four principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, James Stagliano, horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon, to be soloists in a performance of the Sinfonia Concertante, the concluding work on Friday's program.

On Saturday at 10 a. m. there will be an open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund. In the evening at 8 in the Music Shed, Evelyne Crochet will make her Tanglewood debut playing the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 482, with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The balance of the program will be the Symphony No. 36, "Linz," and the Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter."

Four Soloists

For the concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky the principal work to be heard will be the Mozart Requiem with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Florence Kopleff, alto, Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, as the soloists with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron. At the opening of the program Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in a performance of the Symphony No. 35, "Haffner."

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those making voluntary contributions for the support of the Music Center, are invited to the first performance of the season by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Tuesday at 8 p. m. Other friends' events scheduled for this week are a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall at 4 p. m. and Composers Forum in the theater at 8 p. m. on Thursday, the Aspects of Music seminar in the Chamber Music Hall at 3.15 p. m. Friday and next Sunday's chamber music program in the Chamber Music Hall at 10 a. m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
JUL 17 1962

At Tanglewood

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, violinist, appears as soloist at the Berkshire Festival Friday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood in the Mozart Violin Concerto, K. 219.

NY NEWS BUREAU
BANY. N.Y.
WSPAPER
IPPINGS
ETE NEW YORK
SERVICE
Knickerbocker News
July 21, 1962

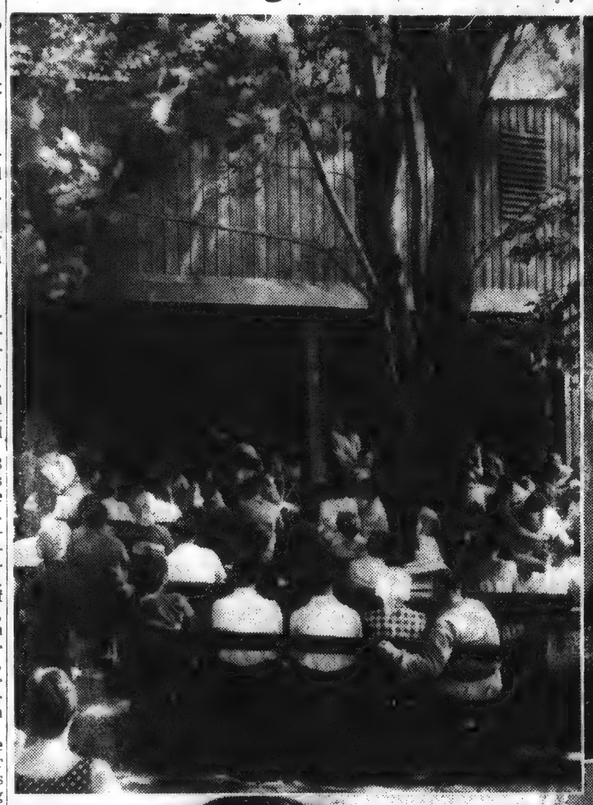
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly
JUL 19 1962

Berkshire Festival Concert Soloist

FLORENCE KOPLEFF

Florence Kopleff, Contralto, will be soloist in Mozart's Requiem with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, July 22 at 2:30 at the Berkshire Festival Concert in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

Tanglewood Scene, Principal Players



Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will highlight the music of Mozart today through Saturday. Upper left is a typical Sunday morning scene during a chamber music concert; right, James Stagliano, principal French horn; lower left, Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe, and right, Sherman Walt, principal bassoon, who will be featured in Tanglewood Music Shed concerts this week.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 64,387
JUL 14 1962

SOLOIST—Joseph Silverstein will play Mozart's violin concerto, K-219, Friday night at Tanglewood. Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony for the event.

SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Sunday, July 15, 1962

Phyllis Curtin Will Sing Solo At Tanglewood

Phyllis Curtin, soprano, who was a soloist last season with the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, will be one of the soloists with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir at 2:30 p.m. July 22, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch has announced that this concert will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire music center and former music director of the Boston Symphony.

The principal work to be heard will be the Mozart Requiem. At the opening of the program Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in a performance of the Symphony No. 35, "Haffner."

62

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 21 1962

New and Old Concert Masters

Whitestone

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retiring at the end of this summer, congratulates Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster elect, who will take over the position this fall. Mr. Silverstein is shown after appearing as soloist in the Tanglewood program Friday evening when he played the Mozart A Major Concerto.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 18 1962

Whitestone

PRINCIPAL WOODWIND PLAYERS, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be heard as soloists Friday night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, with Charles Munch conducting Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante, are, from the left, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, James Stagliano and Sherman Walt. The group also will appear on the NBC "Today" TV show at Tanglewood.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUR.
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK POST
JUL 20 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728
JUL 22 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 15,799
JUL 21 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
JUL 19 1962

Concert Slated For Koussevitzky

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 2:30 will play a memorial concert for the late Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Performers in the principal work, the Mozart Requiem, will include Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor and Mac Morgan, bass. To open the program Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Mozart Symphony 35, the "Haffner."

Tonight at 8 Evelyne Crochet will play the Mozart piano concerto K. 482 with the orchestra. Also on the program will be Symphony 36, the Linz, and Symphony 40, the "Jupiter." An open rehearsal, to benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will begin this morning at 10.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CHATHAM COURIER
Thursday, [illegible] 26, 1962

FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto, will be soloist in Mozart's Requiem with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, July 22 at 2:30 at the Berkshire Festival Concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Schenectady Gazette

16,938 Attend Music Festival

Weekend Tanglewood attendance came to 16,938, largest in the history of the Berkshire Festival for the all-Bach and Mozart programs.

Yesterday's program in honor of Serge Koussevitzky featured Mozart's Requiem Mass in D Minor and the "Haffner" Symphony in D Major.

The coming weekend program will include music by Beethoven, Purcell, Debussy, Brahms and Handel.

NEWS BUREAU
N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
JUL 16 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D 11 450
JUL 17 1962 Bufkeller

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
JUL 15 1962 Bufkeller

THE INQUIRER
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JUL 15 1962

ATHENS, N.Y.
HERALD
W. 315
JUL 19 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S 3,147,219
JUL 15 1962 Bufkeller

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JUL 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
JUL 20 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
JUL 14 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,675
JUL 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636
JUL 16 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363
JUL 20 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D 29 861 S: 31,200
JUL 15 1962 Bufkeller

THE NEWS
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUL 15 1962

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 99,075 S. 102,588
JUL 15 1962 Bufkeller

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 17 1962 Bufkeller

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D. 40,554
JUL 21 1962 Bufkeller

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 611,942 S. 1,004,122
JUL 15 1962 Bufkeller

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
JUL 14 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, July 17, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 17 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
JUL 15 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
JUL 12 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
JUL 19 1962

LAKEVILLE, CONN.
JOURNAL
W. 3,132
JUL 19 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,569
JUL 19 1962

Phyllis Curtin Is Soloist Sunday In Tanglewood Memorial Concert

Phyllis Curtin, soprano, will be soloist in Mozart's Requiem with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on Sunday afternoon, July 22, at 2:30, at the Berkshire Festival Concert in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play three concerts of music by Mozart during the third week of the Berkshire Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.). Doctor Munch has announced that the concert on Sunday July 22; 2:30 p.m. will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center and former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Friday program at 8 p.m. will consist of Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 31, K. 297. Doctor Munch has invited Joseph Silverstein to be soloist at this concert in a performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto, No. 5, K. 219. Four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gino Cioffi, Principal Clarinet, Ralph Gomberg, Principal Oboe, James Stagliano, Principal Horn, and Sherman Walt, Principal Bassoon, to be soloists in a performance of the Sinfonia Concertante, the concluding work on Friday's program.

On Saturday at 10 a.m. there will be on open rehearsal for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

In the evening at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed, Evelyn Crochet will make her Tanglewood debut playing the Mozart Piano Concerto, K. 482, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The balance of the program will be the Symphony No. 36, "Linz," and the Symphony No. 41, "Jupiter."

For the concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky the principal work to be heard will be the Mozart Requiem with Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Florence Kopleff, alto, Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, as the soloists with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron. At the opening of this program Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in a performance of the Symphony No. 35, "Haffner."

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those making voluntary contributions for the support of the Music Center, are invited to the first performance of the season by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Tuesday evening (July 17), at 8:00 p.m. Other Friends events scheduled for this week are a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall at 4:00 p.m. and Composers Forum in the Theatre at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday (July 19), the Aspects of Music seminar in the Chamber Music Hall at 3:15 day's Friday (July 20), and Sunday's (July 22) chamber music program in the Chamber Music Hall at 10:00 a.m.

64

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 22 1962

REVIEWS 3RD. WEEK

Music: Mozart Program At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The most satisfying, balanced and valuable of the Berkshire Festival's six Mozart programs was played last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch.

Evidently the public recognized it as such because the music shed was filled and additional listeners from the surrounding grounds made a total audience of 6,735.

Performance was superior. The symphonies were No. 36 in C major, K.425, "Linz," and No. 41 in C major, K.551, "Jupiter." Separated as they were by the piano concerto in E flat, K.482, and intermission, the dominating key of C major did not become overworked or stalemated.

Soloist was Evelyne Crochet, a musicianly, inspiring and technically competent pianist with a rounding penchant for Mozartean style. The only digression was her own cadenza to the first movement, overly long, slightly Lisztian in technique and much involved with changes of key.

Time of Elation

Yesterday was a time of elation and exactitude for Munch. The morning public rehearsal, attended by 3,197, had trial, error and consummate satisfaction. The works rehearsed were this afternoon's program — Mozart's "Haffner" symphony and the Requiem.

There were more than the usual exhortations from the podium. At one point, the conductor's stand took quite a beating.

"I said I need a crescendo" Munch insisted in no uncertain terms.

Results of this extra striving for perfection was evident in last night's playing. It was quite unlike previous programs when Mozart curios were played to offer the public something "new" or unusual. All of it was played by the orchestra in its past Boston season.

The "Linz" symphony was written by Mozart in the incredible time of four days. He dawdled over the "Jupiter," taking two weeks to compose that one.

Nature Preserved

Comparing the "Linz" with counterparts heard previously in this festival, a new assortment of descriptives is needed. The orchestra seemed to mount a cloud to play it. Munch, on the other hand, assumed responsiblity for preserving the work's serious nature — and its elaborate construction.

Strings were absolutely marvelous — the rampaging violins in the first and final movements, violas and cellos with their individual parts, and the basses racing through sixteenth - note passages as if pursued by demons. The wind instruments suffered no discernible casualties in their harmonic chorale - like part. wrong notes here are disastrous.

In the slow movement, melodies remained integrated in spite of elaborate filigree. Solo bassoon and oboe were beautifully - toned in the trio section. Munch dictated an appreciable decrease in speed, presumably to better display the woodwinds. The finale was a marvel of technical deftness and rose to a peak of accumulated excitement.

Won in Moscow

Miss Crochet made her Tanglewood debut last night, although she was heard twice with the orchestra in Boston.

She was one of the winners of the 1958 Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow, that brought fame to Van Cliburn. She studied with Edwin Fischer and Rudolf Serkin. At present she is on the musical faculty at Brandeis University.

If one were convinced that Mozart had to be profound to be great, it would be impossible to give such a performance of the concerto as heard last night.

Miss Crochet did vent Mozart's serious side in the slow movement To some, it may have sounded thin, even a trifle inconsequential, but keyboard technique was in full authority.

This pianist does not have a pyrotechnique. There were spots in the first movement when problems of tempo seemed to arise from finger insecurity. But there was a more telling lucidity on Miss Crochet's playing of runs, broken chords, arpeggios and trills that sounded like matched alternations and not frantic flutters.

Above all, Miss Crochet made her instrument sing happily in the swift movements, tenderly in the slow.

This afternoon is the festival's Serge Koussevitzky Memorial Concert. Munch will conduct the orchestra in the "Haffner" symphony and Requiem. Participating in the latter is the Tanglewood choir Soloists are Phyllis Curtin, soprano (who will sing at the forthcoming Worcester Festival); Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor, Mac Morgan, bass.

Tanglewood

HARTFORD TIMES 7/23/62

Munch Conducts Sunday Concert

Neither by spoken word nor in the program of the Boston Symphony's concert Sunday at Tanglewood was there mention of Serge Koussevitzky's name. Yet when Charles Munch turned to the audience before conducting Mozart's Requiem and raised his hands, the thousands in the great music shed rose to their feet together and stood for a moment in silence, all aware that this was in tribute to the memory of the great conductor who led this orchestra for many years.

This was the last of the all-Mozart programs of the season, and Dr. Munch had scheduled only the Symphony in D major, No. 35, the "Haffner" with which he opened the program, in addition to the Requiem.

Four excellent vocal soloists familiar to Tanglewood audiences and a well prepared Tanglewood Chorus assisted the orchestra in the Requiem. The soloists, whose voices blended particularly well, are soprano Phyllis Curtin, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Blake Stern and bass Mac Morgan. Credit for the chorus's preparation goes to Lorna Cooke deVaron.

Though Mozart died before the Requiem and the last three sections were done by a pupil presumably following themes and outlines by the composer, there was no noticeable difference in style as Dr. Munch led his musicians through the moving work.

The shed's 6,000 seats appeared nearly all filled and hundreds sat on the benches outside or in their own chairs while many others lay on the broad lawns. Though the adjoining roads are narrow, a well arranged traffic pattern, adequately supervised, enables these large audiences to flow out with surprisingly little delay.—T. L. H.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 21 1962

MOZART MUSIC GIVEN OVATION AT TANGLEWOOD

Orchestra's First Violinist Wins Tribute From Other Players

By WILLARD CLARK

LENOX — This third week end of the current Tanglewood season was enlivened by a program of the works of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, superbly played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch.

Exceptional Playing

As a bonus, one had the opportunity of hearing the exceptional playing of violinist Joseph Silverstein in the Mozart concerto No. 5 in A major, K. 219. This alone would have been worth going much farther to hear.

Munch appeared both rested and relaxed. He conducted with minute attention to every detail, and his men played for him as well as we have ever heard them.

The program opened with the gracious, poignant Masonic funeral music. It was played with a deep sense of reverence, without any feeling of false emotion. The audience loved it.

Many Melodies

Charles Munch has a way with the music of Mozart. We remember sitting enthralled not so long ago, while he directed three Mozart symphonies. Friday night he chose to play the Symphony in D major, No. 31, K. 297.

This is a gay, imaginative symphony in which melodies are piled one upon the other. It became crystal clear through the Munch direction, and I have an idea that the audience wouldn't have minded hearing it all over again.

Joseph Silverstein, who will be remembered as a soloist with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra last season, is a player of rare technical and artistic gifts.

Fine Tone

In choosing this particular concerto, he managed to choose a vehicle admirably suited to his temperament and interpretive abilities.

He draws an extremely fine tone from his instrument, and this, coupled with his technical skill and sound musicianship, makes for pleasant listening.

In fact, at the close of the concerto he received a veritable ovation, with the orchestra rising twice to express its approval. We have not seen this done for many years, but the Boston players are very conscious of the excellencies of their own.

Mozart Magic

The concert closed with one of the fairest gems in the Mozart repertory, namely, the Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K. 297b. I am not sure, but I think this work was programed last season by Munch.

The soloists were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn. These are all first desk men and virtuosi in their own right.

The magic of Mozart is never stronger than when he is writing for a variety of instruments, melody after melody was unfolded. Each in the peculiar richness of the instruments for which it was intended.

I have seldom noted the members of the orchestra so intent upon giving their best to Munch and the music being played.

Such perfection of balance, intonation and warmth are seldom encountered. Friday night they were there in abundance. No wonder the audience applauded for many minutes. It had heard music of Mozart played again.

Anyway, it was a memorable concert, paying honor to Mozart, his music, and to Serge Koussevitzky, who initiated the Mozart series.

Saturday night Munch has invited Evelyne Crochet to make her debut at Tanglewood in the piano concerto in E flat, K. 482.

The concerto will be surrounded by the "Linz" and "Jupiter" symphonies. This should be fine listening. Hope you will all be there.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 22 1962

French Miss Is Lauded at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Saturday night's concert, devoted to the works of Mozart, brought to our attention the charming French pianist, Miss Evelyne Crochet, who appeared for the first time at Tanglewood playing the Piano Concerto in E-Flat, K. 482.

2 Mozart Symphonies

The concerto was flanked by the Symphony in C major, "Linz," No. 36, and the Symphony No. 41 in C major, "Jupiter," K. 551. Therefore, one was treated to many of the facets which make Mozart's music so appealing.

Director Charles Munch was unhurried and quick to pinpoint every beauty in these scores. The "Linz" Symphony, written in something like four days, had an individuality all its own; from the slow, contemplative opening movement to the brisk, dance-like presto of the finale, one is led through a gamut of emotions. Yet withall, this is not a Herculean work.

The work was played with minute attention and with a perfection of balance worthy of a string quartet.

Pounding Absent

Miss Crochet, a petite, white-gowned brunette, is not a pianist in the grand style, but she is a pianist of sensitivity and depth of feeling. She has a reliable technique and a rare feeling for phrase and melody. Everything was played within a relatively small scale. There was no pounding. The concerto itself is a thing of beauty and only an overly-long arpeggio, written by Miss Crochet, disturbed the balance of the work.

The audience appreciated the artistry it had heard and the success of the pianist was indisputable. Evelyne Crochet, born in Paris in 1934, studied with Yvonne Lefebure at the Conservatoire and took first prize in 1954. She studied with Edwin Fischer and Rudolf Serkin, received the first medal in international competition in Geneva in 1956, and was one of the winners of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow in 1958. Coming to this country in that year, she has played in Boston and elsewhere. At present Miss Crochet is on the musical faculty of Brandeis University.

Broad Interpretation

In programming the "Jupiter" Symphony Charles Munch was programming a work to which he must be very much attached, so often has he played it for Berkshire Festival audiences. His interpetation is worth hearing again and again, for it is big, broad and handsomely paced. There seems little one can say about this particular performance without repeating what has been said in the past. It was a thoroughly satisfactory musical experience.

Sunday afternoon the series of concerts devoted to the music of Mozart will reach its climax with a performance of the Requiem Mass in D minor, K. 626, one of the most sublime evocations of faith ever written. It is fitting that the work will be dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir, and will have as his soloists four knowledgeable soloists, Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. This will mark Miss Curtin's first appearance at Tanglewood.

Springfield remembers her from her splendid recital of last season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 23 1962

TANGLEWOOD'S REQUIEM MASS CHOIR PRAISED

Symphony, Chorus, Quartet Present Outstanding Mozart Work

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The current series of programs devoted to the music of Mozart came to a glorious finale Sunday afternoon when Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir, superbly prepared by Lorna Cooke Devaron, and a top-rank quartet consisting of Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Blake Stern, tenor; Mac Morgan, bass, in a performance of Mozart's Requiem Mass in D minor, K. 626.

"Splendid Chorus"

Although the score of this work is attributed to at least two others besides Mozart, there is no reason not to accept the inherent beauty and sincerity of the music.

The glory of this particular performance rested not in the achievement of the solo quartet, but rather in the splendid chorus.

We have not heard a Tanglewood chorus equal to this in a number of years. Lorna Cooke Devaron had prepared this chorus with meticulous attention to detail, and the result was an unusually fine blend of tone and a variety of tone color.

Brisk Pace

This was not a large, spacious performance. Munch kept everything going briskly. Of the four solo voices, that of Miss Curtin sounded the freshest, she sang with distinguished style and with feeling for the test. It was too bad she did not have more to do.

It is always a joy to us to hear the sumptuous voice of Florence Kopleff, although Sunday afternoon the upper portion of the register sounded edgy. But her distinguished art and musicianship rise above all vocal problems.

While not in the league of Curtin, Kopleff and Morgan, tenor Blake Stern sang better than we have heard him in the past, bringing to his interpretation a warmth of feeling and considerable vocal body.

Deeply Felt

Mac Morgan, who hails from nearby Stockbridge, is always dependable, and filled out the quartet in fine style.

Unlike the requiems of Verdi and Berlioz, this particular requiem is less dramatic and perhaps more deeply felt, for it was written not long before the composer's death. In fact, he never completed it.

Much credit must be given to the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who were at their superlative best. It seems that these annual concerts in memory of Serge Koussevitzky bring out the vest best from these players. If the maestro was listening, I think he would have enjoyed the performance.

"Jovian Proportions"

Because this mass is not over long, Munch prefaced it with the symphony in D major, No. 34 ("Haffner"), K. 385, a work of almost Jovian proportions.

There was much to admire in Munch's direction, and his feeling for line and phrase. In fact, we have not heard him conduct Mozart to greater effect. Again the orchestra was at its brilliant best.

Next Wednesday's chamber music concert will be played by the Boston Arts Quartet. The program seems designed particularly for the avant garde Tanglewood audiences who continually demand contemporary music, or a reasonable facsimile thereof. This they should get in the works of Webern, Berger and Schoenberg.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717

JUL 23 1962

65

Whitestone

SUCCESSFUL DEBUT is made at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood by Evelyne Crochet, who played the Mozart Piano Concerto with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Saturday night. Here Dr. Munch congratulates her after performance.

Mozart Finale at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

CHARLES MUNCH turned to face the audience in the Shed at Tanglewood after intermission yesterday afternoon to pay silent homage to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor who first brought the Boston Symphony orchestra to the Berkshires in the summer and who also founded the Berkshire Music Center, the school whose term and functions are coordinated with the annual festival.

Munch then turned to the orchestra and the Tanglewood choir which had been trained by Lorna Cooke DeVaron to start the Mozart Requiem Mass (K626) in D minor. The soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Florence Kopleff, alto, Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

* * *

THE CHORUS was of remarkably equal strength in all registers and in the many intricate canons and fugues with which Mozart spiced his score the clarity and balance was consistently well maintained. Furthermore, the fugue in the Kyrie was proclaimed in each voice with confident authority and the fluent counterweaving was executed with fidelity.

Munch drove some sections with speed which might have been deemed reckless with a less capable orchestra. Solo trombonist William Gibson set a firm, sonorous pattern in the Tuba mirum and basso Morgan sang the reflected idiom with an easy power and shaped tone which exactly suited the declaration he was called upon to make. The tenor soloist at his entrance used a strident voice at his first utterance which he later happily reduced to the proper dimensions of the message. Miss Koploff and Miss Curtin also brought vocal richness to their assignments.

* * *

IN THE "Rex tremendae" the chorus sang like a company of stentors, virtually rousing us to unprecedented appreciation of the volume on tap in a group of able voices well prepared. Evidence after evidence occurred throughout the Requiem of their flexibility, and Munch called them repeatedly to explore every degree of contrasts and styles. In the "Lacrimosa" a crescendo was developed which was practically as visible as it was audible.

The "Benedictus" was one of the most effective movements for the solo quartet, and Miss Curtin had a last, rewarding opportunity in the "Lux eterna" which she fulfilled with compelling stress. Munch held the forces in command unfailingly. He hung on to some final measures with draining demands, but injected a forceful vitality wherever it was at all possible.

* * *

THE AFTERNOON had started with a jolly "Haffner" symphony. In a long and full season we are apt to accept the constant factors which make these performances so absorbing and the first, of course, is the marvelous Boston orchestra. From the strong and vigorous first sentence of the symphony they drop to the most pliantly gentle and quiet character of the sixth bar with the most faithful delineation of the variety Mozart wrote into this famous movement, and so it went through the unspeakably beautiful andante.

The tempo of the minuet would be a moot point in many discussions of this performance, and whether Mozart may have envisaged that an admonition for his final presto "as fast as possible" would arrive at a day nearly two centuries later where a mile under four minutes is no longer exceptional and corresponding advances in orchestral speed rates are possible would be quite a question to answer.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT in another all-Mozart program, a soloist new to Tanglewood, Miss Evelyne Crochet, played a piano concerto placed between two symphonies. Miss Crochet understood her Mozart thoroughly, and conveyed it to the audience with taste, sensitivity and technic far beyond anything the score demanded. It was the E flat concerto (K482), one in which Mozart wrote as much of importance for the orchestra as for the soloist, and there were long stretches where the solo instrument was silent and the orchestra had opulent pages. In the lovely slow movement the flute and bassoon have an enchanting dialogue and in the final enthusiastic applause which Miss Crochet was accorded she graciously called Miss Doriot Anthony and Mr. Sherman Walt to stand to share with her the recognition they deserved.

Miss Crochet achieved a triumph both personably and artistically. She played cadenzas of her own devising. The first was overlong and not convincingly in character.

* * *

MUNCH LED the orchestra in the "Linz" symphony, in C major (K425), and the great C major Jupiter (K551). Mozart would probably have been amused with the appellations various of his works have acquired along their impressive route. The circumstances of their conception, on short demand from an aristocratic patron, or from inward inspired pressure, always found the young man who was destined to be deprived of full half the span the Pslams allow us to expect, as though with a deep-freeze from which he could quickly extract all the required ingredients and in many cases the totally premixed material.

The two symphonies are full of imperishable marvels and Munch read them with affection. A conductor may well be tempted, with such performers at hand as the Bostonians, to sprint in some movements well beyond the traditional pace. Yet what could be more charming than the trio of the Linz minuet when played with such ingenuous simplicity?

* * *

THIS BRACE of programs completed the first three weeks of the Tanglewood season. With the termination of the Esplanade concerts in Boston, the larger half of the orchestra will now join the smaller group which has been playing only Bach and Mozart. Starting Friday night, five weeks of programs chosen from the total and general catalogue of orchestral literature will be the fare. Audiences of 6,735 and 6,623 respectively gave usual Tanglewood testimony to their pleasure.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

JUL 24 1962

Tanglewood Reputation Maintained At Concerts; Large Audiences Attend

Again the heavens smiled upon the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The second Mozart concert of the weekend, Saturday evening, had no storms to mar its enjoyment, although rain had fallen in mighty gusts a few hours before its opening. Reserved seats had been sold out days ahead, with groups from neighboring summer schools and camps attending in large numbers. Lawns were crowded with pre-concert picnickers and visiting foreigners snapping pictures.

Two symphonies in C major opened and closed the program, the "Linz," No. 36 and the "Jupiter," No. 41, respectively. Dr. Munch has aptly pointed out the growing maturity of the young Mozart, through his choice of compositions. A far cry from the Mannheim orchestra's influence is the "Linz," already showing the influence of Haydn, particularly in the Minuetto, carefree with heavy grace, bassoon and oboe marking the trio with characteristic color. The final Presto is a masterpiece of pressing insouciance.

A newcomer to Tanglewood and members of the faculty of Brandeis University, was the piano soloist for the E-flat concerto, K. 482, Evelyn Parisian Crochet. A pupil of Edwin Fischer and Rudolph Serkin, she received the first medal in the International Competition in Geneva in 1956, and was one of the winners in the Tschaikowsky Competition in Moscow in 1958.

Although curiously taut in manner, Miss Crochet was lyrically plastic in her playing, with beautifully rounded nuances and dynamics ranging from delicately firm pianissimos to deeply controlled fortissimos. Tender and evocative was the Andante, with the focus taken from the piano by a marvelously rendered woodwindchorale. The third movement reflected Mozart at his most capricious and willful writing. All the stylistic cadenzas were Miss Crochet's own.

The last of Mozart's symphonies, aptly named the "Jupiter," closed the very satisfying evening's musical works. This is one of three symphonies in less than seven weeks that precluded his death in three and one-half years. Dr. Munch certainly set the mood as he strode to the podium, alert and commanding each musician's attention. It is impossible not to feel the maturity and assurance of the composer in this vastly developed symphony. Beethoven, Schubert and Brahms are brought to mind at least once during its progression. And the utterly complex yet simple fugal treatment of the finale leaves one bemused and enchanted.

Dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky, Sunday's program opened with a minute of tributory silence, followed by the "Haffner" Symphony in D major, K. 385. Adapted in a hurry from a forgotten Serenade by the composer, Dr. Munch drew every bit of tonal color and nuance inherent in each movement, from the spirited but stately allegro, the dedicated andante, the gracious minuet a combination of Haydn and nostalgic levity, to the whisk and rush of the presto.

Mozart's last work, the I minor Requiem, completed the afternoon's program. The Tanglewood Choir was well prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, and on the whole followed the changing direction of Dr. Munch with rapt attention fine diction, and fairly certain attacks. Scholars are in disagreement as to the authenticity of the whole composition, but it is a gripping moving presentation, each of the 12 parts clearly varied in mood, rhythm and development, and instrumental as well as vocal invention.

Hushed, reverent at the beginning Kyrie, crescendos were drawn with expanding line, the Dies Irae uplifted and radiant. In the Tuba mirum, the four soloists, Phyllis Curtin soprano; Florence Kopleff alto; Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, first sounded with glowing tones, led by the bass voice. In the Lacrimosa, the contrast between the low voices of the chorus and highly placed violins, pianissimo, and punctuated, was most effective. Only toward the final and lengthy Agnus Dei, did one feel a certain lassitude with the repetitions sections but also a sense of gratitude for the privilege of this live and inspirational performance. Again the audience, almost filling the shed, and overflowing the spacious grounds, exhibited their enthusiasm for the Berkshire Festival and is participants.

— M. deB. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848

JUL 24 1962

Performance 'Awesome' At Tanglewood

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — It was a reverential and awesome performance of Mozart's "Requiem Mass In D Minor" that Conductor Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and 100 male and female voices gave to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood before Sunday afternoon's audience of 6,623 which included the late-conductor's widow. This brought to an end the three-week Bach-Mozart series attended by 47,087 with just a few short of 17,000 present for this, the largest of the pre-season "smaller" concerts. Friday night the major series of the Tanglewood Festival will begin, giving Dr. Munch some relief as other conductors, including beloved Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinberg take the podium for one or two concerts.

From the moment after intermission when Dr. Munch motioned for orchestra, chorus and audience to stand silently before his presentation of the "Requiem Mass", one was aware that this was to be a memorable performance. This it was throughout. There was such spirit and devotion in the singing with the younger members of the excellent chorus as well as their older associates joining the orchestra for a combined performance of excellence. The soloists, Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass, were fortunate choices, and sang with depth of feeling, beauty of voice, and inspired awe and reverence in an audience which applauded again and again. It was a fitting tribute to the memory of the man who had done so much to make this Berkshire Festival and Music School a reality. The first part of the concert was an exquisitely performed presentation of "Symphony In D Major, No. 35 (Haffner)".

Depth of Feeling

Miss Evelyn Crochet, winner of the first medal in international competition in Geneva in 1956 and one of the winners of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow in 1958, showed herself a pianist of sensitivity and depth of feeling in playing the Mozart "Piano Concerto in E-Flat".

The audience Friday night had the opportunity to hear Joseph Silverstein, who is to become the Boston's new concertmeister at the end of the summer, in a masterful performance as soloist in "Violin Concerto No. 5, in A Major."

The audience fortunate enough to make the trip to Tanglewood last Wednesday evening for the special performance by the (Marlboro Vt.) chamber orchestra of 30 musicians and Rudolph Serkin, its guiding spirit, heard such performances as one normally may dream about. For the most part it was the music of Vivaldi with Alexander Schneider in "Il Riposo", casting a sublime spell and making the violin speak as one has seldom heard any artist do. Serkin's performance was brilliant and lofty in Mozart's "Piano Concerto in A Major."

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
JUL 23 1962

Music:

Mozart as Memorial To Koussevitzky

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The two-weekend Mozart cycle of the Berkshire Music Festival ended yesterday afternoon with two works representing extreme facets of the composer's character.

Joy ran rampant through the "Haffner" Symphony in D major, K.385, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. Grandeur and solemnity were stirring qualities of the Requiem Mass in D minor, K.626.

For the requiem, the orchestra was assisted by the Tanglewood Choir of 125 mixed voices prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon of the New England Conservatory faculty. The organist was Berj Zamkochian.

Solists for the requiem were Phyllis Curtin, soprano, who will be returned at the forthcoming Worcester Music Festival; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass.

Koussevitzky Memorial

This was the festival's annual Serge Koussevitzky Memorial Concert. Before the performance of the requiem, the audience stood for a moment of silence as tribute to the late conductor of the Boston Symphony. Yesterday's audience numbered 6,623, bringing the weekend total to 17,938.

Approximately half the orchestra was at Tanglewood for the festival's first three weekends, just concluded. One weekend was music by Bach, two by Mozart. The full orchestra of 104 players will perform the final five weekends of concerts, beginning Friday, July 27.

Six Mozart concerts and two public rehearsals drew total audiences of 35,017, attesting to the composer's extraordinary popularity. Not many composers could sustain the box office as well — Bach and Beethoven, certainly — possible Brahms or Wagner, though these have waned at Tanglewood after the first three consecutive concerts of their music.

Yesterday's concert confirmed what has been pretty obvious throughout this Mozart cycle. Munch's interpretation is possibly too personalized, at times too capricious, to be pure Mozart.

Tympanist Outstanding

Tonally, one could ask for no more from an orchestra. Strings and winds produced a consistently gorgeous tone.

Everett Firth was an admirably restrained tympanist, yet stabilized rhythms with just the right amount of force. This was particularly true of the huge amens in yesterday's requiem.

As a rule, Munch's tempos are quite another matter — rondos that sounded strained and hurried — slow movements that were so devoted to sensitive sound that delineation of phrase became secondary.

Yesterday's requiem was absolutely magnificent, as a concert performance. It would have been religiously more impressive if the Latin text had been understandable. The only truly clear words were each section's title and occasional phrases without heavy instrumental support.

Magnificent Breadth

A magnificent breadth pervaded the opening requiem. Heavy choral material was sensitively mixed with quiet statements.

Counterpoint was solidly built, each voice fulfillling more obligations. The Kyrie was quite splendid.

The Dies Irae was turbulent with intensity and sung at top speed. There was no problem keeping the performance going, even in brasses where strain is great.

Confutatis and Hosias showed excellent breath and tonal control by these Berkshire Center students. Here was modulated, devotional, hushed singing. Ambition for big effect distorted Rex Tremendae and Domine Jesu, which were close to being shouted instead of sung.

Uneven Balance

Uneven balances marred the solo quartet. Almost consistently, Miss Curtin and Morgan sounded more like a duet than members of a quartet.

Miss Curtin's powerful, clear voice was particularly effective in the Tuba Mirum and Recondare. Morgan gave an oratorical introduction to Tuba Mirum, vidare. Morgan gave an oratorical introduction to Tuba Mirum, vibrantly toned except for weakness in low range. Miss Kopleff was heard to best advantage in the Tuba Mirum, with compelling and expressive voice.

Stern was quite out of his element and Mozart's as has so often been the case in his previous Tanglewood appearances. He persisted in seeking a degree of frenetic exaltation that resulted in a false quality.

Symphony Glows

The "Haffner" symphony received a glowing performance from the orchestra. Incisive attacks at the start were followed by gushing string phrases.

Munch permitted some woodwind material to penetrate that is generally obscured. There were finely turned phrases in the slow movement, with emphasis primarily on sentimental, decorative tunes.

The minuet was played at an unusually slow speed. Just as conspicuous was the racy rondo, though the tempo did serve to bring forth some virtusic playing by the string section.

Friday night, Munch will conduct the full orchestra in Debussy's "Printemps," Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and the Fourth Symphony by Brahms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON,
Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUL 23 1962

Audience Hears Mozart

Cloudy skies threatened everywhere but the weather remained clear and cool for the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Again Mozart was the sole composer whose works occupied the evening's program which drew 3.580 devotees.

The Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477, makes one aware of Mozart's fatalistic attitude toward death. Opening the program, its dark emotionally contained melodies and stately chorale, upheld by the oboes and clarinet united with the (contra-basoon included) wind choir, were given the proper dignity and restraint by Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Chamber Orchestra.

Again, a seldom heard symphony was heard, the D major No. 31, "Paris," K. 297. Composed in Paris in 1778, at the age of 22, Mozart used the clarinet here for the first time. It is a pleasant work, full of ascending scale passages taken crescendo, and descending arpeggios, tossed off with a verve by the strings, in the first movement. The andantino reflected the youth of the composer, a gentle muted refrain, while the allegro was sprightly, modulations skillful and studied, with the influence of the Mannheim orchestra's display of quickly changing dynamics evident throughout the neatly arranged symphony.

A broad introduction by the strings then disclosed the first movement, with its significant title Allegro Aperto, of the Violin Concerto No. 5, in A major K. 219. Part of every violinist's repertoire, Joseph Silverstein, newly appointed concertmaster who assumes his duties in the fall, has made it his own, assuming the style and refinement inherent in this lovely concerto. The slow exposition of the allegro sang with Mr. Silverstein's silken tone, breaking with polished brilliance into an expansive theme interwoven with the orchestra, each given equal importance, while directed with Dr Munch's studied finesse. Swiftly paced changes from G to E strings in the first cadenza were executed with consummate skill by this genuinely talented violinist. The whole work has a great appeal, never taxing the listener, modest and playful, beauty and humor intermingled with grace and charm, as only the youthful Mozart could produce.

A cheering audience acclaimed the young artist Silverstein with repeated calls, all of which he acknowledged with modest pleasure. It was obvious that his orchestra associates and Dr. Munch shared the audience's approval an uncommon air of respect and attentive, concern apparent throughout the performance.

According to Mozart's letters the final Symphonia Concertante in E-flat K. 297B was originally scored for flute, oboe horn and bassoon. The present version in which clarinet supplants flute is the only one in existence, however. Although the origin of the difference between the two versions is unknown, the clarinet part is eminently suitable to the instrument's capacities. It also was composed during Mozart's stay in Paris, reflecting his absorption and use of new musical ideas.

A superb rendition of this concerto for four winds would have been more pleasurable if the placement of the instruments was more forward. Aural clarity and differentiation was not always possible, but the technical and musical demands were met with the soloists's usual virtuosity and the orchestra's comparable understanding. The final theme and ten variations were simple and ingratiating, welded together with the same refrain at the end of every variation but the tenth. The brisk concluding allegro left all delighted and charmed, as they left hymning their own variations of Mozartean melodies.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 15 1962

Music

Diversity for Berkshire Visitors

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Symphonic and choral music by Mozart, a fiesta of Spanish dance, Flamenco guitar music and a sizzling jazz concert are the diversified fare offered visitors to the Berkshires for a week beginning Friday, July 20. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood (Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox) in the second Mozart weekend.

Friday nights concert will be "Masonic Funeral Music," Silverstein as soloist. Saturday nights program includes the "Linz and "Jupiter" symphonies, also the E. flat major Piano Concerto, featuring Evelyne Crochet.

Miss Crochet made her debut two seasons ago with the Boston Symphony in Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos, with the composer conducting. She made a reappearance with the orchestra last season in Boston.

On Sunday afternoon Munch will conduct the orchestra in the "Haffner" Symphony. The festival chorus and orchestra will perform the Requiem. Soloists are Phyllis Curtin, Florence Kopleff, Blake Stern and Mac Morgan.

From July 24 through the 28th, a "Fiesta of Spanish Dance' will be held at Jacob's Pillow, Lee, Mass. Ted Shawn, director, has scheduled appearances by Antonio Medina, Jose Marseco, Jose Molina, Maria del Rocio and Inesita. Thursday, Friday and Saturday matinees begin at 3:30 - evenings at 8:40.

Berkshire Music Barn at Lenox presents Carlos Montoya, Framenco guitarist, Saturday afternoon July 21, at 3:30, and the Count Basie Orchestra Sunday evening at 8:30.

Fiddle Fortune

It required Pinkerton guards to supervise an experiment recently held in New York City by violinist Ruggiero Ricci, who has played in Worcester many times since his debut here at the Festival in 1930, at the age of nine.

Fifteen of the worlds most valuable and historically significant violins, worth upwards of $750,000, were inspected at close-hand by a small, invited audience of newsmen and acousitcal science experts. The instruments had been assembled from private collections throughout the United Statse

They included six by Stradivari, five by Guarneri and one each by Andrea Amati, Nicolo Amati, Carlo Bergonzi and Gaspara da Salo. Ricci played a few bars of the Brahms Violin Concerto on the various instruments and several in attendance had no difficulty distinguishing between them.

By a curious coincidence, the instrument which received the largest popularity vote was Ricci's own Guarneri del Gesu, known as the "Gibson" for its 19th century Engligh-owner Alfred Gibson and previously owned by Bronislaw Huberman, who played it at a Worcester Art Museum concert in 1942.

Lieder Cycle

An interesting and challenging concert series, announced for the new Philharmoic Hall at New Yorks Lincoln Center, will be given by soprano Eleanor Steber. She will sing 44 German lieder, extending historically from Mozart to Alban Berg.

The programs are scheduledfor Oct. 17, Dec. 5 and March 10. Miss Steber, a graduate of the New England Conservatory, will be accompanied by Edwin Biltcliffe, Boston pianist, who has performed as soloist many times in this area.

Cape Cod Festival

Now in full swing is the Cape Cod Folk Song Festival at Hyannis. Running Sundays through Saturdays of each week during July and August, daily performances at the Ballad and Banjo are at 4 and 8:30 p.m.

Featured performers are Jack Elliot, Bonnie Dobson, the Tarriers, Dave Guard and the Whiskey Hill Singers, Karen James, Jimmy Rooney and Bill Keefe, Jackie Washington and Mitch Greenhill.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 23 1962

Dr. Munch Programming 'Amazing' at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is not only a fine conductor but is also amazing in his ability at programming.

* * *

FRIDAY EVENING we attended the opening of the third weekend of the Tanglewood music festival and the opening of the second weekend of the Mozart series in the Shed near Lenox, Mass. We shared the experience with a total audience of 3,580 and heard a program that illustrated the varying aspect of the genius of Mozart.

Only Dr. Munch, in our estimation, could have planned the program that included the rarely presented "Masonic Funeral Music," the "Symphony in D major, 'Paris'," the "Violin Concerto Number 5 in A Major" with Joseph Silverstein as soloist; and the "Sinfonia Concertante in E-Flat for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon" with first chairmen of the orchestra forming the solo quartet.

The "Sinfonia Concertante" differs radically from the other concertante works with which we are acquainted in that the instruments play as a quartet almost entirely rather than as soloists.

* * *

RALPH GOMBERG played the oboe; Gino Cioffi the clarinet; Sherman Walt, the bassoon; and James Stagliano, the horn. The first movement of the work is marked by a most unusual quartet cadenza and the final movement offers an opportunity for displays of virtuosity. The enunciation of the string sections were a delight.

Silverstein presented the violin concerto and his innate musicianship brought out the subtle beauties of the music. His warm and beautiful vibrato and amazing technique made the ethereal "Adagio," the fluent cadenzas and the lovely melodies of Mozart a joy for violinists.

* * *

THE "PARIS" symphony, written and first performed in 1778 at a "Concert Spiritual" in Paris, has the fine vitality of youth. Kettle Drum and strings are dominant in the first movement and the work is noted for the fact that in it Mozart first used the clarinet in a symphony. The delicacy of the second movement and the general gayety of the third make the work charming listening.

* * *

THE "MASONIC Funeral Music" is a work that one frequently reads about and if one has Masonic connections, hears about frequently.

Yet last Friday evening was the first that we had ever had the opportunity of hearing it played—and that by the Boston Symphony.

Composed in 1785 for a memorial service for two of Mozart's fellow Freemasons, the work has a fine dignity and solid musicianship; offering a solemn but not maudlin approach toward acceptance of death.

New England Newspaper Assn.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
JUL 23 19

Music Review

At Tanglewood: Youth and Virtuosity

By LISA TATE

LENOX, Mass. — There was youthful vigor and virtuosity audible and visible at Tanglewood this weekend. Some of it was Mozart's, nine of whose works were played in the three weekend concerts. Some of it was in the solo playing of an early violin concerto by Joseph Silverstein on Friday night, and the playing of a later piano concerto by Evelyne Crochet on Saturday night.

Silverstein is 29, and the violin concerto he played (No. 5, in A Major, K. 219) was composed by Mozart at the age of 19. Silverstein's playing was clear, supple and sweet, particularly in the Adagio movement where a sentimentalist might be tempted to sob.

Not Silverstein, who let the notes speak openly and without undue storm and stress. Throughout he moved effortlessly over the entire range of the violin, sometimes in sweeping runs, sometimes in demanding jumps of interval, and in the cadenza passage, in unblurred doublestops. But for all the eloquent motion of his fingers and his bowing arm, his stance was straight-forward and simple with none of the histrionics that sometimes make one wish one could simply hear a violin without having to watch the violinist.

Named Concert-Master

It became no wonder that Silverstein has been chosen concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Richard Burgin retires at the end of the summer after 42 years. The selection was made last February by Erich Leinsdorf, who will become the conductor of the BSO when Charles Munch retires after the last concert of the summer season this August. Silverstein started at the last desk of the second violins when he joined the Orchestra in 1956 at the age of 23.

Since then he has made his way forward, and in addition was the winner last year of the Naumburg award, as well as placing third in the string competition sponsored by the Queen Mother Elizabeth in Brussels, where he was the only American to place. But he has decided against a career as a soloist in favor of the first seat of the Boston Symphony, and his performance Friday night made one happy that he had so chosen for the sake of the orchestra.

Another Youthful Soloist

Evelyne Crochet, a young Frenchwoman of 28, was soloist Saturday night in a performance E Flat, K. 482. Her sensitive articulation of a very bright piece, plus, I'm sure, her sensitive and appealing appearance, brought down rounds of applause from an enthusiastic audience.

She came to this country in 1958, has studied with Edwin Fischer and Rudolf Serkin, and is now on the music faculty of Brandeis University.

Having heard one of her teachers (Serkin) play Mozart twice this past week I was conscious of only one shortcoming-by-comparison — the fact that he is able to give each turn and trill a full value that she seemed inclined to skip over and around more lightly. Also, there were moments in the cadenzas, her own interpretations, where she leaned on such non-Mozartean effects as split chords and several harmonic intervals that were not in the spirit of the piece. But her playing was masterful and undoubtedly in the direction of a successful solo career.

Three of Mozart's symphonies were included in the two concerts I heard, the Paris (No. 31), the Linz (No. 36), and the Jupiter (No. 41 and the last he wrote.) All were played with the preciseness of shading and tempo of which the Boston Symphony is so eminently capable, though there were moments when the music itself seemed happier than the impassivity with which it was played. This seemed least true in the Jupiter Symphony, where the fast movements were extraordinarily energetic, the slow Andante Cantabile sad but serene by contrast.

Conductor's Vitality

Munch is a pleasure to watch, and there seems no moment of slack in any of his conducting. Even the most simple of beats, one-two, one-two, have a vitality actually visible in the wrist motion of his right hand, giving the impression that the music is pulsating through him.

When he really gets going, in more complicated passages, the gestures are expansive, complex and rarely with flourishes for mere effect. His orchestra is so polished that I almost had the impression of a musician performing on a single instrument, rather than a conductor guiding about 40 individual players (a chamber orchestra, not yet the full orchestra) through the singing phrases of Mozart.

Sunday's concert, which I could not attend, featured Mozart's last work, the Requiem Mass in D. Minor, K. 626, with soloists from New York and New Haven, the one from New Haven being Blake Stern, tenor, who sang in the performance of the Requiem by the Bennington College Community Chorus in May.

All of Mozart's music bespeaks his melodic genius but a whole weekend of it left me anxious to get my ears into different harmonies, different structures. This will be possible next week, when the full Boston Symphony will be on hand for the first time this season to perform a concert of works by Brahms, Debussy and Piston.

I also found myself wondering what it would have been like to listen to Mozart in some 18th-century Austrian setting: surely charming, exciting, delectable. The Tanglewood crowd destroys some of the delectability with its late - comings, early - goings and ill-timed applause between some of the movements of the symphonies.

ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
PLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, July 23, 1962

Tanglewood Ends Portion of Program

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

The Roman god Jupiter Pluvius, has been conspicuous by his absence during the three weekends of Bach and Mozart, which were concluded yesterday afternoon by the chamber section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch. But the Jupiter symphony of Mozart was omnipresent Saturday night as the closing work on the program. Also sharing honors with the Jupiter was the Linz symphony and the piano concerto, the latter excitingly played by the French pianiste Evelyne Crochet, a member of the musical faculty of Brandeis University.

Friday night's concert included the seldom - heard Masonic Funeral Music, written when Mozart was an active member of the fraternal order. It presented Mozart in a more subdued manner, with a certain resemblance to Beethoven's rich sonorities. The Friday night concert was also of an historic nature, since it was the first solo appearance of Joeseph Silverstein since he was appointed concertmaster of the orchestra a few weeks ago. Mr. Silverstein, a fine executant, scored with his playing of the violin Concerto, No. 5 following, which he was accorded a vertiable ovation, with which the members of the orchestra concurred.

Friday evening's concluding work was Sinfonia Concertante, in which four first chair virtuosi, Messrs. Gomberg, oboe; Cioffi, clarinet; Walt, bassoon and Stagliano, French horn, brought the audience to its greatest pitch of enthusiasm with the beauty and accuracy of their solo and ensemble playing.

Sunday afternoon's concert was presented in memory of the late Serge Koussevitzky, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony, and predecessor of Dr. Munch. The principal work was the Mozart Requiem by the Tanglewood choir and orchestra, assisted by four excellent vocal soloists: Mesdames Curtin, soprano; Kopleff, contralto; and Messrs. Stern and Morgan, tenor and baritone, respectively. Mrs. Koussevitzky occupied her box for the solemn occasion. A magnicent rendition of the famous Haffner Symphony was the additional work on the Sunday afternoon program.

On Friday and Saturday nights, and Sunday afternoon, the 104-piece Boston Symphony will inaugurate the first of five weekend concerts in the big shed. Dr. Munch will conduct the first two concerts with the octogenerian, Pierre Monteux, occupying the podium Sunday afternoon as guest conductor.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
JUL 16 1962

Tanglewood Weekend Magnificent

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

"Music Under the Moon," the original slogan of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to fruition over the weekend. The great shed and spacious lawns bathed in the silvery glow of a near full moon as Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led his smaller group in three programs, devoted to the music of Mozart, brining to a close yesterday afternoon the first of the two-week series.

He presented a magnificent sampling from over 600 compositions which the young Austrian composer and performer gave to posterity in his short life of 35 years. Although Mozart died in dire poverty, he left a wealth of music, only approximated by Bach.

Off-Beat Number

One of the off-beat numbers on the Friday night program was the Serenade for 13 Woodwinds, using the first chair men, a kind of instrumental chrous with the integral instruments in a perfect blend. Also on the program was the piano concerto No. 25, magnificently played by the young German pianist, Claude Frank, with the "Prague" symphony bringing the concert to an exciting finale.

Saturday night's offering included a divertimento for Boston's incomparable strings, Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, with Ruth Posselt and Joseph de Pasquale blending their artistic interpretations in beautiful concert. Miss Posselt is the wife of Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra. A bit of comedy was then interjected with the playing of a musical joke for strings and horns, a fascinating expose of what a serious composer can accomplish in a less serious vein. Symphony No. 39 was given a superb performance and brought repeated returns to the stage by Mr. Munch and members of the standing orchestra.

2-Piano Concerto

Sunday afternoon's concert began very quietly with one of Mozart's most popular works, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, followed by the two-piano concerto, with Vronsky and Babin making their second appearance during the current season. The duo pianists proved their affinity with both Bach and Mozart. As further evidence of Mozart's versatility and catholicity of musical form, the ballet suite ("Les Petites Riens") was the prelude to the famous Symphony, No. 40 in G-minor.

The 11-year association of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Munch in this, his last season as musical director of the Tanglewood and Boston seasons, has brought the Bostonians, to perhaps their highest peak of perfection, The entente cordiale which exists between the director and members of the ensemble is reflected in the glances of satisfactory musical achievement which pass between a great conductor and a great orchestra following a particularly felicitious phrase or an entire movement. Weekend box office score: 19,224 paid admissions.

New England Newspaper Assn.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175
JUL 23 1962

Tanglewood Performance Memorable

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — It was a reverential and awesome performance of Mozart's "Requiem Mass In D Minor" that Conductor Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and 100 male and female voices gave to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood before Sunday afternoon's audience of 6,623 which included the late-conductor's widow. This brought to an end the three-week Bach-Mozart series attended by 47,087 with just a few short of 17,000 present for this, the largest of the pre-season "smaller" concerts. Friday night the major series of the Tanglewood Festival will begin, giving Dr. Munch some relief as other conductors, including beloved Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, and William Steinberg take the podium for one or two concerts.

From the moment after intermission when Dr. Munch motioned for orchestra, chorus and audience to stand silently before his presentation of the "Requuiem Mass", one was aware that this was to be a memorable performance. This it was throughout. There was such spirit and devotion in the singing with the younger members of the excellent chorus as well as their older associates joining the orchestra for a combined performance of excellence. The soloists, Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass, were fortunate choices and sang with depth of feeling, beauty of voice, and inspired awe and reverence in an audience which applauded again and again. It was a fitting tribute to the memory of the man who had done so much to make this Berkshire Festival and Music School a reality. The first part of the concert was an exquisitely performed presentation of "Symphony In D Major, No. 35 (Haffner)".

Depth of Feeling

Miss Evelyn Crochet, winner of the first medal in international competition in Geneva in 1956 and one of the winners of the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow in 1958, showed herself a pianist of sensitivity and depth of feeling in playing the Mozart "Piano Concerto in E-Flat".

The audience Friday night had the opportunity to hear Joseph Silverstein, who is to become the Boston's new concertmeister at the end of the summer, in a masterful performance as soloist in "Violin Concerto No. 5, in A Major."

The audience fortunate enough to make the trip to Tanglewood last Wednesday evening for the special performance by the Marlboro Vt.) chamber orchestra of 30 musicians and Rudolph Serkin, its guiding spirit, heard such performances as one normally may dream about. For the most part it was the music of Vivaldi with Alexander Schneider in "Il Riposo" casting a sublime spell and making the violin speak as one has seldom heard any artist do. Serkin's performance was brilliant and lofty in Mozart's "Piano Concerto in A Major."

S.M.

L3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 23 1962

TRANSCRIPT

At Tanglewood

Third and Final Weekend Of Bach-Mozart Concerts

The third and final weekend of Bach-Mozart Chamber Orchestral works, which traditionally have opened the Tanglewood Festival for as many years as most can remember, were concluded this year with four symphonies, three concerti, plus the Masonic Funeral Music, K 477 and the Requiem Mass by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Unusual Mozart

The somber color of the Masonic Funeral Music is unusual Mozart. Despite its deep sincerity and warmth of understanding, the strong personal nature of the music plus the rather lugubrious and pendulous performance by the orchestra under Munch, tended, it seemed, to dampen some of Friday night's enthusiasm. The Violin Concerto No. 5 in A was exception to this impression by virtue of the fine solo performance of Joseph Silverstein.

Mr. Silverstein, who is now 29 years old, will succeed Richard Burgin, the present concert-master, at the end of this season. It appears he will bring to the position a magnificently smoothed tone, controlled with a calm, confident and intelligent manner. Mr. Burgin, by the way, is in his amazing 42nd year as concert-master of the Boston Syphony Orchestra.

The "Paris" Symphony did not approach the performance success of the "Linz" nor "Jupiter" heard Saturday. Nor did the Sinfonia Concertante make an outstanding impression, outside of the fact that it is infrequently played and that the soloists (resources from the first chairs of the orchestra) made more than interesting listening, especially the superb tone produced by the horn playing of James Stagliano.

It was Saturday evening that the most satisfaction and enjoyment was effected. The brilliant and spirited "Linz" and "Jupiter" Symphonies were performed by Munch with no unusual excesses in either tempi or interpretation. The patehtic and sublime "Jupiter" was composed about 1780 and was likely the work that prompted Rossini to remark that the greatest composer was Beethoven "—but Mozart is the only one." At any rate, though the "Jupiter" is not the olympian mood of Beethoven, it predicts with a strong, agile dignity of much of the spirit that Beethoven was to employ so frequently later in his own symphonies.

The Piano Concerto in E-flat, played by Evelyne Crochet, completed the Saturday program. Mlle. Crochet produced a delicate tone well suited to Mozart, which, unfortunately, was occasionally smothered by the excessive weight and color of the orchestra. The cadenzas, which were writen by the soloist, were generally overlong and overromantic.

Sunday's Concert

Sunday's concert, though it included a fair performance of the playful "Haffner" Symphony, was quite dominated by the Requiem Mass dedicated in this program to Serge Koussevitzky, founder of Tanglewood. The soloists chosen from Tanglewood's prominent alumni were excellent. Florence Kopleff's voice, though not voluminous, sailed calmly and smoothly over the musical lines; Mac Morgan's fluent bass was as usual unfailingly rich. The tenor, Blake Stern, employed a large dynamic range which failed—disappeared—when his voice sank to lower registers. Phyllis Curtin's consistant voice amply fills the music with suppleness and security that ranges in smooth arcs of maximum taste, technique and bravura.

The chorus' non-professional voices, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, performed well enough; though they fell shy of clear, clean singing, especially in the fugal portions. The sudden and dramatic dynamic changes were all well handled by the chorus, except where pianissimos became more a multiplication of hush with a subsequent loss of tone.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

JUL 14 1962

VITYA VRONSKY AND Victor Babin, duo-pianists, will make their second appearance of the Tanglewood season tomorrow afternoon. With Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Miss Vronsky and Mr. Babin will perform the Mozart Concert in E-flat Major for Two Pianos. The concert will include Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, K. 525, Les Petits Riens, Ballet Suite, K. 299b, and the Symphony in G minor, K. 550.

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony orchestra will play three concerts of music by Mozart during the third week of the Berkshire festival in the Music shed at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch has announced that the concert of Sunday, July 22, will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Berkshire Music center and former music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra. For the concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky the principal work to be heard will be the Mozart Requiem with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Blake Stern, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, as the soloists. The Tanglewood choir will appear in the program. The group has been prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron, director of the chorus at the New England Conservatory of Music. Opening the program will be a performance of the Symphony No. 35, "Haffner."

Next Friday evening, July 20, at 8 o'clock, the program will consist of Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 31, K. 297. Dr. Munch has invited Joseph Silverstein to be soloist at this concert in a performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto, No. 5, K. 219. Four members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Gino Cioffi, principal clarinet; Ralph Gombert, principal oboe; James Stagliano, principal horn, and Sherman Walt, principal bassoon, to be soloists in a performance of the Sinfonia Concertante, the concluding selection on the program.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,578

JUL 28 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Munch Warms A Cold Night

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS., JULY 28.—Charles Munch began the final stretch of his stewardship of the Boston Symphony with the full orchestra assembled in the music shed last night. They will perform each weekend now until he gives Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at his final concert on Aug. 26.

Three guest conductors will share the concerts, one each weekend: Pierre Monteux tomorrow afternoon, William Steinberg next week, and Eugene Ormandy the week after.

The weather did not match the connotation of Spring in Debussy's symphonic suite "printemps," which opened last night's program. The cold front had lowered the temperatures in the Berkshire hills considerably. It may have accounted for an attendance of only 5,013, hardly the capacity of the shed. Top coats and blankets were in evidence.

Pastorale Quality

A pastorale quality in the first movement of the Debussy tuned in with the beautiful setting of the Tanglewood estate. The gaiety of the second led Mr. Munch to an almost raucous rendition. As early Debussy the piece suggests potentialities but they were not realized in the conventional writing of the second movement. The work therefore proved serviceable.

Piston's Sixth Symphony introduced the contemporary element in a work written with the sound of the Boston Symphony especially in mind. The adroit use of solos confirms this procedure. With due respect to the somewhat elegant craftsmanship of this work, I find only the second of the four movements involves me as a listener. Here Piston writes like a university with a kind of unbottoned professionalism that is irresistible.

* * *

This delightful movement draws in the audience too; but though Piston himself is involved personally in the adagio, his music does not necessarily exert a pull on his listeners.

The dissonances, for instance, convey no special impact emotionally. As a modern piece of "classicism," however, the symphony as a whole commands the the highest respect. Mr. Munch conducted it with a strong conviction of its merit.

On occasion he has conducted memorable performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. This one had its moments, but it began in routine fashion. Only toward the end did it acquire the intensity that Mr. Munch has been known to infuse into all the movements. The finale drew forth much applause and some cheers, for its inspiration had fired both conductor and orchestra.

Thus the concert ended with a warmth of feeling on the part of both audience and performers that quite dispelled the chill in the air about them. What had been almost perfunctory at times finally became more than just worth while.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 24 1962

Sparkling Music Greeted Large Crowds At Tanglewood Programs

The last of the three Bach-Mozart concert weekends that customarily open the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was completed Sunday afternoon with a stunning performance of Mozart's Requiem Mass in D Minor by the Tanglewood Choir and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Soloists were Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass. The choir is led by Lorna Cook Devaron.

The program also included the Symphony in D major (the Haffner). Charles Munch, conducting his last Berkshire Festival before retirement, led this concert as he has all of the Boston Symphony performances this season. The first guest conductor will be Pierre Monteux, appearing July 29.

The Mozart concerts have drawn excellent audiences over the past two weekends and Charles Munch has met their expectations with sparkling music. The choice of soloists has also been of a very high order.

On Friday night Joseph Silverstein, who is to be the new concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, loosened a virtual tidal wave of applause with his performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major. The concerto allows for a wide range of technique and feeling; it also demands the closest rapport with the orchestra. On both counts this was a marvelous exhibition.

Friday night's program also offered the Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477, the "Paris" Symphony, in D Major, provided outstanding instrumental work by Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Staliano, horn. It was the kind of evening that is making the early part of the Tanglewood season increasingly popular, the program offering classical music that is not constantly heard, with the Boston Symphony and its superb strings at their best. The Music Shed and grounds are not crowded and the audience in quiet.

On Saturday night an artist new to Tanglewood, Miss Evelyn Crochet, played Mozart's Piano Concerto in E Flat with the orchestra. This young lady, now on the faculty of Brandeis University, was well received too. The program opened with the "Linz" Symphony No. 36, and closed with the "Jupiter" Symphony No. 41 in C Major.

Next weekend the Berkshire Festival will move into the "big" phase with full orchestra playing programs combining favorite musical masterpieces with newer works. Charles Munch will conduct Friday and Saturday nights, the concerts starting at 8 p. m. Friday night the orchestra will play "Printemps," Suite Symphonique, by Debussy; Walter Pison's Symphony No. 6, and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor. Saturday night's program will bring Janis as guest in the Piano Concerto No. 3, by Beethoven; the rest of the program will be Handle's Suite for Orchestra from the "Water Music," and Symphony No. 3, by Alexei Haieff.

Pierre Monteux, a great Tanglewood favorite, will appear on the podium Sunday afternoon, leading the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Richard Strauss' "Ein Hedlenleben" tone poem, and two operatic excerpts, "When I Am Laid to Earth," from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," and "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon." The soloist will be Freda Gray-Masse.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL - 1962

TANGLEWOOD

— by A. C.

...sing the Boston ...Munch con... ...second con... ...Mozart con... ...ing with a ...the Masonic ... orchestra ... Paris Sym... ...and played it ...clarity of ar... ...s at times ... a work that ...or the brilliant ...us crescendos ...ano and forte ...cts were exe...

... No. 5 in A M... ...and featured ...ert-master, Jo... ...n. as soloist. Mr. ...e once demonstrated ...e quality and tech... ...nothing to be de... ...pening notes in the ...ment were especially ... for their richness as ...adenza at the end in ...s playing was very clean ...nt. The second move... ...ne of Mozart's most beau... ...tos, was marked by ex... ...shadings and delicate... ...tone both by soloist and ...

...final selection, Sinfonia Co...ante in E Flat, was no...table for its buoyancy and for the superb blending of the solo instruments with each other.

Saturday — by C. D.

Threats of rain did not deter a large audience from coming to Tanglewood on Saturday night when Dr. Munch conducted two symphonies and a piano concerto by Mozart. The symphonies were great ones — the "Linz" and the "Jupiter," both in C major and both memorable works.

As usual, Dr. Munch brought out the power, if not the subtlety of Mozart's music. The sheer momentum of the fugal movement of the "Jupiter" was irresistible. Fortunately the "Jupiter" is such a great work that it can withstand all kinds of treatment and still emerge as a powerful and moving symphony.

The soloist in the E Flat Piano Concerto, K. 482, was Evelyne Crochet, a French pianist, who showed signs of great sensitivity and delicacy in her playing. Unfortunately, her tone was so small that she seldom rose above the orchestra, and the brilliancy of Mozart's passage writing in this work was often lost.

One wonders why — with the many great young American pianists available — Miss Crochet was asked to play in the great shed at Tanglewood — a place totally unsuited to her style and scope of piano playing.

Sunday — by R. G.

The second weekend of the current Tanglewood season devoted to the works of Mozart was brought to a close with a beautiful performance of the composer's last work, the Requiem, K. 626. The Tanglewood Choir, a better group than has often been the case in past years, sang with precision and beauty of tone. Above all, however, they conveyed a sense of dedication and conviction and complete identification with Dr. Munch's conception of this work. This conception is largely dramatic, but at no point does it lose sight of the musical line.

This was a virtuoso performance, often exciting, frequently moving and always beautiful both in its physical realization and for its display of a fine musical mind at work. To this listener, however, the total experience was marred by Dr. Munch's use of questionable tempi and much rubato in several sections. This conductor is such a magician that he can beguile the listener into accepting for the moment the exceptionally slow tempo used at the end of the "Confutatis" or the excessive rubato of the "Hostias." What emerges, however is a conception more appropriate to a 19th century choral work than to Mozart.

The performance of the Symphony No. 35 ("Haffner"), K. 385, which preceded the Requiem had all the virtues of the latter performance but escaped its defect because the tempi were more moderate and the use of rubato more controlled. In addition, Dr. Munch used a reduced orchestra and was thereby able to achieve a stunning precision and clarity in addition to a performance of infectious spirit and charm.

...TAL ... NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
...OMPLETE NEW YORK
... SERVICE

Knickerbocker News
... 1962

...great Tan... will appear on ...day afternoon, ...estra in Bee... ...y No. 2 in D ... Strauss' "Ein ...e poem, and two ..., "When I Am ... from Purcell's ...," and "Ocean, ...onster," from ..." The soloist ... Gray-Masse...

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 21 1962

Music Review

Mozart's Paris Sortie

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE THIRD Tanglewood weekend, the second devoted to Mozart, started last night with a program in which the two main works were from one of the composer's early sorties from his native Salzburg, this time to Paris.

This is the last of the small-orchestra weeks and Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, chose the D major symphony (K297), which has acquired the title of the city in which the composition received its inception. The Sinfonia Concertante, in E flat, (297b) is from the same period and is probably a more inspired work than the symphony.

The Sinfonia had four of the Boston wind principals as soloists: Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. A more competent quartet would be difficult to assemble. The inflections and tonal coherence enhanced the solo and ensemble assignments in all three movements. Mozart wrote more than a mere accompaniment for the assisting orchestra and Munch realized the full potential of all the components.

* * *

THE EVENING had opened with the Masonic Funeral Music (K477), a short essay Mozart wrote to honor the memory of two of his lodge brothers. This is a somber elegy of the kind most biographers place under the heading of church music. Mozart was undoubtedly moved to write it by motives of sorrow and consolation. Cryptographers are supposed to be able to discern arcane symbols in the 69 measures.

There is lively spirit in the allegros of the Paris symphony which enclose the central andantino. (There is no minuet.) Munch tried hard to bring the slow movement to the level of interest of the other two, but the Boston tonal splender here was more engrossing than the content of the music.

The concert-master-elect of the orchestra, Joseph Silverstein, was the soloist in the A Major violin concerto. For flawless playing and uniformly beautiful and warm tone Silverstein need give way to no other artist. This is the last of a batch of five Mozart wrote for the violin at age 19. We have worn out expressions of astonishment at the accomplishments of this genius at all ages, but especially while he was still in his teens.

Yet it is a strange work for a man at any age. The orchestra has a moderately long and charming prelude whereupon the solo enters enters with a surprisingly short fantasy. He then embarks on a principal theme of the movement. Silverstein played candenzas of his own for all three movements and they were of both inventive interest and technical prowess.

* * *

SILVERSTEIN imparted an impetuous drive to the Turkish interlude of the final minuet but the surrounding material was played with impeccable grace. A violinist with the exceptional resources of Silverstein might have developed his solo into more than the monologue he presented to us. It seems that there are possibilities of dialogue within this script, or of at least an echo when a phrase is repeated, or of other vocal color and contrast. Such equipment should be completely exploited.

An audience of 3,580 recalled the soloists in both the violin concerto and the Sinfonia repeatedly.

Tanglewood Honors Festival Founder

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

THE Tanglewood weekend drew 16,938 persons, a record attendance in the Berkshire Festival's history for the opening all-Bach and all-Mozart programs.

But it was a very special weekend.

CHARLES MUNCH
A Tribute . . .

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
. . . to the Founder

Sunday's all-Mozart program saw the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir join in presentation of the spiritually moving "Requiem Mass in D Minor K. 626" in honor of the memory of the late Serge Koussevitzky, Mr. Munch's predecessor and founder of the Lenox, Mass., musical institution.

★ ★ ★

MR. MUNCH, in presenting Sunday's major work, turned for a moment, faced the audience and motioned with his baton for all to stand for a moment of silence in memory of the distinguished conductor.

Mrs. Koussevitzky was among those who joined in the tribute.

As was expected, Mozart's "Requiem" received the laurels of the weekend performance. Mr. Munch infused it with vitality and religious power, from the powerfully stirring "Dies Irae" ("Day of Wrath") to the suddenly hushed passages in the closing "Agnus Die" ("Lamb of God").

Choir soloists included Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

★ ★ ★

THE MOZART weekend opened Friday with the seldom-heard Masonic Funeral Music. Critic Otto Jahn has summed up the work by saying: "It is the musical expression of that manly calm which gives sorrow its due, and no more than its due, in the presence of death."

It was not a weekend of all religious seriousness, however. Mr. Munch, who has extraordinary skill in programming, also included Mozart's two youthful Symphonies, No. 31, the "Paris"; and No. 35, the "Haffner."

There was nothing subdued about Mozart's music here, from the razzle-dazzle opening of the Paris symphony (written when Mozart was 22) to the more mature, less flamboyant "Haffner." The symphonies are written for brilliant effect, and the orchestra responded in full spirit, with crescendoes and march-like rhythm.

★ ★ ★

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN made his first solo appearance, since being named concertmaster, in the Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major. It was a vibrant perforance and there were "bravos" from the Friday evening audience even before the very last note in the resounding rondeau was sounded.

Now that the Bach and Mozart weekends are over, the Boston Symphony Orchestra moves into its fourth week, with selections by Beethoven, Weber, Purcell, Brahms and Piston scheduled for this coming weekend.

A treat is in store at Tanglewood Aug. 2, when the 'Boston Pops' orchestra under Arthur Fiedler takes over at 8 p.m. Selections will include George Gershwin's rhapsodic Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra and Respighi's "Pines of Rome." Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever," of course, will open the program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
JUL 26 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday — by A. C.

... evening the Boston ... Charles Munch con... initiated its second con... end of Mozart con... beginning with a ... tion of the Masonic ... the orchestra ... the Paris Sym... Major and played it ... and clarity of ar... sat was at times ... this is a work that ... ays for the brilliant ... erous crescendos ... of piano and forte ... effects were exe... tually.

... oncerto No. 5 in A Maj... wed, and featured ... 's concert-master, Jo... seph ... erstein, as soloist. Mr. Silve... n at once demonstrated that ... tone quality and tech... nique ... ave nothing to be de... sired. ... his opening notes in the first movement were especially mem... able for their richness as was the cadenza at the end in which his playing was very clean and vibrant. The second move... ment, one of Mozart's most beau... tiful adagios, was marked by ex... quisite shadings and delicate... ness of tone both by soloist and orchestra.

The final selection, Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat, was no... table for its buoyancy and for the superb blending of the solo instruments with each other.

Saturday — by C. D.

Threats of rain did not deter a large audience from coming to Tanglewood on Saturday night when Dr. Munch conducted two symphonies and a piano concerto by Mozart. The symphonies were great ones — the "Linz" and the "Jupiter," both in C major and both memorable works.

As usual, Dr. Munch brought out the power, if not the subtlety of Mozart's music. The sheer momentum of the fugal move... ment of the "Jupiter" was irre... sistible. Fortunately the "Jupi... ter" is such a great work that it can withstand all kinds of treat... ment and still emerge as a pow... erful and moving symphony.

The soloist in the E Flat Piano Concerto, K. 482, was Evelyne Crochet, a French pianist, who showed signs of great sensitivity and delicacy in her playing. Un... fortunately, her tone was so small that she seldom rose above the orchestra, and the brilliancy of Mozart's passage writing in this work was often lost.

One wonders why — with the many great young American pianists available — Miss Cro... chet was asked to play in the great shed at Tanglewood — a place totally unsuited to her style and scope of piano playing.

Sunday — by R. G.

The second weekend of the current Tanglewood season de... voted to the works of Mozart was brought to a close with a beautiful performance of the composer's last work, the Re... quiem, K. 626. The Tanglewood Choir, a better group than has often been the case in past years, sang with precision and beauty of tone. Above all, however, they conveyed a sense of dedi... cation and conviction and com... plete identification with Dr. Munch's conception of this work. This conception is largely dra... matic, but at no point does it lose sight of the musical line.

This was a virtuoso perform... ance, often exciting, frequently moving and always beautiful both in its physical realization and for its display of a fine musi... cal mind at work. To this lis... tener, however, the total experience was marred by Dr. Munch's use of questionable tempi and much rubato in sev... eral sections. This conductor is such a magician that he can be... guile the listener into accepting for the moment the exception... ally slow tempo used at the end of the "Confutatis" or the exces... sive rubato of the "Hostias." What emerges, however is a conception more appropriate to a 19th century choral work than to Mozart.

The performance of the Sym... phony No. 35 ("Haffner"), K. 385, which preceded the Requiem had all the virtues of the latter performance but escaped its de... fect because the tempi were more moderate and the use of rubato more controlled. In addi... tion, Dr. Munch used a reduced orchestra and was thereby able to achieve a stunning precision and clarity in addition to a per... formance of infectious spirit and charm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 21 1962

Music Review

Mozart's Paris Sortie

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE THIRD Tanglewood weekend, the second devoted to Mozart, started last night with a program in which the two main works were from one of the composer's early sorties from his native Salzburg, this time to Paris.

This is the last of the small-orchestra weeks and Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony, chose the D major symphony (K297), which has acquired the title of the city in which the composition received its inception. The Sinfonia Concertante, in E flat, (K297b) is from the same period and is probably a more inspired work than the symphony.

The Sinfonia had four of the Boston wind principals as soloists: Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. A more competent quartet would be difficult to assemble. The inflections and tonal coherence enhanced the solo and ensemble assignments in all three movements. Mozart wrote more than a mere accompaniment for the assisting orchestra and Munch realized the full potential of all the components.

* * *

THE EVENING had opened with the Masonic Funeral Music (K477), a short essay Mozart wrote to honor the memory of two of his lodge brothers. This is a somber elegy of the kind most biographers place under the heading of church music. Mozart was undoubtedly moved to write it by motives of sorrow and consolation. Cryptographers are supposed to be able to discern arcane symbols in the 69 measures.

There is lively spirit in the allegros of the Paris symphony which enclose the central andantino. (There is no minuet.) Munch tried hard to bring the slow movement to the level of interest of the other two, but the Boston tonal splender here was more engrossing than the content of the music.

The concert-master-elect of the orchestra, Joseph Silverstein, was the soloist in the A Major violin concerto. For flawless playing and uniformly beautiful and warm tone Silverstein need give way to no other artist. This is the last of a batch of five Mozart wrote for the violin at age 19. We have worn out expressions of astonishment at the accomplishments of this genius at all ages, but especially while he was still in his teens.

Yet it is a strange work for a man at any age. The orchestra has a moderately long and charming prelude whereupon the solo enters enters with a surprisingly short fantasy. He then embarks on a principal theme of the movement. Silverstein played candenzas of his own for all three movements and they were of both inventive interest and technical prowess.

* * *

SILVERSTEIN imparted an impetuous drive to the Turkish interlude of the final minuet but the surrounding material was played with impeccable grace. A violinist with the exceptional resources of Silverstein might have developed his solo into more than the monologue he presented to us. It seems that there are possibilities of dialogue within this script, or of at least an echo when a phrase is repeated, or of other vocal color and contrast. Such equipment should be completely exploited.

An audience of 3,580 recalled the soloists in both the violin concerto and the Sinfonia repeatedly.

...TAL ... NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
...OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
...bany Knickerbocker News
Tuesday, July 24, 1962

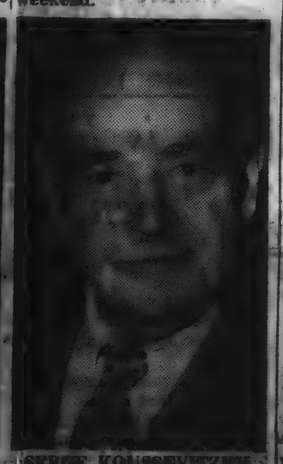
Tanglewood Honors Festival Founder

By EDWARD SWIETNICKI

THE Tanglewood weekend drew 16,938 persons, a record attendance in the Berkshire Festival's history for the opening all-Bach and all-Mozart programs.

But it was a very special weekend.

CHARLES MUNCH
A Tribute



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
... to the Founder

Sunday's all-Mozart program saw the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Choir join in presentation of the spiritually moving "Requiem Mass in D Minor K. 626" in honor of the memory of the late Serge Koussevitzky, Mr. Munch's predecessor and founder of the Lenox, Mass., musical institution.

★ ★ ★

MR. MUNCH, in presenting Sunday's major work, turned for a moment, faced the audience and motioned with his baton for all to stand for a moment of silence in memory of the distinguished conductor.

Mrs. Koussevitzky was among those who joined in the tribute.

As was expected, Mozart's "Requiem" received the laurels of the weekend performance. Mr. Munch infused it with vitality and religious power, from the powerfully stirring "Dies Irae" ("Day of Wrath") to the suddenly hushed passages in the closing "Agnus Die" ("Lamb of God").

Choir soloists included Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass.

★ ★ ★

THE MOZART weekend opened Friday with the seldom-heard Masonic Funeral Music. Critic Otto Jahn has summed up the work by saying: "It is the musical expression of that manly calm which gives sorrow its due, and no more than its due, in the presence of death."

It was not a weekend of all religious seriousness, however. Mr. Munch, who has extraordinary skill in programming, also included Mozart's two youthful Symphonies, No. 31, the "Paris"; and No. 35, the "Haffner."

There was nothing subdued about Mozart's music here, from the razzle-dazzle opening of the Paris symphony (written when Mozart was 22) to the more mature, less flamboyant "Haffner." The symphonies are written for brilliant effect, and the orchestra responded in full spirit, with crescendoes and march-like rhythm.

★ ★ ★

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN made his first solo appearance since being named concertmaster, in the Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major. It was a vibrant perforance and there were "bravos" from the Friday evening audience even before the very last note in the resounding rondeau was sounded.

Now that the Bach and Mozart weekends are over, the Boston Symphony Orchestra moves into its fourth week, with selections by Beethoven, Weber, Purcell, Brahms and Piston scheduled for this coming weekend.

A treat is in store at Tanglewood Aug. 2, when the 'Boston Pops' orchestra under Arthur Fiedler takes over at 8 p.m. Selections will include George Gershwin's rhapsodic Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra and Respighi's "Pines" of Rome." Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever," of course, will open the program.

BLANK PAGE

4TH. WEEK JULY 23RD. TO JULY 29TH '62

B[illegible] SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 27, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

D[illegible] "Printemps," Suite symphonique

I. Très modéré
II. Modéré

PI[illegible] Symphony No. 6

I. Fluendo espressivo
II. Leggerissimo vivace
III. Adagio sereno
IV. Allegro energico

Intermission

BRAHMS *Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Andante moderato
III. Allegro giocoso
IV. Allegro energico e passionato

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 28, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

HANDEL Suite for Orchestra, from "The Water Music"
(Arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty)

I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Bourrée
IV. Hornpipe
V. Andante espressivo
VI. Allegro deciso

HAIEFF Symphony No. 3

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Andante; Allegro

Intermission

BEETHOVEN Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, Op. 37

I. Allegro con brio
II. Largo
III. Rondo: Allegro

Soloist: BYRON JANIS

Mr. JANIS plays the Steinway piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Berkshire Festival

MUSIC SHED AT TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS

Sunday Afternoon, July 29, 1962, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

Illness has prevented Mme. Gray-Masse from singing at this concert. Mr. Monteux has changed the program as follows: —

BACH ORGAN PASSACAGLIA AND FUGUE, IN C MINOR
(Orchestral Interpretation by Ottorino Respighi)

BEETHOVEN SYMPHONY NO. 2, IN D MAJOR, OP. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

Intermission

STRAUSS "EIN HELDENLEBEN," TONE POEM, OP. 40

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

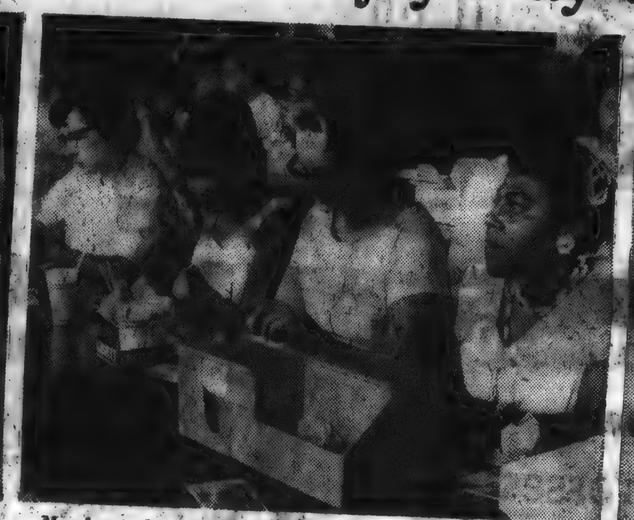
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 30 1962

12

Springfield Vicinity Patrons Enjoy Day at Tanglewood

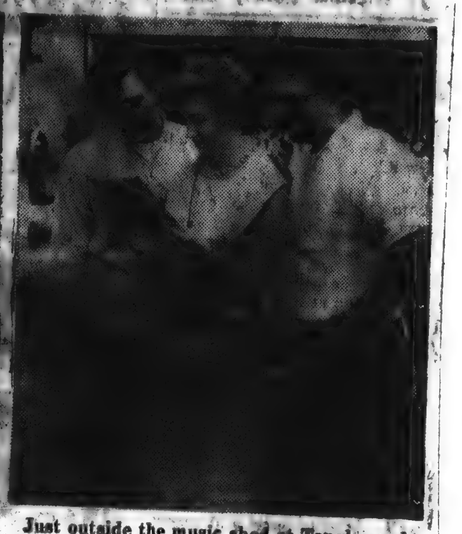
Before the Sunday afternoon concert began, these four members of the Springfield YWCA were sighted as they took in the panoramic view of the Berkshires. They are: Miss Alice E. Ramsdell of 94 Massachusetts Ave.; Mrs. Ethel Fairfield of Keene, N. H., a member of the local YW; Miss Janet Easton, summer program director, and Miss Gladys Derne of 45 East Alvord St., YW financial secretary.

Sunday's trip to Tanglewood was the third of the season for these four music lovers, three of whom are retired schoolteachers in the Springfield schools. They are, left to right: Miss Gladys Bardwell of 147 Sumner Ave.; Miss M. Louise Stoughton of 151 Sumner Ave.; Miss Nina B. Jordan of 199 Belmont Ave., all retired teachers, and Miss Ferne Terwilliger of 112 Park Dr., Westfield.



Members of a YWCA-sponsored trip Sunday to Tanglewood enjoying a box lunch on the grounds at the Berkshire Festival center are, left to right, Mrs. Amy Jones and Miss Thelma Richardson, both of whom live at 26 Howard St.; Mrs. Carolyn Garutti of 14 Sylvan St., West Springfield; and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Johnson of 72 Mapledell St. A picnic on the spacious lawn of the musical center is a growing pastime of concert patrons. Many enjoy similar activity following the Saturday morning rehearsal programs.

Strolling along the well-loaded paths on the Tanglewood grounds, these two women consented to be photographed by The Union. They are, left, Mrs. Harry Lamb of Arlington, Va. who is visiting her sister, right, Mrs. Charles E. Sears, of 961 Longmeadow St., Longmeadow.



Just outside the music shed at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon are: left to right, Billy Martin of 108 Cayenne St., West Springfield; Miss Phyllis Howe of 43 Robinson Rd., West Springfield; and Thomas D'Agustino of 72 Jardine St. They came to hear Pierre Monteux conduct the final concert of the Berkshire Festival's fourth week.

Tanglewood Spirit—A Feeling of Peace

Tanglewood in Lenox, the scenic summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which has become a cultural attraction of international renown, was not at its prettiest on the last Sunday of July.

Sky Overcast

In contrast to its usually brilliant setting by day, the atmosphere was somber and gray because of a heavily overcast sky.

But the occasion, as always, conveyed a spirit of refreshing serenity.

The mood of happy tranquility showed on the faces of many music lovers from this area, as well as from all over the U. S. and the world, who flocked to the Western Massachusetts music center on this particular Sunday to hear the world famous Pierre Monteux conduct the Boston Symphony in the final concert of the Berkshire Festival's fourth week.

First Appearance

Mr. Monteux, the celebrated French conductor, now 87, was making his first appearance at Tanglewood this year, and the occasions of his presence as guest conductor are always one of the most enjoyable and rewarding during the season.

One could hear comments and sense from the air of anticipation that the concert with Mr. Monteux on the podium was a touch in the Tanglewood events which the patrons present had been anticipating for some time.

This eagerness easily overcame the sombreness of the day.

Picnic Lunches

As soon as the gates opened shortly after noon, throngs strolled across the soft lawns to spread their picnic lunches beneath the pines.

Against a background of slightly blurred Berkshire Mountains, couples and groups dressed in informal clothes—including Bermuda shorts and sneakers—ate their cold chicken and roast beef sandwiches and nibbled on black olives and ripe peaches.

In the distance Stockbridge Bowl sparkled occasionally when short-lived bursts of sun broke through the cloud layers.

No one talked loudly. Instead they smiled graciously while strolling through the formal gardens or stood in the bookstall lines waiting to purchase a post card or booklet.

Pictures On Display

In the glass-walled gallery next to the main gate, members of the beard and sandal set gazed at paintings and photographs collected from the symphony's world tours and exhibited beside a shiny black new piano. One young man sat down on the edge of the bench and played on the keys a few bars of a Ravel melody. Passersby stopped to listen, smiled and continued on their ways.

As the hour of 2.30 drew near, the old farm bell atop the music shed was rung to signal approaching time for the concert to begin.

Picnickers and strollers all over the grounds gathered up their belongings and headed toward the shed where hundreds were already seated just outside on blankets or on folding chairs.

Within minutes everyone was seated and Monteux, resplendent in a white suit, strode onto the stage where he was accorded polite, warm applause.

No Sound but Music

Ticket collectors seated a few latecomers, then the ropes went up and the water fountains were turned off so not a sound would mar the concert.

After a moment the conductor's arms were raised and the program began.

Row upon row of attentive listeners sat concentrating on the music.

And for a while a strong feeling of peace filled the wide spaces beneath the roof and proceeded onto the grounds and into the

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 31 1962

Comfort Reigns at Tanglewood

Who says you have to be uncomfortable while listening to classical music? Wear what you please and just relax! That seems to be the motto of these music-lovers stretched out on the lawn of the music festival grounds at Tanglewood Sunday. Some had their lunches along and many sipped beverages during the afternoon program. Except for the clothing [illegible] sometimes had the appearance of an afternoon at the seashore.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ 111,659
JUL 29 1962

Second Thoughts On Music

Munch, Mozart Symphony Prove Eloquent Blending

Personal Touch by Conductor Provides Ear-Filling Concerts at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—Our first assignment to the Berkshire Festival provided us with the opportunity of hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch offer the most beautiful music by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. For example, last Friday night the program opened with the gravely eloquent Masonic Funeral Music, music which Mr. Munch conducted with great feeling and appropriate solemnity. Then came the Symphony in D Major, No. 31, "Parisis," K. 297. Mr. Munch has a very special and personal approach to the music of Mozart. Most always he lets the music speak for itself, which it can do eloquently, given the opportunity. The members of the orchestra were in close communication with the conductor at all times, and truly seemed to enjoy their labors. Whether they did or not, the result was ear-filling.

Happy Creation

Joseph Silverstein, whom we had heard before, was heard in the Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major, K 219. It is one of Mozart's happiest creations, and Mr. Silverstein and his colleagues provided a superior performance, rich in beautiful tone and depth of feeling. In fact, it was one of the finest performances of this work we have ever encountered.

The Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K. 297b, Mr. Munch offered last season. Substantially the same group was heard in the present performance. The soloists were Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn. This has been one of our favorite works for a long time, and to hear it played so beautifully was one of the high lights of the week.

Saturday evening, the program included two symphonies, "Linz" and "Jupiter." Tucked in between them was the Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482, played by Evelyne Crochet. Miss Crochet, who hails from Paris, is a very charming, sensitive adept and small-scaled pianist. This particular concerto might well have been written just for her. She evoked a wide palette of colors and her smooth, ingratiating style won her a good round of applause.

Mr. Munch's handling of the "Jupiter" symphony is large-scaled, intense and authoritative. It came as an impressive climax to this concert.

Moving Presentation

For us the climax of the week end came with the performance of the Requiem Mass in D Minor, K. 626. Mr. Munch conducted the orchestra and the Festival Chorus and soloists in a moving presentation of an almost ethereal work. The solists were top-notch, much better than some formerly heard here. They included Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Blake Stern, tenor; and Mac Morgan, bass. The glory of the performance came from the Festival Chorus, splendidly prepared by Lorna Cooke DeVaron. There are no significant solos in this work, but fine teamwork is essential to a smooth performance. This these fine singer-musicians provided in abundance. Vocal honors, I think, went to Miss Curtin for her very smooth and beautifully-toned singing. Miss Kopleff, of the opulent voice, sang with her accustomed artistry and a certain shrillness in the upper register. Both Mr. Stern and Mr. Morgan are competent, well-schooled singers who did what they were expected to do, and did it well.

This has been a week end of great music, superbly made by all concerned.

Tanglewood's Conductors, Soloists

Among the many outstanding personalities to be featured at Tanglewood this week are, left photo, Rudolf Serkin and, Charles Munch who will perform next Sunday afternoon; in set, Pierre Monteux who will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon; and right, pianist Earl Wild, solo ist with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pop Orchestra, Thursday evening

Famed Conductor Returns To Direct at Tanglewood

Monteux Joins Symphony Today; Annual Pop Program Thursday; Steinberg There Friday

LENOX — Pierre Monteux, celebrated French conductor, returns to the podium at Tanglewood for the first time this season to direct the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Monteux has selected for his 2.30 p. m. Music Shed program, revised due to the illness of soloist Freda Gray-Masse, the Bach-Respighi Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, Symphony No. 2 by Beethoven and the Richard Strauss tone poem "Ein Heldenleben."

Steinberg to Conduct

William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will be a guest conductor for the first time at Tanglewood. At the invitation of Charles Munch, Mr. Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Saturday evening at 8. Dr. Rudolf Serkin and Samuel Mayes will be soloists with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony in this busy fifth week of the Berkshire Festival. Arthur Fiedler returns to Tanglewood for his annual appearance with the Boston Pops Orchestra Thursday.

At Friday's concert Dr. Munch has invited Samuel Mayes, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal celist, to be soloist in a performance of Saint Saens' Violoncello Concerto No. 1, in A Minor, Op. 33. This concert will open with Three Nocturnes by Debussy with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron, making its first appearance of the season. The remainder of Friday's program includes the Symphony No. 5 by Honegger and Ravel's La Valse, Choreographic Poem.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony's Pension Fund will be held Saturday at 10 a. m. William Steinberg will conduct the Berkshire Festival concert that evening. His program with the Boston Symphony will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 in C Minor, by Bruckner.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist with Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony next Sunday in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor). Also to be heard on this program will be Variations On a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a by Brahms, and "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) by Martinu.

The Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, Paul Fromm, president, will sponsor Wednesday evening's chamber music concert in the theater at 8. Dedicated to the furtherance of contemporary music, the Fromm Music Foundation program at Tanglewood was begun in 1956. The New York Chamber Soloists and Paul Jacobs, piano, will provide the music for Wednesday's concert, performing works by Elliott Carter, Milton Babbitt, Gunther Schuller, Karl Heinz Stockhausen and Mel Powell.

Annual Benefit

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will present the annual benefit Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center Thursday at 8 p. m. The concert will open with the Pops Orchestra's famous rendition of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," and feature Earl Wild as soloist in a performance of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra. The concert will also include the Suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust, Waltzes, the Pines of Rome by Respighi, and selections from West Side Story by Leonard Bernstein. For this program the Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 6 p. m. All Music Shed seats are reserved for the pops program. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available beginning at noon Thursday.

Four events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center this week beginning with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert Tuesday evening at 8. Other events available to the friends are chamber music performed by the students at 4 p. m. Thursday and the regular Aspects of Music seminar Friday at 3.15 p. m., featuring a lecture by Iain Hamilton, composer in residence at the Berkshire Music Center this summer. Mr. Hamilton's topic will be "A Personal View of the Materials of Music." This morning at 10, friends are invited to a chamber concert in the Chamber Music Hall by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 30 1962

Pops and Boston Symphony To Highlight Festival Week

TANGLEWOOD—The fifth week of the Berkshire Festival will be one of the busiest of the 1962 series, with a full schedule of events opening tomorrow and continuing afternoons and evenings through Sunday.

Highlighting the week's activities here will be appearances, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of such musical personalities as Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittburgh Symphony, Rudolf Serkin, the well-known pianist from the Marlboro (Vt.) Music Festival and Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the BSO, who will be one of the soloists during the week.

Tomorrow night at 8, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will present a concert in the Music Shed open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Chamber Music Wednesday

Wednesday night the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago will sponsor a chamber music conecrt in the theater-concert hall by the New York Chamber Soloists and Paul Jacobs, piano, who will perform works by Elliott Carter, Milton Babbitt, Gunther Schuller, Karl Heinz Stockhausen and Mel Powell.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will present their annual concert Thursday night at 8 in the Music Shed for the benefit of the Music Center. The program will open with the Pops Orchestra's famous rendition of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" and feature Earl Wild as soloist in a performance of Gershwin's piano concerto in F for piano and orchestra.

The concert will also include the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet; Josef Strauss' "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust," waltzes; the "Pines of Rome" by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein.

For this program the Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria. All Music Shed seats are reserved for the Pops program at $6, $5, $4.50, $4 and $3. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available beginning at noon on Thursday at $2.50.

Before the Pops concert Thursday, the students of the Berkshire Music Center will present a chamber music concert that afternoon at 4.

Friday afternoon the regular Aspects of Music seminar will be held at 3:15, featuring a lecture by Iain Hamilton, composer in residence at the Music Center this summer. His topic will be "A Personal View of the Materials of Music." The seminar is open to Friends of the BMC.

At Friday's Boston Symphony concert, Dr. Munch has invited Samuel Mayes to be soloist in a performance of Saint Saens' Violoncello Concerto No. 1 in A minor, Opus 33. This concert will open with Three Nocturnes by Debussy, with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, making its first appearance of the season. The remainder of Friday's program includes Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's La Valse, choreographic poem.

Saturday morning at 10, the open rehearsal of the BSO will be for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. William Steinberg will conduct the concert that evening. His program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 in C minor by Bruckner.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Rudolf Serkin will give a performance with the BSO of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor). Also to be heard on this program will be Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Opus 56A by Brahms and Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques," Symphony No. 6.

Attendance at the fourth weekend events at Tanglewood was about 6,000 below the same weekend last year, but the over-all attendance here this season for the first four weeks is running about the same as last year. Yesterday afternoon's concert drew to Tanglewood 6,759; Saturday night, 8,125, and Friday, 5,013. A total of 3,837 persons attended the open rehearsal of the BSO Saturday morning, making a weekend total of 24,734.

74

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Monday, July 23, 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 293,118

JUL 21 1962 Buffalo

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
JUL 25 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
NEW MILFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4030

JUL 26 1962

Berkshire Festival in 4th Week

Music by Beethoven, Handel and Strauss will highlight the closing concerts of the fourth week of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

On Saturday at 8 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Byron Janis appearing as soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor, Op. 37. The program also includes Handel's Suite for Orchestra, from "The Water Music, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty and Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff.

Sunday's program, at 2:30 p.m., conducted by Pierre Monteux, will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Richard Strauss', "Ein Heldenleben", Tone Poem, Op. 40. Freda Grey-Masse will be soloist in the Prelude and Final Air of Dido, "When I am laid in earth", from Purcell's opera "Dido and Aeneas," and Weber's "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster" from Oberon.

William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will be a guest conductor for the first time at Tanglewood next Saturday evening, Aug. 4, presenting Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 in C minor.

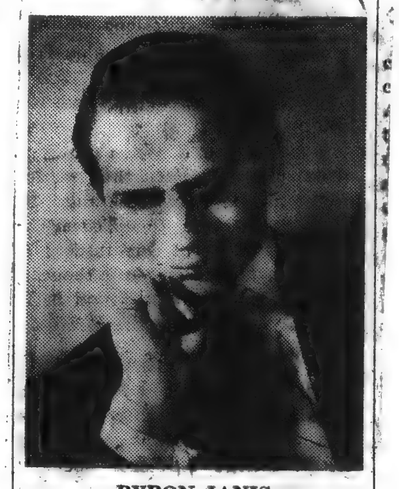
Arthur Fiedler will return to Tanglewood for his annual appearance with The Boston Pops Orchestra next Thursday, Aug. 2. On Friday night, Aug. 3, Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, will be soloist in a performance of Saint Saen's Violincello Concerto No. 1 in A minor, Op. 33. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5 will bring Rudolph Serkin as soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly

JUL 26 1962

Pianist



BYRON JANIS

Byron Janis, pianist, will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood on Saturday evening, July 28, at 8:00 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 101,244

JUL 22 1962

* * *

Charles Munch will conduct the Friday and Saturday concerts (8 p.m.) this week at the Berkshire Music Festival. Friday's program lists Debussy's "Printempts," Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 and the Brahms Fourth. Saturday's concert will feature Byron Janis in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor. Handel's Suite (from the "Water Music") and Haieff's Symphony No. 3 are also to be heard.

Pierre Monteux will conduct next Sunday afternoon's program which includes Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major and the Strauss tone poem, "Em Heldenleben," Op. 40. Soprano Freda Gray-Masse, guest artist, will be heard in arias by Purcell and Weber.

The Boston Arts Quartet will play Webern's Five Movements (Op. 5), Berger's Quartet (1958), and Schoenberg's Quartet No. 3 in the regular chamber music concert on Wednesday evening.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 31 1962

Star Fish Group Visits Tanglewood

Some 14 handicapped and chronically ill were guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood. The group, all members of Star Fish, Inc., today expressed their gratitude for the cooperation extended by the Tanglewood staff. James J. Brosnahan BSO treasurer, made the arrangements.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Friday, July 27, 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 450,303

JUL 29 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728

JUL 29 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

JUL 28 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057

JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 192,118

JUL 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 141,660

JUL 27 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

JUL 25 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091

JUL 27 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Friday, July 27, 1962

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 355,898 S. 451,270

JUL 27 1962 Buffalo

Music Notes

Pierre Monteux has changed the program in which he will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 2:30 p. m. this Sunday, July 29, in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., owing to the illness of Freda Gray-Masse, soprano, the originally announced soloist. The revised list includes Respighi's arrangement of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben."

* * *

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly

JUL 26 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 5,728

JUL 22 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Wilton Bulletin
WILTON, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,304

JUL 25 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD—Freda Gray-Masse, mezzo soprano, who will be soloist with the Berkshire Festival concert on Sunday, July 29 at 2:30 in the Music Shed.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, July 28, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Monday, July 23, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE POST STANDARD
Sunday, July 22, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, July 22, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
JUL 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
JUL 21 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
JUL 22 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245
JUL 27 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 445,834
JUL 22 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,091
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
JUL 28 1962

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
JUL 23 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
JUL 28 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
JUL 18 1962 Buffalo

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 99,075 S. 102,588
JUL 22 1962 Buffalo

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370
JUL 28 1962 Buffalo

ATHENS, N.Y.
HERALD
W. 315
JUL 26 1962

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 29,881 S. 31,200
JUL 22 1962 Buffalo

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
RAVENA NEWS HERALD
Friday, July 27, 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 24 1962 Buffalo

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 69,446 S. 116,010
JUL 22 1962 Buffalo

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, July 22, 1962

Pierre Monteux

Freda Gray-Masse

Programs Listed For Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Pierre Monteux returns to Tanglewood Sunday, July 29, at the invitation of Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony in the concert of the Berkshire Festival's fourth week. Doctor Munch will conduct the concerts Friday and Saturday with the full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 104 members assembled at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for the first time this season.

For the Friday concert Doctor Munch has selected the following program: "Printemps," Suite symphonique by Debussy; Walter Piston's Symphony No. 4, by Brahms.

For Saturday evening's concert, Doctor Munch has invited Byron Janis to be his guest in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 3, by Beethoven. Also to be heard that evening will be Handel's Suite for Orchestra, from "The Water Music" arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty and the Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff. The evening performance will be preceded by an open rehearsal at 10 a.m. for benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Mr. Monteux will open his Sunday, July 29, concert at 2:30 p.m., with a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2. Freda Gray-Masse will be soloist with Mr. Monteaux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Prelude and Final Air of Dido, "When I am Laid in Earth," from Purcell's opera "Dido and Aeneas" and Weber's "Ocean! Thou Mighty Monster" from "Oberon." Mr. Monteux and the orchestra will close the concert with Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben."

Aug. 2 Program

Arthur Fiedler has announced the program for the appearance of the Boston Pops at Tanglewood Thursday, Aug. 2. The annual concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will feature pianist Earl Wild playing the Concerto in F for piano and orchestra by George Gershwin.

The concert, which will begin at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed at Tangelwood, will begin with the Boston Pops' famous rendition of Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever." The balance of the program includes the Suite from "El Cid" by Massenet; the "Pines of Rome" by Respighi, and selections from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein.

The entire Music Shed will be reserved for this performance by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, and tickets will be on sale at the Berkshire Festival Box Office, Tanglewood, beginning at 9 a. m. Friday, July 20. Reserved tickets are available at $6.00, $5.00, $4.50, and $3.00. Tickets for admission to the Tanglewood lawns will be available beginning at noon on the day of the concert at $2.50. The gates will be opened at 6 p.m., and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers with them.

THE BOSTON ARTS Quartet will present the Wednesday evening chamber music program tomorrow in the Tanglewood Theater as a benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. The program, sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation, will include Anton Webern's "Five Movements, Opus Five," the "Quartet" by Berger and Schoenberg's "Quartet Number Three." Members of the Boston Arts Quartet are Joseph Silverstein and Harry Ellis Dickson, violins; Eugen Lehner, viola; and Richard Kapuscinski, cello.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center events include the first performance of the Conductor's Orchestra at 8 p.m. tonight in the theater.

* * *

A CHAMBER music program will be presented by students of the Berkshire Music Center Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall and the Tanglewod Choir will present a concert of choral music Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Chamber Music Hall and the Tanglewood Choir will present a concert of choral music Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Theater. A Sunday 10 a.m. chamber music concert will be presented in the Chamber Music Hall.

Tickets for the Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert, Aug. 2 at 8 p.m., with Arthur Fiedler conducting and Earl Wild as soloist, and for all Berkshire Festival events are on sale at the Festival Box office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

76

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885

JUL 2 0 1962

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

JUL 2 5 1962

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MANHATTAN EAST
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

AUG 2 1962

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony.

Last Saturday evening's Berkshire Festival concert began with a sprightly performance of Handel's Water Music. This composition was written in win back the favor of George I of England and was originally played by an orchestra placed on a barge that followed the royal float down the Thames. It has lost none of its freshness and sparkle during the intervening years and it is not surprising that it accomplished its set purpose in the 18th century.

Next on the program was a symphony by Haieff, which, although written in the modern idiom, was not too well organized. The composer does not yet seem to have sufficient mastery of the symphonic form.

The concert concluded with a magnificent rendition of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto in C Minor, one of the first compositions of the composer's middle period. Byron Janis as soloist did not allow his superb technique to stand in the way of the music. Conductor Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra provided excellent support.

Leila Seigel

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 3 0 1962

24,734 Persons At Tanglewood During Weekend

Works covering a time span of almost a quarter of a century in musical history were presented to the 24,734 patrons who made the weekend pilgrimage to the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

As usual the Saturday night throng — numbering 9,125 — was the largest of the weekend. Some 8,850 were counted Friday night and 6,759 yesterday afternoon.

The attendance for the three days was slightly below the number for the same weekend last season.

REVIEWS. 4TH WEEK.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
1962

Music: Berkshire Festival At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX—The last five big weekends of the Berkshire Music Festival got underway last night at Tanglewood with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 104 players in a standard romantic-contemporary program.

Although Friday is usually the weekend's low night in attendance, there was an audience of 5,013, despite unusually cool weather.

Up to now, there has been absolutely no risk in the Tanglewood programs. For the past three weekends, Munch and fifth members of the orchestra have been playing music by Bach and Mozart. These have not brought the masses storming the box-office, although each program has averaged about 5,000 listeneds. Probably no program in this festival will receive more absorbed attention than the Bach and Mozart.

Set a Pattern

Last night's program set a pattern for most of the remaining concerts. It opened with a rarely-heard Debussy work, the symphonic suite, "Printemps" or "Spring," and continued to intermission with Walter Piston's sixth symphony, written for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary in 1953.

There was nothing here to intimidate or agitate the most frigid anti-modernist. If such were unaccountably the case, the peace offering was Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

Debussy's "Printemps" is not to be confused with another earlier work with the same tile (with women's voices) or "Rondes de Printemps" from "Iberta." whitten when Debussy was 25.

It came between the cantata, "L'Enfant Prodigue" and the famous "Afternoon of a Faun."

The most newsworthy thing that can be said about last night's performance is that the audience gave it the kind of reception that is usually bestowed on Debussy's "La Mer" or "The Faun." The applause came after Munch assured the audience, with a gesture, that the work was finished.

Deception on Merit

The combination of Munch and Debussy apprently instituted a kind of deception as to the work's merit.

Satiny sounds were heard at the outset, in woodwinds and strings. The music moved along flexibly enough, arriving at nd receding from gushes of sound with control. Thanks to Munch, they also had a sense of spontaneity.

There was an absolutely gorgeous tone from cellos, uplifted by harp. Best of all-again thanks to Munch and an orchestra that is the epitome of tonal purity—was the marvelous carrying power of the music.

Actually, Debussy's Intentions were quite irrelevant so far as "Spring" was concerned. The overall impression was resplendency of sound, loose patter and the experimental technique of a composer who was to do better things.

Of all contremporary American composers, none is sounder in technique of orchestral writing, or more considerate of layman tolerance than Piston. There isn't a measure of the Sixth Symphony that imposes on the listener's common sense or credulity. It is no fault of the composer that the slow movement b-came somewhat dreary and distended.

Simple Opening

The symphony opened with a simple, declarative melody. Ensuing rhythms were played with vigor. While some of the first movement material wavers in interest, it was not permitted to become barren—and certainly not boring.

Munch took the scherzo at such an accelerated speed that it turned into a hodge-podge of gratty sound. Were it not for dominating melodies in wind instruments, it would have become a fidgety scramble. The slow movement was much emblazoned by Samnel Mayes' cello solo, flute solo by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, and rich tone of violins and violas.

The brassy finale had compactness and purpose. Contrary to custom, the composer was not on hand to acknowledge the warm reception his symphony received.

It was obvious from the first bars of Brahm's Fourth Symphony that this was to be a pretty routine performance. One could glean an interest in achieving some measure of heroism—especially in the determination with which Munch ordered countermelodies to be brought out by the brasses.

Suffice to say that the orchestra was just as explicit as the directions it received from the podlum.

Tonight, Munch conducts the orchestra in the Handel-Harty "Water Music Suite" and Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3. Byron Janis is soloist in Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto.

Due to illness, soprano Freda Gray-Masse will not be heard at Sunday afternoon's concert. Conductor Pierre Monteux has revised the program to include the Bach-Respigri Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Beethoven's Second Symphony, and Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben" or "A Hero's Life."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 28 1962

MUNCH OFFERS 'HAPPY MUSIC' IN TANGLEWOOD

Small Audience Hears Orchestra Play Brahms, Piston, Debussy

BY WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—As far as this reporter is concerned, the Berkshire Festival conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra doesn't begin until the concerts in the shed.

Cool Air

The first concert last night brought out a relatively small audience, probably there weren't furs enough to keep everyone warm.

Munch conducted the full orchestra in a program of happy music. He opened with Debussy's exquisite symphonic suite, "Printemps." Then came the forthright sixth symphony of Walter Piston, and following intermission, Munch gave us one of his justly famous readings of the fourth symphony of Johannes Brahms.

As far as we know, the performance of the Debussy opus was the first Munch has given us at Tanglewood. In fact, it was so new to the majority of hearers that he had to give them a cue when it was over so they could applause.

Masses of Sound

It is a lovely work, lush, melodic and myriad colored. I have seldom heard the orchestra evoke such exquisite sounds. The second episode is pretty wild, with intriguing rhythm and huge masses of sound. Munch conducted these easily, and the orchestra responded to a man.

Walter Piston's symphonies have now all been performed at Tanglewood, we believe.

His sixth symphony is, for the most part, a rugged work with much attention to woodwinds and brasses. The second movement is a rather slight and playful scherzo. Its rhythms are intriguing and its harmonies are really harmonies.

Effective Cello

The adagio movement is heavier and richer in texture, attention-holding by its obvious sincerity. The use of the cello for several short interludes is, extremely effective, particularly when the cellist happens to be Sammy Mayes.

The final movement is a brisk and commanding allegro in which the full orchestra swells to impressive proportions. All in all, it seemed a proper work to precede the Brahms symphony.

As noted, Munch saved the best for the last. This final symphony of Brahms is a happy work, often sparkling, always melodious, and seemingly endless in its thematic resources.

"Forever Vivid"

Munch has conducted it often at Tanglewood, and there really isn't very much new to write about it. The orchestra responded to every cue.

There was in the playing a feeling that each man was giving his best, so that the memory of those years Munch has been with the orchestra would be made forever vivid in the minds of the hearers.

Tonight we feel there is a special treat in store for the audience, for Munch has invited pianist Byron Janis to be soloist in Beethoven's piano concerto No. 3 in C minor, a work in which this blazing young pianist has few equals.

Pierre Monteux

Around the concerto Munch has placed Handel's "Water Music," and Haieff's symphony No. 3. We think this last will be a first hearing at Tanglewood.

Sunday night the octogenarian, Pierre Monteux, makes his bow before the festival audience. He will receive a tumultuous welcome, it goes without saying. He is greatly admired.

He has chosen to open his program with Bach's organ Passacaglia (arranged for orchestra by Respighi). He will follow this with Beethoven's symphony No. 2 in D major and conclude the program with Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 28 1962

Music Review

Tanglewood Opens Full-Orchestra Series

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE CONCERT at Tanglewood last night was the first of the season in which the complete orchestra took part, and marked the beginning of five weeks of music chosen from the entire catalogue of the orchestra library as distinguished from the opening three weeks when only Bach and Mozart were played by a smaller ensemble.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, chose a program of which only the first work was new to Tanglewood, but it still was a popular and ingratiating piece. Debussy wrote his "Printemps" while he was a prix de Rome student, protesting whenever he could against his temporary exile, and yet acquiring experience and making friends in what, to us 80 years later, seems to have been a wonderland of opportunities. He followed our fellow-townsman, Henry Longfellow, into the salon of the old Abbe Liszt, visited Boito while he was working on "Falstaff" with Verdi, to mention only the high lights of musical history in which the young Frenchman was involved.

* * *

BUT HIS "Spring" is more the effervescence of youth than reference to the season. His tone colors are lush, his rhythms more for the boulevardier than for the serious analysts of the Avenue Matignon. In fine, a light and youthful outburst.

Munch repeated the sixth symphony of Walter Piston, which he had introduced to this same stage two years ago. It dates from 1955 and was commissioned for the 75th season of the Boston orchestra and dedicated to the memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky.

Piston, now retired from the post he honored in the music department of Harvard, writes with fluency exceeded by few in contemporary music. He uses a large orchestra, much larger, in fact, than that called for by Brahms, whos fourth symphony was played after intermission to fill the second half of the program, yet it is never heavy nor sluggish. His sense of rhythm is one of his most happy endowments and the inspiration which prompted him to double the action in the flutes and oboes after the initial syncopated theme gave the movement a fillip he was able to inject whenever a change of pace was appropriate.

* * *

JOSEPH de Pasquale, solo viola of the orchestra, distinguished himself in the solo Piston writes for his instrument in the first movement. The second movement was played with a light, deft swiftness reminiscent of Mendelssohn, and in the final allegro again a rhythmic freshness became apparent. The adagio third movement was enhanced by the playing of a cello solo by Samuel Mayes, although the movement is at the other end of the scale from the airy vivace in inertial direction.

The last Brahms is magnificent music and can be enjoyed in most of the many guises in which it can be heard over a period of time. Munch emphasizes its vigor, and compounds the strength of its components and, when there is a choice, takes the swifter tempo. The Boston orchestra is a wondrous instrument in any situation, but we wish Munch had given the cellos a little leeway in their magnificent sectional solo of the second theme instead of stepping up the tempo there. And there was no evidence of thought to distinguish the dynamics of the furious last few bars of the allegro giocoso from the "passionato" chords in the winds to begin the finale. An audience of a baker's dozen over five thousand was more than happy with the whole evening.

78

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885

AUG 2 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — by R. J. G.

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening in a program which offered the prospect of more variety than was achieved. This can be attributed in part to the fact that Debussy's "Printemps," being an early work, has more form in the traditional sense and a greater clarity of orchestral texture than generally associated with this composer's work. It has, therefore, an affinity with the two symphonies which followed, especially since Walter Piston's effective use of the orchestra in his Symphony No. 6 makes more than passing reference to the orchestral practices of the French impressionists.

Through beautiful balance, expressive nuance and a plastic sense of rhythm, Dr. Munch made Debussy's "Printemps" seem a better piece of music than it really is. The Piston work is a fine (though not his best) symphony and it received a virtuoso performance.

The disappointing part of the evening was the work which should have been the highlight, Brahms' Symphony No. 4. It must be granted (despite some unfortunate slips by the French horn) that the orchestra played beautifully, but Dr. Munch's conception of this work made Brahms sound like a fin de siècle French composer.

Saturday — by K. P. M.

Diversity was the keynote at Tanglewood last Saturday evening, when Dr. Munch presented a program of works by Handel, Haieff, and Beethoven. To open the program, Dr. Munch chose an orchestral arrangement of Handel's "The Water Music." Written to please a king, this work more than enthused the Tanglewood audience, which responded immediately to the vitality, sparkle, flowing grace, and moving beauty which were conveyed so well.

Next, the Third Symphony of the contemporary Siberian-American composer Alexei Haieff was presented for inspection. The first movement, which the composer informs us consists of "episodes" which are " an amusing workout of counterpoint," seems to be an attempt to combine farce and lyricism with almost electronic precision. The second movement is a sighing suggestion of frustrated emotion, while the third movement is a troubled scherzando, reiterating parts of the first.

The unquestionable highlight of the evening came, however, when Byron Janis contributed his magnificent performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor. The deeply moving interpretation of the masterwork will undoubtedly be remembered by many for a very long time.

Sunday — by C. N. D.

Wave after wave of applause greeted Pierre Monteux at the close of his concert Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood. The distinguished octogenarian retains his mastery of an orchestra and the Boston Symphony never sounded more luminous and vibrant.

On account of illness, the announced soloist, Mme. Gray-Masse, was unable to appear but that was no loss to the thousands who came to hear Monteux. In place of the soprano arias announced on the advance program, the orchestra played a version of the Organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor by Bach arranged by Resphigi. This music is more effective with an orchestra than in its original version, but it says something entirely different than what the composer had in mind; hence it was a refreshing bit of honesty to read on the program that the Passacaglia was "Interpreted" by Resphigi and not "arranged" by him.

Beethoven's Second Symphony continued the program and after the intermission Ein Heldenleben of Richard Strauss absorbed the remainder of the afternoon. This is a long inflated work with moments of great beauty. It is definitely dated but what an impact it must have had on listeners sixty years ago. Monteux recaptured some of its early surprise and fittingly received a standing ovation at the end of the concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659

JUL 29 1962

Janis Given Near Ovation In Concerto at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox—Charles Munch put the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its paces Saturday night in a program which ranged from Handel's "Water Music" suite through Alexei Haieff's symphony No. 3, written in 1961, to Beethoven's piano concerto No. 3, in which he had the superb assistance of pianist Byron Janis.

Just why this 1961 effusion by Haieff was programmed we do not know, but it earned the composer, who strode onstage with Munch after its completion, a near ovation.

It is not a pleasant work, it is not a melodic work, but it is loud and gives the various choirs of the orchestra considerable to do. It is made up of a series of fragments without any seeming relation to each other.

One must go far to hear anything more beautiful than the suite for strings from the "Water Music" by Handel. It is a frequent work, beautifully balanced, with a true old world fragrance.

Its six movements are finely contrasted, and show the various orchestral choirs to advantage. Munch conducted it with loving attention to every detail, and the audience loved it.

Springfield people will remember Byron Janis who opened the 1961-1962 season of our symphony orchestra. We knew he was going to be good but failed to realize just how [illegible] pianist can get [illegible] collaboration.

This concerto [illegible] opportunity for bra[illegible] quality which Janis [illegible] dance. He can be [illegible] dove and then [illegible]

He can do just [illegible] he wants to do, [illegible] does it so easily [illegible] realizes what is [illegible] and the orchestra [illegible] ceptional collabora[illegible]

The audience, [illegible] bered 9125, was [illegible] siastic, which mu[illegible] the young pianis[illegible] er and father, who [illegible] in front of me.

Janis has just [illegible] Russia where, we [illegible] was the first Amer[illegible] record an album. T[illegible] seemed c[illegible] it was g[illegible] its worth, and [illegible] particular pe[illegible] close to a standing o[illegible]

This afternoon [illegible] feux returns to [illegible] the first time [illegible] may be sure o[illegible] welcome, for [illegible] have reached h[illegible] all the vigor and p[illegible] has.

There is very [illegible] dard repertoire [illegible] ducted.

His program [illegible] changed beca[illegible] tion of contralto [illegible] Masse. The p[illegible] clude Be[illegible] No. 2. Bac[illegible] arranged fo[illegible] phigi, and t[illegible] poem "Ein H[illegible]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

JUL 29 1962

Music: Beethoven Work at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood derived its drawing power and distinction from Byron Janis' performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

The audience numbered 9,120.

Balance of the program was the prancing little dances of the Handel - Harty "Water Music" suite, and Symphony No. 3 by the contemporary Siberian composer, Alexei Haieff.

Pierre Monteux

Of greater human interest was the public rehearsal of this afternoon's program, attended by 3,837. The 87-year-old conductor Pierre Monteux continues to perform greater miracles with baton.

Dressed in a light gray sport coat and dark trousers, the great man ushered the 104 players through a run-through of Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" or "A Hero's Life" that seethed with vitality.

He had the score before him but seemed to turn pages only when he happened to think of it to find the number of a section that he wanted repeated.

Intriguing Figure

There's nothing of the whipping boy attitude in his corrections. He'd turn to the first violins—"Pum-pa-tum-I want to hear those things," he said almost apologetically.

What a personality and what an intriguing figure to watch. Five feet four in height, receding dark hair and white moustache, rotund is the word to describe him.

Monteux gets a bigger tone and more polish from the Boston Symphony with the crooking of one finger than most young athletes can induce with a big display of calisthenics.

Irked Just Once

Yesterday morning he became irked just once when the audience began to prattle. He turned and shook his baton at the people. "We're working up here," he spouted, and silence prevailed.

Sometimes the Boston Symphony plays less well than other times. We've never heard them play badly. The quality of its performance is inevitably influenced by repertory.

The Boston Symphony probably could make the "Anvil Chorus" sound well as a funeral march—bu tthey were stymied with the Haieff symphony. It was played extremely well, but the music is impoverished of most qualities that one holds dear in a symphonic work.

Moments of Absorption

It had its moments of absorption from the standpoint of sound production. But it was unfortunate to squander more than one third of concert time on such tripe.

A clue to the music's ambiguity is found in the composer's program notes. For example: "I would subtitle the second movement Narcissus, for the second half of it is an exact mirror reflection of the first half; what was above is below, up, down, etc., all the way to the end. The last movement has material from the first two."

It begins with short, fast complaints, followed by smooth, loud, pseudo-rhapsodic material. From that point are a succession of carefully delivered noises. Viola, flute and others share the coy remarks. No idea is actually completed and nothing is interesting enough to make the listener wonder about the outcome.

Dolorous Affair

The second movement is a dolorous affair—moaning, wailing melodies scattered about, with strings receiving the brunt. The third movement starts off harmlessly enough—little trembling figures, but these soon give way to curt, off-key spottiness that ha already grounded the first movement.

A festive atmosphere abounded in the four swift movements of the "Water Music." In the opening allegro, the brasses did a fine job of keeping in tune but trumpets were painfully off pitch in the last phrase of the finale.

Concert Today

The tuneful "air" sang happily, but so fast that it lost most of its bucolic character. The bourree traveled briskly in short, abbreviated phrases. Hornpipe was beautifully toned and intoned by strings and woodwinds alike.

At this afternoon's concert, in addition to Strauss' "Heldenleben," Monteux will conduct the orchestra in Bach-Respighi's "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor" and Beethoven's Second Symphony. Because of illness, soprano Freda Gray-Masse will not appear as scheduled.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451

JUL 30 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Audiences Cheer Janis And Munch

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Tanglewood audiences like to show their appreciation boisterously. In the first weekend of concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, convincing ovations were given Charles Munch, Byron Janis and Pierre Monteux. The Sunday vocalist, Freda Gray-Masse, was ill and unable to appear.

Friday's mingling of old and new brought Debussy's "Printemps," Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and the Brahms Fourth. Saturday, also conducted by Munch, offered a Handel-Harty Suite from "The Water Music," the Haieff Symphony No. 3 and Janis in the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3.

Sunday's revised program, conducted by Monteux, consisted of the Bach-Respighi Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, the Second Symphony of Beethoven and Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben." The audiences were of moderate size on Friday, and large on Saturday and Sunday.

Byron Janis

The audience was reluctant to let Byron Janis go on Saturday night, after he concluded the concert with the C minor Beethoven Concerto. Working apparently in perfect harmony with the conductor, Janis was that delightful sort of artist who does difficult things with gracious ease, and lets dynamic shadings be chosen for poetry rather than bravura re-

The long orchestral introduction was an impressive suggestion of symphonic fare, rather than a buildup. In the first and concluding movements, Janis displayed a choice beauty of spirit, sensitiveness and brilliant technique, letting the climaxes shine out as much by phrasing as by sheer force. The second movement, "Largo," had all the calm, sweet faith one would expect in a sacred theme. In its mid-portion, however, both the soloist and conductor seemed to make a fetish of holding back the tempo unduly.

The "Water Music" excerpts showed the Boston ensemble in its best light at times, and also pointed out longstanding defects. The "Air" was elastic and smooth, the "Bourree" brought showy strings, with gently bouncing bows. The Hornpipe was dainty and neat. Sweet music also emerged in the "Andante espressivo." The varied use of soft woodwinds in these sections was charming.

In the opening "Allegro," and again in the final "Allegro deciso," the noisy timpani of other seasons again obtruded, and the brasses had moments of harsh overblowing. There was lack of the cohesiveness felt in the orchestra elsewhere during the evening.

Modern Work

The Haieff Symphony, which was followed by a friendly but not turbulent welcoming of the composer to the stage, was a brief modern work, skilfully scored. It skirted the edge of dissonance at times, with a tendency to placate and smooth over. The idiom was somewhat fragmentary, and the effective climaxes were shortlived. The work opened with quizzical, oblique approaches. Its "Andante" movement had considerable appeal, until its later portion became somewhat labored in conception. The work demanded and received virtuoso playing from all portions of the orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 2 1962

TANGLEWOOD

Friday — by S. J. G.

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening in a program which offered the prospect of more variety than was achieved. This can be attributed in part to the fact that Debussy's "Printemps," being an early work, has more form in the traditional sense and a greater clarity of orchestral texture than generally associated with this composer's work. It has, therefore, an affinity with the two symphonies which followed, especially since Walter Piston's effective use of the orchestra in his Symphony No. 6 makes more than passing reference to the orchestral practices of the French impressionists.

Through beautiful balance, expressive nuance and a plastic sense of rhythm, Dr. Munch made Debussy's "Printemps" seem a better piece of music than it really is. The Piston work is a fine (though not his best) symphony and it received a virtuoso performance.

The disappointing part of the evening was the work which should have been the highlight, Brahms' Symphony No. 4. It must be granted (despite some unfortunate slips by the French horn) that the orchestra played beautifully, but Dr. Munch's conception of this work made Brahms sound like a fin de siècle French composer.

Saturday — by K. P. M.

Diversity was the keynote at Tanglewood last Saturday evening, when Dr. Munch presented a program of works by Handel, Haieff, and Beethoven. To open the program, Dr. Munch chose an orchestral arrangement of Handel's "The Water Music." Written to please a king, this work more than enthused the Tanglewood audience, which responded immediately to the vitality, sparkle, flowing grace, and moving beauty which were conveyed so well.

Next, the Third Symphony of the contemporary Siberian-American composer Alexei Haieff was presented for inspection. The first movement, which the composer informs us consists of "episodes" which are " an amusing workout of counterpoint," seems to be an attempt to combine farce and lyricism with almost electronic precision. The second movement is a sighing suggestion of frustrated emotion, while the third movement is a troubled scherzando, reiterating parts of the first.

The unquestionable highlight of the evening came, however, when Byron Janis contributed his magnificent performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor. The deeply moving interpretation of the masterwork will undoubtedly be remembered by many for a very long time.

Sunday — by C. N. D.

Wave after wave of applause greeted Pierre Monteux at the close of his concert Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood. The distinguished octogenarian retains his mastery of an orchestra and the Boston Symphony never sounded more luminous and vibrant.

On account of illness, the announced soloist, Mme. Gray-Masse, was unable to appear but that was no loss to the thousands who came to hear Monteux. In place of the soprano arias announced on the advance program, the orchestra played a version of the Organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor by Bach arranged by Resphigi. This music is more effective with an orchestra than in its original version, but it says something entirely different than what the composer had in mind; hence it was a refreshing bit of honesty to read on the program that the Passacaglia was "Interpreted" by Resphigi and not "arranged" by him.

Beethoven's Second Symphony continued the program and after the intermission Ein Heldenleben of Richard Strauss absorbed the remainder of the afternoon. This is a long inflated work with moments of great beauty. It is definitely dated but what an impact it must have had on listeners sixty years ago. Monteux recaptured some of its early surprise and fittingly received a standing ovation at the end of the concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 29 1962

Janis Given Near Ovation In Concerto at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox—Charles Munch put the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its paces Saturday night in a program which ranged from Handel's "Water Music" suite through Alexei Haieff's symphony No. 3, written in 1961, to Beethoven's piano concerto No. 3, in which he had the superb assistance of pianist Byron Janis.

Just why this 1961 effusion by Haieff was programmed we do not know, but it earned the composer, who strode onstage with Munch after its completion, a near ovation.

It is not a pleasant work, it is not a melodic work, but it is loud and gives the various choirs of the orchestra considerable to do. It is made up of a seires of fragments without any seeming relation to each other.

One must go far to hear anything more beautiful than the suite for strings from the "Water Music" by Handel. It is a frequent work, beautifully balanced, with a true old world fragrance.

Its six movements are finely contrasted, and show the various orchestral choirs to advantage. Munch conducted it with loving attention to every detail, and the audience loved it.

Springfield people will remember Byron Janis who opened the 1951-1962 season of our symphony orchestra. We knew he was going to be good but failed to realize just how much a lift a pianist can get from fine orchestra collaboration.

This concerto offers many an opportunity for bravura display, a quality which Janis has in abundance. He can be as gentle as a dove and then roar violently.

He can do just about whatever he wants to do, pianistically, and does it so easily that one hardly realizes what is going on. Munch and the orchestra provided an exceptional collaboration.

The audience, which numbered 9125, was wildly enthusiastic, which must have pleased the young pianist and his mother and father, who sat directly in front of me.

Janis has just returned from Russia where, we were told, he was the first American invited to record an album. The audience seemed completely aware that it was getting its money's worth, and the response to this particular performance was very close to a standing ovation.

This afternoon Pierre Monteux returns to the podium for the first time this season. He may be sure of a tremendous welcome, for few conductors have reached his age retaining all the vigor and perception he has.

There is very little of the standard repertoire he has not conducted.

His program has been changed because of the defection of contralto Freda Gray-Masse. The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, Bach's organ passacaglia arranged for orchestra by Resphigi, and the Strauss tone poem "Ein Heldenleben."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849
JUL 29 1962

Music: Beethoven Work at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Last night's Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood derived its drawing power and distinction from Byron Janis' performance of Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

The audience numbered 9,120.

Balance of the program was the prancing little dances of the Handel - Harty "Water Music" suite, and Symphony No. 3 by the contemporary Siberian composer, Alexei Haieff.

Pierre Monteux

Of greater human interest was the public rehearsal of this afternoon's program, attended by 3,237. The 87-year-old conductor Pierre Monteux continues to perform greater miracles with baton.

Dressed in a light gray sport coat and dark trousers, the great man ushered the 104 players through a run-through of Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" or "A Hero's Life" that seethed with vitality.

He had the score before him but seemed to turn pages only when he happened to think of it to find the number of a section that he wanted repeated.

Intriguing Figure

There's nothing of the whipping boy attitude in his corrections. He'd turn to the first violins—"Pum-pa-tum-I want to hear those Oringa," he said almost apologetically.

What a personality and what an intriguing figure to watch. Five feet four in height, receding dark hair and white moustache, rotund is the word to describe him.

Monteux gets a bigger tone and more polish from the Boston Symphony with the crooking of one finger than most young athletes can induce with a big display of calisthenics.

Irked Just Once

Yesterday morning he became irked just once when the audience began to prattle. He turned and shook his baton at the people. "We're working up here," he spouted, and silence prevailed.

Sometimes the Boston Symphony plays less well than other times. We've never heard them play badly. The quality of its performance is inevitably influenced by repertory.

The Boston Symphony probably could make the "Anvil Chorus" sound well as a funeral march—but they were stymied with the Haieff symphony. It was played extremely well, but the music is impoverished of most qualities that one holds dear in a symphonic work.

Moments of Absorption

It had its moments of absorption from the standpoint of sound production. But it was unfortunate to squander more than one third of concert time on such tripe.

A clue to the music's ambiguity is found in the composer's program notes. For example: "I would subtitle the second movement Narcissus, for the second half of it is an exact mirror reflection of the first half; what was above is below, up, down, etc., all the way to the end. The last movement has material from the first two."

It begins with short, fast complaints, followed by smooth, loud, pseudo-rhapsodic material. From that point are a succession of carefully delivered noises. Viola, flute and others share the coy remarks. No idea is actually completed and nothing is interesting enough to make the listener wonder about the outcome.

Dolorous Affair

The second movement is a dolorous affair—moaning, wailing melodies scattered about, with strings receiving the brunt. The third movement starts off harmlessly enough—little trembling figures, but these soon give way to curt, off-key spottiness that ha already grounded the first movement.

A festive atmosphere abounded in the four swift movements of the "Water Music." In the opening allegro, the brasses did a fine job of keeping in tune but trumpets were painfully off pitch in the last phrase of the finale.

Concert Today

The funeful "air" sang happily, but so fast that it lost most of its bucolic character. The bourree traveled briskly in short, abbreviated phrases. Hornpipe was beautifully toned and intoned by strings and woodwinds alike.

At this afternoon's concert, in addition to Strauss' "Heldenleben," Monteux will conduct the orchestra in Bach-Respighi's "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor" and Beethoven's Second Symphony. Because of illness, soprano Freda Gray-Masse will not appear as scheduled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,451
JUL 30 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Audiences Cheer Janis And Munch

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Tanglewood audiences like to show their appreciation boisterously. In the first weekend of concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, convincing ovations were given Charles Munch, Byron Janis and Pierre Monteux. The Sunday vocalist, Freda Gray-Masse, was ill and unable to appear.

Friday's mingling of old and new brought Debussy's "Printemps," Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and the Brahms Fourth. Saturday, also conducted by Munch, offered a Handel-Harty Suite from "The Water Music," the Haieff Symphony No. 3 and Janis in the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3.

Sunday's revised program, conducted by Monteux, consisted of the Bach-Respighi Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, the Second Symphony of Beethoven and Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben." The audiences were of moderate size on Friday, and large on Saturday and Sunday.

Byron Janis

The audience was reluctant to let Byron Janis go on Saturday night, after he concluded the concert with the C minor Beethoven Concerto. Working apparently in perfect harmony with the conductor, Janis was that delightful sort of artist who does difficult things with gracious ease, and lets dynamic shadings be chosen for poetry rather than bravura re-

The long orchestral introduction was an impressive suggestion of symphonic fare, rather than a buildup. In the first and concluding movements, Janis displayed a choice beauty of spirit, sensitiveness and brilliant technique, letting the climaxes shine out as much by phrasing as by sheer force. The second movement, "Largo," had all the calm, sweet faith one would expect in a sacred theme. In its mid-portion, however, both the soloist and conductor seemed to make a fetish of holding back the tempo unduly.

The "Water Music" excerpts showed the Boston ensemble in its best light at times, and also pointed out longstanding defects. The "Air" was elastic and smooth, the "Bourree" brought showy strings, with gently bouncing bows. The Hornpipe was dainty and neat. Sweet music also emerged in the "Andante espressivo." The varied use of soft woodwinds in these sections was charming.

In the opening "Allegro," and again in the final "Allegro deciso," the noisy timpani of other seasons again obtruded, and the brasses had moments of harsh overblowing. There was lack of the cohesiveness felt in the orchestra elsewhere during the evening.

Modern Work

The Haieff Symphony, which was followed by a friendly but not turbulent welcoming of the composer to the stage, was a brief modern work, skilfully scored. It skirted the edge of dissonance at times, with a tendency to placate and smooth over. The idiom was somewhat fragmentary, and the effective climaxes were shortlived. The work opened with quizzical, oblique approaches. Its "Andante" movement had considerable appeal, until its later portion became somewhat labored in conception. The work demanded and received virtuoso playing from all portions of the orchestra.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 1962

79

Berkshire Festival—Tanglewood

...ly 27-29 was the first this season to ...fied composers as contrasted with the ... all-Mozart concerts. Between Charles ...l Saturday evenings) and Pierre Mon...noon), music from Bach to Haieff was

...e Friday program with Debussy's early ...ps," suite symphonique, whose major ...orecasts the Impressionistic style of the Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 com... this concert. In four movements, the ...dies which are concisely and beautifully ... feeling of solidarity; the second trips ... humorous close; the third presents ...nes: and the last aptly fulfills its title, ...he evening came to a rousing conclusion ...ony No. 4 in E Minor. Dr. Munch prac... muddiness from Brahms' orchestration and gave the symphony a French clarity without ever sacrificing its German characteristics or quality. Every detail, from dynamics to tempi, was carefully worked out. It is difficult for this listener to remember a better performance. The audience apparently shared this feeling, for its applause shook the rafters of the Shed.

The two features of Saturday's concert were Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3 and Byron Janis' appearance in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Minor. The evening opened with the fanfare from Handel's suite, "The Water Music" (arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty). On first contact, the Haieff symphony invites future hearings. Its striking qualities are contrasts—with a solemn, reflective second movement sandwiched between the light, airy first and the bouncy, modern third movements,—and the transparent texture throughout the work. The first movement is particularly interesting inasmuch as its opening theme—a short rapid up-scale phrase—is effectively tossed about among the various sections of the orchestra. Byron Janis was most successful with the first movement of the Beethoven concerto. In the second his tendency to milk every phrase resulted in an exaggerated slowing-up of the "Largo" tempo. In the last movement, excluding some slurring and slight over-use of the pedal, Mr. Janis fared very well. It would appear that his feeling for and insight to Beethoven excels his technique. The audience, however, enthusiastically acclaimed the artist.

(Continued on page 5)

Berkshire Festival-Tanglewood

(Continued from page 3)

When illness prevented the scheduled appearance of Mme. Freda Gray-Masse at Sunday's concert, Pierre Monteux offered Bach's Organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, orchestrated by Respighi, as the opening selection. Mr. Monteux is still the grand old maestro. His interpretation of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major was as much a model of delicacy and precision as his reading of Bach was a tower of strength. As for Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben," it is an accepted fact that Strauss himself is the hero of this vast symphonic score. But on July 29, the hero clearly was Monteux. The clarity, brilliance and sweetness he extracted from the orchestra were unmatched. Here, as in the Brahms symphony on Friday, was a performance one hears once in a lifetime.—N.K.S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917

JUL 30 1962

Cool Weather, Warm Sense at Tanglewood

Piston's Sixth Joins Debussy and Brahms

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

The Boston Symphony, after ...rce well-attended weekends ... Bach and Mozart with re...uced orchestra, brought its ... membership to Tangle...ood last week. On Friday it played Debussy, Piston, and Brahms, under Charles Munch, to an audience kept by the cool Berkshire weather from a corresponding increase.

Those few thousands who came were rewarded most especially by the warm coherence of the Piston Sixth Symphony. If Bostonians find reasons to regret the echoing at these concerts of so much from the previous winter, their reasons could well bypass such germane music as this. "The symphony," as Mr. Piston says through John N. Burk's program notes, "was composed [as 1955 commission] with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to." Much more than once, we might add.

"Fluendo espressivo," designating the first movement, exactly describes how the music came from the orchestra and conductor for whom it was composed. It flowed, in Mr. Piston's eminently legible way. Then followed an authentic scherzo (Leggerissimo vivace), a froth of percussive scintillations. The chuckles that followed it were with the music, not at a program note. The player and the listener could each be entertained.

* * *

The Adagio sereno turned from this light-hearted banter to the more serious matters of content. Samuel Mayes' solo cello was insistently eloquent in the first theme, on which it commented again at the end. The genuine reassurance of this movement is a welcome way for music to work in these shock-conscious days.

Mr. Piston's last movement, Allegro energico, resumes with the livelier energy of the first two, having at heart a bounding proposition which is at length harnessed to fugal development, and brings the symphony resolutely home.

The program additionally quotes Mr. Piston's "immense indebtedness to the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to the conductors Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Burgin, and Charles Munch, for the many superb performances" of his music. This was another such performance, resonant enough to inspire the same sentiments in the opposite direction. Walter Piston, for his unpretentious, vibrantly intelligible work as New England's most eminent living composer, is the creditor indeed of countless thousands who have responded as players and hearers of his music.

* * *

The rest of Friday evening, though it dispensed intermittent patches of notable sonority, was not especially revealing. Debussy's early "Printemps," opening the program, relates its abundant melody and color in the incomplete way of derivative "pop" arrangers of the past 30 years; except that his incompleteness is that of evolving originality, and theirs, as a rule, is not. There was some tailoring still to be done in this performance, including the release of the brass in his final flung chord.

The Brahms Fourth, after intermission, got better as it went along. Dr. Munch, at ease in Debussy, closely interested in Piston, seemed to push and pull at the Parthenaic equilibriums of Brahms' first movement, as though impatient with its ineffable structure.

The Andante movement found its voice in the rising assurance of the second theme, and rocked splendidly in the closing tutti. Brahms' joke (scherzo) came off as well as had Piston's very different one, and the symphony's final chaconne stood up with something of the energy and passion intended by its composer.

This is familiar and monumental music, and deserves to remain so. Whether or not such works should remain on Berkshire Festival programs in the customary quantities may be an open question. But they certainly should not be allowed to sound habitual.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

JUL 30 1962

Concert Review

Fourth Week at Tanglewood Suited to Munch, Monteux

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The fourth week of concerts at Tanglewood brought the entire Boston Symphony together to perform music that most suits the talents of the orchestra under Charles Munch and, by the way, those talents of his inestimable colleague, Pierre Monteux, as well.

The music, with the possible exception of the Haieff Symphony No. 3, was all on the grand scale which allows style and means of interpretation within a large margin without exceeding the general boundaries of genteel taste or original composer intent.

French Masters

Particularly suitable to Munch's wide, somewhat improvisational interpretations are the lush impressionistic works by the French masters of his own generation of which Debussy's "Printemps" was an admirable example. Composed when Debussy was a Prix de Rome scholar (an honor he received for his contrapuntal prowess!), he wrote to a friend that with this music he wanted to "communicate the greatest possible number of sensations, — from the human point of view." If this lofty goal failed on paper, it was most closely achieved in Friday's performance. The careful opening and exposure of the music to the culmination and resurgence of joy and new life should be marked among the BSO's most rare performances.

The remaining compositions, however, were not all overshadowed by the "Printemps" by any stretch of the imagination. The rather difficult to perform, but elegant Symphony No. 6 by Piston was still quite expressive and striking, while Brahms 4th was again the happy product of the BSO playing in the grand manner, though no doubt made to seem even more sublime by the juxtaposition of the more reserved Piston work between it and Debussy. Despite its romantic melancholy and old-world view of terrible devastation in the andante, the work is far from decrepit as was clearly illustrated by the spirited performance of the final allegro energico e passionato.

Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff was somewhat a disappointment. The composer, born in Siberia, shows accents of the Hungarian Bartok, but seemed here to commit faults one seldom would find in any Bartok. It was ponderous at one moment and over-emoting at another, the chopped-up fits and starts of potentially good material produced a sort of fixation in the mind that obscured the music for the notes.

Handel's Water Music

Handel's Water Music gave Munch another chance to display the fine characteristics of the orchestra which unfortunately included overly enthusiastic trumpets.

However, Byron Janis' performance of the first movement of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 turned the usually well-mannered audience into a state of frenzy that was only outclassed by the scene that followed the finale. The performance, with the possible exception of the too-slow, too-profound largo, rated fully this uninhibited display. Though Janis plowed into the work like an agile pneumatic drill fighting a piano, he produced both beautiful and positive results, and though his tone was enormous, it was heroic and always expansive. The few notes played that were not part of this concerto did not add, nor frankly did they much detract from the startling success created by the right ones.

Mr. Monteux received a standing ovation for his return to Tanglewood when he entered the Shed Sunday for a concert of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, Beethoven Symphony No. 2 and Strauss' wheezer "Ein Heldenleben." The Bach (chosen at the last minute to fill a gap created by a malaise of Mme. Grey-Masse) was too buxom and might well have been likened to a series of high-pressure boleros. The Beethoven larghetto was impressive, while the other movements left one unastonished. A few people left before Ein Heldenleben began.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 1962

Berkshire Festival—Tanglewood

The ... July 27-29 was the first this season to offe... ...rsified composers as contrasted with the pre... ...nd all-Mozart concerts. Between Charles Mu... ...nd Saturday evenings) and Pierre Monte... ...rnoon), music from Bach to Haieff was

...he Friday program with Debussy's early ...nps," suite symphonique, whose major ...forecasts the Impressionistic style of the Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 com... ...f this concert. In four movements, the ...odies which are concisely and beautifully ...feeling of solidarity; the second trips ...a humorous close; the third presents ...emes; and the last aptly fulfills its title, The evening came to a rousing conclusion ...phony No. 4 in E Minor. Dr. Munch prac... ...e muddiness from Brahms' orchestration and gave the symphony a French clarity without ever sacrificing its German characteristics or quality. Every detail, from dynamics to tempi, was carefully worked out. It is difficult for this listener to remember a better performance. The audience apparently shared this feeling, for its applause shook the rafters of the Shed.

The two features of Saturday's concert were Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3 and Byron Janis' appearance in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Minor. The evening opened with the fanfare from Handel's suite, "The Water Music" (arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty). On first contact, the Haieff symphony invites future hearings. Its striking qualities are contrasts—with a solemn, reflective second movement sandwiched between the light, airy first and the bouncy, modern third movements,—and the transparent texture throughout the work. The first movement is particularly interesting inasmuch as its opening theme—a short rapid up-scale phrase—is effectively tossed about among the various sections of the orchestra. Byron Janis was most successful with the first movement of the Beethoven concerto. In the second his tendency to milk every phrase resulted in an exaggerated slowing-up of the "Largo" tempo. In the last movement, excluding some slurring and slight over-use of the pedal, Mr. Janis fared very well. It would appear that his feeling for and insight to Beethoven excels his technique. The audience, however, enthusiastically acclaimed the artist.

(Continued on page 5)

Berkshire Festival-Tanglewood

(Continued from page 3)

When illness prevented the scheduled appearance of Mme. Freda Gray-Masse at Sunday's concert, Pierre Monteux offered Bach's Organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, orchestrated by Respighi, as the opening selection. Mr. Monteux is still the grand old maestro. His interpretation of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major was as much a model of delicacy and precision as his reading of Bach was a tower of strength. As for Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben," it is an accepted fact that Strauss himself is the hero of this vast symphonic score. But on July 29, the hero clearly was Monteux. The clarity, brilliance and sweetness he extracted from the orchestra were unmatched. Here, as in the Brahms symphony on Friday, was a performance one hears once in a lifetime.—N.K.S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JUL 30 1962

Cool Weather; Warm Sense at Tanglewood

Piston's Sixth Joins Debussy and Brahms

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

The Boston Symphony, after three well-attended weekends of Bach and Mozart with reduced orchestra, brought its full membership to Tanglewood last week. On Friday it played Debussy, Piston, and Brahms, under Charles Munch, to an audience kept by the cool Berkshire weather from a corresponding increase.

Those few thousands who came were rewarded most especially by the warm coherence of the Piston Sixth Symphony. If Bostonians find reasons to regret the echoing at these concerts of so much from the previous winter, their reasons could well bypass such germane music as this. "The symphony," as Mr. Piston says through John N. Burk's program notes, "was composed [as a 1955 commission] with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to." Much more than once, we might add.

"Fluendo espressivo," designating the first movement, exactly describes how the music came from the orchestra and conductor for whom it was composed. It flowed, in Mr. Piston's eminently legible way. Then followed an authentic scherzo (Leggerissimo vivace), a froth of percussive scintillations. The chuckles that followed it were with the music, not at a program note. The player and the listener could each be entertained.

* * *

The Adagio sereno turned from this light-hearted banter to the more serious matters of content. Samuel Mayes' solo cello was insistently eloquent in the first theme, on which it commented again at the end. The genuine reassurance of this movement is a welcome way for music to work in these shock-conscious days.

Mr. Piston's last movement, Allegro energico, resumes with the livelier energy of the first two, having at heart a bounding proposition which is at length harnessed to fugal development, and brings the symphony resolutely home.

The program additionally quotes Mr. Piston's "immense indebtedness to the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to the conductors Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Burgin, and Charles Munch, for the many superb performances" of his music. This was another such performance, resonant enough to inspire the same sentiments in the opposite direction. Walter Piston, for his unpretentious, vibrantly intelligible work as New England's most eminent living composer, is the creditor indeed of countless thousands who have responded as players and hearers of his music.

* * *

The rest of Friday evening, though it dispensed intermittent patches of notable sonority, was not especially revealing. Debussy's early "Printemps," opening the program, relates its abundant melody and color in the incomplete way of derivative "pop" arrangers of the past 30 years, except that his incompleteness is that of evolving originality, and theirs, as a rule, is not. There was some tailoring still to be done in this performance, including the release of the brass in his final flung chord.

The Brahms Fourth, after intermission, got better as it went along. Dr. Munch, at ease in Debussy, closely interested in Piston, seemed to push and pull at the Parthenaic equilibriums of Brahms' first movement, as though impatient with its ineffable structure.

The Andante movement found its voice in the rising assurance of the second theme and rocked splendidly in the closing tutti. Brahms' joke (scherso) came off as well as had Piston's very different one, and the symphony's final chaconne stood up with something of the energy and passion intended by its composer.

This is familiar and monumental music, and deserves to remain so. Whether or not such works should remain on Berkshire Festival programs in the customary quantities may be an open question. But they certainly should not be allowed to sound habitual.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 30 1962

Concert Review

Fourth Week at Tanglewood Suited to Munch, Monteux

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The fourth week of concerts at Tanglewood brought the entire Boston Symphony together to perform music that most suits the talents of the orchestra under Charles Munch and, by the way, those talents of his inestimable colleague, Pierre Monteux, as well.

The music, with the possible exception of the Haieff Symphony No. 3, was all on the grand scale which allows style and means of interpretation within a large margin without exceeding the general boundaries of genteel taste or original composer intent.

French Masters

Particularly suitable to Munch's wide, somewhat improvisational interpretations are the lush impressionistic works by the French masters of his own generation of which Debussy's "Printemps" was an admirable example. Composed when Debussy was a Prix de Rome scholar (an honor he received for his contrapuntal prowess!), he wrote to a friend that with this music he wanted to "communicate the greatest possible number of sensations, — from the human point of view." If this lofty goal failed on paper, it was most closely achieved in Friday's performance. The careful opening and exposure of the music to the culmination and resurgence of joy and new life should be marked among the BSO's most rare performances.

The remaining compositions, however, were not all overshadowed by the "Printemps" by any stretch of the imagination. The rather difficult to perform, but elegant Symphony No. 6 by Piston was still quite expressive and striking, while Brahms 4th was again the happy product of the BSO playing in the grand manner, though no doubt made to seem even more sublime by the juxtaposition of the more reserved Piston work between it and Debussy. Despite its romantic melancholy and old-world view of terrible devastation in the andante, the work is far from decrepit as was clearly illustrated by the spirited performance of the final allegro energico e passionato.

Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff was somewhat a disappointment. The composer, born in Siberia, shows accents of the Hungarian Bartok, but seemed here to commit faults one seldom would find in any Bartok. It was ponderous at one moment and over-emoting at another, the chopped-up fits and starts of potentially good material produced a sort of fixation in the mind that obscured the music for the notes.

Handel's Water Music

Handel's Water Music gave Munch another chance to display the fine characteristics of the orchestra which unfortunately included overly enthusiastic trumpets.

However, Byron Janis' performance of the first movement of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 turned the usually well-mannered audience into a state of frenzy that was only outclassed by the scene that followed the finale. The performance, with the possible exception of the too-slow, too-profound largo, rated fully this uninhibited display. Though Janis plowed into the work like an agile pneumatic drill fighting a piano, he produced both beautiful and positive results, and though his tone was enormous, it was heroic and always expansive. The few notes played that were not part of this concerto did not add, nor frankly did they much detract from the startling success created by the right ones.

Mr. Monteux received a standing ovation for his return to Tanglewood when he entered the Shed Sunday for a concert of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor, Beethoven Symphony No. 2 and Strauss' wheezer "Ein Heldenleben." The Bach (chosen at the last minute to fill a gap created by a malaise of Mme. Grey-Masse) was too buxom and might well have been likened to a series of high-pressure boleros. The Beethoven larghetto was impressive, while the other movements left one unastonished. A few people left before Ein Heldenleben began.

'80

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

JUL 30 1962

Music: Monteux Conducts at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Up to this point in the Berkshire Music Festival, the zenith was reached yesterday afternoon with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of merit and high adventure. The audience of 6,759 brought the weekend total to 24,724, largest of the three weekends.

Singer Freda Gray-Masse was unable to appear because of illness. In place of her arias, Monteux and the orchestra substituted the Respighi transcription of Bach's Passacaglia and Fuge in C minor. The rest of the program was Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Opus 36, and Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben," Opus 40, or "A Hero's Life."

Yesterday was a "red letter day" for two young men. Monteux, 87, had a triumph. He's about to embark on a new career as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. He will conduct again at Tanglewood on Aug. 11 and 24.

Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony with the festival's concluding concert on Aug. 26. He is 68.

Violin Solos Dazzling

Strauss' "Heldenleben" requires something more than the services of a conductor and concertmaster. Yesterday there were 103 other players on the platform, but the main pillars upon which the work rises or falls are direction from the podium and violin cadenzas, representing the work's heroine and the composer's most personal disclosures.

Burgin gave a dazzling account of the bristling solos in the section, "Hero's Helpmate" and at the end, where Strauss justifies his life's fulfillment. These were played with beautiful contours of phrase, tonal warmth and technical surety.

Monteux conducted the massive work with extraordinary outer calm. However, there was no premium on emotion or dramatic drive. This was indeed Strauss' definition of the inward battle of life, conflict with critics and elevaton of the soul.

Monumental Battle Scene

The orchestra players obviously regard Monteux with hero worship. They declared it with their performance, which was powerful and intensely moving. There were undercurrents of fire from the start — tremendous tone from low brasses to soaring sweeps from strings.

Strauss' foes were described with relish in whining strings and brass blasts. The composer's references to other of his works under fire were brilliant expressions of goading and retribution.

The oboe solo from "Don Juan" was beautifully toned by Ralph Gomberg — so were the critics' chattering rebuffs in flute, played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer. The battle scene was monumental in tonal scope and rhythmic vitality.

Patterson at Organ

This battlefield sequence was initiated with spotless offstage trumpet fanfares. At its climax were rockbottom drum beats, scolding brasses and assailing strings.

For Bach-Respighi's "Passacaglia and Fugue," the orchestra was supplemented by the organ played by Alfred Nash Patterson, new choral director of the Worcester Music Festival. The passacaglia was like a gleaming chain of 20 variations, each a perfect unit of strong character, perfectly matched to the others.

The theme was kept intact and followable despite Respighi's splashy orchestration. In the involved fugue, weblike materials could have been displayed in a brightly lighted showcase. All the interpretation lacked was a ritard at the end to magnify the feeling of dramatic finality.

Pops Concert Thursday

Monteux's Beethoven was the purest in style and the orchestra obliged with rich tone, perfectly molded ornaments and the joyous quality that Monteux sought. It's no simple trick for 34 violins to play rapid four-note turns in absolute unison.

Incidentally, Monteux conducted the entire program from memory.

This Thursday evening is "Tanglewood on Parade." Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Orchestra, with Earl Wild as piano soloist in Gershwin's Concerto in F.

The festival proper will be resumed Friday night.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony and Festival Chorus in Debussy's "Three Nocturnes," Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La Valse." Samuel Mayes will be soloist in Saint Saens' Cello Concerto No. 1 in A minor, Opus 33.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067

JUL 30 1962

Monteux Directs At Tanglewood

The Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood with the eminent guest conductor, Pierre Monteux directing the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, was attended by at least 6,759 music lovers.

Contrary to the listings on the program, Mr. Monteux began with Bach's marvelous "Passacaglia and Fugue." There was no announcement that this was to be part of the program, and a number of the less knowledgeable of the audience tried hard to convince themselves that they were hearing Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, as programmed. But for most there was no question about the composer, just composition. The Passacaglia and Fugue is not so very long as it is large, in intent and of architectural proportion. The orchestra seemed too massive for a work which of itself has sufficient impact. The Fugue as always provided a contrast to the repetitive Passacaglia.

The Beethoven Symphony followed this, a "serene and joyous" work written at the time Beethoven had fully realized that his deafness was incurable. It has been wondered at that anyone could write such a "carefree" work at the time one was facing the certain prospect of total deafness.

Freda Gray-Masse was scheduled to sing Dido's Lament by Purcell and an aria from "Oberon" by Weber. An indisposition causing her absence made for the confusion at the start of the afternoon. It was good to hear the Bach work but at the expence of a probable vocal treat.

The intermission was followed by a symphonic "Tone Poem, Ein Heldenleben," by Richard Strauss. The title is translated, "A Hero's Life," and the work is in six parts, The Hero; The Hero's Adversaries; The Hero's Helpmate; The Hero's Battlefield; The Hero's Works of Peace; The Hero's Release from the World, and the Fulfillment of His Life. The description of the Hero and delineation of his character builds up to music of great proportions with which the Boston Symphony does worthy justice.

The concertmaster, Richard Burgin, who retires this year, did the exacting cadenzas and solo themes of The Hero's Helpmate with great authority and distinction. This develops into a love song which, with the full orchestra, builds up into "lyric" opulence and tonal splendor such as none but Strauss could achieve. "The Hero's Battlefield" got very exciting, with the brasses and drums giving their all.

Mr Monteux took many rounds of applause before the audience would let him go. The afternoon and the concert were not particularly distinguished but were most comfortable and quite satisfactory.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175

JUL 30 1962

Tanglewood Conductor Draws Raves

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Pierre Monteux in the full grandeur of his 87th year returned to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood Festival Sunday afternoon in as brilliant and colorful a concert of Bach, Beethoven, and Strauss as one could hope for from this master of the musical palette. Somewhat thinner than last year and moving with greater mobility, the venerable Monteux conducted with spirit evoking richness of tone from the orchestra especially in Strauss' tone poem "Ein Heldenleben" and in Beethoven's "Symphony No. 2, in D Major".

It was a fitting conclusion to the first week end of the full orchestra's playing in which Conductor Charles Munch had presented music of Debussy, Piston, Brahms, Handel, Haieff, and Byron Janis in a talented reading of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 3, in C Minor." The week-end total of almost 25,000 was somewhat less than the corresponding week end last season when record-drawing Isaac Stern was the violin soloist. Some 9,125 heard Byron Janis, recently returned from Russia where he was invited to record, in a lyrical and sensitive performance of the Beethoven "Piano Concerto No. 3". Janis performed the largo as easily as though he were in a large room playing for himself alone, ranging in his performance from the most delicate touch to a strong, vigorous evocation of sound that won him an ovation when he was finished. The audience just would not permit him to leave.

Bravo!

Monteux's conducting of the Strauss "Tone Poem" led the responding Boston players through all the beauty of the string solos, the delicate calms after storms of life. There was music as though of a hero engaged in battle in the thick of the fray with the continued frenzy of a tournament to be followed by the gentle tone of the harp. There was brilliant tone and color as only Monteux can paint with art full orchestra. When it was over, even before anyone could applaud, there came one lone "Bravo" which seemed to sum it all up. It was taken up promptly by the echoing, enthusiastic audience which gave Monteux an ovation, having given him a standing welcome at the start of the concert. He will conduct another concert Saturday, the 11th. The program began with Bach's "Organ Passacaglia and Fugue, in C Minor", a revision of program due to illness of a soloist. Beethoven's "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" was given all the light-hearted, joyful dancing of a gay performance on a village green.

Friday night's crispy air brought 5,013 for a colorfu, brilliant reading of Piston's "Symphony No. 6". Dr. Munch always leads the Boston players through rich performances of Brahms. His conducting of the "Symphony No. 4" fell into the rich pattern. The performance of Alexei Haieff's "Symphony No. 3", composed by commission of the New Haven Symphony Orhcestra and first performed in New Haven in 1961, brought the composer to the platform. Lacking in coherence, the music does not seem the type to be performed frequently.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct a Boston Pops concert Thursday evening presenting music of Strauss, Respighi, Gershwin, and selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story". Friday night will bring William Steinberg conducting a program of Beethoven and Bruckner. Sunday afternoon Rudolf Serkin will play Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto". Dr. Munch will conduct Friday night's concert with music of Debussy, Honegger, Ravel, and Saint-Saens.

S. M.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 22,848

JUL 31 1962

Conductor's Performance Wins Praise

(Special to The Republican)

LENOX, MASS. — Pierre Monteux in the full grandeur of his 87th year returned to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood Festival Sunday afternoon in as brilliant and colorful a concert of Bach, Beethoven, and Strauss as one could hope for from this master of the musical palette. Somewhat thinner than last year and moving with greater mobility, the venerable Monteux conducted with spirit evoking richness of tone from the orchestra especially in Strauss' tone poem "Ein Heldenleben" and in Beethoven's "Symphony No. 2, in D Major".

It was a fitting conclusion to the first week end of the full orchestra's playing in which Conductor Charles Munch had presented music of Debussy, Piston, Brahms, Handel, Haieff, and Byron Janis in a talented reading of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 3, in C Minor." The week-end total of almost 25,000 was somewhat less than the corresponding week end last season when record-drawing Isaac Stern was the violin soloist. Some 9,125 heard Byron Janis, recently returned from Russia where he was invited to record, in a lyrical and sensitive performance of the Beethoven "Piano Concerto No. 3". Janis performed the largo as easily as though he were in a large room playing for himself alone, ranging in his performance from the most delicate touch to a strong, vigorous evocation of sound that won him an ovation when he was finished. The audience just would not permit him to leave.

Bravo!

Monteux's conducting of the Strauss "Tone Poem" led the responding Boston players through all the beauty of the string solos, the delicate calms after storms of life. There was music as though of a hero engaged in battle in the thick of the fray with the continued frenzy of a tournament to be followed by the gentle tone of the harp. There was brilliant tone and color as only Monteux can paint with the full orchestra. When it was over, even before anyone could applaud, there came one lone "Bravo" which seemed to sum it all up. It was taken up promptly by the echoing, enthusiastic audience which gave Monteux an ovation, having given him a standing welcome at the start of the concert. He will conduct another concert Saturday, the 11th. The program began with Bach's "Organ Passacaglia and Fugue, in C Minor", a revision of program due to illness of a soloist. Beethoven's "Symphony No. 2, in D Major" was given all the light-hearted, joyful dancing of a gay performance on a village green.

Friday night's crispy air brought 5,013 for a colorfu, brilliant reading of Piston's "Symphony No. 6". Dr. Munch always leads the Boston players through rich performances of Brahms. His conducting of the "Symphony No. 4" fell into the rich pattern. The performance of Alexei Haieff's "Symphony No. 3" composed by commission of the New Haven Symphony Orhcestra and first performed in New Haven in 1961, brought the composer to the platform. Lacking in coherence, the music does not seem the type to be performed frequently.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct a Boston Pops concert Thursday evening presenting music of Strauss, Respighi, Gershwin, and selections from Bernstein's "West Side Story". Friday night will bring William Steinberg conducting a program of Beethoven and Bruckner. Sunday afternoon Rudolf Serkin will play Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto". Dr. Munch will conduct Friday night's concert with music of Debussy, Honegger, Ravel, and Saint-Saens.

S. M.

TIGHT BINDING

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
ITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
JUL 30 1962

Music Review

Perfection at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FINAL two concerts of the first Tanglewood weekend in which the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra took part were divided between the orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, and its most familiar, and, in many opinions, its most welcome guest, Pierre Monteux.

Yesterday afternoon the venerable Monteux, now past the midterm on the way to nonagenarianism, played Bach, Beethoven and Strauss with the least demonstrative gestures, and, paradoxically the most colorful and vivid results.

* * *

IN PROBABLY every man's life there are a few events, omitting those in which he is personally involved and those to do with war, which stand out in his memories as peak of unique and indelible impressions. For us, we count in such a list the Lindbergh flight and the abdication speech of the King of England.

In music, too, there are a few events, performances of such sublimity that during their execution one almost ceases to breathe and is transported to whatever regions it is to which music has the power to move us. Richard Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Richard Burgin playing the violin solos yesterday afternoon was, for us, such an experience.

* * *

IT BECOMES irrelevant at such a time to be concerned with the derivation of Strauss' ideas, or his methods, or smaller details. The forces which the performance releases become so overwhelmingly dramatic and the spirit of the hero so loftily generated that attempt at analysis is redundant.

And there could not have been a more felicitous moment for Burgin, in the last month of his long and honorable career as concertmaster, to have this opportunity to discharge the task the great Strauss score imposes for the solo violin and to do it with such consummate experience. The assignment would be almost terrifying for an ordinary violinist, but Burgin played with tonal amplitude, technical mastery and artistic comprehension. No matter what the ensuing weeks may offer, we shall be content to retain this performance as a musical noble-[illegible] valedictory oration. From all appearances every member of the great orchestra seemed to share their longtime and revered leader's glory vicariously.

Richard Burgin and Pierre Monteux

* * *

MONTEUX STARTED with Ottorino Respighi's arrangement for orchestra of Bach's organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. This becomes more majestic music in the paraphrase. Monteux envisaged the opening statement with placid latitude. The cello section sonority still maintained its dominance within Monteux's balance even after the violins enter. Respighi still utilized the organ to fortify and lend regal magnificence to the orchestral version.

The Beethoven second symphony, one of Monteux's favorites, received a brilliant rendition. The orchestra reflected the many and slightest and details of the conductor's wishes with a fidelity, a clarity, and an eloquence, any of which alone would have made the symphony absorbing, but combined, made it unreservedly gratifying.

* * *

ON SATURDAY evening, Munch's program began with the lovely Handel-Harty water music, and proceeded to the Alexei Haieff third symphony, and, after intermission, to the third Beethoven piano concerto, opus 37, C minor, in which Byron Janis, recently returned from Russian triumphs, was the soloist.

Janis met every possible test from the listener's point of view summa cum laude. From the martinetish ascending scales on which the soloist enters, through all the widely varied moods from the bold assertions to the gentle subsidiary enrichments Beethoven wrote into the firm orchestral basis which characterizes this concerto, Janis played with authority and undeviatingly fresh and resonant tone. This virture in his playing was never conspicuous than in his spacious largo.

Jumping from the C minor of the first movement Beethoven goes to a surprising but eminently satisfying E major for the color of this slow movement. After the heavily orchestrated first movement, he now allows the piano complete freedom, isolation even, limelight certainly. This sharp delineation of moods and contrasts is always an effective device and yet one so little emulated by other composers.

* * *

HAIEFF in his symphony utilizes the forces of his orchestra with a degree of contancy which deprives his music of these widely spaced colors. Furthermore, he places some of his phrases in unusual if not maladroit registers. A witty dialogue between bassoons in the first movement which moves on to the cellos was babbling and guttural and sounded a bit like someone speaking a foreign language on short wave radio. Nor was a solo for the principal viola any more propitious in a register where the jerky spasms he is given to play sound regurgitative. The rendition was clearer and more visible than it was on a performance by a visiting orchestra in Pittsfield four months ago, but the reason for its placement was not apparent. Nor was the solo for the principal viola any more propitious in a register where the jerky spasms he is given to play sound regurgitative.

Haieff, a 48-year-old naturalized American but native Siberian, was in the audience and was escorted by Munch to the stage after the performance to acknowledge the obviously genuine pleasure his symphony had afforded the large audience. The rhythmic ingenuity of the first movement catches the ear and retains one's interest above the harmonic or melodic claims to one's attention.

* * *

WHAT CAN one say about the Handel that will not be apparently searching for a way to gild the lily. There are no hidden meanings nor implied motives to music of this sort. Nor are there problems Handel seeks to solve. Munch plays it with complete understanding of its style, and the orchestra responded with tonal splendor. He asked the four French horns to stand to allow the audience to show their appreciation of the marvellously fused tone they produced.

Attendance at this concert was 9,123. Yesterday afternoon it was 6,759. This is the first year the season will extend to eight weeks of which the "big" concerts will require five weeks instead of the previous four last year, and only three in the many preceding years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
JUL 30 1962

At Tanglewood

Monteux Conducts Sunday Concert

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Special to Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The ageless Pierre Monteux made his first appearance at this season's Berkshire Festival yesterday afternoon and was greeted by rapturous applause after each of the programmed works.

Considering the fact that the Boston Symphony plays the year around and is often less than inspired in some of its Tanglewood performances, it is always amazing to me that the players respond with so much interpretative fire and elan for Monteux. Despite his 87 years, this conductor retains that precious gift—the ability to bring a masterwork to life.

* * *

THE BACH-RESPIGHI Toccata and Fugue in C minor was a stunning example of the virtuosity and tonal depth that Monteux can bring forth from this orchestra. Whether or not one is willing to accept the Respighi arrangement on its own terms, the organ-like sonorities that this conductor elicits were aurally thrilling and sonically overwhelming.

If there was one disappointment it was that Freda Gray-Masse, a mezzo-soprano from Maine, was unable to make her scheduled appearance to sing arias by Purcell and Weber.

* * *

BEETHOVEN'S Second Symphony is one of the composer's happiest creations and the only term for Monteux' reading was "expansive." It had a radiant joy and an untrammeled quality that belie description. The performance itself had the freedom that Bruno Walter used to bring to this work.

Even the attenuated discoursing of Richard Strauss' "A Hero's Life" seemed to profit from the ministrations of Monteux. The orchestral mastery of Strauss has its instrinsic appeal but even that can pall after half an hour.

* * *

MR. MONTEUX does not tamper with the romantic nature of this work, which is probably the secret of his success as a Straussian. And Richard Burgin's solos were part of this concept, even though, at times, they tended to be saccharine.

Yesterday's attendance was officially listed as 6759. On Saturday night Byron Janis, playing the Beethoven Third Piano Concerto, drew 9100 customers.

81

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 30 1962

Monteux Is Triumphant In Return to Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — Pierre Monteux made a triumphant return to Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. Orchestra and audience rose as he appeared on stage and walked briskly to the podium. In spite of his 87 years he seems stronger and more dynamic than a year ago.

Conducts Without Score

Few conductors today have had his length of service and relatively few can equal him in the number of works he has presented. For the first time Sunday afternoon, as usual, he conducted without score. Because soloist Freda Gray-Masse was unable to be present, Mr. Monteux switched his program around and it probably was a better one than originally planned.

He opened with the Bach organ Passacaglia and Fuge in C Minor as arranged for orchestra by Respighi. This is a noble arrangement of a noble work. Mr. Monteux spared no one in his presentation. The pace was brisk, the sound was solid. The orchestra was at its very best as it usually is when Mr. Monteux appears with it.

Monteux

Continued From Page 1

He followed the Passacaglia with a glowing, warm and persuasive reading of Beethoven's Second Symphony in D major. Here is a work that he must have conducted innumerable times, yet it sounded as youthful and spontaneous as if he were seeing it for the first time. Again the pace was brisk and there was less coloration throughout the movement than we had expected from the French maestro.

Beauty Brought Out

However, the beauty of the second movement, an allegro, was brought out with unerring skill. The final movement was gigantic in scope and sound. No wonder a mighty roar of applause followed this conclusion.

The final work on the program was the Strauss tone poem "Ein Heldenleben." The familiar story of the restless hero as told by Strauss is frenetic and at times almost unreal in its intensity. Mr. Monteux conducted with a sure hand and as usual without score, an achievement which those in the audience did not fail to notice.

The work is divided into a series of episodes which run from a picture of the hero himself through a vignette of his girl friend through his battles and victories and reverses.

Much of this biography is accomplished through means of subtle and not so subtle colorations. The whole picture is at once terrifying and a little sad. Finally there is a conflict with the forces of hate, but this time it is soon resolved. The protagonist has at last found peace with himself. The music at last sublimates on themes of the hero, through which the violin solo is intertwined.

Effect Electrifying

The effect of this music on the audience was nothing less than electrifying and at its close Mr. Monteux received a large and well deserved ovation. He will appear twice more, Aug. 11 and Aug. 24.

The audience Sunday afternoon numbered 6759. The audiences for the three week-end concerts totaled 24,734, a slight reduction from the same week end last season. Everyone here seems quite happy at the public response to the festival attractions thus far.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
SERVICE

UNION
30, 1962

Tanglewood Fare Led by Munch, Monteux

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

A slight tinge of autumnal coolness brought out summer furs, blankets and top coats for the opening concert of the series of five major weekend Tanglewood gales by the full 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday night.

But the warmth of Mr. Munch's conducting quickly obviated any slight physical discomfort. The cumulative effects of the glorious music reached its climax with the playing of the Fourth Symphony of Brahms under the inspirational baton of Mr. Munch.

Friday night's program opened with Debussy's "Suite Symphonique," a masterpiece of imaginative poetry by the French impressionist who was an innovator with colorful command of melodic line and exquisite blending of musical pastel pigments.

Sharp Contrast

In striking contrast was the Symphony No. 6 by the contemporary modernist, Walter Piston, a work which was unusually well received by even the Bostonians in the audience, devotees of the three "Bs" of the classical period of composition. But it was Brahms who smoothed out all the difficulties between the modernists and the classicists, sending the audience happily on its way into the night.

Saturday night's concert, also conducted by Mr. Munch, included the delightful "Water Music" by Handel, written for Engand's King George I, and first performed on a barge floating on the Thames. It lost none of its charm in its transfer to the safer haven of the Tanglewood marina.

For contrast, Mr. Munch interposed the Haieff Symphony No. 3 in three movements, commissioned by the New Haven Orchestra, and first performed last year.

Beethoven's Third Piano Concerto, masterfully played by Byron Janis, who established himself and his great art last summer with the same orchestra, was an effective musical tranquilizer. Both soloist and conductor were accorded an ovation.

Monteux Applauded

The closing concert of Series 4-C Sunday afternoon marked the return of Pierre Monteux, former conductor of the orchestra, for a triumphant guest appearance. The octogenerian led his men—and three women—in a magnificent performance of Bach's Organ Passacaglia and Fugue in C-minor followed by the spritely Symphony No. 2 by Beethoven.

The final number was "Ein Heldenleben" by Richard Strauss, purported to be his musical biography.

Mr. Monteux was accorded a tremendous vocal and manual salute following the work.

5TH. WEEK JULY 30TH – AUGUST 5TH. 83

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, August 3, at 8:00

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

DEBUSSY — Three Nocturnes

Nuages
Fêtes
Sirènes

FESTIVAL CHORUS prepared by LORNA COOKE DEVARON

HONEGGER — Symphony No. 5

I. Grave
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro marcato

Intermission

SAINT-SAËNS — Violoncello Concerto No. 1, in A minor, Op. 33

Allegro non troppo—Allegretto con moto—Come prima (Played without pause)

Soloist: SAMUEL MAYES

RAVEL — *La Valse, Choreographic Poem

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, August 4, at 8:00

WILLIAM STEINBERG, Conductor

BEETHOVEN — *Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di menuetto
IV. Allegro vivace

Intermission

BRUCKNER — Symphony No. 8 in C minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Scherzo
III. Adagio
IV. Feierlich (nicht schnell)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, August 5, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BRAHMS — Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a

MARTINU — "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6)

I. Lento; Allegro; Lento
II. Allegro
III. Lento; Allegro

Intermission

BEETHOVEN — Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 73

I. Allegro
II. Adagio un poco mosso
III. Rondo: Allegro ma non tanto

Soloist: RUDOLF SERKIN

Mr. SERKIN plays the Steinway Piano

84

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,300

JUL 2 1 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

JUL 1 4 1962

HIGHLIGHT:

Tanglewood

Left to Right: Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Rudolf Serkin, world-famous pianist.

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will sponsor its Sixth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion on August 5. The all-inclusive ticket includes round trip transportation, a picnic lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserved seat inside the Music Shed for the matinee concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch, who is conducting most of the Tanglewood performances during his last season as music director of the Bostonians, will be on the podium. The soloist will be the world-famous pianist, Rudolf Serkin, who will play Beethoven's Concerto No. 5 in E flat (the "Emperor"). The program will open with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn and will also include Bohuslav Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6), which was commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and which is dedicated to Dr. Munch.

The Academy's "Sunday at Tanglewood", the biggest musical journey originating within the city, has been enjoyed by more than 1,200 residents of the New York area during the past five seasons. The day's cost is only $12.. Academy of Music members for the 1962-63 season are entitled to a reduction of $1. making the cost $11.

Tuesday, July 31, at 5 p.m., is the reservation deadline at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Membership Office, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 17. Information and further details may be obtained by telephoning STerling 3-6700.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 3 1962

Mitchell

THE LARGEST CROWD SINCE 1958 turned out for the annual program by the Boston Pops last night at Tanglewood. A total of 12,345 persons, 2,000 more than last year, attended event for benefit of Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school of music at Tanglewood. Sum of $34,700 (up $10,000) was realized.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 40,130

JUL 1 2 1962

Sunday At Tanglewood

L. to R.: Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Rudolf Serkin, world-famous pianist, discuss a question of interpretation of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto which Serkin will play at Tanglewood on Sunday, August 5. This concert has been chosen for the sixth annual excursion "Sunday at Tanglewood" spontored by the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350

JUL 1962

RUDOLPH SERKIN will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5, with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5, at 2:30 o'clock.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 162,363

JUL 31 1962

At Tanglewood

RUDOLF SERKIN will be soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 Sunday afternoon at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439

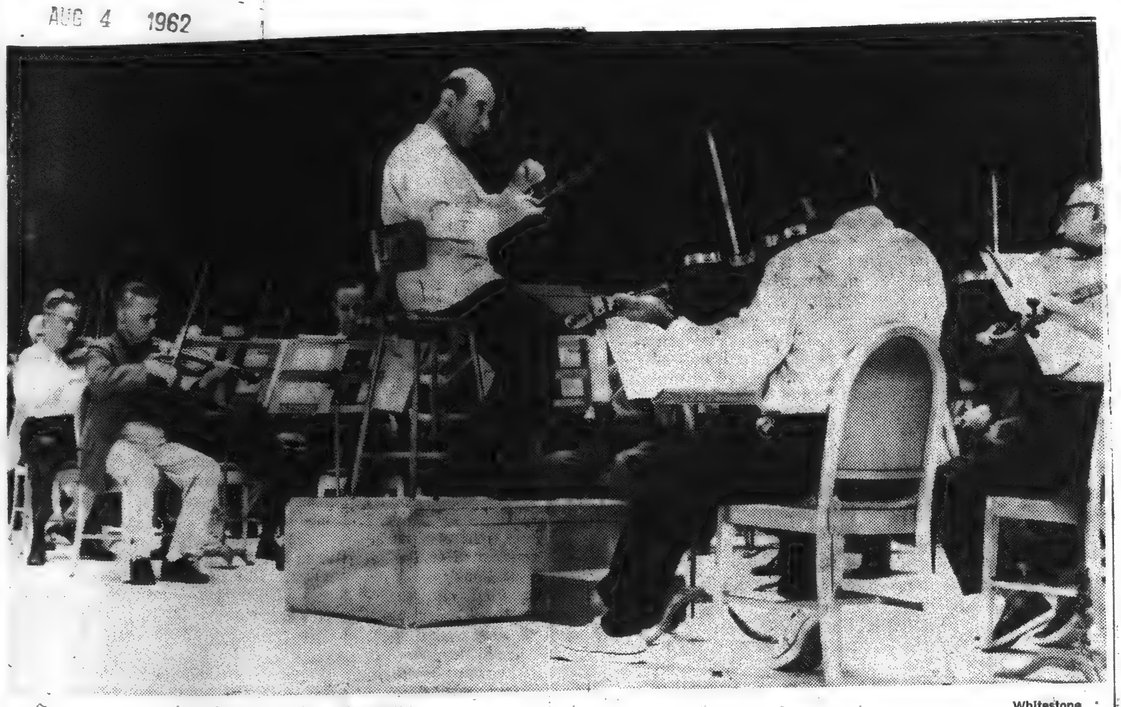
JUL 29 1962

SAMUEL MAYES, first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be soloist at the Berkshire Festival concert in Lenox on Friday evening at the Music Shell, Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 4 1962



Whitestone

CONDUCTOR TONIGHT at Tanglewood for first time will be William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, who rehearses the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the concert in Music Shed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 101,245

JUL 30 1962

SOLOIST FRIDAY

SAMUEL MAYES

Samuel Mayes, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal cellist, will appear as soloist at the Berkshire Festival concert on Friday night at 8 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Mr. Mayes, with Charles Munch and the orchestra, will play the Cello Concerto by Saint-Saens.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JUL 25 1962

Major Concerts Open Friday In Music Shed at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — The major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open this weekend in the Music Shed and continue for the next five weeks.

The Boston Arts Quartet will be heard tonight at 8 in the theater concert hall at the regular Wednesday night chamber music concert, sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation. The quartet is made up of Joseph Silverstein and Harry Ellis Dickson, violins, Eugen Lehner, viola, and Richard Kapuscinski, cello. They will perform Anton Webern's Five Movements; the Quartet, by Berger; and Schoenberg's Quartet No. 2.

Berkshire Nights

For Friday night's concert, the first Berkshire Nights event of the season, Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform the following program in the Music Shed: "Printemps," suite symphonique by Debussy; Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 and Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

Byron Janis will be the soloist at Saturday night's concert, performing Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor with the BSO, Dr. Munch conducting. Also to be heard that evening will be Handel's Suite for Orchestra from "The Water Music," arranged by St. Hamilton Harty, and Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff. The Saturday evening performance will be preceded by an open rehearsal at 10 a.m. in the Music Shed for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Pierre Monteux will make his first appearance of the 1962 Berkshire Festival season on Sunday afternoon at 2:30, when he will conduct the orchestra. Freda Gray-Masse, who was scheduled to be the soloist with Mr. Monteux and the BSO at Sunday's concert, today notified BSO officials that she will be unable to appear. The program is being rearranged by Mr. Monteux.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185

AUG 6 1962

Weekend Concerts Attract 28,199

A total of 11,242 persons enjoyed the pleasant weather and good music at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. This brought the total attendance for the weekend to 28,199.

Audiences for the three concerts on the same weekend last year totaled 26,914, with 8,747 at the Sunday concert.

The audience Sunday was one of the largest of this season.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
CAIRO HERALD
Thursday, August 2, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
POUGHKEEPSIE JOURNAL
Sunday, July 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, July 29, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, July 28, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SARATOGA SARATOGIAN
Tuesday, July 31, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Saturday, July 28, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY TIMES RECORD
Saturday, August 4, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
AMSTERDAM RECORDER
Saturday, August 4, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, August 4, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK POST
Thursday, August 2, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Wednesday, August 1, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ATHENS HERALD
Thursday, August 2, 1962

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GREENVILLE LOCAL
Thursday, August 1, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,917
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826
JUL 25 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,659
JUL 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 21,457
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,580
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 4,771
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
JUL 31 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
NORTH HAVEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 1,500
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,675
JUL 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,350
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,384
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
JUL 30 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 5,050
AUG 4 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,047
AUG 2 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 155,682
JUL 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,439
JUL 29 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post
WALLINGFORD, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,134
JUL 26 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,063
JUL 28 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,158
JUL 28 1962

TROY, N.Y.
RECORD
D 7,029
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
AUG 4 1962

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,450
JUL 31 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,283 S. 302,060
JUL 29 1962

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 295,024 SAT. 293,118
JUL 28 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
AUG 4 1962

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717
AUG 4 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
AUG 2 1962

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370
AUG 4 1962

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522
JUL 31 1962

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,006,983 S. 3,147,219
JUL 29 1962

STEINBERG TO CONDUCT NEXT WEEK

Will Make 1st Appearance as Symphony Leader at Tanglewood

LENOX — William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, will be a guest conductor for the first time at Tanglewood.

Rudolf Serkin

At the invitation of Charles Munch, Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Aug. 4 at 8.

Rudolf Serkin and Samuel Mayes will be soloists with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony in this busy week of the Berkshire Festival. Arthur Fiedler returns to Tanglewood for his annual appearance with the Boston Pops Orchestra on Thursday.

For the Aug. 3 concert Charles Munch has invited Samuel Mayes, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal cellist, to be soloist in a performance of Saint Saens' violoncello concerto No. 1 in A minor, Op. 33.

Bruckner Scheduled

This concert will open with three nocturnes by Debussy with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron. The remainder of the program includes the Symphony No. 5 by Honegger and Ravel's "La Valse," choreographic poem.

An open rehearsal for the benefit of the Boston Symphony's pension fund will be Aug. 4 at 10. William Steinberg will conduct the Berkshire Festival concert that evening. His program with the Boston Symphony will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 in C minor by Bruckner.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Aug. 5 at 2.30 in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor). Also to be heard on this program will be "Variations on a Theme" by Haydn, Op. 5a by Brahms, and "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) by Martinu.

Contemporary Program

The Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago, Paul Fromm, president, will sponsor Wednesday evening's chamber music concert at 8 in the Theater. Dedicated to the furtherance of contemporary music, the Fromm Music Foundation program at Tanglewood was begun in 1956.

The New York Chamber Soloists and Paul Jacobs, piano, will provide the music for Wednesday's concert of works by Elliott Carter, Milton Babbitt, Gunther Schuller, Karl Heinz Stockhousen and Mel Powell.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will present their annual Benefit Boston Pops at Tanglewood concert for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center Thursday at 8.

Earl Wild

The concert will open with the Pops Orchestra's famous rendition of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," and will feature Earl Wild as soloist in performance of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F for piano and orchestra.

The concert will also include the suite from "El Cid" by Massenet, Josef Strauss' "Mein Lebenslauf ist Lieb' und Lust," waltzes, the "Pines of Rome" by Respighi and Selections from "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein.

For this program the Tanglewood grounds will be opened at 6, and patrons are invited to bring picnic suppers or purchase box suppers at the Tanglewood cafeteria.

Chamber Music

Four events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center beginning with the Berkshire Musie Center Orchestra concert Tuesday at 8.

Other events available to the Friends are chamber music performed by the students at 4 on Thursday and the regular Aspects of Music seminar Friday at 3.15 featuring a lecture by Iain Hamilton, composer in residence at the Berkshire Music Center this summer. Hamilton's topic will be "A Personal View of the Materials of Music."

On Aug. 5 at 10 a. m., Friends are invited to a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717
AUG 11 1962

Tanglewood Topics

By Sanford R. Sistare

Richard Librizzi

SEVERAL DAYS AGO I sauntered into the office of Edie Bossler, registrar of the Berkshire Music Center, to chat with her about the students at the Music Center this year. Edie knows more stories about students past and present than anyone else at Tanglewood. Our conversation was mainly concerned with how promising young musicians happen to come to study at the Center. Edie pointed out that foreign tours by the Boston Symphony have had a pronounced effect on the makeup of the Center's student body. For example, during the latter part of the spring of 1960, the orchestra made an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand. As a result of this particular tour, the Australian Broadcasting Commission established a scholarship for the Music Center at Tanglewood. The scholarship is held this season by Brian Coogan, a young trumpeter, who was encouraged to come here by Roger Voisin, BSO first trumpeter. Coogan played in the brass section that performed on the "Today" show last month.

* * *

THE CONCERTS in Japan are directly responsible for eight students from that country coming to Tanglewood this summer. Over the past two years this group of eight has worked very hard to obtain the money necessary for transportation and living expenses. Satoko Takemae, an attractive young lady, is a conductor. For her, the risk of coming was great. She knew she would have to take her chances with all of the student conductors in competition during the first week of the session. Only three student conductors are selected. It is a long way from Japan to Tanglewood, but a longer way should you not achieve your goal. Miss Takemae did. She is one of this year's trio of active conductors, and, in my memory, the only woman to be so successful in her first summer at Tanglewood.

Other students have reached Tanglewood in other ways. Another of the three conductors, Louis Forner, who has conducted in Europe with distinction, arrived at Tanglewood through the interest of Aaron Copland, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, and Carlos Chavez, who was at one time a composer in residence here. Mr. Forner has also studied for three summers with Pierre Monteux.

Continued on next page

Richard Librizzi

This fall he will become conductor and chorus master for the State Theatre in Rendsburg, Germany.

* * *

NONMUSICAL EVENTS brought us a student from Augusta, Ga. When the Garden Clubs of America had their annual meeting in the Tanglewood Theatre at the start of the season, Mary Darcy Thomas accompanied her mother to the meetings and became so interested in the musical activities available here that she stayed on as a member of the Department of Listening and Analysis.

Alumni, as with any institution, play an important role in fostering its growth. Ten years ago John Kim was a conducting student with Charles Munch and Leonard Bernstein. He is presently conductor of the Seoul (Korea) Philharmonic. Won-Mo Kim, his son, is now concertmaster of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. Those who have attended concerts of the student orchestra in recent years may remember Zubin Mehta, a young Indian conductor. Mehta urged Gunther Theuring to make every effort to spend a summer at the Berkshire Music Center. A native of Vienna, Theuring studied at the Academy of Music there, but more recently has conducted at the Gesellschaft der Muikfreunde, where Herbert von Karajan is music director.

* * *

A LARGE contingent of students comes from France. Here is the obvious influence of Charles Munch. The French students have studied together for some years, and it has long been their plan to come to Tanglewood as a group. Their musical credentials are brilliant, to say the least. Serge Fournier was with us last year and won the Koussevitzky prize. In the fall he will become one of the assistant conductors of the New York Philharmonic. Pierre Hetu was the 1961 winner of the International Competition for Young Conductors at the Besancon Festival. Jacques Sudrat, cellist; Marcelle Verignon, cellist; Madeleine Simoni, pianist; and Martine Joste, pianist, are all first-prize winners at the Paris Conservatory.

It might be added that Edie's interest in the students is by no means confined to those traveling from halfway around the globe. She noted that for the first time in her recollection the school is being attended by a brother and sister — Dennis Kain, a tympanist, and Sheila Kain, a singer. They come from East Aurora, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1962

Whitestone

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, escorts Rudolf Serkin back to center of the stage in the Music Shed at Sunday afternoon's concert to acknowledge the ovation from a crowd of 11,242. Mr. Serkin was piano soloist with BSO in a performance of Beethoven's Concerto Pianoforte, No. 5. Weekend attendance was 28,199, 2000 more than year ρ. The attendance was 28,199, 2,000 more than last year.

Knicke, Locke Nels Cilley 8/10/62

Editorials

Dr. Munch's Finale

On the afternoon of August 26 at Tanglewood, Dr. Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the magnificent Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. Then he will put his baton down—his career as musical director of the orchestra at an end.

It has been a good career. Perhaps its brightest moments have been neither in Tanglewood nor even in Boston, but in such far away places as Moscow and Leningrad and Tokyo. For history placed Dr. Munch in direction of the orchestra in an era of cultural exchanges between nations. The impact of the orchestra abroad was tremendous. Its appearance was a credit to America, and Dr. Munch (citizen of France but adopted citizen of the United States) shares hugely in that credit.

On the domestic scene he has had his critics. Some have complained that the programming has been staid and lacking in adventure. Others have sought to make the point that he failed to make sufficiently festive the Berkshire Music Festival that is Tanglewood's other name.

At Tanglewood history was not quite so kind to Dr. Munch as it was in his adventures abroad with the orchestra. There, more than anywhere else, he was in the shadow of the late Serge Koussevitzy. It was Dr. Koussevitzy who had brought Tanglewood to fruition, who had given it so much of his heart and his intellect that it will forever remain his monument.

So let the critics be forgot. Let us remember the music that Dr. Munch brought to fulfillment there in that great shed at Tanglewood. Let us remember the Berlioz program of a few years ago and the great Requiem, let us remember the delicate moments, the gay moods, the marches, the dances that were so often perfection under Dr. Munch's baton. Let us acknowledge all the great artists attracted to Tanglewood by that same musical director, let us remember all the new music that we heard and remember, too, the more familiar favorites.

In all his years with the Boston Symphony Dr. Munch has never sought the spotlight. He has been retiring and reticent. So when on that coming Sunday afternoon the orchestra sounds the last notes of the Ninth, it would not be unlike Dr. Munch to almost steal away.

But as he steals away, it will not be only the applause of those there present that follows him. He will be carrying with him the heartfelt good wishes, the thanks and the respect of the thousands who have heard his music at Tanglewood, in Boston and in far away places.

88 - 5TH WEEK REVIEWS.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440

JUL 28 1962

Serkin to Solo with Boston Symphony

RUDOLF Serkin on Aug. 5 and Samuel Mayes on Aug. 3 will be soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Arthur Fiedler will return Aug. 2 with the Boston Pops for their annual Tanglewood appearance. And on Aug. 4 William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony, at Charles Munch's invitation will appear for the first time as a guest conductor at Tanglewood.

Mr. Serkin will be soloist a week from tomorrow afternoon in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor). The program will include Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56, by Brahms, and Fantasies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6) by Martinu.

Due to the illness of soloist Freda Gray-Masse, Pierre Monteux, who will conduct the Boston Symphony tomorrow afternoon, has changed the program to include the Bach - Respighi Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, and the Richard Strauss tone poem "Ein Heldenleben."

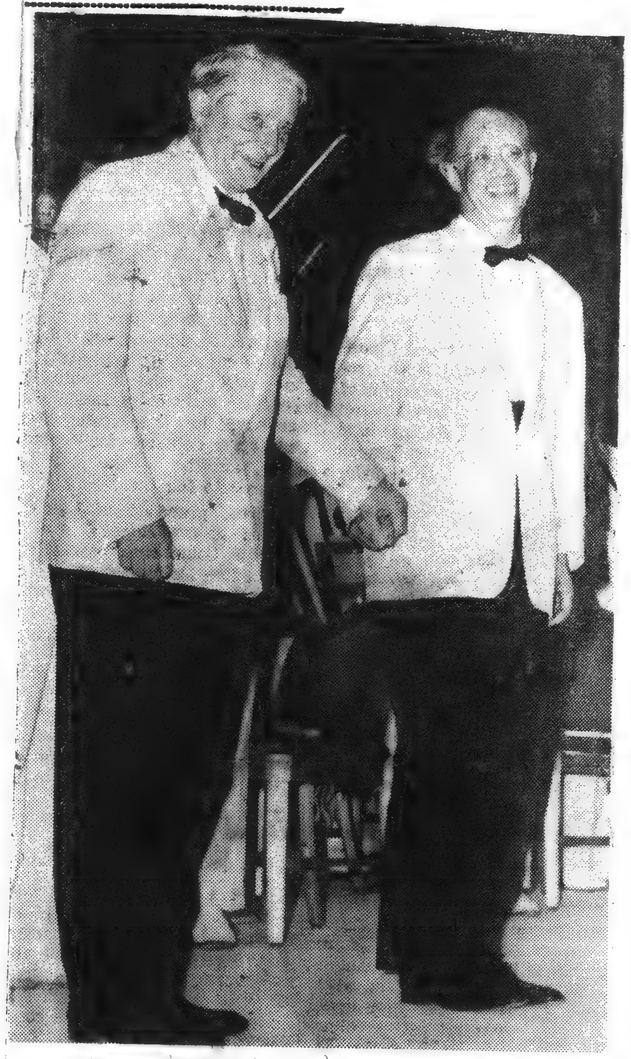
Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, will be soloist Aug. 3 in Saint Saens' Violincello Concerto No. 1 in A minor, Op. 33. The concert also will include Three Nocturnes by Debussy with the Festival Chorus, Honegger's Symphony No. 5 and Ravel's choreographic poem La Valse.

RUDOLF SERKIN, pianist and director of Marlboro, Vt., Festival of Music, rehearses with conductor Charles Munch for Tanglewood performance Aug. 4 with Boston Symphony.

Mr. Steinberg next Saturday evening will conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 in C minor. An open rehearsal will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. for the benefit of the orchestra's pension program.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
D. 28,717

AUG 7 1962



Whitestone

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, escorts Rudolf Serkin back to center of the stage in the Music Shed at Sunday afternoon's concert to acknowledge the ovation from a crowd of 11,242. Mr. Serkin was piano soloist with BSO in a performance of Beethoven's Concerto Pianoforte, No. 5. Weekend attendance was 28,199, 2000 more than year o. The attendance was 28,199, 2,000 more than last year.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 45,522

AUG 6 1962

Boston Symphony 'Educational'

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

The Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, whether under Charles Munch ro guest composers, is an educational institution — not only for the students at the Berkshire Music Center but for its wonderful audiences, including general public, students of music and critics who sometimes get the idea that they know a bit about the subject.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra and Dr. Munch in particular have a way of putting us in our proper humble places with their superb interpretations of music. We often find that music we thought we knew is much different, much more vivid, more virile and that music that we've never met before becomes an experience in listening that gives a bit of comprehension, at least.

Last Friday evening we heard the opening concert of the fifth week of the festival, which this year runs through Aug. 26, in a program of music by French composers featuring the Honegger "Symphony number 5" and cellist Samuel Mayes in the Saint-Saens "Violoncello Concerto number 1 in A minor, opus 33."

The program opened with the Debussy "Three Nocturnes" and closed with the Ravel "La Valse, Choreographic Poem."

* * *

WE ATTENDED primarily to hear the Honegger smyphony, which was completed in December, 1950, in Paris and written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in memory of Natalie Koussevitzky.

The Honegger work shows solid musicianship and workmanship throughout. Its undefinable melodies are presented with a full-throated orchestration. The opening "Grave" is definitely somber in color. An opening descending pattern of melody is followed by an ascending pattern. In the background a lone woodwind voice repeats an agonized phrase while the preponderance of tone comes from the strings. The "Allegretto" movement is more capricious with excitement running high. The closing "Allegro marcato" is a lot faster and a lot louder. A brass ostinato figure is followed by a horn figure and frenzy from the fiddles before a final return to the slow and somber theme of the opening movement.

* * *

HONEGGER has subtitled the work ("di tre re") or the three D's to indicate, in the composer's words, "That the note re (D) occurs three times to end each of the three movements in a pizzicato by the basses and a stroke by the timpanist, who has no other notes to play but these three."

An audience of 5,205 cheered and applauded the director for four bows with the orchestra at the close of the Honegger work.

The Saint-Saens cello concerto is music of another era with its bravura writing for the solo instrument and elegant interludes for orchestra. Mayes, who has been principal cello for the Boston Symphony since 1948, has a truly luscious tone, an astounding technique and a most fluent bow. The performance of the three-movement work, which is played without pause, was warmly received with five recalls for the soloist, conductor and orchestra.

* * *

RAVEL'S "La Valse, Choreographic Poem," with its magnificent orchestration was presented with the full glory of the orchestra under Dr. Munch's baton.

In the Debussy "Three Nocturnes" the orchestra was assisted by the Festival Chorus prepared by Lorna Cooke DeVaron. Debussy, in his own particular idiom, offers a certain mysticism that is completely undefinable. In the final "Sirenes," the only movement in which the chorus participates, the voices are used as an adjunct of the orchestra, almost as another instrument.

* * *

THE FRIDAY evening programs of the Boston Symphony do not draw the large crowds of the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon programs — perhaps one of the reasons we enjoy them so much.

Speaking of crowds, a total of 12,500 persons attended the Boston Pops Orchestra program under Arthur Fiedler on Thursday night. Presented as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center it made $37,700 for the summer school of music which the orchestra conducts at its summer home near Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 4 1962

Music Review

All-French Program at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

FOR THE FIRST concert of the fifth week of the Berkshire Festival Charles Munch chose a completely French program, one of composers who were all his contemporaries or, at least, overlapped his career.

He captured the moods of the Debussy nocturnes with remarkable plasticity. They are not nocturnes in the Chopin sense but rather that of Whistler, certainly in the "Nuages" which Munch played, as we think Debussy intended, deliberatively colorless, scarcely ever overstepping limits of restraint which become cumulatively compelling in their impact.

By the same token the "Fetes" were in the more vivid tones of Renoir and the "Sirenes" in that of Turner. The Boston Symphony Orchestra played all three for Munch with nuances from their opulent pallette, reflecting Debussy's affinity of feeling with painting of the impressionist school.

* * *

IN THE "SIRENES" the Festival chorus sang with fidelity the lines without words Debussy indicated. The voices are used like instruments and Munch graciously called to the platform at the completion of the performance, the lady who had drilled the singers so ably, Lorna Cooke DeVaron. He also called Louis Speyer to the front for his beautiful English horn solos in the "Nuages" where, too, solo principal Joseph de Pasquale acquitted himself in his short solo with beautiful tone.

Arthur Honegger completed his fifth symphony three years after his residence in Lenox in 1947 where he had been a guest on the composition faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. It was written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to Natalia Koussevitzky. It's thick polytonality is unrelieved for long stretches and although the harmonic structure and modal steps are not problems for our ears the writing skill overshadows the inspiration. Nor did the orchestral intonation in the slow interlude of the scherzo add to the pleasure of the performance.

* * *

SAMUEL MAYES was brilliant in the violoncello concerto in A minor of Saint-Saens. He played with supreme facility and nonchalant security and his cello sang with powerful vibrancy in all registers. Munch gave him excellent cooperation and the cello emerged in the most agitated episodes and also in the most serene moments with effortless mastery and impeccable sonority. Appreciation at Tanglewood can burst out at times without discrimination but this was a genuinely deserved triumph for Mayes and the audience was instantly eager to express its enthusiasm.

The Ravel "La Valse" was given a deliriously fascinating playing by the virtuoso Bostonians. Ravel demands a huge orchestra, and the harps are used with telling effect. He designates a waltz in the Viennese manner but Munch infused a vertiginous folly into the drive with which he urged his musicians on, impelling even stausstrophobians toward a ballroom floor.

An audience of 5,205 found that the umbrellas and raincoats with which they had prepared themselves on setting out for the concert grounds did not prove necessary for the skies were clear and star-studded at departure time.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • Richmond

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

AUG 4 1962

Music:

RAYMOND MORI
Telgram Music Cri

LENOX — Charles Mun craft as conductor of Symphony Orchestra w strated last night at th concert of the Berks al's fifth weekend.

The all - French ened with Debussy's t nes, "Clouds," "Festiv irens." Forty-five wome tival chorus participate ter. They had been Lorna Cooke de Varo w England Conservato The orchestra also negger's Fifth Symp vel's choreographic lse." Samuel Mayes with the orchestra st in Saint-Saen's Con n A Minor, Opus 33.

There was an audience

No Quibbling

All of this music w ring the last 50 year sents the romantic, ir tic and modern schoo Although Munch som mes a storm center rpretations of all per as no quibbling with last night's music.

This was a Munch the house" as Te as to Serge Koussevit Sounds gleamed in escriptive nocturnal ere were plush, satin eemingly of a most p re to the conductor rchestra of Boston inesse could paint t such intangibility escence.

Individual Str

One could not help cious of individual br a sweeping string p inds that discoursed But Munch made a b t these effects.

"Festivals" vibrated lashes of light. The ection not only pas he festive scene but f it. Most challengi ens," wit hits word

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
AUG 1 1962

Music: Charles Munch At Tanglewood

RAYMOND MORIN
Telgram Music Critic

LENOX — Charles Munch's finesse craft as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was demonstrated last night at the opening concert of the Berkshire festival's fifth weekend.

The all - French program opened with Debussy's three nocturnes: "Clouds," "Festivals" and "Sirens." Forty-five women of the festival chorus participated in the latter. They had been prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon of the New England Conservatory faculty. The orchestra also performed Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse." Samuel Mayes, first cellist with the orchestra, was soloist in Saint-Saen's Concerto No. 1 in A Minor, Opus 33.

There was an audience of 5,205.

No Quibbling

All of this music was written during the last 90 years. It represents the romantic, impressionistic and modern schools in France. Although Munch sometimes becomes a storm center for his interpretations of all periods, there was no quibbling with his concepts of last night's music.

This was a Munch "specialty of the house" as Tchailkovisky was to Serge Koussevitzky.

Sounds gleamed in Debussy's descriptive nocturnal "Clouds." There were plush, satiny sounds, seemingly of a most personal nature to the conductor. Only an orchestra of Boston Symphony finesse could paint tonal colors of such intangibility and effervescence.

Individual Strokes

One could not help being conscious of individual brush strokes in sweeping string phrases, and winds that discoursed with them. But Munch made a broad canvas of these effects.

"Festivals" vibrated with sudden flashes of light. The processional section not only passed through the festive scene but became part of it. Most challenging was "Sirens," wit hits wordless song, in which voices are used purely for their tonal coloration. In no sense do they contribute anything of a narrative nature.

There was an untarnished quality in the women's voices, perfectly adjusted to the instrumental idiom. Munch brought Mrs. De Varon forward to share the applause, also Louis Speyer for his exquisitely - played English horn solo.

Superior Cellist

Mayes is a superior cellist in every sense. He displayed a different brand of authority last night compared to his work as head of the orchestra's cello section.

The Saint - Saens' Concerto, played as three sections without pause, is an out-and-out war-horse, earmarked only for the soloist with a big technique, sense of poetry and ample nerve. Nothing for the solo instrument lies behind the camouflage of orchestral sound.

Mayes played with sensitivity of tone, a firm bow and fluent technique. Every note was in its place. The restlessness of the opening movement was encompassed without hysteria, which it well might. Munch and the orchestra matched the soloist's style, phrasing and emotional objectives with fine loyalty.

Freedom To Personalize

Best of all, they allowed Mayes freedom to personalize the rapidly moving phrases without subjecting him to metronomic kind of discipline. The cadenza had temperament, fire, and an excellent sense of proportion between virtuosity and musicianship.

The Honegger Symphony is one of the test-worthy works of the 20th Century. Although separated from the Debussy by only 5% year's it speaks a new language. Munch discarded the satiny sounds and substituted strong fibers.

Ths opening movement opened with large harmonies, flavored with a trace of dissonance. Melody pursued a sub-range course leading to a big scene, lead by crackling brasses. Bountiful solos in woodwinds generally lessened the generally chordal effect of the entire movement.

Slight Unsteadiness

A slight unsteadiness was detected in the second movement, a scherzo in style. It boiled over spasmodically in sharply pointed rhythms. Under less astute direction, it is likely that portions would be destitute of interest.

There was rarely a letdown of rhythmic aliveness, some of it similar to a nervous Prokofieff dance. The finale got off to a crackling start, certainly typical of the composer who also wrote "Pacific 231." The movement is a flood of notes, harnessed to semi-harsh melodies, again centered in low range instruments.

Surprisingly, the symphony received a mildly enthusiastic reception.

Tonight marks the Tanglewood debut of William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony. He will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F. Major, Opus 93, and Anton Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 in C Minor.

glewood

nchalant ecurity and his ng with powerful vibranll registers. Munch gave ellent cooperation and emerged in the most episodes and also in scene moments with mastery and impecnority. Appreciation at ood can burst out at ithout discrimination but as a genuinely deserved for Mayes and the audias instantly eager to exits enthusiasm.

Ravel "La Valse" was deliriously fascinating by the virtuoso Bos- Ravel demands a huge a, and the harps are ith 'telling' effect. He tés à waltz in the Vienanner but Munch in- vertiginous folly into e with which he larged icians on, impelling even ophobians toward a ballfloor.

dience of 5,205 found that rbrellas" and raincoats hich they had prepared ves on setting out for the grounds did not prove ry for, the skies were nd star-studded at detime.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,703
AUG 6 1962

Music: Serkin Is Soloist At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The fifth weekend of concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival, the most spectacular thus far, ended yesterday afternoon with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a classic-romantic modern program of sure-fire music.

An audience of 11,242 brought the weekend total to a record 28,199. This included the Boston Pops concert Thursday night and Saturday morning's open rehearsal for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Yesterday's program: Brahams' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Opus 56; Bohuslav Martinu's Symphony No. 6, "Fantaisies Symphoniques;" Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat major, Opus 73, "Emperor," with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

Anniversary Commission

Munch commissioned the Czech Martinu to compose the Sixth Symphony in celebration of the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary, in 1956. Martinu was naturally cognizant of the historic occasion, but he admittedly tailored the work to "Munch's spontaneous approach, where music takes shape in a free way, flowing and freely following its movements."

The result is a stunning piece of music, one of the most significant of the 20th century. The three movements combine irrepressible power with poetic stretches. It also reflects and fully utilizes the tremendous progress of the virtuoso orchestra.

This work demand to be superlatively well played. Anything less would be a succession of booby traps.

Munch's obvious affinity and love for this score, coupled with an orchestra of seemingly unlimited technique, made this a memorable musical experience. The two most graphic impressions were the marvelous continuity with which Munch unraveled page after page and the composer's amazing ability to achieve new sound idioms.

Objective Musical Purpose

After all, it takes more than scientific knowledge of instruments to make a symphony orchestra sound like an army of angry insects, electric storm and boiling lava pit, yet retain objectivity of musical purpose.

Theatrical as the Martinu symphony may have been, it remained for Serkin to play-act with all manner of extracurricular activity. There always is the possibility that such mannerisms are instinctive, subconscious, or an essential part of his metier. The man is madness to watch and heaven to hear.

No one can possibly dismiss the validity of his interpretations, especially of Brahms and Beethoven. The question is whether clawing hands during breaks of the solo part, out-of-this-world facial expressions and hip-dances to orchestral interludes went out of style at the beginning of this century.

Furthermore, it doesn't require the pianist to bounce six inches off a piano stool to achieve a fortissimo E flat major chord with a concert grand.

Next Weekend

Speaking purely of the musical results, orchestra and pianist were as one in giving a comprehensive, exhilirating performance of the "Emperor." Dynamics ranged from almost boisterous fortes from all forces to lace-like runs on the piano.

The audience didn't allow what it saw to deprive the soloist of an acclamation.

Munch conducted a structurally clear, sensitive performance of the Haydn-Brahms Variations. The only debatable point was the long pause between variations. At one point the audience was misled into

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 4 1962

Boston Cellist Brilliant at Tanglewood Shed

By DON O. NOEL JR.

Samuel Mayes, first-chair cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was soloist Friday night in a brilliant performance of Saint-Saens' Violoncello Concerto No. 1 in A Minor in the Tanglewood Music Shed in Lenox, Mass.

Conductor Charles Munch, nearing the end of his final season at the podium of the Boston, lavished the magnificent resources of the orchestra on an all-French program last night. Besides the Saint-Saens, it included:

Debussy, "Three Nocturnes."

Honegger, Symphony No. 5.

Ravel, "La Valse."

Mr. Mayes' performance is typical of the Boston — one suspects that more often than not they could draw their soloists out of the ranks.

* * *

AT ANY RATE, he performed the intricate and demanding concerto with apparent ease and magical dexterity, and won from his cello a lightness of touch and a beautifully filigreed vibrato, worthy of a smaller instrument.

The rest of the program was no less exciting. One wonders each time, while driving the two hours to Tanglewood, if it's worth it, but the actual experience of hearing the huge orchestra on so live a stage always removes any doubts.

* * *

A LIVE STAGE it undoubtedly is. In the opening movement of the Debussy, for instance, there is a brief viola solo, played against a background of the rest of the string section in half-voice. At Tanglewood, with the marvelous acoustic "reflectors" of the shed, that brief solo stood out like a silver thread.

The Honegger symphony was well-placed in last night's repertoire. Honegger was one of "les Six" of contemporary French music, and his final symphony might have been too raucous next to a Beethoven selection. Following the "Nocturnes," however, one felt it a natural progression from the release of orchestra color which Debussy achieved.

Mr. Munch's reading of 20th Century French composers strikes one being deliberately a little blurred, underscoring the impressionistic intent, and he clearly enjoys loosing the great shimmering power of his orchestra.

That should be enough to describe the finol work of the evening, "La Valse." It was richly colored, full-throated, and in the finale, overpowering.

TAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
OMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, August 6, 1962

Soloists Highlight Tanglewood Fare

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

The fifth in a series of eight weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood opened auspiciously, Friday night, under the direction of Charles Munch. It was a particularly felicitious program with the French conductor indulging in a musical old home week, with such Gallic titans represented as Debussy, Honneger, Saint-Saens and Ravel. There was an inner glow to the interpretations of Mr. Munch.

Three Nocturnes by Debussy was program music in its purest form, the final movement being enhanced by the chorus of sirens with the Berkshire Festival Chorus. As a change of pace, Dr. Munch interjected the Symphony No. 5 of Arthur Honnegger, dedicated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Younger Casals

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the orchestra, and a recent soloist with the Albany Symphony Orchestra, presented a masterful performance of the Concerto No. 1 by Saint-Saens. Mr. Mayes handles his instrument with the same follow through as that of Sammy Snead in another branch of the fine arts. Here is a young artist who has at his disposal all the prerequisites of aristocracy in his field. Reminiscent of a younger Casals. Mr. Mayes received one of the most enthusiastic receptions of any guest artist this season.

The final work of the evening was "La Valse" by Maurice Ravel in which the composer out-Straussed Johann. Here was form, melodic invention and ravishing harmonic devices, but above all, poetic imagination.

Saturday night's program was devoted to the Eighth Symphony of Beethoven, composed just 150 years ago, and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner. William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, occupied the podiom and offered a scholarly, authorative quality to his guest conductorship.

Serkin Plays

Dr. Munch returned to the platform for the Sunday afternoon concert which he opened with the playing of Brahm's "Variations on a Theme by Haydn," followed by the contemporary composer, Martinu's Symphony, No. 6, a contrast between the music of Brahms and Beethoven, the latter, represented by the piano concerto, No. 5 ("Emperor") with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

Mr. Serkin wears the purple of royalty modestly and becomingly. Technically extraordinary, yet never merely showy, always careful and crystalline. His tone was consistently beautiful, especially in the lyrical passages. His ovation was long and "electrified."

TIGHT BINDING

90

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 9 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — by K. P. M.

For the many admirers of French music, Friday evening's concert at Tanglewood was an infinite delight. To open the fifth weekend of this summer's Berkshire Festival, Charles Munch chose a program of works by Debussy, Honegger, Saint-Saens, and Ravel.

Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Nuages, Fêtes, Sirènes) and Honegger's Symphony #5 excellently balanced the first half of the concert. The combination of tranquillity and surging power that Debussy so frequently employed enabled the Festival Chorus to present itself at its best, while Ralph Gomberg's oboe playing frequently rose from the orchestra with exceptional beauty. The sharply contrasting dissonance of the Honegger (which was written in 1950) provided a much more serious and moody note, climaxed by the energetically driving and powerful third movement.

The more classically rooted Saint-Saens Concerto for Violoncello (No. 1 in A minor) opened the second half of the program. Freed from his customary role as first cellist of the Symphony, Samuel Mayes fully displayed his superb technical capabilities in this beautiful work. La Valse by Ravel, although it may have been better suited for the previous evening's Boston Pops program, concluded the concert in a light vein.

Saturday — by J. G. B.

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, conducted the Saturday concert, which was comprised of the eighth symphonies of Beethoven and Bruckner. So far as I know, this was the first time Bruckner has been played at Tanglewood: one can only wonder why. Judging by the shouts and applause at the end of the symphony, which took exactly one hour to perform, the Berkshires are populated by ardent Brucknerites. Mr. Steinberg is clearly of their company, for he conducted with authority and passion, — using no score, incidentally, although nowadays that is not an unusual accomplishment, however impressive in this case.

And the symphony itself is anything but forbidding. At once solemn and naive, complex and innocent, it is saturated with Bruckner's religious faith, which shines forth with stunning force in the adagio and in the finale, heavy and massive in brass. The influence of Wagner is obvious in the endless chromaticism and fragmentary themes. The music looks forward, too: parts of the scherzo sound almost like a modern such as Copland. One was grateful for the opportunity to hear his symphony instead of one of the war-horses of the repertory.

Sunday — by D. D.

Two standard and one recent work composed the program of the Boston Symphony this afternoon. A rather languid rendering of The Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn was followed by an intriguing set of variations by Martinu entitled Fantaisies Symphoniques. They might have been more aptly termed "Fantaisies empruntées" —Delightful borrowings ranging from Debussy to Shostakovitch, with an occasional glint of Mahler.

Needless to say Mr. Munch drew fully from the lavish storehouse of sound nuance, which is the Boston Symphony, to perform this highly interesting and at times disconcerting work.

The popular Beethoven Emperor Concerto for piano and orchestra was performed last by Rudolf Serkin with the orchestra. This artist's renditions of Beethoven are always authoritative, and this one was no exception. Mr. Serkin again energetically offered a fresh glimpse into a great masterpiece and gave another definitive interpretation of Beethoven's last piano concerto.

NEWS BUREAU
N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
THE NEW YORK
SERVICE
JOURNAL AMERICAN
July 28, 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Munch Warms A Cold Night

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS., JULY 28.—Charles Munch began the final stretch of his stewardship of the Boston Symphony with the full orchestra assembled in the music shed last night. They will perform each weekend now until he gives Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at his final concert on Aug. 26.

Three guest conductors will share the concerts, one each weekend: Pierre Monteux tomorrow afternoon, William Steinberg next week, and Eugene Ormandy the week after.

The weather did not match the connotation of Spring in Debussy's symphonic suite "printemps," which opened last night's program. The cold front had lowered the temperatures in the Berkshire hills considerably. It may have accounted for an attendance of only 5,013, hardly the capacity of the shed. Top coats and blankets were in evidence.

Pastorale Quality

A pastoral quality in the first movement of the Debussy tuned in with the bucolic setting of the Tanglewood estate. The gaiety of the second led Mr. Munch to an almost raucous rendition. As early Debussy the piece suggests potentialities but they were not realized in the conventional writing of the second movement. The work therefore proved serviceable.

Piston's Sixth Symphony introduced the contemporary element in a work written with the sound of the Boston Symphony especially in mind. The adroit use of solos confirms this procedure. With due respect to the somewhat elegant craftsmanship of this work, I find only the second of the four movements involves me as a listener. Here Piston writes like a university with a kind of unbottoned professionalism that is irresistible.

* * *

This delightful movement draws to the audience too; but though Piston himself is involved personally in the adagio, his music does not necessarily exert a pull on his listeners.

The dissonances, for instance, convey no special impact emotionally. As a modern piece of "classicism," however, the symphony as a whole commands the the highest respect. Mr. Munch conducted it with a strong conviction of its merit.

On occasion he has conducted memorable performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. This one had its moments, but it began in routine fashion. Only toward the end did it achieve the intensity that Mr. Munch has been known to infuse into all the movements. The final [illegible] forth much applause and cheers, for its inspiration fired both conductor and orchestra.

Thus the concert ended with a warmth of feeling on the part of both audience and performers that quite dispelled the chill in the air about them. What had been almost perfunctory at times finally became more than just worth while.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 6 1962

Dr. Munch In Element For Concert In Hills

Gray skies and threatening weather reports kept music appreciators to 5205, for the first concert of the fifth weekend's series of three, given by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood on Friday evening.

Dr. Munch was in his element, nationally and musical, directing the music of Debussy, Honegger, (actually Swiss-born) Saint-Saens, and Ravel. He and his musicians painted the evening with a moving spectrum of colors, stirring a whole gamut of emotions. The atmospheric inspiration of Debussy's three Nocturnes was sustained and shattered only by the necessary pauses between each. "Clouds" rendered a more moving aspect than the foreboding natural sky mass overhead, while the chorus of women's voices in "Sirens" intoning only an "ah," retained the impersonal, impressionistic mood created by the composer for every decorative nocturne, including "Festivals," a blending of dancing light rhythms and festive procession.

Honegger's last symphony, dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitsky and written for the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, presented a quite different picture. Full orchestra starts out with marvelous dissonant blocks of sound, their vertical structure slowly giving way to the linear, (oboe and clarinet versus chords in strings and brass). In lower register much of the time, the symphony's first and third movements are relieved by a delightfully skittish allegretto second, a mixture of solemn, satirical, cacophonous, finally settling into wisp-like sounds notably in the violins.

First cellist Samuel Mayes is one of the several acknowledged artists among the Boston Symphony's personnel. His performance of Saint-Saens' first cello concerto in A minor was straightforward and assured, with few intonation departures. Dr. Munch co-ordinated cellist and orchestra through the uncommon concerto with finesse and stature.

Finally, returning once again to the atmosphere, in another level, Dr. Munch transported the delighted lighter audience and himself with an increasingly (as the music calls for) abandoned interpretation of Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse." Gently insistent at first, with the birth of a waltz heard dimly through the haze of sound "Little by little the vapors disperse, the illumination grows brighter, revealing an immense ballroom filled with dancers: the blaze of the chandeliers comes to full splendor. An Imperial Court, about 1855." Ravel delighted in adapting and fusing the styleof an admired composer with his, in this the great Johann Strauss. But he has incorporated complete abandon in his orchestration of the final "Apotheosis," its Strauss-inspirted rhythm bearing little resemblance to the original delicate emotion.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 6 1962

AT Tanglewood

Steinberg, Munch Conduct Three Weekend Concerts

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival, which has passed the halfway mark with this week's programs directed by William Steinberg and Charles Munch, began its fifth weekend with an all French program conducted by Munch.

The genius of Munch's spontaneous approach to this music was magnificently illustrated in the sensuous interpretation of Debussy's Nuages, that was made even more sensitive by the extraordinary technique of the orchestra which Munch fully exploited, along with the freedom of line, tempo and interpretive opportunity of which he so readily avails himself.

Chorus Sings

While Fetes was equally, in its own way, as satisfactory, the chorus for Sirenes prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, was a little less successful. The small voices seemed more salty than sultry and only impressed one further that they were sirenes in that they didn't get along too well together. Munch, who always seems to be able to find another moment in a piece for a fresh start, seemed here to be frequently frustrated.

Though auditors (and musicians) have probably been concerned at the wayward and dismal direction modern music has seemed to take since the Egyptians invented papyrus, it is hard to believe that with a little exposure to Honegger's style and mode of expression, there would be found in his method of composition many strong objections. His 5th Symphony which was introduced to the world (along with Martinu's Symphony No. 6 heard on Sunday) by the Boston Symphony directed by Honegger's special advocate, Charles Munch, was unreservedly splendid.

Magnificently Done

The orchestra magnificently recreated the heavy, dark color and grave dignity of the first movement, the allegro marcato of the finale was a tour de force for orchestra as well as it is a recognized one for its composer. The suggestion of engines and trains, on which Honegger admittedly did much of his composition and which became an obsessive expression in all his music, was dealt with the speed and force that such an orchestra, so extravagantly endowed with fine musicians, can well display.

The Saint-Saens Violoncello Concerto No. 1 rather well illustrated this endowment despite the less-than-excellent music this concerto appears to be.

Mayes Is Soloist

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Symphony, is somewhat a hero of it as well. Unassuming, though holding one of the most important seats in the orchestra, this young man, the grandson of a Cherokee Indian, was cello soloist with the St. Louis Symphony at 8, entered Curtis at 12, joined the Philadelphia Orchestra at 18 and became its first cellist at 21! His performance, which was accomplished with never an unnecessary gesture, was clear, careful and most dependable.

In comparison, Ravel's LaValse was an orgy. Why Diaghilev turned down this music as ballet matesial is, one would hazard, obvious: no ballet could possibly do justice or further enhance the impression one receives from the music alone.

Steinberg Hailed

Mr. Steinberg's welcome Saturday was made loud and long by both orchestra and audience with just cause. His conducting technique, which employs no nonsense movements, is largely provided by the fingers of his left hand. The care given to Beethoven's 8th Symphony produced the

TIGHT BINDING

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 2,885
AUG 9 1962

TANGLEWOOD
Friday — by K. P. M.

For the many admirers of French music, Friday evening's concert at Tanglewood was an infinite delight. To open the fifth weekend of this summer's Berkshire Festival, Charles Munch chose a program of works by Debussy, Honegger, Saint-Saens, and Ravel.

Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Nuages, Fêtes, Sirènes) and Honegger's Symphony #5 excellently balanced the first half of the concert. The combination of tranquillity and surging power that Debussy so frequently employed enabled the Festival Chorus to present itself at its best, while Ralph Gomberg's oboe playing frequently rose from the orchestra with exceptional beauty. The sharply contrasting dissonance of the Honegger (which was written in 1950) provided a much more serious and moody note, climaxed by the energetically driving and powerful third movement.

The more classically rooted Saint-Saens Concerto for Violoncello (No. 1 in A minor) opened the second half of the program. Freed from his customary role as first cellist of the Symphony, Samuel Mayes fully displayed his superb technical capabilities in this beautiful work. La Valse by Ravel, although it may have been better suited for the previous evening's Boston Pops program, concluded the concert in a light vein.

Saturday — by J. G. B.

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, conducted the Saturday concert, which was comprised of the eighth symphonies of Beethoven and Bruckner. So far as I know, this was the first time Bruckner has been played at Tanglewood: one can only wonder why. Judging by the shouts and applause at the end of the symphony, which took exactly one hour to perform, the Berkshires are populated by ardent Brucknerites. Mr. Steinberg is clearly of their company, for he conducted with authority and passion, — using no score, incidentally, although nowadays that is not an unusual accomplishment, however impressive in this case.

And the symphony itself is anything but forbidding. At once solemn and naive, complex and innocent, it is saturated with Bruckner's religious faith, which shines forth with stunning force in the adagio and in the finale, heavy and massive in brass. The influence of Wagner is obvious in the endless chromaticism and fragmentary themes. The music looks forward, too: parts of the scherzo sound almost like a modern such as Copland. One was grateful for the opportunity to hear his symphony instead of one of the war-horses of the repertory.

Sunday — by D. D.

Two standard and one recent work composed the program of the Boston Symphony this afternoon. A rather languid rendering of The Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn was followed by an intriguing set of variations by Martinu entitled Fantaisies Symphoniques. They might have been more aptly termed "Fantaisies empruntées" —Delightful borrowings ranging from Debussy to Shostakovitch, with an occasional glint of Mahler.

Needless to say Mr. Munch drew fully from the lavish storehouse of sound nuance, which is the Boston Symphony, to perform this highly interesting and at times disconcerting work.

The popular Beethoven Emperor Concerto for piano and orchestra was performed last by Rudolf Serkin with the orchestra. This artist's renditions of Beethoven are always authoritative, and this one was no exception. Mr. Serkin again energetically offered a fresh glimpse into a great masterpiece and gave another definitive interpretation of Beethoven's last piano concerto.

CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE
047
N. Y. JOURNAL AMERICAN
Saturday, July 28, 1962

AT TANGLEWOOD

Munch Warms A Cold Night

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS., JULY 28.—Charles Munch began the final stretch of his stewardship of the Boston Symphony with the full orchestra assembled in the music shed last night. They will perform each weekend now until he gives Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at his final concert on Aug. 26.

Three guest conductors will share the concerts, one each weekend: Pierre Monteux tomorrow afternoon, William Steinberg next week, and Eugene Ormandy the week after.

The weather did not match the connotation of Spring in Debussy's symphonic suite "printemps," which opened last night's program. The cool front had lowered the temperatures in the Berkshire hills considerably. It may have accounted for an attendance of only 5,013, hardly the capacity of the shed. Top coats and blankets were in evidence.

Pastorale Quality

A pastorale quality in the first movement of the Debussy tuned in with the beautiful setting of the Tanglewood estate. The gaiety of the second led Mr. Munch to an almost raucous rendition. As early Debussy the piece suggests potentialities but they were not realized in the conventional writing of the second movement. The work therefore proved serviceable.

Piston's Sixth Symphony introduced the contemporary element in a work written with the sound of the Boston Symphony especially in mind. The adroit use of solos confirms this procedure. With due respect to the somewhat elegant craftsmanship of this work, I find only the second of the four movements involves me as a listener. Here Piston writes like a university with a kind of unbottoned professionalism that is irresistible.

This delightful movement draws in the audience too: but though Piston himself is involved personally in the adagio, his music does not necessarily exert a pull on his listeners.

The dissonances, for instance, convey no special impact emotionally. As a modern piece of "classicism," however, the symphony as a whole commands the the highest respect. Mr. Munch conducted it with a strong conviction of its merit.

On occasion he has conducted memorable performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony. This one had its moments, but it began in routine fashion. Only to wind the end did it acquire the intensity that Mr. Munch has been known to infuse into all the movements. The finale drew forth much applause and [illegible] cheers for its inspiration had fired both conductor and orchestra.

Thus the concert ended with a warmth of feeling on the part of both audience and [illegible] that quite dispelled the chill in the air about [illegible] had been almost per[illegible] times finally became more [illegible] dust.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,067
AUG 6 1962

Dr. Munch In Element For Concert In Hills

Gray skies and threatening weather reports kept music appreciators to 5205, for the first concert of the fifth weekend's series of three, given by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood on Friday evening.

Dr. Munch was in his element, national and musical, directing the music of Debussy, Honegger, (Actually Swiss-born) Saint-Saens, and Ravel. He and his musicians painted the evening with a moving spectrum of colors, stirring a whole gamut of emotions. The atmospheric inspiration of Debussy's three Nocturnes was sustained and shattered only by the necessary pauses between each. "Clouds" rendered a more moving aspect than the foreboding natural sky mass overhead, while the chorus of women's voices in "Sirens" intoning only an "ah," retained the impersonal, impressionistic mood created by the composer for every decorative nocturne, including "Festivals," a blending of dancing light rhythms and festive procession.

Honegger's last symphony, dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitsky and written for the Koussevitsky Music Foundation, presented a quite different picture. Full orchestra starts out with marvelous dissonant blocks of sound, their vertical structure slowly giving way to the linear, (oboe and clarinet versus chords in strings and brass). In lower register much of the time, the symphony's first and third movements are relieved by a delightfully skittish allegretto second, a movture of solemn, satirical, cacophonous, finally settling into wisp-like sounds notably in the violins.

First cellist Samuel Mayes is one of the several acknowledged artists among the Boston Symphony's personnel. His performance of Saint-Saens' first cello concerto in A minor was straightforward and assured, with few intonation departures. Dr. Munch co-ordinated cellist and orchestra through the uncommon concerto with finesse and stature.

Finally, returning once again to the atmosphere, in another level, Dr. Munch transported the old lighter audience and himself with an increasingly (as the music calls for) abandoned interpretation of Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse." Gently insistent at first, with the birth of a waltz heard dimly through the haze of sound "Little by little the vapors disperse, the illumination grows brighter, revealing an immense ballroom filled with dancers; the blaze of the chandeliers comes to full splendor. An Imperial Court, about 1855." Ravel delighted in adapting and fusing the styleof an admired composer with his, in this the great Johann Strauss. But he has incorporated complete abandon in his orchestration of the final "Apotheosis," its Strauss-inspirted rhythm bearing little resemblance to the original delicate emotion.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,185
AUG 6 1962

At Tanglewood

Steinberg, Munch Conduct Three Weekend Concerts

By FRANK N. PATTERSON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival, which has passed the halfway mark with this week's programs directed by William Steinberg and Charles Munch, began its fifth weekend with an all French program conducted by Munch.

The genius of Munch's spontaneous approach to this music was magnificently illustrated in the sensuous interpretation of Debussy's Nuages, that was made even more sensitive by the extraordinary technique of the orchestra which Munch fully exploited, along with the freedom of line, tempo and interpretive opportunity of which he so readily avails himself.

Chorus Sings

While Fetes was equally, in its own way, as satisfactory, the chorus for Sirenes prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, was a little less successful. The small voices seemed more salty than sultry and only impressed one further that they were sirenes in that they didn't get along too well together. Munch, who always seems to be able to find another moment in a piece for a fresh start, seemed here to be frequently frustrated.

Though auditors (and musicians) have probably been concerned at the wayward and dismal direction modern music has seemed to take since the Egyptians invented papyrus, it is hard to believe that with a little exposure to Honegger's style and mode of expression, there would be found in his method of composition many strong objections. His 5th Symphony which was introduced to the world (along with Martinu's Symphony No. 6 heard on Sunday) by the Boston Symphony directed by Honegger's special advocate, Charles Munch, was unreservedly splendid.

Magnificently Done

The orchestra magnificently recreated the heavy, dark color and grave dignity of the first movement, the allegro marcato of the finale was a tour de force for orchestra as well as it is a recognized one for its composer. The suggestion of engines and trains, on which Honegger admittedly did much of his composition and which became an obsessive expression in all his music, was dealt with the speed and force that such an orchestra, so extravagantly endowed with fine musicians, can well display.

The Saint-Saens Violoncello Concerto No. 1 rather well illustrated this endowment despite the less-than-excellent music this concerto appears to be.

Mayes Is Soloist

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Symphony, is somewhat a hero of it as well. Unassuming, though holding one of the most important seats in the orchestra, this young man, the grandson of a Cherokee Indian, was cello soloist with the St. Louis Symphony at 8, entered Curtis at 12, joined the Philadelphia Orchestra at 18 and became its first cellist at 21! His performance, which was accomplished with never an unnecessary gesture, was clear, careful and most dependable.

In comparison, Ravel's LaValse was an orgy. Why Diaghilev turned down this music as ballet matesial is, one would hazard, obvious; no ballet could possibly do justice or further enhance the impression one receives from the music alone.

Steinberg Hailed

Mr. Steinberg's welcome Saturday was made loud and long by both orchestra and audience with just cause. His conducting technique, which employs no nonsense movements, is largely provided by the fingers of his left hand. The care given to Beethoven's 8th Symphony produced the most impressive BSO p[illegible] heard in some time.

While the results of such [illegible] approach to Beethoven were cool and straight, Anton Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 of long suffering suffered much more. Stenberg's attention to detail and only the essentials of interpretation left Bruckner bare. The composer's repetitious, exaggerated romance and personal problems choked into the long work: created the impression of an overloaded ship on a circular runway. The orchestra was held in marvelous control, but there was a feeling that the heart of the music was gone.

Despite the sultry heat of Sunday, the program under Munch's direction was gratifying. Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Haydn was a fine sentimental revisitation; while Bohuslav Martinu's 6th Symphony, written with Munch in mind, was the orchestra's cup of tea. Martinu's special effects, which always respect the usefullness of the instruments, were wonderfully translated into fine displays of clear, understandable intent.

That the Emporer Concerto by Beethoven seemed a little tired was understandable in the oppressive heat that grew and threatened, but never brought relief.

Serkin Plays

Mr. Serkin, the piano soloist, was not, however, much deterred; he quite actively subdued the piano into a performance that only he and a few other greats can summon. Though the last movement was more than usually extravagant in notes, the hymn-like second movement, despite the unscored notes of a song sparrow of very measured musical taste, was the outstanding movement of all three.

TY NEWS BUREAU
ANY, N.Y.
SPAPER
PPINGS
NEW YORK
ERVICE
ITY GAZETTE
6, 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 6 1962

Two Eighths at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony 'Educational'

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

The Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, whether under Charles Munch ro guest composers, is an educational institution — not only for the students at the Berkshire Music Center but for its wonderful audiences, including general public, students of music and critics who sometimes get the idea that they know a bit about the subject.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra and Dr. Munch in particular have a way of putting us in our proper humble places with their superb interpretations of music. We often find that music we thought we knew is much different, much more vivid, more virile and that music that we've never met before becomes an experience in listening that gives a bit of comprehension, at least.

Last Friday evening we heard the opening concert of the fifth week of the festival, which this year runs through Aug. 26, in a program of music by French composers featuring the Honegger "Symphony number 5" and cellist Samuel Mayes in the Saint-Saens "VioloncHo Concerto number 1 in A minor, opus 33."

The program opened with the Debussy "Three Nocturnes" and closed with the Ravel "La Valse, Choreographic Poem."

* * *

WE ATTENDED primarily to hear the Honegger smyphony, which was completed in December, 1950, in Paris and written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in memory of Natalie Koussevitzky.

The Honegger work shows solid musicianship and workmanship throughout. Its undefinable melodies are presented with a full-throated orchestration. The opening "Grave" is definitely somber in color. An opening descending pattern of melody is followed by an ascending pattern. In the background a lone woodwind voice repeats an agonized phrase while the preponderance of tone comes from the strings. The "Allegretto" movement is more capricious with excitement running high. The closing "Allegro marcato" is a lot faster and a lot louder. A brass ostinato figure is followed by a horn figure and frenzy from the fiddles before a final return to the slow and somber theme of the opening movement.

* * *

HONEGGER has subtitled the work ("di tre re") or the three D's to indicate, in the composer's words, "That the note re (D) occurs three times to end each of the three movements in a pizzicato by the basses and a stroke by the timpanist, who has no other notes to play but these three."

An audience of 5,205 cheered and applauded the director for four bows with the orchestra at the close of the Honegger work.

The Saint-Saens cello concerto is music of another era with its bravura writing for the solo instrument and elegant interludes for orchestra. Mayes, who has been principal cello for the Boston Symphony since 1948, has a truly luscious tone, an astounding technique and a most fluent bow. The performance of the three-movement work, which is played without pause, was warmly received with five recalls for the soloist, conductor and orchestra.

* * *

RAVEL'S "La Valse, Choreographic Poem," with its magnificent orchestration was presented with the full glory of the orchestra under Dr. Munch's baton.

In the Debussy "Three Nocturnes" the orchestra was assisted by the Festival Chorus prepared by Lorna Cooke DeVaron. Debussy, in his own particular idiom, offers a certain mysticism that is completely undefinable. In the final "Sirenes," the only movement in which the chorus participates, the voices are used as an adjunct of the orchestra, almost as another instrument.

* * *

THE FRIDAY evening programs of the Boston Symphony do not draw the large crowds of the Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon programs — perhaps one of the reasons we enjoy them so much.

Speaking of crowds, a total of 12,500 persons attended the Boston Pops Orchestra program under Arthur Fiedler on Thursday night. Presented as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center, it made $37,700 for the summer school of music which the orchestra conducts at its summer home near Lenox, Mass.

Steinberg Conducts Beethoven, Bruckner

By Louis Chapin

Lenox, Mass.

William Steinberg, as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony at Saturday night's Tanglewood concert, chose exactly the same program as he had given the subscribers last January in Symphony Hall. It consisted of two penultimate but markedly dissimilar Eighths — Beethoven's and Bruckner's. If any of the rapt audience minded hearing them again, their minority opinion was lost in the final tumult of applause.

Mr. Steinberg is a painstaking and penetrating conductor. He plays on the orchestra as a thoroughly responsible virtuoso, from the slow preparatory rise of his baton to the last snap of his little finger. His own superb co-ordinations seek out those of the music, and the result, generally, is tight and luminous.

* * *

Last January in Boston these skills of his had seemed of fullest benefit to the Beethoven, with its greater objectivity and (if Bruckner specialists will allow) economy. At Tanglewood, the older master's symphony was still admirably served. It was springy, cleanly drawn, and sophisticated. Mr. Steinberg worked its wonderful machinery with his hand firm and sure on the controls —except for an instant when the violas on his right hand guessed wrong as to what his left hand was doing.

But the colossal event of the evening was the Bruckner—the composer's last completed symphony. It proved to be an immense tour de force for both conductor and orchestra. Its themes—born so often among premonitory tremblings or throbbings — wound their way with impressive success from the patient valleys to the equally patient mountaintops of this music. They were lovingly guided by Mr. Steinberg through every turn of the road, and the orchestra worked up to capacity to satisfy the melodies and countermelodies in their great appetite for tone.

The audience fairly buzzed, between movements, at the extraordinary dimensions, shapes, and coherences of what they were hearing. For many, it must have been an almost bewildering new experience.

* * *

In last winter's performance the wideness of concept had sometimes seemed slighted by the concern for detail. But whether for subjective or objective reasons, this difficulty moved almost out of sight among the distances of Tanglewood's Shed. Only occasionally did more air seem needed for this music to breathe; once in a while a contrapuntal passage, perhaps for horns, sounded relatively cramped.

But the main effect was that of unmitigated bigness, shining steadily through its climaxes. More accustomed, the second time, to these brilliances, the ear may have been better able to hear past them, to the voice of a composer little concerned with any brilliance save that of paradise.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D- 617,250 S. 773,579
AUG 6 1962

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

An Exciting Bruckner's 8t

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS., AUG. 6.—William Steinberg made history in his own way at his debut here Saturday night. He dared to play Bruckner's Eighth Symphony, and he conducted it so vibrantly and so grandly that the 7,631 people who heard the performance will cherish the experience for years to come.

Only once before in the annuals of the Berkshire Festival has this composer's work been heard. Serge Koussevitzky played the Seventh Symphony in July, 1950; thus the performance of the Eighth presents the possibility of a pivotal interest in Bruckner's music as future Summer fare, for the reception was quite out of the ordinary.

Many Brucknerites consider the Eighth his finest work. Certainly Mr. Steinberg set it forth most convincingly. The impact of the scherzo was simply tremendous, for he generated more than the usual excitement rhythmically. The profound beauty of the adagio made more than one listener speculate on its expressing the logical extension of Beethoven's slow movements.

After 70 Years

The sense of grandeur that this music imparts cannot be brushed aside carelessly as inflated romanticism. Bruckner had too strong a sense of design to leave the impression finally that he did not know when to stop. Furthermore, there is far too much beautiful music poured into the mold. From the haunting opening measures of the first movement to the proclamative brasses of the finale, the Eighth is a great symphony perhaps only coming into its own 70 years after its premiere.

Mr. Steinberg did everything to make the occasion momentous, and the orchestra responded admirably. It was obvious he believed in this music, could cope with its structural challenge and realized the glory of romantic expression it represents. The musicians seized upon its tender moments to play eloquently and upon the grand pages to assert themselves imposingly. Both conductor and players paid full tribute to Bruckner's confident brasses.

The performance of Beethoven's Eighth at the start of the concert was a different matter. Mr. Steinberg was all too efficient for the good of Beethoven. While the positive approach and the alert playing brought refreshing precision, the genial spirit of the work disappeared.

Too Fortissimo

Mr. Steinberg may have misjudged the acoustics of the shed, for the fortissimos became unduly loud, throwing the dynamics of the performance out of proportion. The result was disturbing. This listener kept wondering how the rhythmic Seventh Symphony had suddenly become mixed up with the "Roseful Beauties" of the Eighth.

In Bruckner, however, Mr. Steinberg was quite in his element. He should be brought back for further Bruckner performances. This one had its magical aspect.

This became the weekend when Charles Munch played two contemporary works having special meaning for him: Honegger's Symphony No. 5 on Friday night and Martinu's "Fantasies Symphoniques" yesterday afternoon. The former represented the music of a life-long friend, the latter music written for him because Martinu liked Mr. Munch's "spontaneous approach where music takes shape in a free way." That free way met hearty approval from many in the audience. Like the Honegger, it is music that grows on acquaintance.

Playing Saint-Saens' Cello Concert on Friday night, Samuel Mayes created a sensation. It is unusual for a cello soloist to be recalled seven times after performing a concerto. Rudolf Serkin played Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto yesterday in characteristic Serkin tradition. Undoubtedly his presence swelled the crowd to 11,242, the largest to date to attend the regular concerts.

A weekend total of 28,199 indicated that interest in the Tanglewood concerts continues unabated. A sidelight of yesterday's event was the presence of 477 people from Brooklyn, who came for a special outing under the auspices of the Brooklyn Academy of Music. That the Boston Pops benefit concert with Arthur Fiedler last Thursday drew 12,354 indicates that a popular program has its drawing power, too.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

94

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 6 1962

Music Review

Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFI

THE LAST TWO concer[illegible] of the fifth weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood provided peaks of excitement which have not been excelled in a season which up to now can scarcely be considered as having been only run-of-the-mill. The fifth Beethoven piano concerto, Opus 73, E flat major, with Rudolph Serkin as soloist and Charles Munch directing the Boston Symphony orchestra, was the spark which ignited the enthusiasm of an audience of 11,242 yesterday afternoon. Saturday night it was the Bruckner eighth symphony with a guest conductor who was making his Tanglewood debut, William Steinberg, which kindled the triumphal demonstration in the audience of 7,631.

Again it was the fair weather which favored the huge throngs that were attracted by the anticipation of stimulating programs. The week's total attendance, including the added Boston Pops concert, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, reached to lunar numbers.

* * *

SERKIN'S Beethoven is familiar to Tanglewood audiences, but no one renews our acquaintance with favorites more vividly and with more galvanic stimulation than he. And the orchestra's collaboration under Munch was keen and tightly intertwined. Beethoven in this last of his piano concertos writes no subservient orchestral accompaniment, but a substantial and equally important contribution to the total structure. The themes and contrasts were dominantly delineated by Munch in the long overture before the solo enters, and from then on their common understanding stirred both components to greater scintillation.

Serkin generates an atmosphere of tension whether he be articulating the ominous descending chromatic scales in the first movement or merely waiting at the keyboard during the orchestral tuttis like a speed-winged hummingbird. His tone never suggested percussiveness yet his rhythmic verve had a near-savage attack, and when he arrived at contrasting legato episodes, it had the flowing continuity of a vocalist.

William Steinberg

* * *

MUNCH BEGAN his afternoon with a fond reading of the Brahms Variations on a theme of Haydn. We don't remember a tempo he has chosen in all the many times he has played this lovely work, the last here a year ago to the day, when it seemed more comfortable. We are not convinced Munch is justified in departing from mathematical exactitude for the 16th note in the first bar of the theme but we would not quibble overlong on that point. Suffice it to say that the communal distribution of opportunities to the orchestra was accepted with extraordinary competence, and Munch kept the details within a completely disciplined frame.

* * *

THE CENTER of the program was devoted to the Martinu "Fantasies symphoniques" (his sixth symphony) which was written on the request of Munch for the Boston orchestra's 75th anniversary. The Boston conductor gave it its first performance seven years ago, and it has remained in the orchestra's active repertoire. We wish we could report that it is transparent to us, but we retain mainly details of mature writing, special orchestration effects, or strange harmonic devices resolving into cadences of old acquaintance. The writing is thick and demanding and quite a departure from the music he disclosed to us when he was on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center after the war.

* * *

STEINBERG, director of the Pittsburg symphony, presented a type of directing that has not been seen too often at Tanglewood. He provided a very classic exhibition in the Beethoven eighth symphony, relying nearly entirely on the instructions he presumably had given the orchestra in rehearsal and manifesting little or no directions for spontaneous execution on stage. It was a highly gratifying "eighth." It was in the gigantic Bruckner that Steinberg loosed all the sails with which he is so amply equipped.

The Bruckner requires a very full hour even with cuts, and it is not difficult to discern why he and his music have remained such matters of controversy for a century. During his lifetime he was a scapegoat or probably more accurately the shuttlecock between the Wagner and Brahms factions. And there was a considerable party who, from either musical judgment or snobbishness, chose to keep him where they thought he belonged, on the other side of the musical tracks.

* * *

FEW WILL deny that there are moments of high grandeur in his pages. The disagreement about him centers on whether the stretches between are arid, and, if so, if they are of too great extent. Steinberg's thorough and complete identification with the music was conveyed by his conducting manners, now graphically conciliatory to the romantic nature of the music. The orchestra responded with an opulence of tone, a variety of colors, and instantaneous reflection to satisfy any conductor and please the most fastidious audience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,849

AUG 5 1962

Music: William Steinberg At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — William Steinberg's Tanglewood debut last night, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was an event of outstanding merit. He and the orchestra received an ovation from an audience of 7,631.

There is nothing casual or habitual about this. The Berkshire Festival podium is rarely occupied by any conductor who is less than a giant in his field.

The stocky, studious, bald Steinberg conducted entirely without a score. He was a familiar workman to the orchestra players last night, having conducted the Boston Symphony during the winter season of 1960 and this year.

Beethoven and Bruckner

To a conductor it is "Ne Plus Ultra" to direct the Boston Symphony. Many of the debuts have been vested in programs that had extraordinary audience appeal or allowed for dazzling baton exhi- tinued through the second rollicking theme.

The repetetive staccato ticking bitions.

He chose the eighth symphonies of Beethoven and Anton Bruckner. It would be difficult to positively determine which is the least "popular" of the Beethoven symphonies — the fourth or the eighth.

Bruckner's eighth symphony too six years to write, is exhorbitantly long, and is primarily a master class in form and style for the intellectual listener. Incidentally, the Bruckner was cut last night from 65 to 50 minutes' duration.

Tanglewood has an impressive quota of musical savants but we doubt if there were 7,000-odd of them in last night's audience. Yet, Steinberg (and presumably the Bruckner) received enraputred interest.

Joy Unlimited

Steinberg's concept of the Beethoven eighth was one of joy unlimited. This was evident from the first bright tune that sets the temper of the work. And it con- of the second movement (a spirited dance) did not become rutted but was used to create suspenseful mood. No nuance was to trivial to receive its own cue, lucidly delivered. The conductor has certain mannerisms but they have no undermining influence on the musical result.

Some of these ae circular motions of the baton and down stokes like a question mark. He uses clenched fist, widely-separated fingers, crooked fingers. Some of his movements are almost immobile and obscured from audienc view.

True Skill

Steinberg's true skill was most evident in the third movement. So far in this festival, minuet movements have generally taken on the speed of olympic contests. Last night's minuet was a typical 18th century dance in formal dress Not only did Steinberg uncover a pinch of irony in it, but humor as well.

All pretencse at academic rigor was abandoned in the finale. The conductor had bows, valves and breath moving at top speed, achieing a roar of unrestrained joy. Bruckner's gargantual eighth symphony was the ultimate test for all concerned — audience as well. There were really two sides to the performance. A well-versed student could have given a blackboard analysis as it progresses. The cumulative strength was, a compelling force for sheer listening.

Orchestra Superb

The orchestra was nothing sort of superb in technique, tone and discipline. The militant conductor was even more in his element here than in the Beethoven. It had everything to stir the senses from dramatically tremulant figures in strings to massive-toned tenor tubas — to a magnificent descent into tonal nothingness.

4,000 at Rehearsal

Another engrossing demonstration in conducting was given yesterday morning when Charles Munch publicly rehearsed the orchestra in this afternoon's program. There was an audience o 4,121.

He began by complimenting Samuel Mayes upon his superb performance of Saint-Saens' cello concerto in a minor, the night before. We've never known Munch to display such enthusiam publicly, and it certainly was reciprocated by the orchestra.

At rehearsal, Munch is a generous supplier of cues, and sometimes his accompanying commentary can be heard over the brass section. It isn't uncommon for him to frequently strike the music stand with his baton when he's displeased. There was none of this yesterday.

Notes Not Primary Concern

Even in the most ardent passages of Martinu's "Fantaisies Sympohonique" Munch used none of this useless exhortation to induce a warmer tone. The violin section, for one, was too busy to heed such frantic arm gestures with which some of the younger conductors put on a show.

As usual, one felt at yesterday's rehearsal that Munch assumed the playing of notes was no longer a primary concern. The players knew them and were prepared. His concentration was entirely on speeds, balances, accents and other fine points of interpretation.

Whether Munch will use the same tempos this afternoon that he set at yesterday's rehearsal is anybody's guess.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175
AUG 6 1962

28,199 Applaud At Tanglewood

(Special To The American)

LENOX, MASS. — Audiences at the Tanglewood Music Festival over the week-end who heard Rudolf Serkin in a virtuoso performance of Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto for Piano, No. 5" yesterday afternoon, were introduced to the brilliant conducting of William Steinberg of the Pitsburgh Symphony Orchestra in his first Berkshire appearance Saturday evening, and listened to a colorfully rich program of French contemporaries of Dr. Charles Munch at Friday night's concert. In addition, there was on Friday, the additonal pleasure of Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's first cellist, in the exquisitely, beautifully performed Saint-Saens "Violincello Concerto No. 1, in A minor."

The week-end audiences of 28,199, more than 1,200 ahead of the same week-end last year, included a rapt Sunday audience of 11,242 that came for Serkin. And they were not disappointed There was a noticeable note of expectancy in the Music Shed long before the appearance of the soloist who seemed to caress the piano as he played. At one point even a lone bird high in the trees above the weeping-willow to the west of the Shed joined with his own song, heard Serkin, and remained silent for the remainder of the concert. Serkin performed the Concerto as only Serkin can. It was an enthralled audience that listened through the gentle caressing of his playing and then through the full vigor of the pianist who lifted himself from his seat. There were the "bravos" one knew there would be and an ovation for Serkin, Dr. Munch, and the musicians of the Boston.

Performance of Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydin" was the perfect opener for the sunny, sultry Berkshire afternoon. It was followed by performance of Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" with its wide range of highly colorful music.

Relaxing

Yesterday afternoon the orchestra seemed to be relaxing with its conductor, Dr. Munch, compared to the work-out it received on Saturday evening under the direction of guest conductor, William Steinberg. Appearing with the Boston for the first time at Tanglewood and using no musical score throughout, Mr. Steinberg gave such masterful readings of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 8" and Bruckner's "Symphony No. 8" that one may be certain he will be invited back. With the exception of Mr. Ormandy, seldom have we seen a conductor "work" the Boston musicians as did Steinberg before 7,631. He conducted brilliantly, received a well-deserved ovation, and non-the-least of his admirers were the players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra upon whom he exercised such tight control.

Dr. Munch's conducting of the program of French music for the Friday night concert made it a memorable experience. One glided delicately with him and the orchestra through the performance of Ravel's "La Valse" and all but got up to dance it. The performance of Honigger's "Symphony No. 5", written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, taxed the orchestra but the players did not falter. The open rehearsal on Saturday morning, with proceeds going to the Orchestra Pension Fund, drew 4,121.

Concerts this coming week-end will bring three conductors to the podium. Eugene Ormandy will conduct Beethoven and Bartok on Friday night when the "Eroica" and "Egmont Overture" will be heard. Pierre Monteux, in his second and final appearance of the summer, will conduct music of Wagner, Elgar, and Brahms on Saturday evening with Leon Fleisher as soloist in the Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2". Sunday afternoon Dr. Munch will conduct music of Rameau, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique", and a new work by Fine, "Symphony (1962)".

S.M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 126,440
AUG 6 1962

Music in Review: Berkshire Festival

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Rudolph Serkin drew a prolonged ovation for his performance of the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood before an audience of 11,242 persons.

The size of the audience was some indication of the affection that Serkin inspires among his admirers. His thoroughly dedicated musicianship and solid interpretative gifts are qualities that are always worthy of admiration and serve the music of Beethoven particularly well.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH opened his program with Brahms' "Haydn" Variations that use the so-called "St. Anthony Chorale," surely one of the noblest themes ever created. And it seems to this reviewer that Munch's reading of this work has mellowed with the years. Yesterday the music had an unhurried grace and tonal warmth that were eminently satisfying.

In dramatic contrast was Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6), a work that appears quite frequently on Munch's programs. Written to celebrate the 75th Anniversary of the orchestra and dedicated to Munch, it remains one of the most interesting contemporary symphonies.

* * *

THE COMPOSER'S orchestral mastery throughout this work is used with moving effect: Its constantly changing moods, its surging vitality, and a performance by the Boston Orchestra that underlined these qualities made this a memorable recreation of a favorite work of Munch's.

In Beethoven's popular piano concert, Mr. Serkin attacked the piano with a demonic attitude that made one almost fear that the instrument might not hold up under the impact. When this performer faces the piano he acquires the energy of a 20-year old and the persistence of a bird dog on the trail.

Even though the pianist had a few choppy spots and the tonal balance between piano and orchestra was sometimes off, the sheer vitality of this Beethoven performance was overwhelming. And I have a sneaking suspicion that this was just about the way old Beethoven would have played it.

It would be a musical satisfaction and a delight to his many admirers, if Mr. Serkin could be encouraged to perform all of the Beethoven piano concerti in one season at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,057
AUG 6 1962

Tanglewood Combines Enjoyable Day, Music

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — A calm and pleasant day with music to match made Sunday afternoon's recital something more than a pleasure, something less than perfection.

Out of Place

If there were any flies in the musical ointment, I think we must blame the Sixth Symphony of Bohuslave Martinu, a work commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its strident chords seemed a bit out of place amid the beauty surrounding us.

Charles Munch opened the program with Variations on a Theme of Hayden, op. 56, by Brahms. I have always found these variations fascinating. They encompass many moods, and yet remain crystal clear in their content. Mr. Munch conducted them with obvious affection and with glowing result.

Mr. Martinu's Sixth Symphony, entitled "Fantaisies Symphoniques," came next on the program. I find it one of the less propitious works of this composer, but then commissioned works are not always of the best. This one sounded labored and a bit grandiose. In other words, it did not make for very pleasant listening. The audience response was, as usual, generous, but it lacked warmth that comes from real enjoyment.

The concert concluded with a

See TANGLEWOOD
Page Five

Audiences at the ... certs totaled 28,199. A year ago they totaled 26,914. Sunday's audience, one of the largest of the series, numbered 11,242. A year ago it numbered 8747. Thus far we are still ahead.

Trio Due Wednesday

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York will present a concert of chamber music Wednesday evening. This promises to be more rewarding program-wise than some we have heard so far. The personnel of the trio comprises Menahem Pressler, piano; Daniel Guilet, violin; and Bernard Greenhouse, cello.

These artists are prime favorites at Tanglewood. The program on Wednesday evening will consist of Beethoven's Trio, op. 70, No. 1; Diamond's Trio; and ... Trio, op. 87.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 41,175
AUG 6 1962

28,199 Applaud At Tanglewood

(Special To The American)

